STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I present two telegrams in reference to the statehood bill, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Telegram.]

RATON, N. MEX., January 14, 1903

Hon. M. QUAY,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

People of Raton a unit for omnibus bill. Senate committee report grossly partial as to existing conditions in New Mexico.

CHARLES M. BAYNE, Mayor.
J. LEADHY, District Attorney.

[Telegram.]

TUCSON, ARIZ., January 12, 1903.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There is no division of sentiment here regarding omnibus bill. Everyone favors it.

M. P. FREEMAN,
President Consolidated National Bank.

Mr. BATE. I present some telegrams on the subject of the statehood bill, and I ask that two of them, which I will indicate, may be read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 12, 1903.

Senator WILLIAM B. BATE, Washington, D. C.:

People of Arizona are entitled to statehood and are anxious for it. Committee's report is unjust and misleading. We petition Senate to pass omnibus bill unamended.

R. L. MCDONALD,
Superintendent Phoenix Schools.

[Telegram.]

TUCSON, ARIZ., January 12, 1903.

Hon. W. B. BATE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Failure to pass omnibus bill in view of misleading report of majority Committee on Territories would be regarded as confirmation of indictment, and would be of incalculable injury to invested capital and every interest in this Territory. There is no division of sentiment among the people on this subject.

N. P. Freeman, president Consolidated National Bank; J. Knox Corbett, postmaster; John B. Wright, city attorney; B. M. Jacobs, president Arizona National Bank; H. M. Fenner, M. D.; William Angus, county school superintendent; John H. Bauman, receiver United States land office; M. R. Moore, register United States land office; Mark A. Rodgers, M. D.; E. F. Burton, M. D.; L. H. Manning, president Chamber of Commerce; Geo. Selby, rector Grace Church; David B. Loofbourrow, pastor Methodist Church; H. K. Booth, pastor Congregational Church; C. F. Schumacher, mayor of Tucson; Fred. Roustadt, board of supervisors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams will lie on the table.

Mr. BATE. I beg to state that there are a good many of these telegrams of similar import, and I call attention especially to the last one. They are signed by officers generally, superintendents of schools, sheriffs of counties, presidents of chambers of commerce, etc. I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 13, 1903.

Senator WILLIAM B. BATE, Washington, D. C.:

People of Arizona are entitled to statehood and anxious for it. In our own rights gross injustice is done our interest by committee's misleading report. We petition Senate to pass omnibus bill unamended.

W. W. COOK, Sheriff Maricopa County.

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 12, 1903.

Senator WILLIAM BATE, Washington, D. C.:

Arizona asks for statehood without being joined to any other Territory. Committee's report is grossly unfair to our best interests. We call on you to stand for omnibus bill unamended.

C. H. AKERS,
President Phoenix Mining Exchange.

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 13, 1903.

Senator WILLIAM B. BATE, Washington, D. C.:

Committee's report does our best interests gross injustice by its misleading statements. Our people are anxious for statehood and entitled to it. We petition Senate to pass omnibus bill unamended.

E. B. GAGE,
President Phoenix National Bank.

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 10, 1903.

Senator WILLIAM B. BATE, Washington, D. C.:

People of Arizona are anxious for statehood and entitled to it. Committee's report is unjust and misleading. We petition Senate to pass omnibus bill unamended.

A. H. FULTON,
School Superintendent Maricopa County.

[Telegram.]

TUCSON, ARIZ., January 12, 1903.

Hon. W. B. BATE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I most earnestly plead for your best efforts to pass omnibus bill. In view of injuriously misleading report of majority of committee failure to pass the bill would be disastrous to every industry in existence or projected.

O'BRIEN MOORE.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MORGAN. I present certain communications from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the expenditures of the Isthmian Canal Commission. I move that the communications be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ELKINS on the 12th instant, proposing to increase the amount to be appropriated for expenses of compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory from $1,200 to $1,800, intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11621) to correct the military record of H. J. Rowell, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 552) for the relief of Levi Jones, to ask that the claim therein made be not allowed, and that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15767) to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15711) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clinch River, in the State of Tennessee, by the Knoxville, Lafollette and Jellico Railroad Company, reported it without amentment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6569) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 10 miles of the corporate limits of the city of St. Charles, in St. Charles County, Mo., and in St. Louis County, Mo., and to make the same a post route, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 143) to authorize the construction by the Wadley and Mount Vernon Railroad Company of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6847) to increase the number of light-house districts, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY. I am also directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13208) to authorize the United States and West Indies Railroad and Steamship Company, of Florida, to construct a bridge across the Manatee River, in the State of Florida, to report it adversely. I will state that it is an exact copy of a bill passed at the last session, which was approved on the 7th of May, 1902. The committee recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15510) to promote the efficiency of the Philippine constabulary, to establish the rank and pay of its commanding officers, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6358) to permit officers of the United States Army to serve as chief and assistant chiefs of the constabulary of the Philippine Islands, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that the bill in regard to the Philippine constabulary has been indefinitely postponed?

Mr. SCOTT. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that we have reported favorably a House bill, which passed the House.

Mr. LODGE. That is all right.

Mr. SCOTT. The House bill is exactly the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. I understand.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2402) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William F. Barrett, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

CONDITIONS IN ISLAND OF GUAM.

Mr. HOAR. Yesterday I introduced a resolution of inquiry of the President of the United States, and I suppose it will be adopted this morning without any objection. I ask the Chair to lay it before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, so far as shall be, in his judgment, not inconsistent with the interests of the public service, to inform the Senate what government is existing in the island of Guam, and through what executive department the powers of such government are now in fact executed and administered;

What, according to his present information, is the number of inhabitants in said island;

Whether there be any persons imprisoned or detained in said island against their will by the authority of the United States;

If so, under what law such persons are detained, and by whose order such persons are detained;

And especially whether any person not an inhabitant of said island of Guam be detained there by the power of the United States against his will; if so, for what offense, and whether there has been any trial or conviction of such offense, or any charge made against such person, and whether the nature or character of such charge has been communicated to such person;

And whether any person is so therein detained for any alleged political offense, or any refusal to take an oath of allegiance to the United States;

And especially whether an inhabitant of the Philippine Islands named Mabini has been detained and be now therein detained, and if so, under what circumstances, for what alleged offense, and whether such person has been tried for the same;

And, further, whether said Mabini was, according to the President's information, an inhabitant of the Philippine Islands and a Spanish subject on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then a resident in said islands; and whether he be included within the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of the civil government of the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," being chapter 1369 of the Statutes of 1902; and

Whether as such he is now deprived of liberty without due process of law; whether he has enjoyed the right to be heard by himself and counsel to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf; whether he has been held to answer for any criminal offense without due process of law, and whether he be denied the right of bail as provided in said act.

Also, whether any oath of allegiance be now required of any such inhabitant of the Philippine Islands to be taken beyond the limits of said islands as a condition of being released from imprisonment, or of being permitted to return thereto; and if so, by what authority said oath of allegiance is required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2210) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates; and

An act (S. 6439) for the refund of certain tonnage taxes.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 6119) to authorize the Pensacola, Alabama and Tennessee Railway Company to erect, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Alabama River in Wilcox County, in the State of Alabama.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the fact that the Senate yesterday evening passed the House bill removing the duty on anthracite coal would appear to take the subject out of discussion. Although I have never intended to discuss that phase of the coal famine, and so indicated in my remarks yesterday, I, of course, will not expect anything except a smile from the uninformed because I continue to discuss a different subject upon the same resolution, the subject of which has already been disposed of. As I began on the Vest resolution, I want to finish on it.

When the morning hour expired yesterday and I had to yield the floor I had reached that part of my argument or presentation of facts where the cause or causes of the coal famine were under consideration. I was reading from the report of the Industrial Commission some statements in regard to the condition in the anthracite coal region, upon which I am basing the charge that the monopoly which exists and which is causing all this misery and robbery could have been prevented by the Attorney-General. I will proceed to give some additional quotations from the report of the Industrial Commission. I read on page 459 of volume 19:

> The elimination of the independent coal operators was attempted in a second way, namely, by securing forfeit of their independence of action by means of long-time shipping contracts with the railroads. Reference has already been made to the fact that the proportion of tidewater price allowed had been increased from 55 to 60 per cent by contracts made some years ago. Most of these contracts terminating in 1901, it was proposed by the railroads that a uniform new contract be offered in renewal by all the railroads jointly, on the basis of an increase of the percentage to 65 per cent of tidewater price. On the other hand, in return for this decidedly favorable offer, the operators were to bind themselves to ship over no other roads during the entire life of their properties; that is to say, until the mines should have been entirely worked out. This is a notable departure from all previous forms of contract, which had been made for a definite term of years. Inasmuch as the proportion of independent coal output has been decreasing for many years, such contracts as this would finally dispose of the small fraction now in existence. It would forever remove a most disturbing factor in any attempt by the railroads to fix among themselves both the amount of output and the price.

Right here, Mr. President, I will pause to comment on the effort which is now being made by Mr. Cassatt, the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and others, in the reports of the evidence being taken before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia as to the causes of this coal famine, upon the great hue and cry which has been raised against the "independent operators" as being the extortionists, the vampires who are sucking the blood of the poor. Here is the evidence, which I shall show more clearly and in a fuller way later on, that there are no independent operators except the owners of possibly 2 or 2½ per cent of the anthracite coal field. The railroad companies are absolutely in the saddle. They mine and market coal, and they fix the price without regard to a solitary independent operator alive. The way in which the newspapers are lending themselves to this effort to befuddle the minds of the people and to deceive them into the idea that the roads are now willing and anxious to relieve the distress, but that somebody somewhere called an independent operator is responsible, I say this effort or this willingness by the newspapers to be prostituted is an infamy.

I will go more in detail after a little and marshal some further evidence, but I want to continue and get through with the Industrial Commission's report in regard to the coal trust, its origin and its present status. Mentioning some evidence which has been referred to, the Commission goes on to say:

> On the basis of this evidence, the importance of the consolidation of the Reading and the Central of New Jersey becomes at once apparent. It is confirmed, furthermore, by the last annual report of the Reading Company, which concludes with the following complacent statement to its stockholders, that—
> "The acquisition of the control of the Jersey Central is not only of enormous advantage because of the additional facilities given to the system, but through its acquisition the Reading system now owns and controls about 63 per cent of all the unmined anthracite coal in the State of Pennsylvania."

COMMUNITY OF INTEREST.

> It is not clear, either from testimony before the Industrial Commission or from other information available, what degree of actual consolidation by exchange of stock holdings prevails among the other roads in the anthracite field. Considerable evidence tends to show that effective control by unity of stock ownership is given to a large proportion of the entire output of the field. Thus, the Lehigh Valley Railroad, since J. P. Morgan & Co. took up their option on the stock of that company held by the Packer estate, is quite certainly controlled by the same financial interest which entirely dominates the Reading Company. The Erie system also is understood to be a Morgan road, despite rumors to the effect that the Hill interests in the Northwestern transcontinental lines had secured control.
> The Erie road, through its acquisition of the Susquehanna and Western, and the purchase of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, now controls more than 11 per cent of the total output. The Lackawanna road, with its 12 per cent of shipments in 1900, is an important factor, but its definite relation to the Morgan interests has not been made clear. Its substantial unanimity of interest with the roads previously named is, however, apparent. While for many years the Pennsylvania Railroad has persisted in independent action, and while the Delaware and Hudson Company is usually credited with Vanderbilt affiliation, the proportion of the total output more or less directly controlled by the Morgan interests is probably from two-thirds to three-fourths of the entire shipment. The only roads which, it is maintained with showing of authority, are entirely independent are the Ontario and Western, and the firm of Coxe Brothers, which owns the Delaware, Susquehanna, and Schuylkill. These two roads together, however, control but slightly over 7 per cent of the total shipments.

Here we have testimony on top of testimony, evidence unimpeached and indisputable, showing that there has been a consolidation under some scheme of community of interest and interchange of stock or by the purchase or lease of practically the entire anthracite coal field, and J. P. Morgan & Co. are the men who have been primarily instrumental in bringing this about.

The attempt had been made to secure this monopoly, but it remained for the genius of this modern Crœsus to accomplish what others had failed to do. I therefore do not hesitate to say in the face of the facts as herein set forth that J. Pierpont Morgan is to-day the deus ex machina, the man behind the curtain, pulling the wires, manipulating, controlling, and directing this whole scheme for the robbery of the millions, in order to add to his wealth, already so great that he does not know how rich he is, and nobody else can even do anything more than guess.

I call attention to a fact in our recent history which will be a comment on this condition, and that is that after the President of the United States had sent for these coal operators, although it was outside of his official duty and beyond his official power, and had exerted himself to the utmost by pleadings and arguments to induce the owners or presidents of the coal roads to come to some terms which would cause the strike to stop, he was treated almost with contempt and insulted by Mr. Baer. They spurned his pleadings for compromise or arbitration, but when Mr. Root, as the papers stated, took it upon himself to go to New York and apply to the king, Morgan, we find that Mr. Baer, Mr. Thomas, and their confrères began to see things in another light, and, therefore, an agreement was reached, by which the matters in difference between the miners, the operators, and the railroads were to be submitted to this commission or board of arbitration, which is now sitting and examining into the facts.

The President failed, although the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] gave him so much credit in his speech the other day for having brought about such a condition as would ameliorate and prevent the disaster from assuming any greater proportions. The President deserves no credit except for his attempt. The actual fact is that J. Pierpont Morgan gave orders to his coconspirators, or servants, or whatever you may call them, and therefore we have this attempted arrangement or agreement between the monopoly and the strikers; while in the meantime, by reason of the strike and the scarcity of coal produced by the depletion of the accumulated stock, the people to-day are face to face with and are suffering from the lack of fuel to warm their houses, to cook, or to do anything else for which anthracite coal has been used heretofore.

Mr. President, I have been dealing somewhat in generalities. I have been marshaling evidence that the combination has been in process of completion. The monopoly has been born. The birth has been going on for several years. The absorption of properties by these coal roads began away back thirty or more years ago.

I now propose to come down to some particulars to show why the Attorney-General is derelict, criminal, and why he is essentially the man at whom the people of this country can point and say: "You have murdered all those who have frozen to death; you are the man who deserves the opprobrium and the hate of the poor and the oppressed of this land."

It will be recalled that some ten days or more ago a resolution calling for certain evidence and testimony in a case begun by William R. Hearst, in which a petition was filed with the Attorney-General, was called for, and the evidence demanded in order that the Senate and the country might see whether there was any essential reason to censure the Attorney-General. Senators were quick to spring up and say, "It would be wrong policy for the Senate to interfere with the judicial arm of the Government"—the Attorney-General—no; not the judicial department, but the Department of Justice. It is a pity they are not always synonymous. But the declaration was made and the argument was used that we ought not to interfere with the Attorney-General in the discharge of his duties; that he was and is an honorable man, clean, patriotic, and to be trusted. I confess on its face that was a proper contention; but the question is, whether the facts will bear out the idea that the Attorney-General has done his full duty and whether he is be trusted.

Mr. Hearst, when approached by some one—a friend, not me, but it came to me—sent a statement over his own signature that in October last he filed a petition, accompanied by evidence, showing this monopoly, this attempt to fix prices and interfere with interstate commerce, which, under the antitrust law, would make the parties indictable and would warrant the issuance of an injunction. He filed this information along with the petition of which mention has been made. I am informed that that testimony is in the hands of the district attorney in New York, Mr. Burnett, and that the papers have never been sent to Washington because orders came from here not to forward them. At the same time Mr. Hearst began——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator make that statement on his own responsibility?

Mr. TILLMAN. What responsibility?

Mr. SPOONER. On your responsibility.

Mr. TILLMAN. What statement?

Mr. SPOONER. The statement that the papers have never been returned, and have not been returned because of an order from here not to return them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not returned here. They are in the hands of the district attorney awaiting the action of the Attorney-General, and they are held under his orders.

Mr. SPOONER. Where?

Mr. TILLMAN. In the district attorney's office in New York.

Mr. SPOONER. By order of the Attorney-General?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; that is what I have said.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator make himself responsible for that?

Mr. TILLMAN. How can I be responsible for some other man's statement? I gave the authority upon which I make that statement. That man is a member-elect of the other House, and without proof we have no right to impugn his honesty. I will give his letter setting forth the facts.

NEW YORK, January 6, 1903.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to certain insinuations that the evidence offered by me to the Attorney-General in re the coal trust had not been filed until within a few days of the date upon which Senator JONES introduced his resolution calling upon the Attorney-General for the matters pertaining to the petition.

The petition in question was filed with the Attorney-General on October 4, 1902. Two days later I received a communication signed by "H. M. Hoyt, Acting Attorney-General," advising me to this effect: "I have sent the petition to the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, with instructions to receive the evidence in support of your allegations, which you or your counsel have to offer, or any other evidence bearing on the situation, and to report promptly the result to the Attorney-General for such action as the latter may determine to take on your petition."

On the same day I received United States District Attorney Henry C. Burnett's acknowledgment of the receipt of the Attorney-General's instructions, and notice that he was ready to proceed. On October 9 my attorney, Mr. Clarence J. Shearn, appeared before District Attorney Burnett and began the presentation of the evidence in support of my petition, continuing from day to day until October 16, on which date the bulk of all the evidence was in the district attorney's hands, which evidence included the complete set of the Temple Iron Company's contracts, which had been unearthed by me, and which conclusively establish over the seal of the coal companies and the hands of their presidents the illegal combination complained of.

At the request of the district attorney, supplementary evidence was submitted from time to time up to October 30, when the preparation of the case was concluded.

I am credibly informed that District Attorney Burnett's report has been ready since the first week in November, but has been withheld on instructions from Washington.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Mr. SPOONER. What I want to know is, is Mr. Hearst responsible for the statement?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Hearst is responsible for that statement.

At the same time that Mr. Hearst through his attorney made this effort to secure the aid and obtain the action of the Attorney-General—for be it understood that all action under the antitrust law must come from the Attorney-General's order, and that no district attorney dare to proceed or move in any case until he has had the sanction and authority of the head of the Department of Justice——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Did not the resolution that was introduced here some time ago, to which the Senator has referred, recite the fact that the district attorney had sent his report to the Attorney-General's Office?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what the resolution recited, but I think the language of the resolution was that a considerable time or a protracted period had elapsed since the filing of the petition. The Senator can get the resolution and quote it if he sees fit. It is not a question of whether the Jones resolution stated the exact facts or not; it is not a question of whether Mr. Hearst's statement in regard to the present status of the case was exactly correct or not. The point that I want to call to the attention of the Senate and the country is that evidence backing up the facts as set forth in the Industrial Commission's report, which I have already quoted, shows that this combination was in process of final completion and adjustment to begin its work of squeezing the people, and that it has been going on for three or five years, with Attorney-General Griggs fully cognizant of the action, because he had been the attorney of the combine, or one of them, and that the Department of Justice, under the predecessor of the present Attorney-General and under the present Attorney-General, has done nothing. That is the burden of my indictment. We are not going to be brushed aside by any little errors in my statement. I am not going to make any mistakes if I can help myself. I am going to state the plain truth as I understand it and believe it, and nothing more.

But here is an official document. As I was going to state when interrupted, when the move was made in the district court before the district attorney by forwarding or filing a petition and presenting such evidence as would prove the facts, a move was begun by Mr. Hearst before the attorney-general of the State of New York, at Albany, at the same time to have the machinery of justice of that great Commonwealth set in motion under the antimonopoly law, so as to take cognizance of the situation and to prevent the harm and wrong and misery that would follow.

Before putting in this petition I will state that I have here the argument in that case, where all the facts are marshaled, where the basis of the evidence is presented, and where the case is argued, and I shall read a little from it. The same case is now before the attorney-general of the State of New York, Mr. Cunneen, the former attorney-general, Mr. Davies, having gone out of office. Mr. Hearst renews his effort to have the machinery of the law in New York State set to work to at least do what can be done at this late day to relieve the suffering, and if not to relieve the suffering, because that appears to be impossible, to at least hold up to the gaze of the country the men primarily responsible, and let the odium and punishment that ought to follow come to them.

I will file this paper, as it is too long to read, mainly for the reason that it is more full and complete in all its recitals and details than the argument that was made in October. I prefer to read that argument and merely put in this petition in the matter of the application of William Randolph Hearst to the attorney-general of the State of New York for the institution of an action against the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company and others, under the antitrust law. The petition was filed January 6 of this year. I suppose lawyers prosecuting a case would hold on to this petition and argue from it. But, as I said, not being a lawyer, and not being as thoroughly familiar with the evidence and the facts as I should desire to be, I shall lend myself—and not feel in the slightest degree that Senatorial dignity has been shocked or injured—to give voice to the argument and the presentation of the facts made by Mr. Shearn in the case last October. If Senators would like to have Mr. Hearst's petition read I have no objection, but they can read it in the RECORD, and therefore I will ask to have it inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the paper referred to by the Senator will be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. As part of my speech, right in the body of it. I mean I want it to come in right where I am.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be inserted as the Senator requests.

The paper referred to is as follows:

Before the attorney-general. In the matter of the application of William Randolph Hearst to Hon. John Cunneen, attorney-general of the State of New York, for the institution of an action against the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company and others under the antitrust law. Reading Company, Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, Erie Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, Temple Iron Company, Delaware and Hudson Company, New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Coal Company.

Take notice that, pursuant to authority this day granted by the Hon. John Cunneen, attorney-general of the State of New York, and upon the annexed verified petition of William Randolph Hearst, application will be made to said attorney-general, at his office in the capitol, in the city of Albany, N. Y., on the 12th day of January, 1903, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, that proceedings and an action be instituted against you, the above-named corporations, in the name and on behalf of the people of the State of New York, under the provisions of chapter 690 of the laws of 1899, and that a hearing will then and there be had upon said application.

New York, January 6, 1903.

EINSTEIN, TOWNSEND, GUITERMAN & SHEARN,
Attorneys for Petitioner. Office and Post-Office Address, Mutual Life Building, 32 Nassau Street, New York City.

The Hon. JOHN CUNNEEN,
Attorney-General of the State of New York:

The petition of William Randolph Hearst respectfully shows:

That your petitioner, a citizen of the State of New York, residing in the city of New York, hereby makes application, upon the facts hereinafter recited, that you institute proceedings and an action under chapter 690 of the laws of 1899, in the name and on behalf of the people of the State of New York, against the Reading Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, Lehigh Valley Coal Company, Pennsylvania Coal Company, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, and Temple Iron Company, all of which are foreign corporations engaged in business within the State of New York, and against the Delaware and Hudson Company, New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, and Erie Railroad Company, domestic corporations, and against persons who are the officers, managers, directors, and agents of said corporations, to restrain and prevent the said corporations, their respective officers, managers, directors, and agents, from doing in this State any act in, toward, or for the making or consummation of the contracts, agreements, combinations, and arrangements herein set forth, and from doing business in the State of New York pursuant to such contracts, agreements, combination, and arrangements, and to vacate, annul, and set aside the certificates procured by any of the said foreign corporations from the secretary of state pursuant to section 15 of the general corporation law authorizing said corporations to do business in the State of New York.

That the only available source for the supply of anthracite coal, an article of common use and a necessity of life, to the inhabitants of the State of New York is a limited region in the State of Pennsylvania known as the anthracite coal field, comprising an area of about 477 square miles, and the only practical means of transporting coal from said coal field to the inhabitants of the State of New York are the railroads above mentioned, all of which penetrate said coal field and provide transportation for coal to points within the State of New York.

That although none of the said railroads except the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Delaware and Hudson Company is permitted by its charter, or by the laws of the State under which it is incorporated, to operate coal mines, all of said railroad companies except the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Delaware and Hudson Company, which own their own coal mines, engage extensively in the business of mining anthracite coal and in the business of selling the same within the State of New York, and elsewhere, by means of subsidiary corporations entirely owned, controlled, and directed by said railroad companies.

For example: Said Reading Company owns and operates coal mines through a subsidiary company called the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, the entire capital stock of which is owned by said Reading Company; and, although there are two separate corporate entities, the only distinction between the said Reading Company and said coal company is an artificial one, the companies having substantially the same officers and directors and the coal company being the absolute property of the Reading Company to do with as it sees fit. The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey owns and operates coal mines through a subsidiary company called the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and the entire capital stock of which is owned by said railroad company. Similarly the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company owns and operates coal mines by means of a subsidiary company called the Lehigh Valley Coal Company; as does the Erie Railroad Company, by means of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and the Hillside Coal and Iron Company, and as does the Pennsylvania Railroad Company by means of the Susquehanna Coal Company.

That for several years past of the entire area of said anthracite coal field, 97.5 per cent thereof was owned by said railroad company and said subsidiary companies in the following proportions:

	Per cent.
Reading	42.25
Central Railroad of New Jersey	17.30
Lehigh Valley	16.87
Delaware, Lackawanna and Western	6.55
Erie	5.18
Delaware and Hudson	2.29
Pennsylvania	6.24
New York, Ontario and Western	.28
New York, Susquehanna and Western	.54

That the annual productive capacity of said anthracite coal field has been for many years past about 60,000,000 tons, and that the annual production for several years past has been as follows:

	Tons.
1896	48,523,287
1897	46,974,715
1898	47,663,076
1901	60,242,560

That for several years prior to 1901 of the total output of said anthracite coal field, about 70 per cent thereof was mined and sold by the Reading Company, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, Delaware and Hudson Company, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, Erie Railroad Company, and New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, either directly or through their said subsidiary companies, and that the balance of the said output was mined by individual companies, independent of said railroad companies.

That during the year 1895 the average selling price per ton f. o. b. New York Harbor of stove coal was $3.12, as compared to $3.60 per ton for 1894 and $4.19 per ton for 1893, said low price of $3.12 being due to the fact that there existed at said time some competition, both between said railroad companies themselves and between said railroad companies on the one hand and the said individual operators on the other, in the business of mining and selling anthracite coal.

That in January, 1896, in order to raise the selling price of anthracite coal at tide water, and to restrain and limit, and as far as possible prevent, competition in the business of mining and selling anthracite coal, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company (now the Delaware and Hudson Company), the Erie and Wyoming Valley Railroad Company (owning the Pennsylvania Coal Company, both companies being now owned by the Erie Railroad Company), Erie Railroad Company, New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company (since succeeded by Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, which is owned by the Reading Company) entered into and upon an agreement with one another at the city of New York, wherein and whereby it was mutually agreed that, beginning February 1, 1896, the total tonnage of anthracite coal to be transported annually from said anthracite coal field should be divided into fixed proportions and allotted as follows:

	Per cent.
Delaware, Lackawanna and Western	13.35
Delaware and Hudson Canal Company	9.60
Erie and Wyoming Valley Railroad	4
Erie Railroad	4
New York, Susquehanna and Western	3.20
New York, Ontario and Western	3.10
Pennsylvania Railroad	11.40
Lehigh Valley Railroad	15.65
Delaware, Susquehanna and Schuylkill	3.50
Philadelphia and Reading Railroad	20.50

That during the year 1896 the total output of anthracite coal was transported by said railroad companies, pursuant to said agreement, by each of them in the proportion fixed and allotted by said agreement, and, as a result thereof, the output for the year 1896 was reduced by more than 3,000,000 tons, and the selling price per ton f. o. b. at New York Harbor increased from $3.12 to $3.79 for stove coal.

That since 1896 said companies and their successors in interest have, by agreement and combination among themselves, maintained substantially the same percentages of anthracite coal transported, although the annual output has increased from 48,523,287 tons in 1896 to 60,242,560 tons in 1901, during which time the average selling price, f. o. b., New York Harbor, for stove coal has been as follows:

That in 1896 and 1897 all of the said railrad companies except the Erie and Wyoming Valley Railroad Company maintained, by agreement between themselves, a uniform rate of freight between said coal field and tidewater which amounted to as much as 40 per cent of the f. o. b. price of coal at tidewater.

That during the year 1898 a majority of the independent coal operators in the anthracite coal field actively cooperated with one another in an endeavor to procure a lower rate of freight for coal, but the said railroad companies refused to lower the rate. That thereupon the majority of the independent coal operators in the coal field known as the Wyoming region organized a railroad corporation called the New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company, for the purpose of constructing and operating an independent railroad route from said coal field to tidewater. That practically all of the independent coal operators in said Wyoming region pledged the entire output of their respective mines to said New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company, and measures were taken to procure rights of way and a terminal for said projected railroad company. That among the independent coal operators who pledged the output of their mines to said New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company were Clarence D. Simpson and Thomas H. Watkins, composing the firm of Simpson & Watkins, of Scranton, Pa., owning controlling interests in eleven collieries. That said Simpson & Watkins were the most active and influential supporters of the said New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company, which company would, if completed, have resulted in competition in the sale of anthracite coal in the State of New York between said independent coal operators and said railroad companies.

That in January, 1899, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, Reading Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, Erie Railroad Company, and New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, hereinafter referred to for the sake of brevity as the "six companies," acting in concert and combination, and for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale of anthracite coal in the State of New York which would have resulted from the construction of the said independent railroad, purchased the charter of the Temple Iron Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania in 1873 and then operating an iron furnace at Reading, Pa. That at the time of the said purchase the capital stock of the said Temple Iron Company amounted to only $240,000, and said company was not engaged in the business of coal mining.

That on January 19, 1899, said six companies, acting in concert and combination and for the purpose aforesaid, procured the said firm of Simpson & Watkins to enter into a contract with the said Temple Iron Company for the sale to the said Temple Iron Company of all their interest in said eleven collieries, whose output was, as hereinabove alleged, pledged to the said projected independent railroad company. That said six companies in February, 1899, acting in concert and combination and for the purpose aforesaid, caused the capital stock of the said Temple Iron Company to be increased to $2,500,000, and an issue of bonds of the said Temple Iron Company to be authorized amounting to $3,500,000, and on February 27, 1899, said six companies entered into a written agreement with one another and with the said Temple Iron Company and with the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, whereby said six companies agreed to guarantee yearly dividends of 6 per cent on the entire capital stock of the said Temple Iron Company, and also payment of principal of and interest on all of the bonds of the said Temple Iron Company, to the extent of and in the following proportions, to wit:

	Per cent.
Lehigh Valley Railroad Company	22.88
Central Railroad Company of New Jersey	17.12
Delaware, Lackawanna and Western	19.52
Erie Railroad Company	5.84
New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company	4.68
Reading Company	29.96

That on the said day, to wit, February 27, 1899, pursuant to said agreements of January 19, 1899, and February 27, 1899, said firm of Simpson & Watkins transferred to the said Temple Iron Company all their interests in the aforesaid eleven collieries, and received therefor $2,250,000 of the capital stock of the said Temple Iron Company, and $2,100,000 of the bonds of the said Temple Iron Company, guaranteed by said six companies as aforesaid, whereupon said Simpson & Watkins entered into a written agreement with said Guaranty Trust Company of New York to transfer to said Guaranty Trust Company of New York all of the said bonds and stock of the said Temple Iron Company in consideration of the delivery to them of the sum of $3,238,396, and the delivery and issuing to them by said Guaranty Trust Company of New York of certificates of beneficial interest in the capital stock of the Temple Iron Company in respect of $1,000,000 of such capital stock. That by the purchase of the said collieries of Simpson & Watkins, in the manner aforesaid, said six companies prevented the building of the said projected New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company, and the competition in the selling of anthracite coal in the State of New York that would have resulted from the building and operation of the said road.

That said six companies have, since February, 1899, acting in concert and combination as aforesaid, and for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale of anthracite coal in the State of New York, controlled and operated the aforesaid eleven collieries, purchased from Simpson & Watkins as aforesaid through the medium of the said Temple Iron Company.

That in said agreement of February 27, 1899, between said six companies and the Temple Iron Company and the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, said six companies purchased the entire capital stock of the said Temple Iron Company then outstanding, in the proportions represented by the foregoing table of percentages, and agreed to purchase all additional amounts of stock of the said Temple Iron Company thereafter issued, and that pending the delivery of said stock, the same should be held by the said Guaranty Trust Company of New York, as trustee, with all the rights of owner thereof, both as to votes and dividends, said six companies only receiving certificates of a beneficial interest in said stock. That the aforesaid agreements between the said six companies, the Temple Iron Company, the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and Simpson & Watkins constituted an illegal scheme and arrangement whereby competition in the sale of anthracite coal within the State of New York is restrained and prevented.

That the president of the said Temple Iron Company is George F. Baer, who is also the president of the Reading Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, and of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey. That the directors of the said Temple Iron Company are the respective presidents of the said railroad companies, being as follows: George F. Baer, president of the Reading Company and of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey; Eben B. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and chairman of the board of directors of the Erie Railroad Company; F. D. Underwood, president of the Erie Railroad Company; William H. Truesdale, president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company; R. M. Olyphant, president of the Delaware and Hudson Company; Thomas P. Fowler, president of the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company; Irving A. Stearns, president of the Delaware, Susquehanna and Schuylkill Railroad Company.

That the coal area controlled by the said railroad companies, whose officers constitute the board of directors of the said Temple Iron Company, amounts to 89.51 per cent of the entire anthracite coal field of the State of Pennsylvania. That the railroads of which the said George F. Baer and Eben B. Thomas are the presidents control 86.42 per cent of the total anthracite area in the State of Pennsylvania, and transport annually 76.42 per cent of the total tonnage of anthracite coal out of said coal fields.

That the meetings of the board of directors of the said Temple Iron Company are, and have been since 1899, held at the office of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, at No. 143 Liberty street, New York City. That said meetings while ostensibly those of the board of directors of the Temple Iron Company are, and have been since 1899, in reality meetings of and conferences between the presidents of the said respective railroad companies held for the purpose of fixing a uniform selling price for anthracite coal and for the regulation of the output of anthracite coal.

That subsequent to the purchase of the colleries of Simpson & Watkins by said six companies, in the manner aforesaid, and during the year 1899, a large number of independent coal operators in said Wyoming region, who had pledged the output of their mines to the said New York, Wyoming and Western Railroad Company, the completion of which was prevented as aforesaid, among whom was then included the Pennsylvania Coal Company, cooperated with one another in a further attempt to procure a lower rate of freight for anthracite coal, and, failing to obtain the same, caused to be organized a railroad company called the Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad, for the purpose of constructing an independent railroad from said coal field to Kingston, N. Y., on the Hudson River, and in pursuance thereof applied to the board of railroad commissioners of the State of New York for a charter. That the granting of said charter and the building and operation of said railroad would have resulted in competition in the sale of anthracite coal in the State of New York between said independent coal operators and the railroad companies.

That the granting of the said charter was opposed by the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company and by the Erie Railroad Company both before the said board of railroad commissioners and in the courts, but said charter was granted by said board of railroad commissioners in May, 1900, and sustained by the court in September of the same year. That the chief support of the said Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company was the aforesaid Pennsylvania Coal Company. That immediately after the charter of the said Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company had been sustained in the courts the aforesaid Erie Railroad Company entered into a contract with the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., of the city of New York, for the purchase by said J. P. Morgan & Co., and the sale by said company to said Erie Railroad Company, of the entire capital stock of the said Pennsylvania Coal Company and of said Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company, and in January, 1901, said contract was carried out and said Erie Railroad Company became, and is to-day, the owner of the entire capital stock of the said Pennsylvania Coal Company and of the said Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company.

That at the same time the majority of the capital stock of the said Central Railroad Company of New Jersey was purchased by the Reading Company, and George F. Baer, president of the Reading Company, was elected president of the said Central Railroad Company of New Jersey. That at the same time, to wit, January, 1901, the majority of the capital stock of the Reading Company was, and had for some time prior thereto, been deposited in a voting trust consisting of Messrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, of said firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., C. L. W. Packard, and Frederick P. Olcott, and a majority of the stock of the Erie Railroad Company was deposited in a voting trust consisting of the aforesaid J. Pierpont Morgan, Louis Fitzgerald, and Sir Charles Tennant. That the aforesaid purchase of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company was for the purpose of, and resulted in, preventing the building of the said projected independent railroad to tide water, and thus preventing competition in the sale of anthracite coal within the State of New York.

That in March, 1901, in order to prevent any further attempts on the part of the remaining independent operators to build an independent railroad to tide water and thus compete with the said railroad companies in the sale of anthracite coal, the Reading Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, through their respective subsidiary companies, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company entered into an agreement with one another, and with practically all of the remaining independent coal operators, for the purchase by said companies of the independent coal operators of all coal mined by said operators in terms substantially as follows: That said independent coal operators should sell to said railroad companies, or their subsidiary coal companies, the entire product of their mines for all future time for 65 per cent of the f. o. b. price of coal at tide water, the railroad companies, or their subsidiary companies, however, agreeing to purchase of said independent coal operators only such "a just proportion of the entire quantity of coal agreed to be purchased by the buyer, measured by the colliery capacity of the respective sellers."

That in the manner and by the means hereinabove set forth there was consummated in March, 1901, in the hands of the aforesaid six companies and of the Delaware and Hudson Company, New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company an absolute monopoly in the production and transportation of anthracite coal, and in the sale thereof within the State of New York, with absolute power arbitrarily to fix output, freight rate, and selling price.

That since March, 1901, there has been no competition between any of the said companies in the sale of anthracite coal, the proportionate output being determined by the said agreement of January, 1896, the freight rate and selling price by agreement between said companies.

That since March, 1901, said six companies, the Delaware and Hudson Company, New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have by agreement between themselves, and contrary to law, fixed and maintained a uniform price for coal within the State of New York, and that all of said railroad companies, either individually or through their subsidiary companies, have since March, 1901, sold and delivered coal within the State of New York pursuant to said illegal agreement. That the prices fixed by said companies for the year 1901 were higher than would have prevailed in the absence of a combination or agreement between said companies, and were higher than the rates prevailing in 1900, thus involving great hardship and loss upon the inhabitants of the State of New York. That in October, 1902, said companies arbitrarily and uniformly by agreement between themselves, increased the price of coal 50 cents a ton over the price fixed and maintained by said companies during the year 1901. That while said increase means an addition of $30,000,000 a year to the revenues of the said railroad companies, it represents a corresponding loss to the consumers of coal, greatly to the detriment of business, and entailing suffering and hardship upon the poor.

To the end, therefore, that the power existing in the said railroad companies by virtue of the aforesaid combination and agreement between them may not be further abused by another increase in the price of this necessary of life, and in order that the said combination may be adjudged to be illegal and may be disrupted and destroyed, your petitioner earnestly prays that proceedings be instituted against said corporations pursuant to the antimonopoly law of this State.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, being duly sworn, says: That he is the petitioner above named; that he has read the foregoing petition and application, and that the same is true according to the deponent's information and belief, That the sources of deponent's knowledge of and the grounds of his belief in the truth of the allegations of the petition, all of which are made upon information and belief, are investigations made by petitioner's agents, reports of duly appointed committees of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate of the United States and of the senate of the State of New York, based upon certain testimony taken by said committees, together with the reports of experts, Government officials, and other persons in a position to be familiar with the facts in the petition set forth.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Sworn to before me this 6th day of January, 1903.

IRA E. MILLER,
Commissioner of Deeds, city of New York.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the argument from which I am going to read is that of Clarence J. Shearn before the attorney-general of the State of New York on the 15th day of last October. It relates to same statement of facts. Of course, in my desire to condense what I am going to say, or want to say in support of my assertions that the Attorney-General is responsible, it would be better if I read all of it; but I have tried to go through and select such parts as are most essential to my purpose, and therefore it may have some little breaks in it.

I will state that the railroads embraced in the bill of complaint are what are known as the nine coal roads, together with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and two or three others which are in alliance with them, and that in this hearing only the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company appeared by attorney, all the other railroads merely filing their answers to the complaint.

There is some little colloquy here once in a while between the lawyers, which I will read because it is necessary to the elucidation of the statement of facts and arguments. I make that statement to show why other men appear, so that there will be no confusion. Mr. Shearn said:

Fortunately in this proceeding I shall be able not only to bring before you evidence of a nature from which inferences may be drawn, but also evidence in the shape of contracts over the hands and seals of many of these corporations in this combination, which shows conclusively and upon their face the existence of an actual combination between them to an end which is apparent from the paper itself.

Going on to discuss the basis of his contention that there was a combination, he says:

We find that the only available source of supply for the State of New York and for the entire Eastern and Northern States for anthracite coal is a limited area of some 477 square miles in the State of Pennsylvania—a little strip of 170 miles long and varying from a mile to two miles and a half in width.

There is all of the anthracite coal that is available for use in the Northern and Eastern States, and in fact for the whole country, because the small supply of anthracite coal in Colorado is but a drop in the bucket, and, of course, does not enter into this proceeding at all, because it is impossible for anyone to get it in competition with Pennsylvania coal.

I have shown to you, by testimony from the Industrial Commission's report, that these assertions of fact are based upon other evidence than the contention of Mr. Hearst's plea, and that they can not be disputed.

Now, we find that this supply of coal is owned and controlled absolutely by the corporations named in this petition, and in certain well-marked and readily ascertainable proportions, to wit: That the Philadelphia and Reading controls 42.25 per cent of the entire supply of anthracite coal; the Central Railroad of New Jersey controls 17.30 per cent; the Lehigh Valley 16.87 per cent; the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 6.55; the Delaware and Hudson, 2.29; the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 6.24; the Ontario and Western, 0.28; and the Susquehanna and Western, 0.54.

So that out of the entire supply all but 2.59 per cent was, before this combination became effective, in the absolute control and in the hands of the parties to this combination; and of the balance, the supply was owned by a few independent operators, among whom the most important, previous to the consummation of this agreement and combination, was the Pennsylvania Coal Company.

The next step in outlining this situation, showing the opportunity for combination, is the determination of how it is possible to get that coal to market, and we find that the only means of access to these coal mines for the people of the State of New York are nine railroads, which, curiously enough, are the same corporations which control the price of coal.

And, considering the tonnage that has been carried over these railroads during a great many years past, we find that the Reading has carried 20.70; the Central Railroad, 11.77; Lehigh Valley, 15.32; Erie, 8.50; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 13.33; Delaware and Hudson, 8.81; Pennsylvania, 11.46; New York, Ontario and Western, 3.68; New York, Susquehanna and Western, 2.95.

In other words, not only have the corporations named controlled the available supply of coal, but they have handled its tonnage and have transported and carried it to the extent of 96.52 per cent of all the coal carried.

* * * * * * *

"So that, bearing in mind that these railroad companies, these mining companies, control the source of supply, and that they control the only means of getting coal to market, it is perfectly clear to the lay mind, and established to a certainty in any legal mind, that the opportunity for this combination exists, and that it is an unusual opportunity."

I have said that the sources of supply are controlled by these railroad companies and these coal-mining companies, but that even is susceptible to further limitation. How? We find that it may be limited to the railroad companies alone, because the railroad companies own the entire capital stock of the coal-mining companies, which are the legal owners of these various mining properties.

No one would think for a moment that, in the case of any railroad corporation other than one such as the Delaware and Hudson where there was a special provision in its charter authorizing it, for the benefit of the people of New York, at an early day in the mining industry, to invest its capital in the stock of coal mines, any railroad corporation would be permitted to control and own the means of producing that which they transported; because it affords the readiest means of discrimination against those who naturally would compete with the railroads.

We find that that sentiment that would be expressed in principles of public policy has, in the State of Pennsylvania, been embodied in the State constitution; that the constitution of 1873 expressly prohibits railroad companies from engaging directly or indirectly in mining coal; and a subterfuge has been resorted to (for it is a subterfuge, a device, a pretext which, from cases where the matter has been under advisement it is obvious that courts will at once brush aside), they have resorted to this device—to organize a holding company and then own all the capital stock of that company.

He goes on to say:

So we see that these corporations named, by virtue of the geographical situation, by virtue of the fact that they furnish the only means of access to these mines, and by the device of dividing that whole territory, and through the schemes of these subsidiary or holding companies, have the opportunity of creating an absolute monopoly in the production and sale of anthracite coal.

Now, whether that combination exists for these purposes may be very well arrived at preliminarily by consideration of what happened in the earlier attempt to monopolize this coal supply. I refer to the attempt known as the McLoud attempt in 1892, which was an attempt to obtain for the Reading Railroad Company a lease of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, thus consolidating under one management over 60 per cent of the total supply of anthracite coal.

In that case Chancellor McGill, of the New Jersey supreme bench, rendered a decision which I here insert, in which he declared that these conditions are intolerable because they are against public policy and public right, and he brushed aside the lease as absolutely worthless, and for a time the people were protected against monopolies.

In one of the New Jersey reports Chancellor McGill said:

There are peculiar features in the transaction now considered that evinces a public danger much more serious than the mere transfer of corporate duties to performance by a foreign corporation. The real lessor and lessee here are extensive producers and carriers of anthracite coal. They constitute two of the six great coal carriers from the coal regions of Pennsylvania to this and adjoining States. It is disclosed that the real lessee has secured the lease of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and that thereby and by the lease in question it controls three of the six great coal carriers referred to; and also, with the alliance thus formed, now controls, through the instrumentality of coal companies, the capital stock of which these combined carriers own, more than one-half of the anthracite coal fields in Pennsylvania.

Moreover, as an indication of the tendency of the combination, the Attorney-General presents a report by the lessor defendant to its stockholders, in which it congratulates them upon the alliance, which, with the cooperation of other large coal-producing companies, will insure them "greater uniformity in prices of coal" and the "avoidance of needless and expensive competition between producers."

The proofs show that there are localities in this State which formerly had the advantage of competition between these allied roads, but now are subject to the monopoly which this lease affords. It is true the cooperation of the remaining roads, which is necessary to a complete monopoly, has not yet been secured.

It has to-day.

By this lease only one competitor is silenced and only a little more than one-half of the entire coal region is controlled. It is only the second step in the direction of monopoly, the first step being the lease of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. To say that these conditions do not tend to a disastrous monopoly in coal would be an insult to intelligence.

I have here also a letter written in 1892 by William H. Joyce, general freight agent, to S. R. Holden, chairman of the anthracite rate committee of New York, in which a statement is made that the rate committee of the conjoined railroads must conform to an agreement which had been reached, to the effect that the independent coal operators should receive 60 per cent of the selling price at tide water. They had previous to that been getting less; and therefore we have evidence away back yonder of a combination and a monopoly by this coal trust.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the discussion at the recent meeting in New York of the representatives of the anthracite coal carrying companies, at which the question of transportation rates on anthracite coal was considered, I now desire to reiterate the statements I then made.

As you are aware, during the past year the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, directly or through its coal organization, the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, made with individual operators contract for the purchase of their coal upon a percentage of the prices realized at tide. Other railroad interests transporting coal from the same region have also been transporting coal under the same general or similar arrangements. Lately the Reading Railroad Company, directly or through its coal organization, the Reading Coal and Iron Company, have effected like arrangements with a number of miners and shippers of anthracite coal, and, as a consequence of these contracts, it became necessary for our road, if it was to retain the product of collieries it has been transporting for a number of years past, to enter into similar arrangements. This change in the manner of dealing with the anthracite coal traffic necessarily requires an adjustment of rates for such transportation upon the basis of contracts to which I have already referred, for the reason that the amount received for the transportation must necessarily be the difference between the percentage agreed to be paid for the coal and the prices for the coal, including freight, realized at destination.

The terms of these contracts have been published repeatedly as being 60 per cent of the selling price at tide for prepared sizes, and at different percentages for sizes lower than prepared. The average price at tide on prepared sizes is now, say, $3.60 per ton, 40 per cent of which, representing the transportation rate, would be $1.44, while our present rate, as you are aware, is $1.70. It is, therefore, necessary for us to name a rate of $1.44 to seaboard at New York, which we will now do. I would further state, however, that if the prices of coal are changed, the transportation rates will be decreased or increased correspondingly, in the same ratio of 40 per cent of the selling price at tide.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM H. JOYCE,
General Freight Agent Pennsylvania Railroad.

E. R. HOLDEN,
Chairman Anthracite Rate Committee, New York.

We have further here quotations from the report of the Congressional committee made to Congress in 1893, in which the statement appears:

The committee, after a careful investigation, has come to the conclusion that the railroad companies engaged in mining and transporting coal are practically in a combination to control the output and fix the prices which the public pays for this important and necessary article of consumption. The combination is not confined to the Philadelphia and Reading and the Lehigh Valley, but embraces all the railroads connecting the anthracite region with tidewater. There is substantially no competition existing between these companies. The only limitation to their demands is the indisposition on the part of the public to buy their product at an exorbitant price.

That was in reference to the conditions nine years ago. Now Mr. Shearn goes on to ask:

Now what is the situation? The same situation precisely, except that it is more aggravated. They have attempted to get around the law by this subterfuge. They have bought the control of the stock of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The Reading Company now owns a majority of the stock of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The officials of the Central Railroad of New Jersey resigned. All of its directors resigned; but we find now in that new order of things the president of the Reading is the president of the Central. The offices are in the same building. The directors are the same men. They are engaged in the same line of business, but there is no more competition between them; and they have accomplished by virtue of the buying up of the stock of the Central the same thing that Chancellor McGill denounced and that the Congressional committee found resulted in a combination in restraint of trade in 1893.

Mr. Shearn goes on to recite many other facts, and I ask permission to insert in my speech any parts of his argument that I may see fit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina make that request?

Mr. TILLMAN. I make the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina requests permission to insert in his remarks such portions of the argument of Mr. Shearn as he sees proper. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Shearn goes on, after speaking about the McLoud attempt to secure this monopoly, to recite a more recent attempt, and he tells the story of how the independent operators, in their desperation at being in the grasp of the railroad monopoly, organized an effort to build an independent railroad out of the coal fields so as to reach the markets. He speaks of it as follows:

As the result of the setting aside of this Central Railroad lease in 1893, the Lehigh Valley lease was surrendered, and a period ensued—and as the result of the setting aside of those leases a new plan came into operation and lasted for something like six years, to wit, a community of interests scheme; and during that period the independent operators negotiated with Mr. McLoud, negotiated for the sale of their coal to the coal companies for 60 per cent of the prices that were realized for coal at tide water.

Those contracts were uniform and they were all identical, and under that plan there was a truce for some years, and the business went on without exciting any further comment until the Lexow investigation of 1897 or thereabouts.

During those years the prices of coal were substantially uniform at tide water and were fixed, as has been established by testimony taken before the Industrial Commission last year, at monthly meetings of sales agents of the respective railroads held at the city of New York. These agents got together once a month and agreed upon the prices of coal for the succeeding month and issued their circulars to the trade, and those were the prices; and there was unanimity in the price paid for transportation and unanimty in the prices realized for coal; but no substantial agreement shown between the companies and nothing further shown except a tacit agreement between them.

Those 60 and 40 per cent contracts were, many of them, drawing to a close in 1899 and 1900; and in the year 1899 there was a revolt among the independent producers of coal at the exorbitant prices which the railroad companies demanded for transportation.

As I have said, the producer of coal received only 60 per cent of the prices realized at tide water, and the railroad had 40 per cent; and by reason of the revolt, an organization was effected between the independents and they selected as their representative one E. B. Sturgis and one E. L. Fuller, who lived in the coal-mining region, and who undertook to make a different arrangement for them with the railroads.

Those attempts failed, and in desperation the independents got together and organized an attempt at an independent line from the coal mines to tide water. That railroad was chartered and called the New York, Wyoming and Western; and to show you the strength of that movement, every individual operator pledged his output to that projected railroad.

Well, there was a situation! Competition was about to take place in the sale of anthracite coal. That would of course result in a lessening of the price of coal. What did the combination of railroads do then? They went to work and bought up the chief supporter of this independent movement.

The chief supporter of this independent movement was a firm called Simpson & Watkins. They had some fifteen collieries, with a large output. The companies felt that there would be competition. How could it be stopped? Why, obviously, by going behind the backs of these independents and stealing away their chief supporter. What happened? Simpson & Watkins sold all their collieries and abandoned the enterprise and it died stillborn. To whom did they sell? The coal roads could not trust a sale to be made to any one of them. They did not have such confidence in one another at that time as would allow them to consent to the holding of those collieries by any one railroad company. They could not organize under a new agreement under the laws of any of the States and hold those collieries, because they would run up against the constitutional provision of 1873, that I have alluded to. So they must needs rake up an old charter, the charter of a company which had never accepted the provisions of the Pennsylvania constitution, but which had been formed under the act of 1869, which permitted corporations to loan their credit to mining enterprises. The name of that company was the Temple Iron Company. It was not a coal company at all. It was a little picayune concern that operated a little furnace at Reading. I will show you a photograph of the furnace, and you will see from that the character of the enterprise.

These railroads, these vast railroads, were engaged in the joint attempt to buy it up, and you will wonder what could possibly be the reason for the interest of the railroad companies in this little Temple Iron Company. You will not wonder when I tell you that the way in which they purchased the property of Simpson & Watkins was by the use of stock and bonds of the Temple Iron Company, all secured by a joint agreement between the railroad companies.

Between what railroads? Between these competing railroads, or supposedly competing railroads, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, the Erie, the New York, Susquehanna and Western, and the Reading Company.

And there, sir—

Laying it on the desk of the Attorney-General—is one of the bonds issued in pursuance of that scheme—a bond of the denomination of $1,000, bearing on its face this very significant indorsement:

"This bond is entitled to the guarantee as set forth in the agreement dated February 27, 1899, between the Temple Iron Company, Guaranty Trust Company of New York, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, the Erie Railroad Company, the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad Company, and the Reading Company."

Now, the indorsement on the back of the bond, referring to the agreement between these companies, appears to be significant, and the significance is further apparent when we find who the officers and directors of the Temple Iron Company were in 1899 and are to-day.

The directors include the following: George F. Baer, president of the Philadelphia and Reading, and president of the Central of New Jersey—the Reading, as I have stated, controlling 42 per cent of the supply of anthracite coal; another member is Eben B. Thomas, chairman of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, controlling 17 per cent; another is F. D. Underwood, of the Erie, controlling 2.59; William H. Truesdale, president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, controlling 6.55 per cent; Mr. Alfred Walter, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, controlling 16.87 per cent; Mr. R. M. Olyphant, of the Delaware and Hudson, controlling 2.29 per cent; Thomas P. Fowler, of the New York, Ontario and Western, controlling 0.28 per cent, and Irving A. Stearns, of the Delaware, Susquehanna and Schuylkill, controlling 1.38 per cent.

And so on. Here you have the bond of the trust, indorsed on its back by the constituent partners of the trust, the relative responsibility being the relative holding in coal lands and tonnage shipments, showing the combination, the organization, the monopoly. Mr. Shearn goes on to speak about the agreement of February 27, 1899, under which the Temple Iron Company was organized, and how this arrangement and division and agreement for responsibility came about.

The agreement recites the purchase of the collieries of Simpson & Watkins, and provides for the issue of stock and bonds in payment therefor, and then contains a provision absolutely guaranteeing the dividends upon that capital stock and guaranteeing the payment of the principal and interest on those bonds in a certain proportion, and I beg to call your attention to the proportion because it is a most significant part of this contract.

He goes on to give the percentages, which are the relative percentages so often mentioned here as to the relative ownership and tonnage. He says:

That is not the only agreement that was executed at that time. There was also a general agreement executed by all those railroad companies, a copy of which I have here, and another syndicate agreement providing for the holding of the stock that was issued to Simpson & Watkins in payment for those mines in trust by the Guaranty Trust Company, and the issuing to Simpson & Watkins and others of certificates of a beneficial interest in those shares; and thus you see that we have here the old form of trust. We have the stock of this corporation, which is the right arm of the combination and which carries out its decrees, held in trust by the Guaranty Trust Company and the Guaranty Trust Company issuing certificates of a beneficial interest therein. I have exact copies of each of those contracts. The terms of the two latter contracts in detail I can not state at this time, because the contracts were given to me by United States District Attorney Burnett, who procured them at my suggestion from the Guaranty Trust Company.

Mr. Shearn did not want to show that part of the Government's hand which District Attorney Burnett had been instrumental in securing or the information upon which the district attorney was acting.

Further, he says:

Now, then, there is a case complete when you consider these three elements of it:

First. The opportunity for a combination, which I have discussed at great length.

Second. The fact that in 1899 competition was threatened; that Simpson & Watkins were parties to a scheme which, if successful, would result in competition.

Third. Eliminate Simpson & Watkins and eliminate all competition. How? By a joint agreement of these railroad companies.

And there, sir, is as complete a case against a trust, a combination, and monopoly as has ever been presented in any court—an absolute monopoly of source of supply, competition threatened, the throttling of competition by the purchase of the threatening competitors, paying for their properties with stock and bonds unitedly guaranteed by these companies.

We could rest our case and rest any case, civil or criminal, on the evidence furnished by that bond and by these facts.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not heard the entire argument of the Senator from South Carolina this morning, and I should like to ask him if the paper from which he is reading shows that there was not only a combination as to the mining of coal, but as to its transportation, directly or indirectly, into other States than Pennsylvania?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the story of the absorption of the anthracite coal fields by the various railroads entering into it is a long one, and I am not entirely familiar with all the details or even any considerable number of them. But there are documents in this Capitol that go to show that this trust, this monopoly, began its work of absorption and control of the coal fields thirty or forty years ago, or even at an earlier date than that; that they have by contracts and agreements among themselves always maintained more or less of a combination which throttled competition; that the only bar to their absolute monopoly was the ownership of mines by independent operators; that these independent operators have in the last few years been brought to the verge of bankruptcy and despair, to the point where their mines were worthless because of the control of the means of transportation by these roads; that these roads have therefore forced on the operators contracts which give them absolute control of the output of nearly every independent operator at a fixed rate or price of 60 per cent to the operator and 40 per cent to the railroad transporting the product; that the combination of railroads themselves own the stock in the so-called coal-mining companies absolutely, and that these coal-mining companies and railroad companies are synonymous; that there is no difference in the ownership of stock; that when the board of directors of the railroad company meets and adjourns they can call a meeting of the board of directors of the coal-mining company and not another man will come in and not a man will go out.

Those are the facts, and these roads are necessarily engaged in interstate commerce because their product is not entirely consumed in Pennsylvania, but is sent broadcast all over the Northeastern part of the country and all over the Southern and Western parts where anthracite coal is consumed. Have I answered the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Shearn says:

There are many other significant facts that go to fortify the impregnable position that we have taken in reference to these contracts. What are they? You observe what they have done in the case of these independent operators. There were some who were left in the lurch when Simpson & Watkins got under cover of the Temple Iron Company. Among them was the Pennsylvania Coal Company, a large factor in the anthracite coal situation, and among them were some fifteen or twenty other independent operators, whose output together was no inconsiderable factor.

They could not remain content under those old contracts of 60 and 40 per cent, and they resolved that they would carry out what had been earlier attempted; and therefore the Pennsylvania Coal Company met a representative, Mr. Fuller, representing all those remaining independent coal miners, "and entered into an arrangement with them whereby they all pledged their output to the Pannsylvania Coal Company if the Pennsylvania Coal Company would build a road to tidewater. That the Pennsylvania Coal Company undertook to do, and the result of that would have been competition in the supply of coal to the city of New York."

When there is competition in supplying the city of New York there is competition throughout the Eastern part of the country. I am only reading from the argument made before the attorney-general of the State of New York, and therefore this appears.

Mr. Shearn goes on:

How was that undertaken? I may say that I will submit to you contracts between the Pennsylvania Coal Company and these independent operators.

There was a route available for them—the bed of the old Delaware and Hudson Canal. They surreptitiously went to work, as they had to do—you have to work in the dark and under cover against a combination like this—and got Mr. Cuykendall, at Rondout, to secure terminal facilities there, and went to work and obtained rights of way along the old canal; and, having procured the terminal and rights of way, they applied for a charter to the State board of railroad commissioners.

What happened there? A significant fact—the railroad companies lined up in opposition to this charter, a charter that would result in competition.

The railroads fought it, but the railroad commission granted the charter. Then they carried it into the courts, and the supreme court of New York sustained it, and therefore they were at liberty to build their road. And then what happened?

There were the independents again in a position to make competition possible and available to the people of the State of New York; and the Pennsylvania Coal Company ordered 7,000 tons of rails and got ready to lay down this road, and then what happened? Mr. J. P. Morgan loomed up on the scene. He was, curiously enough, one of the three voting trustees of the Reading Company's stock, which controlled not only the Reading, but the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Mr. Morgan was also chairman and one of the three members of the voting trust of the Erie Railroad Company. Those three companies together controlled 63 per cent of the coal trade.

Mr. Morgan stepped in and did just what the combination had done the year before with Simpson & Watkins. He bought out the Pennsylvania Coal Company and transferred it, at a profit to himself of $3,400,000, to the Erie Railroad Company, and that was completed in January, 1901, and coincident with that the Reading Company bought the capital stock of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey.

And there you are. In January, 1901, with the last effort at independence blotted out and with the supply of coal and the business of coal carrying and coal selling in the hands of the Reading, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Lehigh Valley, and the Erie, with the Delaware and Hudson trailing on.

That was the situation in 1901, said Mr. Shearn.

Right here I will call attention to the fact which I stated yesterday evening—I can not repeat it too often—that I am informed that during these active years, when the coal trust was completing its process of encircling and throttling and destroying and swallowing its competitors, Mr. Griggs, the Attorney-General, whose duty it was to stop it—who must have been in possession of full information, because he could hardly help it, because he had been the attorney of the combination when he went into the Attorney-General's office—did absolutely nothing.

Mr. Shearn goes on to relate that the few remaining operators, thwarted twice in their efforts to get transportation facilities, were face to face with a hopeless situation and they therefore accepted the conditions offered by the railroads to enter into contracts giving the railroads full power and control to manipulate the output of their mines. Here is one of the clauses of the contract which the railroads forced these people to sign:

First. The seller hereby sells, and agrees to deliver on cars at breaker to the buyer (the railroad company), all the anthracite coal hereafter mined from any of its mines now open or operated, or which it may hereafter open or operate on the premises intended to be covered by this contract, and any which shall be reclaimed from culm banks on such premises, as follows: Shipment to be made from time to time as called for by the buyer. The quantity to be ordered monthly shall be a just proportion of the entire quantity of coal agreed to be purchased by the buyer, measured by the colliery capacity of the respective sellers.

In other words, the miner of coal turns over for all time to the railroad company the entire output of his mine, puts it into their absolute control; and what do they agree to buy of him? Not his entire product, but a just proportion, measured by the capacity of his colliery, and taken into consideration with the entire amount agreed by the railroad companies to be purchased.

In other words, if the railroad companies wish to curtail the supply of coal, get it down from 60,000,000 to 40,000,000, the independent producer is obliged, by force of these contracts, to have the proportion of coal taken out of his mines allotted in precisely the proportion which the railroad companies decide to cut down the price of coal.

So there, if your honor please, you see that there are in addition to these written contracts of guaranty of the bonds of the Temple Iron Company, and to the other contracts made at the same time to which I have adverted, common contracts, identical in terms, executed by these various railroad companies with producers of coal, which, on their face, are in restraint of trade, because they make it possible for the purchaser to determine absolutely the amount which shall be taken out of each mine. The man who owns coal and mines it has nothing whatever to say about it. Cut the supply of coal down one-half, if you please, in order to raise prices, and the independent producer must have his independent output diminished one-half. He is a slave to this system, and those contracts on their face are in direct violation of the antimonopoly law of this State.

And yet we want more law; we have not enough; we can not do anything; the Attorney-General is powerless and helpless, he says. Mr. Shearn goes on to pile up evidence, evidence on top of evidence, to show the combination, furnishing the circulars of the Reading Company, the incubator. He speaks about the great amount of profit there was in the deal for Simpson & Watkins, all of which I will insert.

Now, when we arrive at that stage, what situation appears? Why, not only that they are acting in concert and combination, by reason of their control of the Temple Iron Company, and by reason of these agreements; that they maintain a common price for the purchase of coal, a common rate for the transportation of coal, and the only thing needed to make a monopoly plain and complete and obvious to the eyes of all is the result on prices; and we find that during this period prices were maintained that were uniform. That is admitted in every answer that is filed here before you to-day.

I have procured copies of the price circulars issued by some of the railroads, and it is significant, too, that the circular issued on March 1, 1901, which, as you see, was immediately after this new contract went into effect—immediately after this conference in New York and immediately after the killing of the independent movement by the purchase of the Pennsylvania Coal Company—is headed "Circular No. 1" for each of these different companies, and the price as given by these circulars thereafter was uniform.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL. You claim the independent movement was killed. You mean it sold out—as fast as they formed independent companies they sold out.

Mr. SHEARN. The backbone of it sold out. In every case the party on whom the main financial reliance was placed sold out. Simpson & Watkins, for instance, had a great big output; they were important, and sold out.

The next time competition showed up the Pennsylvania Coal Company was the backbone of it—they possessed capital. That property was sold for $22,000,000; they left in their treasury $14,000,000 in cash. There was a great big force to be dealt with, and if the movement succeeded there would be competition in the State of New York, and they bought out the backbone of that, leaving a few independents.

There are still a few independents; there are perhaps a dozen men who say that they are independent to-day. But how are they independent? They can't get their coal to tide water unless these railroads will carry it. The railroads are obliged to carry their coal or their charters would be forfeited; but the railroads fixed the price and the price they fixed is 35 and 65; that is, the rate of 35 per cent.

Bear with me one moment in answer to the inquiry which I think is in your mind right there. Put yourself in the position of an independent miner of coal. You have an output and you wish to sell it, but you do not wish to sacrifice your manhood and independence. You propose to sell your coal in New York yourself. You take your coal to the railroad company and it accepts it and brings it to New York and charges you, not a rate of so much per ton per mile, but a rate based upon the price which coal is bringing at tide water, to wit, 35 per cent of the price that is prevailing at tide water, which, by the way, is from two to two and one-half times the freight rate for bituminous coal.

Now you pay that 35 per cent, but the answer is, "Yes, but so do all the other coal companies pay 35 per cent. The bookkeeping charge is made against the Reading Coal and Iron Company of 35 per cent by the Central of New Jersey, against the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre of 35 per cent, and that rate is common and uniform." Is it?

That 35 per cent at tide water includes the cost of demurrage at the docks and includes the cost of selling coal in New York, which has been estimated to amount on an average to 5 per cent. So there, if you wish to sell your own coal in New York yourself, if you wish to remain independent, you have got to pay to the railroad 35 per cent of the price your coal brings at tide water for mere transportation, and you have got to stand the expense of 5 per cent in addition for demurrage at tide water and for the cost of selling.

Therefore, a club is held over the head of every independent. He gets 5 per cent more of the price of coal at tide water by selling his coal to the railroad company at the breaker instead of bringing it to tide water; and how independence can be expected to be maintained under such an arrangement it is hard to see. There are, as I say, a few hard-headed owners left; for instance, John C. Haddock, who, it is said, has pocketed thousands of dollars of losses year in and year out because he refused to sell his manhood and independence to the coal roads.

Now, as I say, the answers of these corporations admit, by not denying, that the prices at tide water are uniform. It is a fact; the circulars will establish it; and not only do the circulars show a community of price on their face, but, curiously enough, each circular has at the bottom a statement of discount that is allowed; and for the month of March, say circular No. 1, it will show a discount of 40 cents a ton.

By some marvelous coincidence, if you would believe the answers of these defendants, every other railroad company's circular shows a discount of 40 cents from the face price for that month. The next month there will be a discount of 35. All show 35.

Here are circulars, bear in mind, that all come out within twenty-four hours of each other. In order to throw dust in the eyes of the public one circular will be dated the 31st day of March and the other the 1st of April, so they don't appear on the same day, but within twenty-four hours of each other, every one bearing the same discount, month in and month out.

Now, then, I say that where you have the control of the supply in their hands, which is admitted by these answers; where you have the means of transportation absolutely in their hands, which is admitted by all these answers; where you have a common price for the purchase of coal maintained by all these companies, which is admitted in these answers; where you have a common form of contract for transportation, which is admitted in these answers, and where you have at the city of New York a common price for coal——

Mr. WILLCOX (interrupting). You don't mean to say that that contract—that we have ever made any such contract, or that Mr. Hough's client ever made any such contract?

Mr. HOUGH. I suppose the contracts he has mentioned will speak for themselves. The Pennsylvania never made any such contract.

Mr. SHEARN. I do maintain, and I do believe it can be established to your satisfaction, that even the railroads that are not parties to the Temple Iron Company agreement, to wit, the Delaware and Hudson Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which, curiously enough, are the only ones that appear in answer to this petition to-day, maintain the same rate for the transportation of coal, and that it is based upon prices prevailing at the destination, that they charge the same rate per ton per mile that these other corporations do, and the letter of the traffic manager of the Pennsylvania Company that I read showed that they agreed to do that back in 1892, and that they have been doing it within the past two years, the testimony before the Industrial Commission, if you choose to read it, will satisfy your mind amply.

Mr. WILLCOX. I think you are wandering away from what I suggested to you. You have stated that contracts of this character have been made by all the parties. I think you are in error, because our answer does not admit anything of the kind, and there is no such fact. In regard to freight rates, the interstate-commerce act forces the railroads to charge the same freight rate. There is no mystery about that.

Mr. SHEARN. There is no mystery about it at all.

Mr. WILLCOX. They all have to charge the same rates between the same points. That is what the commerce act is meant to do, to stop competition. These are questions principally of interstate commerce that you have been arguing. Excuse my interrupting you.

Mr. SHEARN. With great respect, Mr. Willcox, I maintain that the existence of these contracts—that the prevalence of that same rate, and the fact that it was arrived at and fixed upon by the representatives of these companies, other than your company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company—furnishes significant evidence of a concert and combination between these companies.

I do not say that it is illegal for these railroad companies to maintain the same rate of freight from a given point to a given point, but I do say it is illegal for them to get together and agree to do it as the price of people giving up their independence, as the price of stifling competition.

Mr. WILLCOX. That would be a question under the head of Federal jurisdiction, wouldn't it?

Mr. SHEARN. I don't think it would. This matter has already come under the Federal jurisdiction on this same state of facts, but justice can be measured out in the State of New York and by the Federal Government according to the facts in each particular case.

But the existence of these contracts entered into in the manner and at the time I have stated to you and for the purpose, as the evidence all shows, for the purpose of eliminating this threatened competion of the independents, is significant evidence of the existence of concert and combination between them—if any were needed—after we put in evidence contracts jointly executed by them, all identical; or, if any were needed, after we show that there is a common price of coal at tide water—or, if any is needed after we show that they have absolutely in their control the whole source of supply of coal, and they alone have the means of transporting it to market.

Now, what the purpose of this organization is, of this combination, may be arrived at from all the sources to which I have adverted. The testimony of some of the members of it—for instance, Mr. Thomas, the chairman of the Erie—testified before the Industrial Commission that the greatest danger that the public have to apprehend is from unrestrained and unrestricted competition.

In explaining the part that he and his road had taken in this gigantic scheme, and as an apology for it, he tells that Commission that the greatest danger that the public has to fear is from unrestrained and unrestricted competition.

Now, if he believed that that was the danger, if that was something that he was trying to avoid because it was a danger, it is a significant fact in aiding you to arrive at the purpose of these corporations in this concerted action.

Now, just a few words more (I have trespassed a great deal upon your time). That is the situation as far as the facts are concerned. What is the law? The law governing these proceedings and governing these facts is perfectly well settled.

In the first place, no possible argument can be raised now to discourage you from entertaining this proceeding because of the possible unconstitutionality of this law, because you yourself have fought that question out in the ice-trust case and carried it successfully through to the highest courts in this State, and the procedure has been determined upon as constitutional and the act has been held to be constitutional, and nothing is to be feared in that direction.

Whether these facts constitute a combination with the law, eliminating the Temple Iron Company agreement (because there can be no doubt about that at all, that is sufficient for one proceeding), but bearing upon all these corporations, for instance, Mr. Willcox's and Mr. Hough's clients, who have not been shown to have actually participated in or signed that Temple Iron Company agreement—where similar instances have been before the courts—in the case of Arnot v. Pittson and Elmira Coal Company (68 N. Y., 558), what was said by the court there is very apt and pertinent here, it seems to me.

"Every producer or vender of coal or other commodities has the right to use all legitimate efforts to obtain the best price for the article in which he deals. But when he endeavors to artificially enhance prices by suppressing or keeping out of market the product of others (bear in mind that language in connection with the purchase of Simpson & Watkins) and to accomplish that purpose by means of contracts binding them to withhold their supply (as these contracts do) such arrangements are even more mischievous than combinations not to sell under an agreed price. Combinations of that character have been held to be against public policy and illegal. If they should be sustained the prices of articles of pure necessity, such as coal, flour, and other indispensable commodities, might be artificially raised to a ruinous extent far exceeding any naturally resulting from the proportion between supply and demand. No illustration of the mischief of such contracts is perhaps more apt than a monopoly of anthracite coal, the region of the production of which is known to be limited."

Now, then, take the case of the Morris Run Coal Company v. Barclay Coal Company, in the supreme court of Pennsylvania, which Attorney-General Knox discussed last night in his great speech on this general question.

The court says: "The important fact is that these companies control this immense coal field (this referred to bituminous only); that is the great source of supply of bituminous coal to the State of New York and large territories westward; that by this contract they control the price of coal in this extensive market and make it bring sums it would not command if left to the natural laws of trade; that it concerns an article of prime necessity for many uses; that its operation is general in this large region, and affects all who use coal as a fuel, and this is accomplished by a combination of all the companies engaged in this branch of business in the large region where they operate. The combination is wide in scope, general in its influence, and injurious in effects. These being its features the contract is against public policy, illegal and therefore void.

He speaks here of the meeting of the board of directors of the Temple Iron Company, this humbug, this sham, which they created, or which they bought, for it existed prior to the adoption of the last constitution of Pennsylvania, and in the answers they admit nearly all of the allegations of fact, but deny that there is any cooperation or combination. The Temple Company when it meets is composed of the presidents of the coal roads.

I recall a time in my political career when a somewhat similar condition of affairs existed in South Carolina. The Alliance was very strong in my State and in our State matters, because we had no difference of opinion or fight over the national attitude of the Democratic party, the Alliance would be called to meet in a certain place on a certain day and at a certain hour. The Democratic club of that precinct would be assembled an hour and a half later by notice. The Alliance would meet in secret and promulgate among its own members the policy to be followed by the Democratic party in that precinct. The Alliance would adjourn. Nobody would know what it had done.

The Democratic club would meet, and its resolutions would be passed or its delegates elected or whatever it would want to do was performed; and yet everybody, at least those who cared to talk about it, was proclaiming that the Alliance was not in politics, could not engage in it, and that it did not. But when the "Alliance" and the "Democracy" were synonymous, as they were in that instance, you can readily see that there was some humbuggery in the contention. And when the presidents of the coal roads, who are the presidents of the coal-mining companies, owned by the roads, meet as directors of the Temple Iron Company, which is immune from the Pennsylvania constitution forbidding railroads from engaging in mining, the contention is put forth that the Temple Iron Company is not engaged in any monopoly and therefore the railroads are not combined, but that they merely "exchange statistical information," and so on.

I do not think it worth while to read any further, or to present any additional facts along the line of proof that Mr. Hearst offered, except a statement here made by Mr. Shearn in his argument before the attorney-general of New York, that a similar statement of facts, with the evidence, had been presented to the attorney-general of New York; and Mr. Hearst says that he had furnished proofs and made petition to that district attorney to move, under the instructions of the attorney-general, to stop this monopoly from its hellish work.

Now, then, what do we find? To my mind a conclusive case is made. The evidence and the facts are unanswerable. The law is plain. I yesterday quoted and cited the sections of the antitrust act which would apply. I have before me, in relation to trusts and monopolies, a clipping from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Addyston pipe case:

Total suppression of the trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one in restraint of trade. It is the effect of the combination in limiting and restricting the right of each of the members to transact business in the ordinary way, as well as its effect upon the volume or extent of the dealing in the commodity, that is regarded.

I can pile up opinions here, in the Trans-Missouri Traffic Association case, even in the Knight case in New Jersey, where the sugar trust was indicted and was not punished or restrained because of the fact that the evidence before the court only showed the manufacture. But the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (I believe it was Mr. Fuller who rendered the opinion) is replete with arguments going to show why if so and so had been so and so the court would have been compelled to act. The law is too plain for anybody to dispute it. But I have a case in point to which I wish to allude which is especially pregnant. I allude to the Debs case. As I understand the facts in that case, the American Railroad Union, composed of about 150,000 men, became involved in a strike because of the difference between the Pullman Car Company and its employees.

A general strike was ordered on all the roads entering Chicago unless they ceased to haul Pullman cars, which they refused to do. Trade was paralyzed; riots followed; men were shot; things were in a very critical and dangerous condition; the mails were stopped.

An appeal was made to Judge Woods for relief. Who made that appeal? The railroads, of course. Then Edwin Walker, the attorney for the general managers of the trunk lines entering Chicago, was employed by the Department of Justice to aid and assist the district attorney in filing the complaint and obtaining from Judge Woods, of the circuit court, an injunction. I have that injunction here.

Mr. President, as my time is limited to 2 o'clock, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is very anxious to go on and I am very anxious to complete my remarks, I will simply ask to have the Debs injunction printed as a part of my speech, as though I read it right now. I was prepared to read it and to comment on it and refresh my own mind as to what it contains, but I will state, in general, that it enjoins Eugene Debs and some thirty or forty others, "and all persons whomsoever," from doing thirty or forty things which would be an obstruction of commerce and an obstruction of railroad trains carrying the mails.

The troops were sent to Chicago to back up the court, notwithstanding Governor Altgeld contended that he was master of the situation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator impugn the motives of Judge Woods in issuing that injunction?

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if Judge Woods is one of your constituents, I do not think you need to fret about what I am going to say.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He is not now. He is not now alive. His memory, however, is precious to me, as it is to all the people of Indiana. I understood the Senator to reflect somewhat harshly upon the injunction, upon which I am not going to have any debate with the Senator, but I am sure the Senator did not mean to be understood as impugning the motives of that distinguished jurist, however much he might differ from the conclusions he reached; and I rose merely to call the Senator's attention to that, in order that he might not be misunderstood.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is entirely wrong in imagining that I had any purpose of criticising Judge Woods in any angry or contemptuous way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought not.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I did not know that he was dead, and I am glad to be informed of it, because if I had had any such purpose, long since among the little Latin I learned was a phrase that I have considered of great use and benefit to me—De mortuis nil nisi bonum.

Mr. SPOONER. He does not need that protection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator is satisfied to take that attitude, I am satisfied to have him take it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Here, again, my friend from Wisconsin wants to leap into the arena, and he says that Judge Woods does not need that protection. I did not even intimate that he did need it, because, as I said a little while ago, I have no purpose to deal with Judge Woods in any critical spirit. He did go very, very far, very far beyond anything that had ever been contemplated by any American judge before, and he labored very ably in his opinion to find justification for his action, and law for it, in laying it on the antitrust act as a conspiracy and a combination in restraint of commerce among these railroad employees. I will put his opinion, or that part of it to which I alluded, in my speech, when it is printed. It is as follows:

It is therefore the privilege and duty of the court, uncontrolled by considerations drawn from other sources, to find the meaning of the statute in the terms of its provisions, interpreted by the settled rules of construction. That the original design to suppress trusts and monopolies created by contract or combination in the form of trust, which of course would be of a "contractual character," was adhered to, is clear; but it is equally clear that a further and more comprehensive purpose came to be entertained, and was embodied in the final form of the enactment. Combinations are condemned, not only when they take the form of trusts, but in whatever form found, if they be in restraint of trade. That is the effect of the words "or otherwise." It may be that those words should be deemed to include only forms of like character; that is to say, some form of contract as distinguished from tort; but if that be so, it only emphasizes and makes imperative the inference, which otherwise it seems to me would be sufficiently clear, that the word "conspiracy" should be interpreted independently of the preceding words. It is hardly to be believed that the words "or otherwise" were used simply for the purpose of giving fuller scope to the antecedent words "contract" and "combination," and then "conspiracy" added merely for the same purpose. Construed literally, the terms used in the body of this act forbid all contracts or combinations in restraint of trade or commerce, but that construction is controlled by the title, which shows that only unlawful restraints were intended. But what constitutes an unlawful restraint is not defined, and, under the familiar rule that such Federal enactments will be interpreted by the light of the common law, I have no doubt but that this statute, in so far as it is directed against contracts or combinations in the form of trusts, or in any form of a "contractual character," should be limited to contracts and combinations such, in their general characteristics, as the courts have declared unlawful. But to put any such limitation upon the word "conspiracy" is neither necessary nor, as I think, permissible. To do so would deprive the word, as here used, of all significance. It is a word whose meaning is quite as well established in the law as the meaning of the phrase "in restraint of trade" when used—as commonly, if not universally, that phrase has been used—in reference to contracts. A conspiracy, to be sure, consists in an agreement to do something; but in the sense of the law, and therefore in the sense of this statute, it must be an agreement between two or more to do by concerted action something criminal or unlawful, or it may be to do something lawful by criminal or unlawful means. A conspiracy, therefore, is in itself unlawful, and, in so far as this statute is directed against conspiracies in restraint of trade among the several States, it is not necessary to look for the illegality of the offense in the kind of restraint proposed; and, since it would be unnecessary, it would be illogical to conclude that only conspiracies which are founded upon, or are intended to be accomplished by means of, contracts or combinations in restraint of trade, are within the purview of the act. It would be to make tautologous words which have distinctly different meanings, and to deprive the statute in a large measure of its just and needful scope. Any proposed restraint of trade, though it be in itself innocent, if it is to be accomplished by conspiracy, is unlawful. A distinction has been suggested between the phrase "in restraint of trade" and the phrases "to injure trade" and "to restrain trade." Though perceptible, the distinction does not seem to me so significant that the use of one expression rather than the other should vary the interpretation of this statute. Any contract, combination, or conspiracy to be "in restraint of trade" must involve the use of means of which the effect is "to injure" or "to restrain" trade. A contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade is therefore a contract, combination, or conspiracy to restrain or to injure trade. It would not, I suppose, be enough in an indictment to charge conspiracy in restraint of trade in the language of the statute, but it would be necessary, unless the proposed restraint be shown to be in itself unlawful, to allege the illegal means intended to be used in order to effect the restraint; and whether the means should be averred to have been used "in restraint of" or "to restrain" trade could hardly be important. There are many cases, doubtless, in which the rule that every word of a statute should be given effect is inapplicable, because when synonymous words are used the court is powerless to give them different meanings, but when words of different significance are employed the rule forbids that the scope of the statute be compressed within the limits of the narrower word.

The injunction in the Debs case, which is one of the most remarkable documents in our jurisprudence and the forerunner of many instruments of that kind, is given in full. Judge Woods here set the pace, and judges, both Federal and State, have been not slow to reach out in the exercise of power, so that "government by injunction" has become a phrase in our politics, about which there has been and will continue to be angry discussion.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

The Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway,
The Louisville and Nashville Railroad,

As common carriers of passengers and freight between or among any States of the United States, and from in any way interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any mail trains, express trains, whether freight or passenger, engaged in interstate commerce, or carrying passengers or freight between or among the States, and from in any manner interfering with, hindering, or stopping any trains carrying the mail, and from in any manner interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any engines, cars, or rolling stock of any of said companies engaged in interstate commerce, or in connection with the carriage of passengers or freight between or among the States; and from in any manner interfering with, injuring, or destroying any of the property of any of said railroads engaged in or for the purposes of, or in connection with, interstate commerce, or the carriage of the mails of the United States or the transportation of passengers or freight between or among the States; and from entering upon the grounds or premises of any of said railroads for the purpose of interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any of said mail trains, passenger or freight trains engaged in interstate commerce, or in the transportation of passengers or freight between or among the States; or for the purpose of interfering with, injuring, or destroying any of said property so engaged in or used in connection with interstate commerce, or the transportation of passengers or property between or among the States; and from injuring or destroying any part of the tracks, roadbed, or road, or permanent structures of said railroads; and from injuring, destroying, or in any way interfering with any of the signals or switches of any of said railroads; and from displacing or extinguishing any of the signals of any of said railroads, and from spiking, locking, or in any manner fastening any of the switches of any of said railroads, and from uncoupling or in any way hampering or obstructing the control by any of said railroads or any of the cars, engines, or parts of trains of any of said railroads engaged in interstate commerce or in the transportation of passengers or freght between or among the States, or engaged in carrying any of the mails of the United States; and from compelling or inducing, or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, persuasion, force, or violence, any of the employees of any of said railroads to refuse or fail to perform any of their duties as employees of any of said railroads in connection with the interstate business or commerce of such railroads, or the carriage of the United States mail by such railroads, or the transportation of passengers or property between or among the States; and from compelling or inducing, or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, any of the employees of said railroads who are employed by such railroads and engaged in its service in the conduct of interstate business, or in the operation of any of its trains carrying the mail of the United States, or doing interstate business, or the transportation of passengers and freight between and among the States, to leave the service of such railroads, and from preventing any persons whatever, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, from entering the service of any of said railroads and doing the work thereof, in the carrying of the mails of the United States or the transportation of passengers and freight between or among the States; and from doing any act whatever in furtherance of any conspiracy or combination to restrain either of said railroad companies in the free and unhindered control and handling of interstate commerce over the lines of said railroads, and of transportation of persons and freight between and among the States; and from ordering, directing, aiding, assisting, or abetting, in any manner whatever, any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid.

The only reason I have said what I have about Judge Woods or brought the Debs injunction into this discussion was to point to the difference in the action of our Department of Justice in dealing with men and its action in dealing with property. When the injunction was issued, covering everything, because it has been called a blanket injunction, embracing not only Debs but everybody who might by possibility be chargeable with disobeying it, Judge Woods followed it up, at the instance of the attorney of the railroads who had been employed by the Government of the United States, by arresting the so-called conspirators, by putting them into jail, and in the final adjustment of the case by imprisoning them for contempt.

If Judge Woods was justifiable, as the Senators would have us suppose, and for the purposes I am contending for I am ready to acknowledge that he was, in putting the machinery of the law in motion to suppress a combination of laborers who were interfering with interstate commerce, I ask in the name of justice and common sense how it is and why it is that the machinery which shall drive the poor man into submission falls powerless and is paralyzed when a big thief or a big culprit or a big conspirator is involved?

Why is J. Pierpont Morgan any more immune with his co-conspirators from the proceedings of our courts of justice than Eugene Debs if he is guilty of the same offense? Some men will say he is too rich; that he hires too many able lawyers; that he has a sanctity thrown around his person by owning so many millions; that nobody knows how many he owns, and that to imprison such a man as that would cause the stars to get out of their courses and the sun to stand still, or something like that.

But whatever be the cause, I have pointed out one reason, for my judgment, why things are as they are; that the district attorneys are hampered by the law and the influences which obtain at the other end of the avenue and in the Department of Justice are altogether plutocratic, altogether subservient to wealth and capital, indifferent to the sufferings of the poor, and as long as the poor, besotted, benighted, ignorant slaves, the voters, continue to put such people in power, then, so help me God, I hope you will grind them to powder! Screw down your taps, like the nobility of France did before the French revolution! Let the Attorney-General contend, as he does in his argument or in his presentation to the Judiciary Committee, that a monopoly once completed and in full possession of the field is no longer amenable to law; that it does not break any law after it has been able to get full possession and there are no competitors.

Let it be understood that the franchises and privileges of such men are immune from prosecution, that the men are immune from punishment, that no longer anyone who is worth several million dollars or can have fifty or one hundred million dollars at his back is to be brought into our courts, but that the courts are only for the poor and the laborers, and you will, in my judgment, be laying the foundations for a condition of affairs in the near future at which in some miserable period of poverty and hard times and inability to obtain work and opportunities to earn a living you will be face to face with hundreds of thousands of hungry men who will disobey not only your injunctions, but will be ready to take up arms to defend their rights and to have that equality of the law which our Constitution guarantees and which our courts are here to enforce.

People will ask me or will want to know how it is and why it is that I mention the President. The President is simply the man who appointed Mr. Knox. He is the boss of Knox. He orders Knox, he commands Knox, and, therefore, if Knox is responsible, he has either misled President Roosevelt or somebody else has misled him, and therefore primarily the President is responsible, or secondarily he is responsible, while Knox is primarily responsible. You can take choice of either horn of the dilemma.

I am too much pressed for time to do any summing up or attempt a review of the law and the facts. There is not much need, but still I would have been glad to have pointed out some of the, to my mind, unanswerable reasons for my contention, that we have law enough already. All we need is honest and incorruptible officials to enforce it.

I ask permission to print anything in the way of documents or connecting explanation I may care to insert. I will not abuse the privilege as was done once before by indulging in anything that I would not say here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the exact request of the Senator?

Mr. TILLMAN. The request is that I may insert as portions of my speech, as though I had read them, such documentary evidence or quotations from the matter I have as may be relevant and respectful.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

APPENDIX A.

The following documentary evidence and copies of correspondence between the officers of the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, demonstrates conclusively that proofs of violations of law on the part of numerous trusts and combines were placed in the hands of Attorney-General Knox and President Roosevelt, and that both of those officials promised to take the cases up, and that although a year and more has elapsed since they made verbal and written pledges to act on the cases involved they have done nothing.

The original documents and letters I have seen and can produce them here if anyone doubts their authenticity.

The greater part of this evidence and statement of facts has already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 26, 1902, in a speech by the Hon. W. G. WOOTEN of Texas. He obtained leave to print, being unable to get the floor of the House, and it therefore has never attracted the attention it deserves, because Congress had adjourned before it appeared. I add it to my speech as cumulative and corroborative evidence to show neglect of duty by the Attorney-General.

The first document is the letter of the antitrust committee to Attorney-General Knox announcing their purpose to "institute civil and criminal proceedings against the United States steel trust and others," and requesting the aid of the Attorney-General in enforcing the law against these lawless combines.

OFFICE OF JOINT COMMITTEE AMERICAN ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE AND DISTRICT ASSEMBLY NO. 66, KNIGHTS OF LABOR, FOR THE CIVIL AND CRIMINAL PROSECUTION OF THE UNITED STATES STEEL TRUST AND OTHERS,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1901.

Hon. P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General United States:

SIR: We have the honor to request that you afford us all the information that you are possessed of or can obtain concerning an agreement or agreements made between the constituent companies and individuals who organized the United States Steel Corporation, commonly known as the steel trust.

The trust or syndicate agreement which we especially desire is the one which President C. M. Schwab, of the United States Steel Corporation, refused to furnish to the United States Industrial Commission when on the witness stand before that body.

Our request is founded upon information and belief that at the time that this contract or contracts was or were made you were, in some way, officially connected with the Carnegie Steel Company, which institution is one of the principal companies in the United States Steel Corporation. As this information is doubtless in your possession or conveniently at hand, you will greatly oblige this committee by giving us the substance thereof in your own language, or, if possible, a copy thereof.

This request is to cover any other contracts of a similar kind with which you are acquainted or which you can obtain for us. Our object is to prevent the failure of justice in certain legal proceedings which we contemplate in the near future.

Hoping that you will find it convenient to comply with this request, we remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman.
WILLIAM L. DEWART, Secretary.

To this letter the Attorney-General returned the following evasive reply, in which reply he, however, admitted that he had been the attorney of the Carnegie Steel Company, the principal constituent company of both the armor plate trust and the United States steel trust:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 20, 1901.

Mr. H. B. MARTIN,
Chairman Joint Committee American Anti-Trust League, etc., City.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 19, 1901, in which you request me to obtain for you certain information with reference to certain alleged "agreement or agreements made between the constituent companies and individuals who organized the United States Steel Corporation." You ask me to afford you all the information that I may "possess or can obtain," and you specifically refer to an alleged "trust or syndicate agreement," which you state the president of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. C. M. Schwab, "refused to furnish to the United States Industrial Commission when on the witness stand before that body;" and you further state that your request for information is to be understood as covering "any other contracts of a similar kind with which you are acquainted or which you can obtain for us."

You also state that your request for information is "founded upon information and belief that at the time this contract or these contracts was or were made" that I was "in some way officially connected with the Carnegie Steel Company," and you therefore assume that the information which you request must be in my "possession or conveniently at hand." I am, therefore, requested to give you the substance, or, if possible, a copy thereof.

Primarily, permit me to say that your request is founded upon an erroneous assumption. I do not know who the individuals are who organized the United States Steel Corporation. If they are the persons usually named in the newspapers as the promoters of that organization, with the single exception of Mr. C. M. Schwab, I do not know, never saw, and was never in any way connected with any one of them. I never heard of any agreement between them and the constituent members of the steel corporation.

Neither at the time of the formation of the United States Steel Corporation, nor at any time, was I officially connected with the Carnegie Steel Company. I was formerly one of its legal advisers in the conduct of its manufacturing business, but was never consulted with reference to the formation of the United States Steel Company, nor in relation to the sale to that company of the shares of stock held by the stockholders of the Carnegie Company.

I have never seen the papers or agreements to which you refer, nor have I been informed of their contents. I have no knowledge whatever of their existence, terms, or scope. I am thus specific, as I desire to cover both the spirit and the letter of your inquiry.

I may say, moreover, that I have no access to the agreement or papers to which you refer. I know nothing of the one to which you especially refer, and do not even know that such an agreement is in existence. The information which you request, therefore, is not in my possession or "conveniently at hand," as you assume, and it is therefore impossible for me to comply with any of the requests set forth in your letter. All this information you could at any time have acquired through the usual method of direct personal inquiry, thereby avoiding the doubtful propriety of addressing me through the medium of an open letter which you concurrently delivered to the press.

Whether, if such papers were accessible to me, it would be my duty to obtain them and furnish them for use in legal proceedings to which you are a party, and the nature of which you do not explain, is a question which I do not care at this time to discuss.

If I may regard the letter as addressed to me officially, I will say:

If this Department is under obligations to furnish information to prospective litigants in undisclosed proceedings, its responsibilities and labors are necessarily greater than they have ever been imagined from the time of its formation. Indeed, as there are generally two parties to every controversy, it would be difficult to discharge such alleged duty to both parties in view of conflicting interests. This Department was not called into being to furnish information to private litigants. Its duty and its object is to enforce the Federal statutes as interpreted by the courts wherever there is probable cause for believing that they have been violated.

Very respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

Chairman H. B. Martin, of the antitrust committee, promptly replied as follows:

"The letter addressed to me as chairman of the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, by Attorney-General P. C. Knox to-day, in reply to our letter of August 19, asking him for copies of certain incriminating documents affecting the steel trust, which we believed were in the possession of or accessible to the Attorney-General, and which he denies possessing and which he intimates that he might not allow to be used in a civil or criminal prosecution against the steel trust even if he had them in his possession, certainly raises some very important questions.

"After making his denial of being in possession of the evidence which we were seeking, the Attorney-General makes this complaint, which seems to indicate that the publicity of our action was irritating to him. He says: 'All this information you could at any time have acquired through the usual method of direct personal inquiry, thereby avoiding the doubtful propriety of addressing me through the medium of an open letter, which you concurrently delivered to the press.'

"We were not aware that there was any impropriety in a citizen or body of citizens publicly addressing the chief prosecuting officer of the United States in reference to grave violations of law that were being committed to the great injury of the people of the United States.

"Such a matter is in no sense a private matter, to be settled by personal and private interviews or conferences between the Attorney-General and a citizen; but it is a public matter, in which all the people of the United States have a right to the fullest and freest knowledge of all action that is taken.

"Attorney-General Knox says: 'Neither at the time of the formation of the United States Steel Corporation nor at any time was I officially connected with the Carnegie Steel Company.' This looks like a very sweeping denial on the part of the Attorney-General as to the many charges that have been made in the public press to the effect that he was formerly connected with the Carnegie Company or the steel trust. But the force and effect of this denial are entirely destroyed by the remarkable admission which the Attorney-General makes in the next sentence, when he says: 'I was formerly one of its legal advisers in the conduct of its manufacturing business.' This language of the Attorney-General certainly looks evasive in view of the fact that it is currently believed that the members of the steel combine selected one of their former attorneys for Attorney-General in order that they might have a friend at court in time of popular clamor for the enforcement of the law against trusts.

"Our letter itself contained the statement at the beginning that ours was a 'committee for the civil and criminal prosecution of the United States steel trust and others.' Is this language ambiguous? Does it leave any doubt in the mind of the Attorney-General as to the nature of the legal proceedings we are about to undertake?

"Furthermore, does the Attorney-General desire to put himself in a position before the people of the United States of saying that if the papers containing the incriminating evidence of the violations of the law of the United States, which he is sworn to enforce and punish violators of, were accessible to him, that it is a question whether he would furnish them for use in legal proceedings instituted by citizens for the purpose of punishing violators of the law? And yet the Attorney-General intimates to us that there is a question whether, if he possessed these incriminating documents, that he would either use them himself or permit anyone else to use them to secure the conviction of the great trust criminals who are violating the Federal statute against the organization of trusts, destroying freedom of competition in the business world, driving competitors into bankruptcy, crushing labor organizations with an iron hand, and instituting a reign of terror in the iron and steel industry which threatens to involve the country in a civil war.

"Now, the people of the United States can not afford to have any doubt or uncertainty as to whether their Attorney-General, who enjoys the honors and emoluments of that high office and draws his pay from the taxes exacted from the wealth producers, is willing or unwilling to perform the duties of his position and enforce the laws, as his oath of office requires him to, against the criminal trusts. Mr. Knox's letter intimates that there is a doubt about this. Can he afford to rest under the cloud which that doubt raises?

"We will give him an opportunity now to reassure the people as to his desire and intention to enforce the law against trusts. Will Attorney-General Knox offer a reward for the production of the incriminating evidence against the trusts for which we asked and which he says he does not possess? Will he announce to-morrow that the Department of Justice of the United States will pay a substantial reward to any person or persons who will produce evidence that will lead to the arrest and conviction of any person or corporation guilty of violating the Federal statute against trusts?

"Let him do this and institute vigorous proceedings against trust lawbreakers, and the people will no longer have doubts as to his faithfulness to his oath of office. And he will no longer be the target for criticism, inuendo, and invective on the part of the press, because of the fact that while the trusts ride roughshod over the people the Attorney-General, who is the sole officer under the Federal law who is vested with authority to prosecute them, refuses to take any action."

The Attorney-General having stated in his first letter that it was the duty of his Department "to enforce the Federal statutes wherever there is probable cause for believing that they have been violated," the committee took him at his word, and promptly filed the following petition, evidence, and affidavit:

ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE'S PETITION TO ATTORNEY-GENERAL KNOX.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 6, 1901.

Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX,
Attorney-General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your communication of August 20, 1901, in which you say the duty of your Department and its "object is to enforce the Federal statutes as interpreted by the courts wherever there is probable cause for believing that they have been violated," we herewith hand you the inclosed petition, in which the "probable cause" demanded is set forth for your action.

Very respectfully, yours,

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
WILLIAM L. DEWART, Secretary,
Joint Committee American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX,
Attorney-General of the United States:

1. Your petitioners would respectfully show that the American Anti-Trust League is an organization nonpartisan in its character, numerous in its membership in various parts of the United States, having for its object, among other things, to secure the enforcement of the existing State and Federal statutes against trusts and monopolies, and furnish such evidence of the violation of such statutes to the officers whose duties are to enforce these laws, and to cooperate with such prosecuting officers of the various States and the United States for the enforcement of these laws; and that District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, is also a nonpartisan body, engaged in various trades and crafts within the District of Columbia, whose object is to protect the rights and interests of the wage-working wealth producers from unlawful aggressions and encroachments on the part of great combinations of capital, whether in the form of a trust or otherwise. The said District Assembly 66 is also associated with various other branches of organized labor throughout the United States.

2. Your petitioners would show that the United States Steel Corporation seems to your petitioners to exist, subsist, and persist in violation of law, and that its principals, agents, promoters, and managers are a combination who conspire to restrain—and they do restrain—and monopolize and attempt to monopolize trade and commerce between the States and Territories and the District of Columbia and in the Territories and in the District of Columbia and with foreign nations.

3. Your petitioners further say that at various times prior to February 23, 1901, certain alien capitalists, aided by American coconspirators, among whom are and were Andrew Carnegie; J. P. Morgan & Co., American agents of the house of Rothschild; Charles C. Cluff, William J. Curtis, Charles MacVeagh, John D. Rockefeller, Charles M. Schwab, Henry C. Frick, and others, did, under the alleged protection of the State of New Jersey, in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, enter into the following unlawful

"ARRANGEMENT."

In violation of the "antitrust law," as it is commonly called, which was enacted July 2, 1890, the interstate-commerce law of 1887, and the act to reduce taxation and provide revenue for the Government, and other purposes, which became a law in 1894, the coconspirators made an "arrangement," contract, combination, and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, attempted to monopolize and combined and conspired together and with other persons to monopolize a very great part of the trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, and made a contract, agreement, and combination in the form of a trust and otherwise and a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the States and in a Territory and Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and in restraint of trade and commerce between one Territory and another, one State and another, and with the District of Columbia and foreign nations; that the syndicated conspiracy includes certain American capitalists who unite and combine with the European capitalists to share with them the spoliation of the people of the United States, based upon the "acquisition of the holdings of the said Andrew Carnegie" and the stock and bonds of the Carnegie Company, and the stocks and bonds of the following companies, to wit:

Of the Federal Steel Company, of the American Steel and Wire Company of New Jersey, of the National Tube Company, of the American Tin Plate Company, of the National Steel Company, of the American Steel Hoop Company, and of the American Sheet Steel Company, which, on his oath before the United States Industrial Commission, the said Charles M. Schwab deposed to be a "consolidation" of artificial and other persons in the shape of the United States Steel Corporation by agreement between it and the above-named seven constituent companies, to none and to neither of which does the incorporating certificate grant such a right to consolidate. The said "consolidation," therefore, being illegal, and the said United States Steel Corporation being, therefore, nonexistent by law and subject to the dissolution by a court having jurisdiction; and that the conspirators agreed that whenever by the consummation of the proposed "arrangement" the amount of dividends shall cease to be substantially increased the greater stability of investment will be assured by "necessarily increasing the prices of manufactured products," all of which facts appear in the prospectus of the syndicate managers, J. P. Morgan & Co., dated March 2, 1901, as Exhibit 1, on page 455 of a public document entitled "Testimony, Trusts and Industrial Combinations," herewith filed as part of Exhibit A, for reference, and also in Exhibit 2 of said document, which is a copy of the amended certificate of incorporation of the United States Steel Corporation, as the other part of Exhibit A, in which the said State of New Jersey, excepting herself from the operation of said law by forbidding the corporation to operate or maintain railroads and canals within her own borders, assumes to give eminent domain to the corporation everywhere else in the country except in New Jersey, and further subjects a greater part of the metal and mineral products in the United States and Territories, and manganese (and imported metaloid), and every transport thereof by land and water to the corporation and its extension and "business," contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States and of each of them, and contrary to "public policy," private rights, and the stability of the Republic of America.

4. As is further shown by the testimony of President Charles M. Schwab, of the United States Steel Corporation, delivered before the United States Industrial Commission May 11, 1901, reported on page 465 of their "Testimony, Trusts and Industrial Combinations," where he states, in reply to the following question by Commissioner Farquhar:

Q. What have you to say to the public expression that the United States Steel Corporation controls 80 per cent of the whole manufactured product of this country?

A. (Interrupting.) Seventy per cent.

And on page 455, same sworn testimony, in answer to a question by Commissioner Phillips:

Q. Can you give the per cent of the Carnegie Works?

A. Well, I could figure it out. I know the Carnegie people exported 70 per cent of all the steel exported, but I could not give you the tons, etc.

And on page 470, in answer to a question by Commissioner Litchman:

Q. I understood you to say that the United States Steel Corporation controls about 80 per cent of the ore of the United States?

A. Well, I would modify that some if I said the United States; I think I made a mistake; I would say it controls about 80 per cent of the ores in the Northwest, which are those most largely used; in fact, nearly altogether used for steel products in the United States, etc.

And continuing on page 471, in answer to a question by Commissioner Harris, as follows:

Q. In transportation of your raw materials, do you own your own roads and steamboats?

A. We own all of our steamboats—not quite all—and we own all our railroads; the constituent companies own their railroads from the mines to the lakes, and we own one railroad from the lakes to the manufactories.

Q. You practically control the transportation of your raw materials, then?

A. On the lakes; yes.

5. Your petitioners respectfully submit that in view of the fact that the Carnegie Company is only one of the constituent companies of the United States Steel Corporation, that President Schwab's testimony, which is hereinbefore quoted, is almost conclusive evidence that the aforesaid steel trust is monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, a part of the trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

6. And your petitioners further respectfully show that there are certain other combinations and conspiracies, in the form of trusts and otherwise, who are monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, combining and conspiring to monopolize part of the trade and commerce, and combining, contracting, and conspiring in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and with foreign nations; and that among those who have and are thus conspiring, as aforesaid, in the form of trusts and otherwise, are the armor-plate trust or combination, which has been for some years past composed of the Carnegie Steel Company and the Bethlehem Steel Company.

7. And your petitioners further show that the said armor-plate trust and its constituent members and its managers have combined and conspired not only to monopolize the trade, commerce in armor plate among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia and with foreign nations, but it and its constituent members and managers thereof, among whom are the aforesaid Andrew Carnegie, Charles M. Schwab, Henry C. Frick, and others, have conspired and combined to so monopolize the commerce in armor plate among the several States and with foreign nations that they have been able to and did extort from the people and Government of the United States such an exorbitant price from the National Government and the people of the United States that they sold armor plate which cost less than $200 per ton to the said Government of the United States for the sum of $520 per ton.

8. And your petitioners further show that the said Carnegie Company and the said Bethlehem Company, who combined and conspired to form the said armor-plate trust, conspiracy, or combine, are now combined in violation of law of the United States into the hands of one combination, and they are the same combination which now controls the United States Steel Corporation, and that they are still monopolizing the trade and commerce in armor plate and still charging the Government the aforesaid exorbitant prices as a result of their being able to monopolize the trade and commerce in armor plate.

9. And we herewith submit the following from the official report of Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, Secretary of the Navy, for the year 1897:

"My impression is that there is and has been for some time at the least a friendly understanding among armor contractors both in Europe and America as to the prices to be charged for armor. This impression, I find, prevails abroad, certainly among some of the persons who have inquired into the subject.

* * * "These natural promptings to such a combination are mentioned only as persuasive to show, when taken in connection with what follows, and that a world-wide combination or understanding does exist.

* * * "An inspection of the prices paid, as shown by the diagram before referred to, will indicate what is not denied, that the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies agreed with each other as to prices. They have divided the contracts of this Government between themselves, each bidding lower than the other for one-half of the armor required at any time by the Government.

* * * "In 1895 Russia was in the market for harveyed nickel armor The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies in the United States were then both well established and neither had sufficient orders from this Government to employ its plant continuously. There was sharp competition for the order from Russia, and the Bethlehem Company secured the contract for manufacturing armor for one ship at the very low price of $249 per ton, this armor to be both nickeled and harveyed and to be delivered in Russia, the company agreeing at the same time to manufacture the armor for two other ships, if required, at the same price. The Russian Government afterwards did require for the other two ships, and taken altogether the armor for the three amounted to about 1,400 tons.

* * * "I am informed upon authority which I believe to be good that about or perhaps before the time of the last contract of the Bethlehem Company with Russia there was a meeting in Paris of the representatives of the principal, if not all, of the armor manufacturers of Europe and America.

* * * "These facts seem to lead to the conclusion that there is at least a friendly understanding or agreement among the principal armor manufacturers of the world that prices shall be maintained at or about a certain level.

* * * "In June, 1896, a board of officers, consisting of Lieuts. Karl Rohrer, Kossuth Niles, and A. A. Ackerman, was assembled with instructions to make a careful estimate of the actual cost in labor and material for the manufacture of armor now being provided for our battle ships. The board submitted a report on July 3, 1896.

* * * "The Department is inclined to give the greater weight to the estimated cost formed by the board, and it is believed to be just to both the manufacturers and to the Government to take average of the estimates to be $185.88 for single-forged and $197.78 for reforged armor."

10. And your petitioners further respectfully show that in addition the aforesaid violators of the United States statutes against trusts and monopolies, part of the aforesaid individuals, including John D. Rockefeller and others and the Standard Oil Company, among the managers, directors, and officers of which are John D. Rockefeller, H. M. Flagler, H. H. Rogers, John D. Archbold, William Rockefeller, and others, who have combined, contracted, and conspired together under the name of the Standard Oil Company, the Home Oil Company, the National Transit Company, and otherwise, to monopolize and restrain the trade and commerce among the States and Territories and the District of Columbia and foreign nations in crude and refined petroleum and its by-products.

11. And your petitioners further show that the anthracite coal combine and its members, among whom are the aforesaid J. P. Morgan, William Rockefeller, and others, have combined and conspired together to restrain and to monopolize the trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia and with foreign nations in anthracite coal.

12. And your petitioners further respectfully show that the aforesaid J. P. Morgan & Co., the American agents of Rothschild, John D. Rockefeller, and William Rockefeller, also William K. Vanderbilt, James J. Hill, E. H. Harriman, George J. Gould, Russell Sage, A. J. Cassatt, and numerous railroad corporations, their owners, managers, and directors, including the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the New York Central Railroad, the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, the Pennsylvania Company, or Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Great Northern Railroad Company, the Southern Railroad Company, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, the Wabash Railway Company and the Erie Railway Company, the Boston and Albany Railroad Company, and numerous others, and their principal stockholders, directors, and managers and officers, and certain bankers, including the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., the National City Bank of New York, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the First National Bank of New York, and the First National Bank of Chicago, and others, have conspired and combined to restrain and monopolize the railroad trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia of the United States and with foreign nations.

13. As evidence of the existence of the said combination of railroads, and as further evidence of the existence of a conspiracy entered into by the aforesaid railroad managers, stockholders, and manipulators, for the purpose of monopolizing and restraining the railroad trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, of the United States, and with foreign nations, your petitioners submit herewith, and make a part hereof, two sentences from the opinion handed down by Judge Hazel, sitting in equity in the case of the Lackawanna Railroad against 61 ticket scalpers, in which case the aforesaid railroad company prayed the United States court at Buffalo to restrain and inhibit the defendant ticket scalpers from dealing in Pan-American excursion tickets. Judge Hazel threw the case out of court, his decision that the aforesaid railroad company was not entitled to the protection of the laws being based upon the reasons in the following two sentences from his opinion:

"It appears that the complainant is a party to a combination which is engaged in pooling railroad rates and in fixing fares in order to avoid competition between the several lines constituting the association known and distinguished as the Trunk Line Association.

"Can the aid of a Federal tribunal be invoked to protect the complainant in the issuance of a ticket which is the culmination as well as the evidence of an agreement between railroad corporations specifically forbidden by an act of Congress which has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States?"

Judge Hazel thus decided that, sitting in equity, he could do nothing for a complainant who "does not come into court with clean hands."

Your petitioners further represent that the decision of Judge Hazel, of the United States court at Buffalo, as above quoted, certifies that a document was produced in his court which was the culmination as well as the evidence of an agreement between the railroad corporations, specifically forbidden by an act of Congress, which has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

And we submit that this evidence produced in Judge Hazel's court is ample and sufficient evidence and "probable cause" on which the Attorney-General may institute proceedings under the statute.

14. Your petitioners would further show unto your honor that numerous other trusts exist than those herein mentioned; that they can furnish evidence of the existence of such other trusts if necessary; that their existence is so open and notorious to the minds of the people of the United States that it seems unnecessary and would lengthen this petition to furnish more specific evidence at this time; that this other evidence will be furnished, if requested, by the Attorney-General; that the existence of the trusts is admitted by the public editorials and articles in every leading newspaper in the United States; that during the last session of Congress their existence was admitted by the declaration of every member of Congress who addressed himself to the subject; and that an act was passed by the House of Representatives which purported to further restrict their operations in the United States, as is evidenced by a copy filed herewith and for identification, marked "Exhibit B."

The existence of these dangerous combinations is further proven by facts known to all men that in the platforms of the Republican, Democratic, and Populist parties adopted at their last national convention they all recognized the existence of these illegal combinations and vigorously denounced them.

It therefore being thus stated by men of all parties, by the executive and legislative departments of the Government, and having been recognized by the judicial department of the Government in various opinions rendered by the Supreme Court, and also having been recognized by a large number of States in their constitutions by incorporating clauses therein denouncing these monopolies, trusts, and combinations and providing laws for inflicting upon them civil and penal punishment.

15. Your petitioners would further show unto your honor that, even though it should be denied that these combinations exist, or that they are now violating the law enacted by Congress, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," that it is the duty of the Attorney-General to prevent and restrain a contemplated violation of the said law whenever and wherever there is probable cause for instituting such proceedings as are provided for by said section 4 of the aforesaid act, which reads as follows:

"The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises."

16. Your petitioners further respectfully represent unto your honor that they will cheerfully furnish evidence now in their possession, and gladly assist you by furnishing you, through their organizations, whatever information and aid you may desire from them.

Your petitioners therefore pray that you either institute yourself, in the proper courts, prosecutions against these violators of the law or that you may authorize in the various districts of the United States your subordinates, the respective district attorneys in these districts, to at once commence prosecution for the past violations of this law in their respective districts, and at the same time instruct them at once to file before the various courts of the United States petitions such as are provided for by the terms of said law in equity to restrain and prevent impending and future violations of this law.

That these and all other and general proceedings may be taken against the aforesaid trusts, combinations, as to you may seem meet, your petitioners in duty bound will ever pray, etc.

Henry B. Martin, who being first duly sworn, says that he has read the foregoing petition or heard the same read, and that the grounds of belief therein stated as probable cause for the proceedings of the Attorney-General against the persons of all kinds therein mentioned and accused are clearly, in his opinion, good and sufficient to furnish ample grounds for the prosecution of the accused, as in duty bound under the Attorney-General's direction, by such assistant or district attorney as may be lawful and right.

HENRY B. MARTIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of September, 1901.

On September 11, 1901, the joint committee received the following reply from Attorney-General Knox:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 11, 1901.

H. B. MARTIN AND OTHERS,
1229 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C.

SIRS: I have your letter of September 6, inclosing a copy of what is properly known as the "Sherman antitrust act," a copy of the testimony of Mr. Charles M. Schwab before the Industrial Commission, and a petition addressed to me requesting legal proceedings to be taken against the trusts and combinations referred to therein. I will examine these papers with care at as early a date as is possible, and communicate to you my conclusions.

Very respectfully, yours,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

After the receipt of this definite written promise of Attorney-Geeneral Knox that he would take up the cases "at as early a date as is possible" the committee waited hopefully for many weeks. But no action was taken by the Attorney-General, and his promise to communicate his conclusions was never fulfilled. After waiting nearly three months, on November 25, the committee addressed the following letter to President Roosevelt:

THE AMERICAN ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE, NATIONAL OFFICE,
1229 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, SECOND FLOOR,
Washington, D. C., November 25, 190–.

Hon. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President, White House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am instructed by the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, to address to you a letter of inquiry, asking you to name a date within the next five days when you could give our committee an opportunity to present to you in person certain facts in reference to violations of Federal law by certain great trusts, and also with reference to a certain petition of complaint against these trusts which we filed with the Attorney-General of the United States some two months ago.

It is of great importance that we should have the opportunity to present this matter to you on or before November 29.

Earnestly hoping that in the pressure of your many other duties you will be able to find time to grant us this request, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

H. B. MARTIN,
Chairman Joint Committee the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

To which the President caused the following reply to be sent:

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, November 26, 1901.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant I would state that the President has expressed a desire to have matters of the kind to which you refer submitted to him in writing. This is because of the great pressure upon his time which renders it impossible for him to receive all of those who wish to call upon him.

Assuring you that I shall be glad to see that anything you may decide to forward is given prompt attention, believe me,

Very truly, yours,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. H. B. MARTIN,
National Secretary, etc., 1229 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The committee at once forwarded to the President a full presentation of the cases with the following letter:

THE AMERICAN ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE, NATIONAL OFFICE,
1229 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, SECOND FLOOR,
Washington, D. C., November 30, 1901.

Hon. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President, White House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of 26th instant, per George B. Cortelyou, secretary to the President, at hand. Pursuant to the suggestion contained therein, we herewith submit to you the documents relating to the petition of the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, to Attorney-General Knox, in which we laid before that officer the "probable cause" asked for by him as a basis of instituting proceedings against five of the great trusts who are operating in violation of the Federal statute of July, 1890.

We desire to call your attention also to the fact that we not only submitted "probable cause" for prosecution, but also positive proof of the violations of the Federal statute against trusts by at least two combines, viz, the armor-plate trust and the railroad combine, which latter succeeded the Joint Traffic Association and continued the illegal practices of that trust after it was ordered dissolved by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1898.

Recent events in connection with the organization of a railroad trust known as "The Northern Securities Company" by the same offenders who were enumerated in our petition to Attorney-General Knox, dated September 6, 1901, have aroused the indignation of the people of five of the great Northwestern States to such an extent that the governors of States are calling special sessions of legislatures to take action to prevent the consummation of this conspiracy against the public welfare.

The course of Attorney-General Knox in neglecting or refusing to take action against the parties of whose guilt proofs were submitted to him in our petition and his failure to keep the promise made in his letter of September 11 to take action and render a decision as to "his conclusions at the earliest possible date," make it our duty to call your attention to his culpable inactivity in these matters.

The neglect on the part of Attorney-General Knox to enforce the law of 1890 against trusts and combinations has resulted in such grave injury to the interests of the people of the United States that we deem it our duty to bring to your notice these facts, in order to secure that prompt and necessary action which the emergency demands.

Very respectfully,

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
WILLIAM L. DEWART, Secretary,
Joint Committee American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

To which the President responded as follows:

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, December 2, 1901.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of November 30, with inclosures, and to state that by direction of the President it has been brought to the attention of the Attorney-General.

Very truly, yours, GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. H. B. MARTIN,
Chairman, etc., 1229 Pennsylvania Avenue, Second Floor, Washington, D. C.

Notwithstanding this statement from President Roosevelt that he had brought the matter to the attention of the Attorney-General, that officer has utterly neglected and even positively refused to take a single step looking toward action against the trusts, of whose violations of law the committee had furnished him ample proofs.

On November 25, 1901, the antitrust committee made demand on the Attorney-General for a definite reply on or before November 30 as to what action he intended to take in the cases. As no reply was received from Mr. Knox, and as the committee had become convinced that Mr. Knox's antecedents and his neglect and refusal to perform the duties of his office made him an unfit person to fill the position of Attorney-General, they, on the opening of Congress early in December, filed written charges and protests with the Senate against his confirmation.

The evidence against Knox was of so serious a character that his nomination instead of being instantly confirmed, as is the custom with Cabinet officers, was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate for investigation. The chairman of that committee having informed the chairman of the antitrust committee that Mr. Knox had attempted to defend himself to the committee against the charge of neglect to perform his duty by the excuse that he had promised the antitrust committee that "he would take up their cases right away after the meeting of Congress," the committee sent the following letter to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and filed proofs of their statement that the Attorney-General had not made such a promise:

THE AMERICAN ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE,
NATIONAL OFFICE, 1229 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, SECOND FLOOR,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1901.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
Chairman Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

SIR: Referring to the conversation we had with you yesterday, in which you stated that P. C. Knox, acting Attorney-General of the United States, had informed you that he "had notified our committee that he would take up our cases right away after the meeting of Congress," we beg to inform you that our committee has never received any such notice whatever in any form from Mr. Knox.

We further call your attention to the fact that the charges against Mr. Knox, which we have filed with the Senate, not only refer to his dereliction of duty in the cases which we filed with him, but also bear upon his antecedents and his admitted intimate relations and his collusion with the criminal practice of the armor-plate trust, which institution. we are informed by members of the Senate, robbed the Government of millions of dollars annually during the time that Mr. Knox was their associate and adviser.

We submit that the record of such a man should be thoroughly investi gated before he is confirmed in the office of Attorney-General, where one of his principal duties will be to prosecute those great criminals whom he admits were his former friends and employees.

Very respectfully, yours,

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
WILLIAM L. DEWART, Secretary,
Joint Committee American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

The Judiciary Committee referred the case to a subcommittee, who gave a hearing to the antitrust committee in support of the charges against the Attorney-General, and after having the matter in their hands until December 16, they reported the case to the Senate, where Mr. Knox was confirmed. Senators will recall the circumstances and the debate on that occasion.

The antitrust men then waited from December 16 till January 29 in hopes that the Attorney-General would keep to the promise he claimed to have made that he would take up the case right away after the meeting of Congress. After waiting another month and a half for the Attorney-General to act and getting no results, the antitrust committee filed the following memorial with the Senate of the United States, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee, where it now rests. In view of the fact that another year has elapsed and the Attorney-General still fails to act, I suggest that it would be eminently proper for that committee to take some action or make some report on this memorial.

After the confirmation the committee addressed the following communication to the Senate asking for an investigation of the Attorney-General's Department:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29, 1902.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: At a meeting of the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor, held on Monday, January 27, 1902, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted and directed to be presented to the Senate of the United States:

"Whereas on four separate occasions, viz, August 20, 1901, September 11, 1901, November 25, 1901, and January 23, 1902, covering a period of over five months, the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66 of the Knights of Labor did urge upon the attention of Attorney-General P. C. Knox complaints and evidence of violations of the laws of the United States against trusts and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade; and

"Whereas, despite the assurance given us in his letter of September 11, 1901, by said Attorney-General P. C. Knox that he would 'examine these papers with care at as early a date as is possible and communicate to you my conclusions,' nevertheless five months have passed and we have not yet received his promised conclusions as to these complaints of violations of law on the part of the unlawful trusts enumerated in our petition, viz: The United States Steel Corporation, the Standard Oil Company, the armor-plate trust, the railroad combine, the anthracite-coal trust, and the Northern Securities Company; and

"Whereas, during the five months which have elapsed since we first made our complaint to Attorney-General P. C. Knox of these violations of the Federal statutes against trusts, numerous other and flagrant violations of the law of the United States have been committed by the same offenders charged in our petition and complaint to the Department of Justice; and

"Whereas these gross violations of law are well known not only to us but to the public, and especially to the said Attorney-General P. C. Knox and other officials of the Department of Justice; and

"Whereas great and irreparable injury to the welfare and interests of the people of the United States and grave scandal and disgrace to a department of the Government results from this apparent collusion between the officials of the Department of Justice and the great trust criminals; and

"Whereas it is a well-known and scandalous fact that the predecessor of P. C. Knox in the Attorney-General's office, John W. Griggs, went from the service of the coal trust to the head of the Department of Justice, and that during his term of four years in that office he permitted the laws of the United States to be trampled under foot by the criminal trusts, and when he left the Attorney-General's office it was to publicly reenter the service of the railroad combine and other trusts, and on this very day, January 27, 1902, said ex-Attorney-General Griggs appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States as the servant of the Northern Securities Company, a branch of the railroad trust now being tried on charges preferred by a sovereign State; and

"Whereas the equally scandalous condition now exists that P. C. Knox, the present Attorney-General, went into the Department of Justice directly from the service of the criminal armor-plate trust and the Carnegie Steel Company, the main factor in the steel trust, and that he, like his predecessor, Griggs, has persistently neglected and refused to perform the sworn duties of his office as regards the prosecution of trusts, combines, and monopolies operating in open violation of the law; and

"Whereas the Attorney-General is the sole officer of the United States who is clothed with authority to prosecute these trust-law breakers: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the attention of the Senate and House of Representatives and of the President of the United States is hereby called to this condition of affairs now prevailing and to the palpable appearance of illicit relations existing between the Attorney-General of the United States and the most dangerous class of lawbreakers now at large in this Republic; and

"Resolved, That we, the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66 of the Knights of Labor, hereby call upon the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the President of the United States to at once institute a searching and thorough investigation of the Department of Justice and the official conduct of that Department by Attorney-General P. C. Knox.

"Respectfully submitted."

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
WILLIAM L. DEWART, Secretary,
Joint Committee of the American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

APPENDIX B.

Failing to secure any favorable action by the Attorney-General in suppressing the monstrous trusts with which he was personally and professionally connected, the antitrust people filed a mass of convincing documents against another illegal combination, the Eastern Railroad Association, with President Roosevelt on December 21, 1901, which the President referred to the Attorney-General.

Those documents are here submitted in full, because they are valuable in themselves as an exhaustive presentation of the law, and because they show conclusively that the present Administration does not intend to suppress or punish any unlawful trust or conspiracy against trade so long as the Republican party lives and thrives by their substantial support in all its compaigns and elections.

The following are the documents presented by the joint committee of the American Anti-Trust League to the President and Attorney-General of the United States, and which to this date have not received even a respectful hearing:

EXHIBIT A.

THE EASTERN RAILROAD ASSOCIATION,

This association is a combination, voluntarily formed under a secret written agreement, of nearly all railroad corporations in the fifteen Atlantic coast States to secure by unity of action arbitrary control over all patented inventions applicable for use on railroads. It is without doubt the oldest illegal trust in the United States. It was formed in 1866, and has successfully pursued its iniquity for some thirty-five years.

The association's annual reports from 1867 to 1883 are on file in the United States Patent Office library; but since 1883, which is approximately the date of the present agitation against unlawful combinations, no reports have been allowed to reach the public.

Its membership in 1868 embraced 57 railroad corporations in Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, and in the New England States. In 1883 the membership had increased to include 255 railroad corporations. The present membership is not actually known, inasmuch as the affairs of the association since 1883 have been kept secret. However, it is believed that the membership now includes at least 600 or 700 railroad corporations.

The headquarters of the combine was originally at Springfield, Mass.; afterwards, in 1878, at the Boston and Lowell station in Boston; then, in 1880, at the Grand Central Station in New York; and finally a permanent base of operations was established at Washington, D. C., the association, in 1886, purchasing for $25,000 the premises No. 614 F street NW., to be held "in trust for the sole use and benefit of the members of a certain association known as the Eastern Railroad Association."

On reference to the "Memorandum of deed in trust" (see Exhibit G), it will be seen that the conveyance was made to three members of the executive committee of the association and in a form which "has ever been held most sacred in equity." The building which is now the headquarters of the association contains large fireproof vaults with combination locks and within which are guarded the secret archives.

The railroad corporation members prior to December 4, 1878, operated under a written agreement, called a constitution, adopted February, 1867, a copy of which is not available. On the above date an amended constitution was adopted. This latter constitution was revised some time prior to 1887. (See Exhibit E.)

It will be seen on reference to the constitution that all the affairs of the association are turned over to and managed by nine governors called an executive committee. The names of the committee and the officers of the association have been published from time to time in the Travelers' Official Guide. In the Guide for June, 1902, the following list of the officials is given:

"Eastern Railroad Association.—General offices—614 F street NW., Washington, D. C. Hon. W. D. Bishop, president, Bridgeport, Conn.; Theodore N. Ely, vice-president, Philadelphia, Pa.; Albert A. Folsom, treasurer, Boston, Mass.; Robert J. Fisher, general counsel, Washington, D. C.; John J. Harrower, secretary, Washington, D. C.

"Executive committee: William D. Bishop, New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company; Theodore N. Ely, Pennsylvania Railroad Company; Henry F. Kenney, Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company; John R. Kenly, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company; Samuel E. Williamson, New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company; Frank S. Gannon, Southern Railway Company; F. D. Casanave, Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company; John J. Turner, Pennsylvania Company; William G. Besler, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey."

The meaning and force of certain articles in the amended constitution were explained to the 53 corporation members in the twelfth annual report of the president (Exhibit C), and reveals the true nature and character of the association.

Litigation is asserted to be the association's most important business. It is stated that section 4 of the constitution is "tyrannical," and deprives "members of the liberty of individual and independent action in the settlement of claims;" that members are forbidden to settle claims independently of the permission of the executive committee, for "the money thus paid enables the party making the unjust claim to prosecute other members, which in most cases he would otherwise be unable to do;" that the members of "the association must act as a unit," and that "it is believed that this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore."

In fact, this report furnishes conclusive evidence that the association was at the time, as it is now, a criminal conspiracy at common law. In State v. Burnham (15 N. H., 396, 1840), Judge Gilcrist said:

"Combinations against law or against individuals are always dangerous to the public peace and to public security. But the law by no means intends to exclude society from the benefits of united effort for legitimate purposes and such as promote the well-being of individuals or the public. It uses the word "conspiracy" in its bad sense. An act may be innocent without being indictable where the isolated acts of an individual are not so injurious to society as to require the intervention of the law. But when innocent acts are committed by members in furtherance of a common object, and with the advantage and strength which determination and union impart to them, they assume the grave importance of a conspiracy, and the peace and order of society require their repression."

"The general principle on which the crime of conspiracy is founded is this, that the confederacy of several persons to effect any injurious object creates such a new and additional power to cause injury as requires criminal restraint, although none would be necessary were the same thing proposed or even attempted to be done by any person singly." (7 Rep. Crim. Law Com., 1843, p. 90.)

"The concentrated energy of several combined wills operating simultaneously and by concert upon any one individual is dangerous even to the cautious and circumspect. It is therefore the business of the law to protect individuals from such conspiracies. All combinations in society to effect an evil purpose are dangerous, and when their object and purpose are to cheat an individual by whatever means, they are obnoxious to the criminal law." (Twitchell v. Comm., 9 Pa. St. R., 211.)

"I take it, then, a combination is criminal wherever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public or to oppress individuals by unjustly subjecting them to the power of confederates and giving effect to the purposes of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief." (Judge Gibson, Comm. v. Carlisle, Brightly's Rep., Pa. 36, 1821.)

"An association may be formed, the declared objects of which are innocent and laudable, and yet they may have secret articles or an agreement communicated only to the members by which they are banded together for purposes injurious to the peace of society; such would undoubtedly be a criminal conspiracy on proof of the fact, however meritorious and praiseworthy the declared objects might be." (Comm. v. Hunt, 4 Metcalf, 1845.)

Some time between 1878 and 1887 a further change in the constitution, as above stated, was made (Exhibit E), and in accordance with which the association has since carried on its business and exploited inventors and owners of patents.

The real purpose of the combination can be ascertained from an inspection of Articles V, VI, and VII of the constitution.

From section 1, Article V, it appears that an inventor or owner of a patent can not deal directly with any member of the association. He must deal with the executive committee, persons who never wish to purchase. The executive committee determines the validity of the patent and the expediency of contesting the claim, and the railroad corporation directly interested is deprived of individual freedom of action.

Under section 2 the executive committee arbitrarily fix the basis of settlement, if fixed at all. The individual member interested has no voice in the matter.

Under section 3 the individual member sued can not settle a claim or defend the suit. The executive committee manage the suit, and corporation members in no way interested are compelled to contribute aid.

Under section 4 each member is deprived of the right of individual opinion and freedom of action.

Under section 5 the individual member is forced to accept the judgment of the executive committee when "for the best interests of the association," whatever may be the interests of the individual member. If a claim is settled the inventor receives pay from those not using the invention. The sole condition of settlement is that such settlement is cheaper for the association than "carrying on the litigation."

Article VI fixes the penalty for violating the agreement.

Article VII authorizes the unlawful "maintenance" of suits where a majority of the members are not directly or indirectly interested and where no member of the association is a legal defendant of record.

These articles provide for the suppression of competition between the corporate members in the purchase of licenses and interests in letters patent, and restrict freedom in the settlement of claims for the infringement of patents; and also for the fixing of the price by the executive committee when any interest in a patent may be purchased or any claim is to be settled, provided "such settlement or purchase can be effected at less expense to the association than the cost of carrying on the litigation."

Under its constitution and by-laws the association exists in violation of the antitrust act. The facts and law showing this to be true are fully set forth in a "statement" filed in 1900 with the Attorney-General of the United States and which accompanied a request that he direct a suit in equity to be instituted under section 4 of the act to restrain and enjoin the association. A copy of the "statement" and certain exhibits, as well as the reply of Attorney-General Griggs defending the association, are herewith submitted. (Exhibits B and H.)

The principal business of the association under and outside of its unlawful constitution and by-laws appears to embrace, first, reports upon patents, and, second, litigation.

Reports upon patents are prepared by the general counsel and a slip attached stating that they are of "no effect or binding on the association until approved by the executive committee." All applications for information by a corporate member must be made through an authorized person named by the board of directors of the corporation. The reports on the validity of patents are preserved in secret, and the inventors or owners of the patents and the general public as well never learn their substance unless accidentally. Inasmuch as there is no competition and that the reports are generally made to railroad officials unfamiliar with the art and the patent laws, and hence incompetent to criticise, it is maintained with truth that the said reports are as a rule superficial and arbitrary. Several reports have been seen which disclosed great ignorance of the particular arts and which prevented the introduction of very desirable safety devices upon railroads.

However incomplete, arbitrary, capricious, and unjust these reports may be, the association members are in practice bound to adopt and follow them. Any official who should ignore the report would be dismissed from service. By these secret reports it is within the power of the association to destroy the property right in a patent created by the Government, or to give value to a worthless or invalid patent if some one on the inside is adequately remunerated.

It is obviously against public policy for a combination of corporations, each exercising a public office, affected with a public use, and performing the function of the government, to agree and covenant that they will be bound by secret decisions and reports relative to the validity or invalidity of patents for such appliances as are discovered and invented from time to time, and are adapted for cheapening, hastening, and rendering safer the transportation of freight and passengers on railroads.

Litigation is another and the most important business in which the association is engaged. (See Exhibit C.) According to one of the association's reports, it had in its treasury in 1882 the sum of $50,028.98. Of this amount immediately available for litigation and corrupt uses, $33,655 was invested in convertible bonds and stock and $10,000 loaned on call. A much larger sum is now doubtless immediately available for "running down a poor inventor with an invalid patent" who has the audacity to bring suit against a corporation member. The members of the association are domiciled in four judicial circuits. An owner of a patent commences suit in equity against a railroad corporation member in a certain district. The general counsel of the association appears for the defendant and unlawfully maintains the suit, the other corporate members of the association refusing to lawfully intervene, so they may not be bound by any judgment rendered within that district.

When the complainant takes his proofs he must pay his witnesses and railroad fares. The general counsel travels to the place of examination on a railroad pass, cross-examines the witnesses at great length to increase the per diem charges of the witness for his services and to increase the cost of printing the testimony by the complainant. When the general counsel takes testimony for the defense he rides on a pass and secures witnesses free, who also travel on passes, from among railroad employees, who are always willing to testify as instructed. The testimony may be taken in any part of the country which will entail the greatest possible expense for the complainant in railroad fares.

The general counsel secures perjurous testimony, manufactured evidence, and avails himself of all means, honest or dishonest, to defeat the suit. When the case comes on to be heard it may be before a Federal judge who has a railroad pass in his pocket. Then comes a series of appeals. Should the complainant be successful he can but seldom prove profits or damages, as the association has by its ingeniously contrived constitution prevented the establishment of a license fee. Upon application for an injunction in another judicial circuit against a railroad corporation which had participated in the defense, the general counsel will again appear and assert new defenses and allege a different claim or demand and the case must be tried anew.

Without entering into details, it is a truthful statement of fact to say that the ordinary citizen is absolutely precluded from prosecuting in any Federal court a suit against a railroad corporation for infringing a patent with any hope of success.

The association is above citation in any court of justice, and in fact possesses a power superior to that exercised by any circuit court of the United States. In the annual report for 1882 the president says:

"The association has so increased in strength and usefulness that it may be likened in one respect to a judicial authority or tribunal, to which all interested can apply for advice respecting patented inventions in any way relating to railroads, and with the assurance that the advice given, if followed, will be supported and sustained with all the combined force and power of our membership."

In closing the thirteenth annual report, 1879, the general counsel uttered this boast:

"It appears to be the fact that during the whole period of thirteen years, during which the association has been in existence, no suit defended by it has resulted in a judgment against a member on appeal to the highest court; and that while some claims have been settled after suit was brought, no member defended by the association has yet, by process of law under execution, attachment, or otherwise, been compelled to pay anything on account of infringement of letters patent."

For thirty-five years this association has stripped owners of patents and inventors of their property as effectively and completely as the uncircumcized Philistines of old stripped Saul on Mount Gilboa. As stated by the Scientific American March 12, 1902: "Legislation is certainly needed to put a stop to combinations like the Eastern Association for the express purpose of nullifying the privileges granted to inventors by Congress."

[Extracts from the association's annual reports.]

In the first report it is stated that persons who claim damages for the infringement of their patents are "cormorants."

In the third report it is said that the usefulness of the association is becoming apparent. Members enjoy freedom from applications of "patent agents." Our relations to the Western Railroad Association, of Chicago, are such as to secure to each party the full benefit of investigations conducted at the expense of the other.

Fourth report: That under the quiet influence of our own and the Western Railroad Association the business of dealing in railroad patents is fast becoming legitimate and respectable. Owners of patents making claims against railroads are aptly denominated "patent sharks."

Sixth report: That after six years, of all the suits brought against members of the association only one has been pressed to trial, and in that case the defendant was successful, "and a fraudulent claim was permanently overthrown." Referring to certain attempts to secure extensions of patents from Congress, it is stated that "the poor inventor was employed to stand around as a figurehead and recite his misfortunes to members of Congress for the purpose of eliciting sympathy." "It is deemed a part of prudence for the association to be properly represented at Washington during the session of Congress to watch the speculators in these defunct patents and report their earliest appearance."

Seventh report: That the association saves to the companies many hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. That during the seven years' experience of the association only three cases have actually been heard by the courts.

Eighth report: "The executive committee presents its eighth annual report with a feeling of lively satisfaction at the success which continues to attend the organization."

Ninth report: "The kindly relations hitherto existing between the executive committee of this and the Western Railroad Association are still maintained."

Eleventh report: "It has been thought advisable to accept of a low compromise rate offered by the owners of one or two patents whose claims have upon investigation been found to be valid." Data is given of 20 suits defended by the association.

Thirteenth report: It is stated that attention is called to a bill before Congress providing for a commission, appointed by the President of the United States, to examine patented improvements applicable to railroads, with power to decide which of such improvements shall be used and the amount to be paid to the owner. "But the provisions of the bill were so manifestly unconstitutional I did not think it necessary to appear as a remonstrant."

Fifteenth report: "The association can no longer be said to be an experiment. With fifteen years' experience and the resulting accumulation of valuable records and tangible assets in the form of invested securities shown by the reports of the counsel and secretary and the treasurer, it must be admitted to be an established institution, and that it has proved a success far exceeding the expectations of its founders.

"It has fully subserved the object which was intended to be accomplished, and has so increased in strength and usefulness that now it may be likened in one aspect to a judicial authority or tribunal, to which all interested can apply for advice respecting patented inventions in any way relating to railroads, and with the assurance that the advice given, if followed, will be supported and sustained with all the combined force and power of our membership.

"All are apt to be blind when their own interests are concerned, but it is worthy of remark, and a subject of congratulation, that whatever may be the individual interests of our members here we meet as a brotherhood, on a common level, for a common purpose, and without respect to persons or individuals, whatever may be their circumstances or pretensions.

"It may be proper to remind you that the association makes use of no legal power or authority against its members; we are bound by no other ties than those of honor and mutual benefit. There has been some discussion as to the desirability of our acquiring the powers of a corporation. Your committee has not so far discovered any necessity for making such a radical change in the organization of the association."

EXHIBIT B.

In re the Eastern Railroad Association.

STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING A REQUEST, FILED WITH THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL, THAT SUIT IN EQUITY BE INSTITUTED AGAINST THE EASTERN RAILROAD ASSOCIATION.

"In an effort to avoid the condemnation of the law, shelter has been sought under what has ever been held most sacred in equity, a trust, a thing over which equity, to prevent fraud, has asserted and exercised an exclusive jurisdiction. The same combinations to prevent competition, condemned already by the law, are attempted to be worked out at the footstool of the chancellor, concealed in the form there most favored. It is like the outlaw grasping the horns of the altar for security, but, unlike him, it conceals its guilt and demands protection, protesting its innocence while pursuing its iniquity."

The act is the culmination of corporate insolence and deceit." (Ray, Contractual Limitations, under the head of "Corporate combinations to prevent fair competition.")

STATEMENT.

The agreement of the Eastern Railroad Association set forth in its constitution and by-laws, and its doings in accordance therewith, constitute violations of the "Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." (26 Stat. L., chapter 647.)

I.

The constitution of the Eastern Railroad Association is a contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States.

THE AGREEMENT.

Prior to the 4th day of December, 1878, 53 railroad corporations, chartered under the laws of and doing business in 15 separate States—to wit, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina—had entered into an agreement by which they constituted themselves an association to be known as the Eastern Railroad Association. On December 4, 1878, "after due discussion and deliberation," and at a special meeting of the association, an amended constitution was adopted.

Under date of March 24, 1879, the president of the association made the twelfth annual report to the railroad corporation members, and therein called "particular attention" to, and explained the meaning of, certain provisions of the amended constitution.

During the year 1883 the railroad corporation members to the agreement numbered 255, and operated over 19,198 miles of track in 15 States. (Exhibit D, Report in Patent Office Library.)

In 1894 and at the present time, as far as can be learned, the membership of the association embraces some 700 railroad corporations, having 34,000 miles of track and $2,820,000,000 capital.

About 1887 the members of the association adopted a revised constitution, which each railroad company signed and by which it agreed to be bound. (Exhibit E.)

Article I of the constitution recites the purpose of the association, to wit:

"While having for its general purpose the promotion of railway interests, its leading object shall be the protection of its members against unjust claims made for patented inventions."

By Article II the members agree that any railroad company approved by the executive committee and subscribing to the articles and contributing to the expense of the association may become a member. Each company is to be represented by a duly authorized person.

By Article III the members agree that the affairs of the association shall be turned over to and managed by nine governors, called the executive committee, who shall be elected each year by the representatives of the railroad corporations at the annual meeting of the association, held in the city of New York. (By-laws, Article I.) That the executive committee shall elect a president, vice-president, and treasurer, selected from among themselves, and shall also elect a general counsel and secretary, and that the officers shall be the officers of the association. That the committee shall have power to elect other officers and employees, to appoint legal counsel, fix salaries and compensation for themselves and other employees, to prescribe the duties of all officers, agents, and employees, and to make by-laws for its own government.

By Article IV the members agree that annual meetings of the association shall be held; that special meetings shall be called at the request of two members of the executive committee and upon written request of the representatives of not less than five companies; that each company shall be entitled to one vote.

By Article V the members agree that the executive committee shall determine the validity or invalidity of any patent submitted for examination by any railroad corporation member; that the executive committee shall determine the expediency of contesting any claim for compensation made upon any railroad corporation member for the use of a patented invention which it has appropriated; that should the executive committee conclude (1) that a patent is valid or (2) that it is inexpedient to contest a claim for compensation made against one of the railroad members of the association, it shall be the duty of said executive committee, at the request of an associate member, to (1) negotiate for the use of the patent or (2) for a settlement of the claim of compensation; that if the railroad member declines to accept the terms fixed by the executive committee for the use of the patent, the association will not be responsible for the defense of any suit against such member.

That if the railroad member declines to accept the basis of settlement fixed by the executive committee when claim for compensation is made for the use of an invention, the association will not thereafter be responsible for the expense of litigation growing out of the case. That when the owner of a patent brings suit at law or in equity against a railroad member for infringing his patent adjudged invalid by the executive committee, said member shall report the suit to the secretary, and the executive committee shall manage the same thereafter at the expense of the association. That when the owner of a patent brings suit at law or in equity against a railroad member for the use of a patent which the executive committee has reported upon as valid and for the use of which the executive committee has also fixed the price, accepted by the railroad member but not by the owner of the patent, the said railroad member shall report the suit to the secretary and the executive committee shall thereafter manage the defense at the expense of the association.

That no member shall settle a suit or claim against it after being advised that a similar suit or claim is in charge of the association for defense against another member, except with the consent of the general counsel and president of the association. That when the executive committee decide it inadvisable to assume or continue the expense of litigation arising out of a report which it has adopted, it may so notify the member against which suit has been brought. But the executive committee may compromise or settle the claim for compensation made by the owner of the patent or purchase a license for the member at the expense of the association: Provided, The settlement or purchase can be effected at less expense to the association than the cost of carrying on the litigation.

By Article VI the members agree: That expulsion shall be the penalty when any member willfully violates "these articles."

By Article VII the members agree: That the executive committee shall confer with the officers of similar associations in the United States relative to the settlement of patent claims and the trial of patent cases; meaning by "similar associations" especially the Western Railroad Association, which embraces some 81 railroad corporations distributed among the Western States. And that they will contribute from the trust fund to maintain the defense of suits.

By Article VIII the members agree: That they shall be assessed annually according to mileage and gross receipts "for any expenses incurred or hereafter to be incurred" in behalf of the association; and that payment of the assessments shall be enforced under penalty.

By Article IX the members agree: That any company may withdraw from the association by giving notice in writing.

The provisions recited in the by-laws and standing resolutions of the association are intended to aid in carrying out and making effective the agreement set forth in the constitution.

It should be noted that Article V of the constitution of 1887 is substantially identical with Article VI of the constitution of 1878, and that the explanation of said Article VI by the President of the association in the twelfth annual report (Exhibit C) applies to Article V of the constitution of 1887. The explanation is as follows and reveals the true purpose and object of the agreement:

Your committee, however, think it proper here to refer to some of the provisions of the constitution as amended:

Particular attention is called to Article VI, which is designed to regulate the action of all concerned when a claim is made for the use of a patented invention and said claim is submitted to the association for action.

Section 1 of this article makes it the duty of the executive committee to negotiate with an inventor or patentee whose claim it is considered inexpedient to contest; but attention is drawn to the fact that the committee must first be requested to do so by a member. In this respect the section differs from section 3 of Article VII of the old constitution. Section 2 is substantially the same as section 4 of Article VII of the old constitution; but it will be observed that if a member fails to acknowledge receipt of notice sent by the committee for fifteen days after its date, the terms of settlement proposed shall be considered as accepted by such member.

Attention is also called to section 3 of this article, as by its terms the members, in order to avail themselves of the services of the association for defense or in settlement of claims, must notify the secretary of any suit or claim brought against them. And if any member has previously declined, or shall subsequently decline, the basis of settlement recommended by the executive committee, the association will not be responsible for any expenses for litigation such member may incur.

Section 4 prohibits any member settling any suit or claim brought against it, after being advised by the secretary that a similar suit or claim is in charge of the association for defense in behalf of any of its members, without the consent of the secretary, indorsed by the president.

This provision of the Constitution may appear tyrannical, and it does to a certain extent deprive members of the liberty of individual and independent action in the settlement of claims; but the subject has been well considered, and the rule is believed to be essential to the successful carrying out of the main object of the association, to wit, the protection of its members against unjust claims made for patented inventions.

One member may find it expedient to settle a claim under special inducements; but the money thus paid enables the party making the unjust claim to prosecute other members, which in most cases he would otherwise be unable to do. Again, the weaker members of the association might be unduly influenced in the settlement of such claims when they learned that a more powerful member had found it expedient to settle.

Such methods of influencing the settlement of claims are well known to those engaged in the manipulation of fraudulent patent claims, and, if allowed to prevail, the influence and salutary effect of the association would be destroyed. To obtain the best results, the members of the association must act as a unit, and it is believed that this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore.

As further revealing the association's estimate of the character of its agreement, as embodied in its constitution, the following extracts from the president's annual report,[a] March 9, 1882, are reproduced, to wit:

The association "has so increased in strength and usefulness that now it may be likened in one respect to a judicial authority or tribunal,[b] to which all interested can apply for advice respecting patented inventions in any way relating to railroads, and with the assurance that the advice given, if followed, will be supported and sustained with all the combined force and power of our membership."

There has been some discussion as to the desirability of our acquiring the powers of a corporation. Your committee has not so far discovered any necessity for making such a radical change in the organization of this association.

THE ANTITRUST LAW.

An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

[b] It is not within the power of individuals or corporations to create judicial tribunals for the final and conclusive settlement of controversies. (102 Ind., 262, 1885.)

SEC. 5. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under section four of this act may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpœnas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

SEC. 6. Any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section one of this act, and being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to a foreign country, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

SEC. 7. Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

SEC. 8. That the word "person," or "persons," wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

Approved, July 2, 1890.

ARGUMENT.

Section 1 of the antitrust act states:

"Every contract * * * in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States * * * is hereby declared to be illegal."

The law assumes that trade and commerce among the several States shall be free, and that this freedom shall extend to all persons, natural as well as artificial, and also embrace all subjects-matter, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which can be bought, sold, or exchanged.

Chief Justice Fuller, in United States v. Knight (156 U. S., 11), said:

"The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraints."

No limitation has ever been fixed by the Supreme Court to the phrase "commerce among the States." Its narrowest definition at least embraces "the conduct of individuals" "in buying and selling or barter."

On argument in Gibbon v. Ogden (9 Wheaton) it was claimed that navigation was not included within the meaning of the term; and the court remarked, at page 190:

"The mind can scarcely conceive of a system for regulating commerce (between the States) which shall * * * be confined to prescribing rules for the conduct of individuals in the actual employment of buying and selling or of barter."

Other deliverances on the subject are as follows:

"Commerce is undoubtedly traffic. But it is also something more; it is intercourse." (Gibbon v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 181.)

"Sale is the object of importation, and it is an essential element of commerce." (Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 419.)

"Commerce is intercourse; one of its most ordinary ingredients is traffic." (Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 446.)

"Commerce is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all of its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of our country and the citizens of other countries, and between the citizens of different States." (Welton v. State of Missouri, 1 Otto, 275.)

"Commerce with foreign countries and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." (County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S., 702.)

"The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another State, for the purpose of introducing them into the State in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce." (Robbins v. Shelby Taxing District, 120 U. S., 497.) (1886.)

"While the completely internal commerce of a State is reserved to the State itself, because never surrendered to the General Government, commerce, the regulation of which is committed by the Constitution to Congress, comprehends traffic, navigation, and every species of commercial intercourse or trade between the United States, among the several States and the Indian tribes." (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S., 447.) (1894.)

"Definitions as to what constitutes interstate commerce are not easily given, so that they shall clearly define the full meaning of the term. We know from the cases decided in this court that it is a term of very large significance. It comprehends, as it is said, intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all its forms, including transportation, sale, purchase, and the exchange of commodities between the citizens of different States." (Justice Peckham in Hopkins v. United States, October 24, 1898, 171 U. S., 597.)

(See United States v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Company, 54 U. S., App. 723 et seq. Supreme Court decision December 4, 1899, 175 U. S., 211.)

From the above definitions it may be said that the transfer by a person domiciled in one State to a person domiciled in another State of any interest in a patent by assignment, grant, or license, or negotiations preliminary or preparatory to such transfer, constitute trade or commerce among the several States.

The Congress by positive enactment has declared that there shall be freedom of trade or commerce in patents for inventions and interests therein throughout the United States. Section 4898, Revised Statutes of the United States, reads:

"Every patent or any interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing; and the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may, in like manner, grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States."

There are three classes of persons in whom the patentee can vest an interest of some kind in the patent. They are an assignee, a grantee of an exclusive sectional right, and a licensee. (Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatchford, 406.)

The courts have repeatedly affirmed the existence of a free and open market for patent property throughout the United States. Justice Davis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss., 309 (1870), a case arising under an act of the State of Indiana "regulating the sale of patent rights," said:

"The property in inventions exists by virtue of the laws of Congress, and no State has a right to interfere with its enjoyment or to annex conditions to the grant. If the patentee complies with the laws of Congress on the subject, he has a right to go into the open market anywhere within the United States and sell his property."

It has repeatedly been held that the acts of State legislatures which attempt to direct the manner in which patent rights shall be sold in the States are void. (See Helm v. Bank, 43 Indiana, 167; Robinson on Patents, section 46, note 4, and section 1242.)

In Holiday v. Hunt (70 Illinois, 113) the court recognized that the purchase and sale of a patent right constituted "traffic," and remarked of the State law:

"It is a marked discrimination against the traffic in patent rights, which can not fail to seriously prejudice and impair the rights of patentees and their assignees."

A State can not impose a license tax upon the sale of a patent. (State v. Butler, 3 Lea., 222.) (1879.)

An act respecting foreign corporations and their agents does not apply to an agent selling patented inventions. (Grove & Baker Sewing Machine Company v. Butler, 53 Ind., 454 (1876); Shock v. Singer Company, 61 Ind., 520.) (1878.)

The necessary effect of the agreement entered into by the railroad corporations, members of the Eastern Railroad Association, is the restraint of trade or commerce in patent property among the several States.

In United States v. The Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S., p. 341) Justice Peckham, referring to the agreement there under consideration, said:

"The question is one of law in regard to the meaning and effect of the agreement itself. The necessary effect of the agreement is to restrain trade or commerce, no matter what the intent was on the part of those who signed it."

The true meaning of the agreement is to be gathered, according to the well-known rule, from the four corners of the agreement itself. (Judge Chitty in Mills v. Dunham, 1 Ch., 580; 1891.)

I do not think an averment is necessary as to what has been done under it (the agreement) or as to any mischief which it has actually produced. We are to consider what may be done under it and what mischief may thus arise. (Lord Campbell in Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 E. & B., 65.)

Whether the nature of the combination is injurious is to be determined by a construction of the provisions of the agreement constituting the combination, and not by its effects in actual operation. (Salt Company v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio State, 678; Atcheson v. Mallon, 43 N. Y., 149 (1870); Richardson v. Buhl, 43 N. W., 1102; 77 Mich., 632; Anderson v. Jett, 41 Alb. L. J., 104; 89 Ky., 375.)

From the plain terms of the constitution of the Eastern Railroad Association it appears to be the fact that the several hundred railroad corporations, members thereof, have entered into a mutual contract and agreement one with another whereby they have voluntarily abolished competition among themselves in the negotiations for the purchase of any interest in patents for inventions; that for securing "unity of action" they have handed over to a committee of nine persons, called the executive committee, all control over all their business relating to the purchase of patent rights and licenses; that each and every of them has surrendered its liberty of individual and independent action in dealing with inventors and owners of patents; and especially in negotiating settlements of claims made for the use of patented inventions; that they have delegated and surrendered to the said executive committee the power of fixing the price or prices to be paid for the use of any patented invention, and the price in payment for any unlawful appropriation of a patented invention, and the price to be paid for a license to use any patented invention, and the price to be paid for any patent or assignment thereof (assuming that in any case they intend to pay anything at all), and have bound themselves by penalties to abide by the articles of agreement and the decisions of the executive committee.

The several hundred railroad corporations, members of the association, and parties to the agreement, are organized under the laws of fifteen or more States. The owner of a patent domiciled in any of the States is, under the agreement, debarred from negotiating with any one of the railroad corporation members for the sale of an interest in a patent, or for the settlement of any claim for compensation against any railroad member that has infringed a patent.

As between an individual patentee or owner of a patent and the corporation members of 14 States the negotiations involve trade or commerce among the States.

In Hammerstein v. Parsons (38 Mo. App., 333) (1889) the court remarked:

"The constitution and by-laws of an association constitute a contract between the members."

It can not be gainsaid that the constitution and by-laws of the Eastern Railroad Association constitute a contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, and thus violate section 1 of the antitrust act.

Had the agreement as set forth in the association constitution given the executive committee power only to report on the validity or invalidity of a patent, and then left such railroad company to its own individual and independent judgment as to whether it would purchase a license, or settle for an infringement, or defend any suit brought against it, the agreement would perhaps not be illegal. But had the agreement been so limited it would have been useless. If each company should be allowed to act independently in dealing with owners of patents the whole agreement might as well be rescinded. The president in explaining the provisions of the constitution (Exhibit D) reveals the real nature and essential purpose of the agreement when he says:

"To obtain the best results the members of the association must act as a unit, and it is believed that this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore."

Justice Peckham, in United States v. The Joint Traffic Association (171 U. S., 505), referring to an analogous agreement, said:

"If one company is allowed, while remaining a member of the association, to fix its own rates and be guided by them, it is plain that as to that company the agreement might as well be rescinded. This result was never contemplated."

The defense in the joint traffic case endeavored to differentiate the agreement there involved from that in the trans-Missouri case by asserting that in the former the rates were made by the several companies and in the latter by the association. Both agreements were held to be violations of the antitrust act.

The conditions imposed upon railroad members by Section V of the constitution, aside from the provision of the remaining sections, render the agreement unlawful. In the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company v. The Associated Press (184 Ill., 438), 1900, the supreme court of Illinois decided that—

"The restrictions attempted to be imposed by the Associated Press through its contracts and by-laws upon the rights of members to purchase news from other agencies which such corporation may declare to be antagonistic are null and void as tending to create monopoly and restrict competition." (See Exhibit IX.)

II.

The combination and confederacy of the railroad corporations composing the association to oppose individual patentees and owners of patents in the negotiations of interests in their property, and the agreement of said corporations to use certain unlawful means set forth in their constitution in so opposing, as well as their unlawful acts in pursuance thereof, constitute the association a conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States.

By the first section of the antitrust law not only are contracts in restraint of trade which impose binding obligations upon parties to the agreement not to compete illegal, but also conspiracies in restraint of trade, which cover a well-known class of cases where the confederacy proposes or attempts to prevent others from freely carrying on their trade.

The Congress intended to embrace within the statutory prohibition all conspiracies which would be illegal at common law. Illustrations of such cases are: Commonwealth v. Carlyle (Br. Rep., 36), where a combination of employers conspired to depress the wages of journeymen, and in respect to which Judge Gibson remarked:

"An association is criminal when its object is to depress the price of labor (commodity) below what it would bring if it were left without artificial excitement by either masters or journeymen, to take its chances in the market" (p. 42).

Mogul Steam Company v. McGregor, Grow & Co. (appeal cases, 25). (See Judge Taft's remarks on this decision (54 U. S. App., 211). People v. Everest (51 Hunn., 19). Wright, Criminal Conspiracy, pp. 144-181; American and English Encyclopedia of Law, Vol. IV, p. 608; First Edition Stephen's History of Criminal Law; Ray, Contractual Limitations.)

First. The combination under the constitution and by-laws constitutes the conspiracy though nothing be done in pursuance thereof. In Woodworth v. Sherman and same v. Cheever and 18 others, 3 Story, 172 (1844), Justice Story, who at that time had served thirty-five years on the bench, remarked during the course of the case:

"That he observed that the bills contained a charge of an actual combination to resist the patent. That it was a question of much importance what would be the legal effect of such a combination. That he did not intend to express any opinion on this part of the case, but that in a former case he had occasion to declare that it seemed to approach very near, if it did not actually reach, a criminal conspiracy. That in many cases it was lawful for individuals to do what could not lawfully de done by a combination. That an individual patentee might successfully resist an individual, but it was much more difficult to resist the combined force of a great number of persons united to oppose a patent."

An inspection of the agreement will disclose that the associated railroad companies, organized under the laws of 15 States, have conspired together for the purpose of restraining individual owners of patents, domiciled in the several States, from freely negotiating sales of interests in their patents and from collecting compensation from any member of the association who has appropriated a patented invention.

Second. The agreement by the association to use unlawful means in opposing owners of patents in their attempts to negotiate interests in their property constitutes the association a criminal conspiracy.

A conspiracy has been defined as:

"A combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means." (Pettibone v. United States, 13 Supreme Court Reporter 542 (1893).)

The unlawful means which the association agrees to use are: (1) The unawful maintenance of suits brought against any one of its members (Art. V, secs. 3 and 5, Art. VII). (2) The boycott. The members of the association agree by Article V not to individually negotiate with the owner of a patent for an interest therein and not to settle a suit or claim when a similar suit or claim against another member is being maintained by the association, for, as the president of the association said in the twelfth annual report, "the money thus paid enables the party making the unjust claim to prosecute other members, which in most cases he would be otherwise unable to do." He further remarked that "this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore."

Third. The acts of the association, its res gestæ, through a series of years in opposing individual patentees and owners of patents, prove the association to be a permanent conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States.

The methods and means, unlawful under the common law and by statute, employed by the association embrace: [a]

(1) The unlawful maintenance of suits and without legal intervention. (See article "Intervention," A. and E. Enc. of Pleading and Practice, Vol. XI, p. 494.)

(2) Impeding, obstructing, and defeating the due course of justice. (Sec. 5407, R. S., U. S.)

(3) Manufactured evidence.

(4) Perjury. (Sec. 5392, R. S., U. S.)

(5) Subordination of perjury. (Secs. 5393, 5440, R. S., U. S.)

(6) Oppression. (Sec. 5508, R. S., U. S.)

The association violates, and has violated, the first section of the antitrust act within the meaning of the conspiracy clause thereof.

III.

The members of the association have combined and conspired to monopolize part of the trade or commerce among the several States appertaining to the purchase and sale of interests in patents, and have consequently violated section 2 of the act.

By the agreement, as set forth in the constitution, the members turn over to the executive committee of nine governors the sole control of all purchasing of licenses from owners of patents, the settlements of claims made against individual members of the association for the appropriation of patented inventions, and the maintenance of all suits. In the twelfth annual report (Exhibit D) the president states that "this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore."

By suppressing competition among the members and delegating to the executive committee the power to fix prices, the sole buying by the corporation members in 15 States and the selling by the individual owners of patents domiciled in the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia is effectively controlled, and a monopoly of part of the commerce or trade among the several States or Territories is established.

Had not the main purpose of the association been the creation and acquiring of a monopoly, the constitution would have provided that after the executive committee had reported upon the validity or invalidity of a patent each member should be left free to exercise its own individual and independent judgment as to the advisability of purchasing an interest in or license under the patent or settling a claim made for the use of an invention. Deprive the association of the power of compelling or agreeing upon "unity of action," and it would fall to pieces immediately.

It may be further asserted that under the provisions of Article VII of the constitution the attempt is made to further extend the monopoly to all the trade or commerce in patent rights in all the States which may be carried on, or attempted to be carried on, between railroad corporations and owners of patents for inventions.

But it is immaterial whether an attempt is made to monopolize the whole or any part of trade or commerce among the States. In United States v. Knight Company (156 U. S., 16) Chief Justice Fuller said:

"Again, all the authorities agree that in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that the results should be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition."

Combining or conspiring to monopolize trade or commerce among the several States may be defined as a conspiracy of two or more persons by concerted action to acquire the sole, or an excessive, power to control trade or commerce among the several States which others have the legal right to engage in independently.

Tested by this definition, the association has violated section 2 of the antitrust act.

As the headquarters of the association are in the District of Columbia, it might be shown that it violates section 3 of the act. It is at least within the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and that court is authorized by section 4 to apply the third section to corporations (see section 8) doing business within the District of Columbia and bound by contract or conspiring to restrain trade locally in the District of Columbia, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory.

THE SCOPE OF THE ANTITRUST ACT.

Six decisions only have thus far been rendered by the Supreme Court in cases under the act, to wit: United States v. E. C. Knight Company, 156 U. S., 1; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 290; United States v. The Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S., 505 (decided October 24, 1898); Hopkins et al. v. United States, 171 U. S., 578; Anderson et al. v. United States, 171 U. S., 604; Addyston Pipe and Steel Co. et al. v. United States, 175 U. S., 211.

It was decided in United States v. E. C. Knight Company that the act did not apply to "monopolies in manufacture even of a necessary of life," but to monopolies in restraint of interstate or international trade or commerce."

The Chief Justice remarked in that case:

"What the law struck at was combinations, contracts, and conspiracies to monopolize trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations; but the contracts and acts of defendants related exclusively to the acquisition of the Philadelphia refineries and the business of sugar refining in Pennsylvania, and bore no direct relation to commerce between the several States or with foreign nations."

In this suit the Government neglected to secure evidence of a restraint of interstate commerce, and consequently failed.

In the United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association it was held:

That the antitrust act applied to railroad companies.

That the true meaning and intent of the statute was that it should apply, and did apply, to "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States," irrespective of whether the contract, combination, etc., was in reasonable or unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce.

"While the statute prohibits all combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, the limitation is not confined to that form alone. All combinations which are in restraint of trade or commerce are prohibited, whether in the form of trusts or in any other form whatever. We think, after a careful examination, that the statute covers, and was intended to cover, common carriers by railroad." (326.)

"We are of opinion that the language used in the title refers to and includes, and was intended to include, those restraints and monopolies which are made unlawful in the body of the statute." (327.)

"Contracts in restraint of trade have been known and spoken of for hundreds of years, both in England and in this country, and the term includes all kinds of those restraints which, in fact, restrain or may restrain trade." (328.)

"When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every combination or contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, etc., the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone, which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language, and no exception or limitation can be added without placing in the act that which has been omitted by Congress." (328.)

"Why should not a railroad company be included in general legislation aimed at the prevention of that kind of agreement, made in restraint of trade, which may exist in all companies, which is substantially of the same nature wherever found, and which tends very much toward the same results, whether put in practice by a trading and manufacturing or by a railroad company." (322.)

"It is entirely appropriate, generally, to subject corporations or persons engaged in trading or manufacturing to different rules from those applicable to railroads in their transportation business, but when the evil to be remedied is similar in both kinds of corporations, such as contracts which are unquestionably in restraint of trade, we see no reason why similar rules should not be promulgated in regard to both, and both be covered in the same statute by general language sufficiently broad to include them both." (324.)

In The United States v. The Joint Traffic Association, it was held:

That the differences between the provisions contained in the Trans-Missouri and Joint Traffic agreements were not of a material and fundamental nature; and that the decision in the former case was a precedent for the latter. That the act was constitutional. That the decision of the Trans-Missouri case was not erroneous.

In Hopkins et al. v. The United States it was held:

That certain rules and regulations of a live-stock exchange "are not agreements affecting interstate commerce within the meaning of the antitrust law, having no direct or necessary relation to such commerce."

It appears from this decision that the members after they entered into such association "still continued their individual business in full competition with each other and that the association itself, as an association, does no business whatever."

Justice Peckham here remarked:

"The contract condemned by the statute is one whose direct and immediate effect is a restraint upon that kind of trade or commerce which is interstate.

"There must be some direct and immediate effect upon interstate commerce in order to come within the act."

In Anderson et al. v. United States it was held:

"That an association of dealers who buy and sell cattle in competition with each other in a particular market, where it is open to all similar dealers, and where no attempt is made to control prices or the number of cattle bought, nor in any manner to prevent full competition between its members, is not in violation of the antitrust act, although the members are engaged in interstate commerce."

In Addyston Pipe and Steel Company v. United States it was held:

"That a combination and conspiracy among six companies in regard to the manufacture and sale of cast-iron pipe, by which they agreed that there should be no competition between themselves in some 36 States and Territories and by which prices were to be fixed for each contract by the association, was in violation of antitrust act."

From these decisions it is apparent—

That any agreement (whether contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy) in direct restraint of trade or commerce among the several States is illegal.

[a] Statement of facts under oath now on file in the office of the Attorney-General support these charges.

That the act is not restricted to any particular subject-matter of the buying or selling or trade or commerce among the several States.

That, further, the act is not limited in its application to any particular persons, natural or artificial, who may enter into any agreement to restrain trade or commerce among the several States.

The decision of the court of appeals for the fifth circuit in United States v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Company (54 U. S. App., 723) is especially noteworthy in positively disclosing that the scope of the antitrust act is not restricted to contracts, combinations, or conspiracies to restrain the transportation or delivery of the corpus (iron pipe) from one State to another, but extends to contracts, combinations, etc., in restraint of negotiations and sales which precede delivery of the corpus across State lines (or not). Sections 4 and 5 of the act confer jurisdiction over and power of reaching persons, companies, and corporations who have entered into agreements or combinations to hinder, interrupt, restrain, or in any way prevent full, free, and unrestricted negotiations or sales preliminary to the delivery of the corpus.

Section 6 reaches the corpus when it is in process of transportation, provided the corpus is of such a character or nature that it can be seized.

It is worth while here to observe that by the construction of the antitrust act in the Trans-Missouri and joint traffic cases it is not necessary to prove that an agreement actually restrains trade in practice or in operation to render it violative of the act. The defense of the joint traffic case attempted to show the opposite, and instanced in support of its view a State statute of New York (1830), and cited three cases tried under the act, to wit, People v. Fisher, 14 Wend., 9; Hooker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio, 347; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434.

Under section 4, moreover, courts of equity have jurisdiction and power to issue injunctions for the purpose of and which may result in restraining the commission of crime. (United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association; United States v. Joint Traffic Association; Ellenbecker v. Plymouth County, 134 U. S., 31; United States v. Alger, 62 F. R., 824; United States v. Elliott, 64 F. R., 27; United States v. Debs, 64 F. R., 724.) In fact, this act seems to revive, in a measure, the ancient criminal jurisdiction of the court of chancery. (See Spence's Equity Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery, Vol. I, page 684.)

PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS ARE PROPERTY AND FORM THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF TRADE OR COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

(I) Patents are property.

"An invention secured by patent is property, and as much entitled to protection as other property." (Cammemyer v. Newton, 94 U. S., 225.)

"Patents when rightfully issued are property, and are surrounded by the same rights and sanctions which attend all other property." (Densmore v. Scofield, 102 U. S., 375.)

"By the laws of the United States the rights of a party under a patent are his private property." (Brown v. Duchesne, 19 Howard, 197.)

"The Government has no more power to appropriate a man's property invested in a patent than it has to take his property invested in real estate." (Solomon v. United States, 137 U. S., 346.)

"The power, therefore, to issue a patent for an invention and the authority to issue an instrument for a grant of land emanate from the same source, and * * * are of the same nature, character, and validity." (United States v. A. B. T. Co., 128 U. S., 358-359.)

Robinson on Patents, section 752 et seq.

The distinction between a patent for an invention and the physical thing, as machine, article of manufacture, etc., which embodies the invention set forth in the patent, should not be overlooked.

In Webber v. Virginia (103 U. S., 349) the court clearly distinguished between "the right to an invention or discovery—the incorporeal right—which the State can not interfere with," and the "tangible property," which is subject to the tax laws of the State.

"The purchase of an implement or machine for the purpose of using it in the ordinary pursuits of life stands on different ground from the purchase of the right of making and using the article." (Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 Howard, 439.)

"There is manifest distinction between the right of property in the patent, which carries with it the power on the part of the patentee to assign it, and the right to sell the property resulting from the invention or patent." (11 Bush., 311 Ky. See also Welch v. Phelps, 14 Nebr., 134, where many cases are cited. Robinson on Patents, section 46, note 4, and section 1242.)

(II) Patents are not, properly speaking, monopolies.

Inventions were not recognized as property at common law. The Crown undertook to secure the exclusive right by patent, the same instrument as was used to create a monopoly. Thus the English courts fell into the habit of calling a patent a monopoly—one allowed and not forbidden by the statute of 21 James I. The unreflecting confounded and still confound the word and the thing.

"Now, patents (for inventions) are not monopolies, as the counsel have well said, because a monopoly is that which segregates that which was common before and gives it to one person or to a class for use and profit." (Singer v. Walmsley, 1 Fish., 363; Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall., 516.)

(III) Patents form the subject-matter of trade or commerce among the several States.

Section 4898, Revised Statutes of the United States, reads:

"Every patent or any interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing, and the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may in like manner grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States."

A judgment debtor may be compelled to execute and deliver an assignment of an interest in a patent to a receiver. (Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S., 126.)

If the patentee complies with the laws of Congress on the subject, he has the right to go into the open market anywhere within the United States and sell his property. (Justice Davis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss., 309.)

Property can not be defined without enumerating seizure, use, and alienation. (Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y., 396, where the entire subject is exhaustively discussed.)

See also section 5046, Revised Statutes of the United States.

CONTRACTS, COMBINATIONS, OR CONSPIRACIES TO LOWER PRICES IN NO WISE DIFFER IN CHARACTER FROM SIMILAR CONTRACTS, ETC., TO RAISE PRICES WHEN THE PURPOSE IS THE SAME.

Lieber, in his Political Ethics, volume 2, book 4, chapter 37, has briefly and intelligently discussed this subject.

See also Commonwealth v. Carlyle (Br. Rep., 36), where it is stated that "a combination of employers to depress the wages of journeymen below what they would be if there were no recurrence to artificial means by either side is criminal."

People v. Fisher (14 Wendell, 1): "Combinations and conferences to enhance or reduce the price of labor or of any articles of trade or commerce are injurious."

Moore v. Bennet (29 N. E., 888): "To stifle or prevent competition, and thereby enhance or diminish prices to a point above or below what they would have been if left to the influence of unrestricted competition," is unlawful.

In United States v. Knight Company (156 U. S.) Chief Justice Fuller, at page 16, remarked:

"Contracts, combinations, or conspiracies to control domestic enterprise in manufacture, agriculture, mining, production in all its forms, or to raise or lower prices or wages, might undoubtedly tend to restrain external as well as domestic trade." * * *

Wharton's Criminal Law, tenth edition (1896), section 1365:

"To prejudice the public or government generally, as, for instance, by unduly elevating or depressing the prices of wages or toll or of any merchantable commodity."

Section 1370:

"To suppress competition at public auction."

(Comm. v. Haines, 15 Phila. Rep., 363; Huntzinger v. Connecticut, 10 Weekly Notes, Pa., 98; Texas Standard Oil Company v. Ardoue, 83 Tex., 650; Journeymen Tailors' Case, 8 Mod., 10; Comm. v. Hunt, 4 Metcalf, 111; The Queen v. Rowlands, 17 Q. Bench, 671; Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 Ellis & B., 47.)

In the statutes of Great Britain and Ireland, Volume I, page 64 (31 Edw. III), is found a law relating to merchants who by covin do abate the price of wools.

In Leiber Assissarum (27 Edw. III, 138) is specified, among other conspiracies to be investigated, that of—

"Merchants who by alliance and covin among themselves in any year put a certain price on wools which are to be sold in the country, so that none of them will buy, or otherwise pass in the purchase of wools beyond the certain price which they themselves have ordained, to the great impoverishment of the people."

(See Statutes at Large, 7 and 8 Victoria (vol. 84), chap. 24, Section IV.)

Senator HOAR, who aided in formulating the antitrust act, gives the following definition of a trust:

"I understand that a trust, technically and legally, means the case of having one or more persons commit to others or to a combination of others their business or the control of their business or the management of some portion of their business, such as the selling portion or the fixing the price or the hiring of labor, with the understanding that these powers are to be exercised by the corporation or combination to whom it is committed in a manner to operate for the benefit of the persons committing to them that power ordinarily by the depression or putting up of prices." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 28, 1897.)

A contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade among the States, which lowers prices of whatever is to be purchased, undoubtedly violates the antitrust act; and further, any contract, combination, or conspiracy to lower prices in the District of Columbia, and thus restrain local trade, violates section 3 of the act.

THE RELATION OF QUASI-PUBLIC CORPORATIONS TO THE ANTITRUST LAW.

The subject is fully discussed in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S.), where numerous authorities are cited and the conclusion reached that:

"The business which the railroads do is of such a public nature that it may well be doubted, to say the least, whether any contract which imposes any restraint upon its business would not be prejudicial to the public interest."

That "while, in the absence of a statute prohibiting them, contracts of private individuals or corporations touching upon restraint in trade must be unreasonable in their nature to be held void, different considerations obtain in the case of public corporations like those of railroads," etc.

See Inter-Ocean Publishing Company v. The Associated Press (184 Ill. Rep., 438) (1900) (Exhibit IX), and also note that the by-laws of the Associated Press—declared to be illegal—are identical in force with several articles of the Eastern Railroad Association constitution.

A railroad corporation performs the function of the State (Olcott v. The Supervisors, 16 Wall., 678), and all its property is a trust fund for the sovereign power which created it. The incidental interests and profits of individuals are accidents, both in theory and in practice (Talcott v. Township of Pine Grove, 1 Flippin, 144) (1872).

In people v. Chicago Gas Trust Company it was said:

"Whatever tends to prevent competition between those engaged in a public employment or business impressed with a public character is opposed to public policy, and therefore unlawful."

The Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 8) empowers Congress to promote the progress of the useful arts by securing, for limited times, to inventors the exclusive right to their discoveries, and the Congress has repeatedly enacted laws to that end.

Patents for inventions are granted under the authority of the Constitution for the promotion of a Federal purpose. (Board of assessors of Brooklyn v. Edison Ill. Co., 156 N. Y., 417, 1898.)

The Congress also passed an act approved March 2, 1893, "to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes."

In a message recommending this legislation, President Harrison said:

"It is a reproach to our civilization that any class of American workmen should, in the pursuit of a useful and necessary vocation, be subjected to peril of life and limb as great as that of a soldier in time of war."

Yet there exist two combinations of railroad corporations, one of them embracing practically all the companies in the 15 Atlantic Coast States and the other 81 corporations, each bound together under a written agreement, entered into voluntarily by each corporation, to "act as a unit" not only in subverting and negativing the laws enacted to promote the progress of the useful arts, but also in delaying and obstructing the enforcement of the act approved March 2, 1893.

The restriction of the introduction of patented inventions by anyone is against public policy and the public interests, and especially reprehensible when practiced by a public corporation, or a combination of 700 public corporations.

Agreements between common carriers, whether by land or by water, whereby a company covenants not to use such inventions and appliances as are discovered or invented from time to time, and are adapted to cheapening, hastening, and rendering safer the transportation of freight and passengers, are against the most obvious public policy. (Wiggins Ferry Company v. Chicago and Alton Railroad, 5 Mo. App., 347.)

In Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Company (28 C. C. App., 83 F. R., 912) the court remarked, in the course of its decision:

"Another object of the conspiracy, which was no less harmful, was to deprive the public at large of the advantages to be derived from the use of an invention."

The common law will not permit individuals or corporations to legally place themselves in a position by contract where they are required to do or not to do a particular thing, when the thing to be done or omitted is in any degree injurious to the public. (W. Va. Trans. Co. v. Ohio R. P. L. Co., 22 W. Va., 617; W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Am. U. P. Co., 65 Ga., 160; Watson v. Harlem and N. Y. Nav. Co., 52 How., Pr. 348. See Ray Contractual Limitations, p. 276; Partial restriction of trade not permissible by corporations; and p. 261, Corporate Combinations to Prevent Fair Competition. Beach, Trust and Monopolies.)

By reason of the influence of the Eastern and Western Railroad Associations innumerable old methods and devices are now in use on railroads which, had competition not been suppressed, would long ago have been cast aside and replaced by improved methods and life and labor saving devices.

FREE COMPETITION IS THE GENERAL PUBLIC POLICY OF THE BODY POLITIC OR NATION.

"Competition, free and unrestricted, is the general rule which governs all the ordinary business pursuits and transactions of life." (United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, quoting Judge Shiras, 166 U. S., 337.)

"The public policy of the Government is to be found in its statutes, and where they have not directly spoken, then in the decisions of the courts and the constant practice of the Government officials; but where the lawmaking power speaks upon a subject, over which it has constitutional power to legislate, public policy in such case is what the statute enacts." (United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 340.)

The entire body of the laws may be subdivided into—

(1) The Constitution, treaties, and statutes of the United States.
(2) The constitutions and statutes of the several States.
(3) The common law as interpreted by the Federal courts.
(4) The common law as interpreted by the State courts.

The first constitutes supreme national law, and the third and fourth subsidiary national law. A United States court, when the law governing a case is common law, follows its own judgment in the interpretation to be placed upon the law, and not the interpretation of a State court, and the State courts thereafter follow such interpretation. In this way the common law has, in fact, acquired the character of a national system and is kept substantially uniform.

To determine the public policy of the nation relative to free competition, it is only necessary to consult (1) the Constitution, treaties, and Federal statutes, and decisions of the United States courts in cases arising under the same; and (2) the decisions of the Federal courts and State courts in cases at common law.

I. The Constitution empowers the Congress only to interfere at all with free competition (other than purely local within a State) in what may properly be called industrial or commercial pursuits. Thus far the coining of money (Article I, section 8, clause 5) and the postal business (clause 7) have been completely monopolized, but in connection with the latter, section 3950, Revised Statutes, requires free competition in making contracts for carrying the mails. The power, under clause 3, to regulate (not monopolize) commerce has been exercised mainly in the direction of preserving freedom of interstate trade and commerce. Note the interstate-commerce law, and in particular section 5, which forbids "pooling" by common carriers, and the antitrust act.

Whatever industrial or commercial enterprises may in the future be conducted on a limited scale or be monopolized by the General Government under the authority of Article I, section 8, clauses 1 and 18, it is a fact that so far the power has for the most part been held in abeyance. The decisions of the United States courts in cases involving the construction of the Constitution or arising under the statutes have ever been in the line of preserving and promoting commercial freedom and free competition.

NOTE.—The Interstate Commerce Commission v. Railway Company (167 U. S., 479), where it was held that the Commission has no power to prescribe traffic rates for common carriers "to evolve as it were out of its own consciousness the satisfactory solution of the difficult problem of just and reasonable rates for all the various roads in the country." United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association; United States v. Joint Traffic Association.

In Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company v. Osborne (52 Fed. Rep.) Justice Brewer said:

"Congress has not attempted to require that tariffs on all roads be uniform, nor has it attempted to place a limit in figures beyond which no company may go in its charges. The laws of business and competition have as yet been deemed sufficient restraint in that direction."

Nearly all States have legislated against the consolidation of competing lines of railroads. In a case arising under a State law (Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway Company, 161 U. S., 646) Justice Brown remarked:

"Whether the consolidation of competing lines will necessarily result in an increase of rates or whether such consolidation has generally resulted in a detriment to the public is beside the question. Whether it has that effect or not, it certainly puts it in the power of the consolidated corporation to give it that effect; in short, puts the public at the mercy of the corporation. There is and has been for the past three hundred years, both in England and in this country, a popular prejudice against monopolies in general, which has found expression in innumerable acts of legislation. We can not say that such prejudice is not well founded. It is a matter on which the legislature is entitled to pass judgment. There are, moreover, thought to be other dangers to the moral sense of the community incident to such aggregations of wealth, which, though indirect, are even more insidious in their influence, and such as has awakened feelings of hostility which have not failed to find expression in legislative acts."

In Van Patten v. Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway (81 F. R., 545) the judge said that "the controlling element in regulating prices, values, and rates in general commercial and manufacturing business of the country" is "self-interest controlled by free competition."

"The fact that Congress has not legislated upon the subject of interstate commerce is equivalent to the declaration that it shall remain free and untrammeled." (Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S., 275; In re Debs, 158 U. S., 564.)

"Again, all the authorities agree that in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its results should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." (United States v. Knight Company, 156 U. S., 16.)

II. The decisions of the Federal and State courts in suits involving the interpretation of the common law have almost without exception condemned all agreements the main objects of which were the restraint or destruction of free competition. Those who before the courts and in the public press have denounced "free competition self-destructive" have been able to support their contentions by about six decisions, to wit:[a] (1) Perkins v. Lyman, 9 Mass., 522 (1813); (2) Kellog v. Larkin, 3 Pinney, 123 (1851); (3) Schrainka v. Scharringhausen, 8 Mo. App., 522 (1880); (4) Leslie v. Lorrilard, 110 N. Y., 519 (1888); (5) Manchester and Lawrence Railroad v. Concord Railroad, 20 Atlantic R., 383 (1890); (6) National Company v. Hospital Company, 45 Minn., 275.

These decisions, however, have but little weight when carefully studied. They are only minor and temporary reverse currents which have lost their way in the general onward flow of the main stream.

[a] Ex parte Koehler, 21 Am. and English Rid. Cas., 57. But pooling is now forbidden by the interstate-commerce act.

Free competition is to fix prices in all cases except where the nature of the business renders it inoperative and creates a "virtual monopoly," and there the "police power" may be exercised (subject, however, to the provisions of the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution) in establishing "reasonable rates" or charges. (Granger cases, 94 U. S.; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 113; Railway Company v. Minnesota, 134 U. S., 418; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S., 466; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S., 517; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schlotter, 110 U. S., 347.)

As confirmatory of the proposition expressed, there may be here introduced the testimony of two eminent jurists:

"The advantages of unrestricted competition are apparent to the public in industrial life all about us, and while in some kinds of business this is sharp, yet selfishness is sufficiently active and sufficiently intelligent to prevent its becoming ruinous." (Judge T. M. Cooley in Railway Review, January 8, 1887.)

"As long as the principle of competition by private contract is recognized by our social philosophy as regulative of industrial relations, the law has done all it can when, as with us, it breaks down the cast of hereditary privileges, sweeps away the law of primogeniture, and establishes that equality of opportunity which secures to every individual all that he can, according to his capacity, achieve and acquire for himself and his without infringing upon the equal right of his neighbor. The law can do no more than, as an impartial judge, keep a free and fair field, clear from all obstruction, and let the winner win." (Justice Matthews in New York Independent, July 10, 1879.)

As a summary of the benefits of free competition see the remarkable article in Lalor's Cyclopedia of Political Science, Vol. I, page 642, written by the eminent economist, Coquelin:

"We would not," it is remarked, "have the reader imagine that in what we have just said our object was to defend industrial or commercial competition against the puerile attacks which have so frequently been made on it. It has always seemed to us as ill-becoming economists to stoop to defend such a principle; it is too entirely inherent in the primary conditions of social life; it is at the same time too great, too elevated, too holy, and in its general application too far above the attempt of the pigmies who threaten it, to need any defense. We do not defend the sun, although it sometimes burns the earth, which it should only illuminate and warm; neither is there any need to defend competition, which is to the industrial world what the sun is to the physical world. Competition was not born in 1789; it was born in the very cradle of human society, which it has led step by step, from its state of primitive barbarity, to the point of civilization which it has now reached."

It may be truthfully stated that where competition is free no person, natural or artificial, can gain an advantage over others except by rendering more effective and efficient service to the community in quality, quantity, or time, or in some of these combined, unless resort be had to force or fraud.

The Eastern Railroad Association has, by its "combined force and power" and by fraud, for more than twenty-five years oppressed and robbed inventors and owners of patents. Since July 2, 1890, it has existed and pursued its iniquity, in violation of the antitrust act. It is unquestionably the duty of the Attorney-General, as directed by section 4 of the act, to instruct the proper district attorney forthwith to file a petition in equity praying that further violations of the law be enjoined and prohibited.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL, INDEPENDENT OF HIS POWER AND DUTY AS SPECIFIED UNDER SECTION 4 OF THE ANTITRUST ACT AND REPRESENTING THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES, HAS AUTHORITY TO AND SHOULD INSTITUTE SUIT IN EQUITY FOR THE PURPOSE OF RESTRAINING THE EASTERN RAILROAD ASSOCIATION.

The United States can assert its prerogative of parens patriæ and enter suit in its own courts in behalf of the public when there is an interference with the exercise of any exclusive power or function granted by the Constitution and over which the Congress by positive enactments has assumed control. (In re Debs, 158 U. S., 599; United States v. American Bell Telephone Company, 159, U. S., 670.)

The legislative branch of the Government vested with power and authority granted by Article I, section 8, paragraph 8, of the Constitution has enacted certain patent laws.

Patent rights are granted under the Federal Constitution and necessarily for the promotion of a Federal purpose. (Grant v. Raymond, 6 Peters, 218, 241; Ames v. Howard, 1 Sumner, 482; Blanchard v Sprague, 3 Sumner, 535.)

In People ex rel Edison Illuminating Company v. The Assessors (156 N.Y.R., 417); the court remarked:

"The next step is that patent rights being created under the Federal Constitution and laws for a Federal purpose, the States are without the right to interfere with them."

A State has no power to obstruct or impose conditions upon or to interfere with the sale of State, county, or town rights or individual licenses under a United States patent. (Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss., 209; Holliday v. Hunt, 70 Ill., 109; Helm v. First National Bank, 43 Ind., 167; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S., 501; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S., 304, etc.)

Regarding an interference with interstate commerce the Supreme Court, in re Debs (158 U. S., 564), expressed itself as follows:

"If a State with its recognized power of sovereignty is impotent to obstruct interstate commerce, can it be that any mere voluntary association of individuals within the limit of that State has a power which the State itself does not possess?"

By parity of reasoning a voluntary association of railroad corporations in 15 States has no lawful authority to erect a "judicial tribunal" for the determination of all questions "respecting patented inventions in any way relating to railroads." (See p. 10.)

The executive branch of the Government must guard the Constitution and enforce the laws. The President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." (Constitution, Article II, section 3.)

By act of Congress certain Executive Departments have been created to aid the President in the performance of his duties and to act by his authority.

The circuit courts, a part of the judicial branch of the Government, have jurisdiction of actions to which the United States is a party (18 U. S. Stat., 470, act March 3, 1875), and can exercise their equity jurisdiction at the suit of the Attorney-General to prohibit acts which interfere with any subject-matter over which Congress, by power granted, has assumed control, and to restrain or annul obstructions interposed by private persons or corporations in the way of the full and free exercise of privileges lawfully granted by said legislative branch of the Government. (In re Debs, 158 U. S., 599; United States v. A. B. T. Co., 128 U. S., 359.)

Justice Brewer, in re Debs, summed up the conclusions of the court in a case involving an interference with interstate commerce by a voluntary association. Substituting for the clauses thereof relating to commerce among the States those relating to the promotion of useful arts by patents, for inventions, the decision reads:

"Summing up our conclusions, we hold that the Government of the United States is one having jurisdiction over every foot of soil within its territory, and acting directly upon each citizen; that while it is a government of enumerated powers, it has within the limits of those powers all the attributes of sovereignty; that to it is committed power 'to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited time to * * * inventors the exclusive right to their * * * discoveries;' 'that the powers thus conferred upon the National Government are not dormant, but have been assumed and put into practical exercise by the legislation of Congress; that in the exercise of those powers it is competent to remove all obstructions,' 'natural or artificial,' to the progress of science and useful arts and to the free exercise by every citizen of the privileges guaranteed under the patent laws; that while it may be competent for the Government (through the executive branch and in the use of the entire executive power of the nation) to forcibly remove all such obstructions, it is equally within its competency to appeal to the civil courts for an inquiry and determination as to the existence and character of any alleged obstructions, and if such are found to exist, or threaten to occur, to invoke the powers of those courts to remove or restrain such obstructions; that the jurisdiction of such courts to interfere in such matters by injunction is one recognized from ancient times and by indubitable authority; that such jurisdiction is not ousted by the fact that the obstructions are accompanied by or consist of acts in themselves violations of the criminal law; that the proceeding by injunction is of a civil character."

And the court further stated that its decision in this case rested upon "broader ground" than the antitrust act.

See the following authorities:

The United States may bring an injunction bill, in the proper circuit court, to protect improvements which she is making under the authority of Congress in navigable waters from injury which will be caused by works of internal improvement within State limits and by State authority. (United States v. City of Duluth et al., 1 Dillon, 469 (1870).)

According to the principles of equity, as recognized in the courts of the United States, a State can obtain relief by a bill in equity filed by the attorney-general of the State. (Coosaw Mining Company v. South Carolina, 144 U. S., 564 (1892), citing United States v. Gear, 3 Howard, 120, and City of Georgetown v. Alexandria Canal Company, 12 Peters, 91.)

When a corporate excess of power tends to the public injury or to defeat public policy, it may be restrained in equity at the suit of the Attorney-General. (Stockton v. Central Railroad Company, 50 N. J. Eq. Rep., 52 (1892).)

"Remedies against corporations—bill by Attorney-General to prevent corporations from entering into agreements and combinations to prevent competition or monopolize trade, or for continuing in, or carrying out, such agreements and combinations." (Note to People v. Milk Exchange, page 485 of American Railroad and Corporation Reports, Volume XI.)

"When the managing body are doing or about to do an ultra vires act of such a nature as to produce public mischief, the Attorney-General, as the representative of the public and of the Government, may maintain an equitable suit for preventive relief." (Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 1093. See also the last paragraph of the decision, United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 290.)

The unlawful agreement relating to patents for inventions entered into by the railroad corporations of the 15 Atlantic coast States under the style of the Eastern Railroad Association and the many unlawful acts of the association in enforcing its unlawful agreement are fully set forth in the foregoing statement and accompanying exhibits.

The Attorney-General should, independent of his duty as designated in the antitrust act, direct the filing of a civil information in equity in the proper United States circuit court praying for an injunction to issue restraining the Eastern Railroad Association and for a dissolution of the unlawful trust combination and conspiracy.

REPORT.

OFFICE OF THE EASTERN RAILROAD ASSOCIATION,
Boston, Mass., March 24, 1879.

To the Members of the Eastern Railroad Association.

GENTLEMEN: In submitting this the twelth annual report, your committee congratulates the members on the continued prosperity of the association. On referring to the reports of the secretary and treasurer herewith, it will be seen, from the details of the business transactions therein set forth, that the association has proved of increased usefulness to its members, while financially its condition is very satisfactory.

Your committee also congratulates the members on the successful results of the litigation assumed by the association on their behalf, as noted in that part of the secretary's report devoted to this the most important branch of the business of the association. In view of the results obtained in this respect, your committee is fully impressed with the conviction that very large sums of money have been saved to the members, and to railroads generally, by the determined and persistent opposition made to what was believed to be "unjust claims for patented inventions." In this regard it must be a matter of great satisfaction to the members to know that no case which has been opposed by the association has yet been declared against them on final adjudication to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Since the last annual meeting several important changes have occurred which call for particular notice.

With much regret your committee accepted the resignation of Messrs. Isaac Hinckley as president, D. L. Harris as secretary, and John B. Winslow as treasurer. The resignation of these gentlemen, who so long and so ably filled their responsible positions, is felt to be a great loss; but we have the satisfaction of knowing that, while unable longer to continue the active duties of their former positions, they still take a deep interest in the welfare of the association, and continue to aid in its administration by their valuable counsel.

We have also to note the resignation of S. M. Whipple, esq., who has heretofore acted as expert and general agent of the association to investigate and report on patent claims and to prepare for defense in contested cases.

Under the new constitution such services require to be performed under supervision of the secretary, and form part of his duties. It is therefore believed that, with the addition to the clerical force of the secretary's office already made, the office of expert and general agent as heretofore existing may be dispensed with. Several important changes have been effected by the amended constitution, which, after due discussion and deliberation, was adopted at the special meeting of the association on the 4th day of December, 1878.

Copies of the amended constitution, and also of the by-laws, were forwarded to the members, and their representatives have doubtless made themselves familiar with the same.

Your committee, however, think it proper here to refer to some of the provisions of the constitution as amended.

Particular attention is called to Article VI, which is designed to regulate the action of all concerned when a claim is made for the use of a patented invention and said claim is submitted to the association for action.

Section 1 of this article makes it the duty of the executive committee to negotiate with an inventor or patentee whose claim it is considered inexpedient to contest; but attention is drawn to the fact that the committee must first be requested to do so by a member. In this respect the section differs from section 3 of Article VII of the old constitution.

Section 2 is substantially the same as section 4 of Article VII of the old constitution; but it will be observed that if a member fails to acknowledge receipt of notice sent by the committee for fifteen days after its date, the terms of settlement proposed shall be considered as accepted by such member.

Attention is also called to section 3 of this article, as by its terms the members, in order to avail themselves of the services of the association for defense, or in settlement of claims, must notify the secretary of any suit or claim brought against them. And if any member has previously declined, or shall subsequently decline, the basis of settlement recommended by the executive committee, the association will not be responsible for any expenses for litigation such member may incur.

Section 4 prohibits any member settling any suit or claim brought against it, after being advised by the secretary that a similar suit or claim is in charge of the association for defense in behalf of any of its members, without the consent of the secretary, indorsed by the president.

This provision of the constitution may appear tyrannical, and it does to a certain extent deprive members of the liberty of individual and independent action in the settlement of claims; but the subject has been well considered, and the rule is believed to be essential to the successful carrying out of the main object of the association, to wit, the protection of its members against unjust claims made for patented inventions.

One member may find it expedient to settle a claim under special inducements; but the money thus paid enables the party making the unjust claim to prosecute other members, which in most cases he would otherwise be unable to do. Again, the weaker members of the association might be unduly influenced in the settlement of such claims when they learned that a more powerful member had found it expedient to settle.

Such methods of influencing the settlement of claims are well known to those engaged in the manipulation of fraudulent patent claims, and, if allowed to prevail, the influence and salutary effect of the association would be destroyed. To obtain the best results, the members of the association must act as a unit, and it is believed that this unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore.

Your committee also think it proper to direct attention to the fact that by the amended constitution the duties and responsibilities of the secretary's office have been increased. (See section 2, Article V.) One of the objects sought to be attained by extending the duties of the secretary so as to include the management of litigated cases was economy. Heretofore the executive committee, as a matter of necessity, had to employ counsel whenever suits were brought against any of the members and pay whatever bills were presented without full knowledge of the actual services rendered. As a remedy for this unsatisfactory state of affairs it was thought advisable to employ as secretary an attorney having experience in the practice of the patent law and who could, if necessary, practice in any of the United States courts having jurisdiction in patent cases. For particulars respecting the present method of carrying on the business of the association we refer to the accompanying report of the secretary.

On referring to said report it will also be found that the secretary is prepared to furnish information respecting several subjects not specially inquired of, but of general interest to the members, such as the early histories of the "electric telegraph," "power brakes," "sleeping cars," etc.; but as the regular duties of his office have proved onerous, it is not to be expected that he can give much attention to the collection of such general information. It is therefore suggested that when anything of interest in this connection comes to the knowledge of any members the same be communicated to the secretary, so that, under the direction of your committee, he may be enabled to distribute such information to the other members.

We also call attention to the suggestions of the secretary as to the formation of a scientific library by voluntary donations of spare books by the members, to which end your committee have appropriated a limited amount to secure a complete set of the drawings of patents relating to railroads and such reports on patent cases as will materially aid in carrying out the objects of the association, as well as to the importance of collecting models with a view to the formation of a museum of inventions. Your attention is particularly called to the means suggested to prevent the grant of fraudulent patents.

Recent developments show that our members can not be too careful, when taking a license, to see that the language of the agreement or license affords them proper protection in the use of the patented invention for which the license is given; and in this connection the following suggestions may be acceptable:

1. Be sure that the party who gives the license has a legal title to the patent. This can be ascertained by making application to the Commissioner of Patents for a certified abstract of the assignments of the particular patent for which the license is to be given.

2. Be sure that the license covers the right to use the invention, any improvements thereon which the inventor may have made and patented, or for which patents may hereafter be obtained by the inventor or his assignees.

3. Be sure that the license covers the right to use the patented device, not only on your own roads, but on any roads and branches which may be leased, or otherwise connected therewith, during the life of the patent or patents.

4. Be sure that the license covers the right to use the patented device during the entire period for which letters patent are or may be granted or extended, including any reissue of the same.

Attention is respectfully called to the resolutions adopted at the meeting of your committee December 4, 1878, a printed copy of which was sent to the members at that time. Said resolutions are to the effect that the association can not, under the constitution, undertake to defend the members against claims for infringement of letters patent until said claims have been examined and reported on by the executive committee; so that when suits are brought previous to such examination and report the expenses incurred in defending the suit must be borne by the individual members sued, unless said suit, upon examination, be accepted by the executive committee, in which case all expenses will be assumed by the association.

This does not prohibit the secretary from giving all the information on the subject at issue which may be in his possession, or from rendering aid in the proper defense of such suit prior to the action of your committee. Such services are at all times available to the members, but anything that may be done or any expense that may be incurred is subject to the approval of the executive committee.

On referring to the report of the treasurer it will be found that the account up to December 31, 1878, stands as follows:

Balance from preceding year	$17,958.44
Collections under assessments	17,819.85
Collection of interest	460.00
Total	36,238.29
Less expenditures	15,678.21
Balance	20,560.08

Respectfully submitted.
By order of the executive committee.

EXHIBIT E.

Constitution and by-laws of the Eastern Railroad Association, now in force.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

This association shall be called "The Eastern Railroad Association." While having for its general purpose the promotion of the railway interests, its leading object shall be the protection of its members against unjust claims made for patented inventions.

ARTICLE II.

This association shall be composed of railroad companies of New England and any others, at the discretion of the executive committee, subscribing to the articles and contributing to the expenses of the association. Each company to be represented by a duly authorized person; but no railroad company whose earnings are mainly derived from the transportation of passengers upon an elevated railroad within the limits of a city shall be admitted as a member of the association, except upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the executive committee.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The affairs of the association shall be managed by an executive committee of nine members, who shall be elected every year at the annual meeting of the association. They shall submit at each annual meeting of the association a report of the operations of the past year and of its financial condition, and any member of that committee ceasing to be the representative of the company for which he is appointed shall cease to be a member of said committee; and in all cases where a member of the executive committee is absent from two consecutive stated meetings of said committee, unless such absence is caused by sickness or absence from the country, it shall be equivalent to a resignation of said member, and it shall be the duty of the executive committee to fill the vacancy thus created at the next stated meeting following.

SEC. 2. Said committee shall organize by the election of a president, vice-president, general counsel, secretary and treasurer (the president, vice-president, and treasurer to be selected from its own members), who shall also be president, vice-president, general counsel, secretary and treasurer of the association. A majority shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. They shall also appoint such standing committees as they may deem requisite.

SEC. 3. Said committee shall provide a suitable place for the general office of the association, where all models, books, papers, and documents may be deposited for safe-keeping.

SEC. 4. Said committee shall have power to elect such other officers and employees, and appoint such legal counsel, as may be necessary for the interests of the association, and fix salaries and compensation, and prescribe the duties of all officers, agents, and employees; shall fill vacancies in its membership, and make by-laws for its own government.

SEC. 5. Meetings of the executive committee may be called at any time by the president, or shall be when requested by any two members of the committee.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. The annual meeting of the association for the election of the executive committee and for the transaction of other business shall be held on the second Wednesday in May, at such hour and place as may be designated by the executive committee, and the fiscal year of the association shall terminate on the 31st of December.

SEC. 2. Special meetings of the association shall be called by the president upon the request of two members of the executive committee, or at the written request of the representatives of not less than five companies. Notice of any meeting of the association shall be given by a written or printed notice directed to each member, and deposited in the post-office at least ten days prior to the day of such meeting.

SEC. 3. The representatives of ten companies shall constitute a quorum at all meetings of this association. Each company shall be entitled to one vote.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. Whenever, in the opinion of the executive committee, a patent submitted for examination by any member is valid, or whenever it is deemed inexpedient to contest any claim made upon a member of the association for the use of a patented invention, it shall be the duty of said committee, at the request of any of the associate members, to negotiate either for the use of said patent or for a settlement of the claim preferred, and, when effected, to report the same to each associate member for acceptance.

SEC. 2. If any member declines accepting the basis of settlement so offered (and a failure to acknowledge receipt of said notice for fifteen days after its date shall be deemed an assent to the terms thereof), the association shall not be responsible for the defense of any suit or for the expenses of any litigation against that company, and growing out of that case, incurred subsequent to date of said notice.

SEC. 3. Whenever a suit is brought against any member of the association for infringing upon a patent reported upon as invalid, or whenever a claim is made against any member for the use of a patent reported upon as valid, and for which a basis of settlement has been agreed upon as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of that member to make a report of such suit or claim to the secretary, and thereafter the said committee shall manage the same at the expense of the association, provided the member so reporting has not previously declined or shall not subsequently decline such basis of settlement as has been or may be recommended by the executive committee.

SEC. 4. Members of the association shall not settle any suit or claim against them after being advised by the general counsel that a similar suit or claim is in charge of the association for defense in behalf of any of its members without the consent of the general counsel, indorsed by the president.

SEC. 5. Whenever the executive committee shall adopt a report relating to a patent, and shall not deem it for the best interests of the association to assume or continue the expenses of litigation growing out of such report, it may at its discretion so notify the member to whom such report is made, and the association shall not hereafter be at any legal or other expense on account thereof; but said committee may compromise and settle the claim, or purchase a license for such member at the expense of the association: Provided, That in the opinion of said committee such settlement or purchase can be effected at less expense to the association than the cost of carrying on the litigation in behalf of such member.

ARTICLE VI.

Any member willfully violating these articles may be stricken from the roll of membership by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any annual or special meeting, provided due notice of such proposed action shall be given in the call of said meeting.

ARTICLE VII.

The president of the executive committee shall confer with the officers of similar railroad associations in the United States in relation to the settlement of patent claims and the trial of patent cases, and said committee may, if they deem it advisable, contribute from the funds of the association to aid in the defense of any patent case the issue of which involves the interests of the members of the association.

ARTICLE VIII.

The executive committee shall have the power, and it shall be their duty from time to time, as often as they judge the interests of the association require, to make assessments upon members of the association, one-half, as nearly as practicable, in proportion to their gross receipts for the fiscal year preceding the making of the assessment, and one-half in proportion to the length of their roads, for any expenses already incurred or hereafter to be incurred, which, in the opinion of the committee, should be borne by this association. If any company shall neglect to make the proper returns called for by the treasurer after assessment is made, or neglect to pay the treasurer the sum assessed upon it before the 31st day of December thereafter occurring, it shall be deemed to be in default and shall not be entitled to the privileges of membership, and if it shall fail to pay the sum assessed upon it within three months after notice of default from the treasurer, it shall thereupon cease to be a member of the association.

ARTICLE IX.

Any company may withdraw from this association by giving notice in writing to the secretary, provided such company shall, nevertheless, be liable for its proportion of the expenses of the association for the fiscal year ending December 31 next ensuing.

ARTICLE X.

This constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any regular or special meeting, provided due notice of said proposed alteration or amendment shall have been given in notice for said meeting.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.

The annual meeting of the association and the election of an executive committee shall be held in the city of New York, and the stated meetings of the executive committee shall be held on the second Thursday of the months of March, September, and December and on the second Wednesday of the month of May in each year, at such place and hour as the committee may from time to time designate. Special meetings of the executive committee shall be called in the same manner as provided in the constitution for the meetings of the association.

ARTICLE II.

The general office of the association shall be located, until further action by this commitee, at Washington, D. C.

ARTICLE III.

The executive committee shall, at its first meeting after election, organize by election from its own number a president, vice-president, and treasurer; a secretary and general counsel, not members of the committee, and also a finance committee, to be composed of three members of the executive committee. All elective officers shall serve for the ensuing year, or until their successors be elected.

ARTICLE IV.

Five members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, which shall be in the following order:

1. Minutes of the last meeting read.
2. Report of treasurer.
3. List of applications for membership made since last meeting.
4. Report of general counsel.
5. Other business.
6. Reports on patents, etc.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. It shall be the duty of the president or vice-president to preside at all meetings of the association. In the absence of the president or vice-president, a president pro tem. may be appointed. The presiding officer shall name or appoint all special committees, unless otherwise ordered by the association, and the president shall be ex officio a member of all committees.

SEC. 2. The vice-president, when called upon, shall assist the president in the performance of his duties, and during the absence or at the request of the president shall officiate in his place.

SEC. 3. The general counsel shall give his time exclusively to the service of the association, and receive therefor such salary as the executive committee may fix. He shall make all required examinations and reports as to scope and validity of letters patent and questions of infringement of same, and prepare cases for defense before the courts. He shall answer all inquiries from members of the association relative to patent matters, and furnish them with written information regarding patents or patent claims that may be in the possession of the executive committee. He shall keep the minutes of the meetings of the association and of the executive committee; shall have charge of the office, models, archives, and property not pertaining to the investments or finances of the association, and perform such other duties as the executive committee may direct.

SEC. 4. The secretary shall give his time exclusively to the service of the association, and receive therefor such salary as the executive committee may fix. He shall keep the books of the association, excepting those in charge of the treasurer; shall notify the members and the executive committee of all meetings of their respective bodies. He shall have charge of the rooms of the office building in the city of Washington, D. C., not occupied by the association, rent same, collect the rents, and account to the treasurer therefor. He shall assist the general counsel, and perform such duties as may be designated by him, and, in the absence of the general counsel he shall take charge of the office, models, archives, and property not belonging to the finances of the association, and perform such other duties as the executive committee may direct.

SEC. 5. The treasurer shall collect all assessments as made by the executive committee, and disburse all the moneys of the association, under the direction of the executive committee. He shall keep a regular set of books containing the accounts of the association, and of all the funds that may pass through his hands, and keep a separate account as treasurer at such bank or banks as the executive committee may approve. He shall make report at each stated meeting of the executive committee of his receipts and disbursements in such form as the said committee may direct, and at the stated meeting in March shall submit a general statement of the financial condition of the association, and a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures of the past fiscal year, duly audited by the finance committee. All payments shall be made by orders of the treasurer, audited by the secretary, and approved by the president.

ARTICLE VI.

No alteration or amendment shall be made in these by-laws until presented at a stated meeting and adopted at a subsequent meeting by a majority of the whole committee.

STANDING RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed that in making reports to members, as directed by section 3, article 5, of the by-laws, previous to being submitted to the executive committee, he append thereto a printed notice to the effect that said reports are of no effect or binding upon the association until approved by the executive committee.

Adopted March 12, 1879.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to notify all railroad companies, members of this association, that hereafter all applications from such company asking for information from the association in regard to any patent device must be made through the president, vice-president, general manager, or superintendent of such company, or such officer or agent of said company as may be thereto specially authorized by resolution of the board of directors of said company.

Adopted March 10, 1880.

Resolved, That the executive committee be authorized to fix upon and establish an entrance fee that shall be chargeable to all companies desiring to connect themselves with the Eastern Railroad Association after this date, said entrance fee being intended to cover the proportional interest in funds of the association now invested.

Adopted at annual meeting, May 11, 1881.

Resolved, That it is not thought advisable for the association to introduce or, as an association, advocate legislation in Congress; but its members should promote any bill that may be offered to amend the patent laws so as to require the patentee or owner of a patent to give notice of any claim for infringement, and to commence suit thereon within a reasonable time after such notice is given.

Adopted December 14, 1881.

Resolved, That this association will, through its general counsel, furnish to any of its members any information it may be able to give in relation to the legal construction, effect, and bearing of any license or assignment made by the inventor or owner of any patent to one of the members; but, inasmuch as such licenses and assignments have been drawn or accepted by the officers or counsel of such members without action by or consultation with this association, the association can not properly take charge of or assume the expense of any litigation growing out of or connected with such licenses or assignments.

Adopted December 15, 1881.

Resolved, That the secretary notify all persons applying to the association for the privilege of making oral argument before the executive committee relating to patents that such privilege can not be granted, but that the executive committee will receive and consider any argument in writing that may be presented to it.

Adopted December 13, 1883.

Resolved, That in all future patent suits against members of this association the secretary be, and is hereby, instructed to require from the plaintiffs bonds or security for the costs, when such security can be legally demanded.

Adopted March 13, 1884.

In the matter of reports called for by members respecting inventions for which applications for patents are pending in the Patent Office,

On motion, it was—

Voted, That the general counsel be directed to notify the members making such inquiries that the association can not, consistently with its constitution and by-laws, give any advice or express any opinion in regard to any invention for which application for letters patent has been made and is pending in the Patent Office.

Adopted May 12, 1886.

Resolved, That the office of general counsel and secretary, created by resolution adopted May 12, 1880, be discontinued, and that the offices of a general counsel and a secretary be created in accordance with amendments to by-laws.

EXHIBIT F.

The following extracts from the technical journals represent the consensus of public opinion regarding the character of said Eastern Railroad Association, to wit:

[From the Railroad Car Journal, December, 1892.]

RIGHTS OF PATENTEES AND INVENTORS.

We have several times previously given space in this journal to the publication of the circumstances and proceedings in the suit of W. K. Tubman against the Watson Manufacturing Company for infringement of his patent. We have given unusual prominence to the case for the reason that it has brought up a much wider issue than the mere damage sustained by the owner of the patent—an issue of vital interest to inventors or owners of patented railroad appliances.

It would appear from the testimony that Tubman in his suit encounters a more formidable opponent than the actual defendants. He claims that the Eastern Railroad Association is maintaining the defense with the object of defeating his claim, and that with such an organization in existence, pursuing the methods it does, a poor inventor can not possibly hope to maintain his rights to a patented device which the association chooses to advise its members to use without the payment of royalty. The testimony, which we print in another column, of Mr. Andrew McCallum, the counsel of the association, can not be regarded as in any way rebutting the serious charges made against the association by Tubman. We quite fail to see why the proceedings of the Eastern Railroad Association should not be made public. The owner of a patent should certainly be entitled to learn the substance of the association's report to its members upon his invention; for railroads are becoming notorious by reason of the frequency with which they appropriate the ideas of inventors without compensation. The testimony in Tubman's case will be read with interest by inventors or owners of patents on railroad devices.

[From the World's Progress, March, 1892.]

APPROPRIATING PATENTS.

In another article in this issue we have discussed briefly the exercise of a practically assumed right by the Government to appropriate to its own use, without compensation, any patented article or invention it may please to want. That form of appropriation will have attention, and then will be duly regulated by law, just as soon as the abuse becomes so common as to produce public outcry. The sole reason why this law has not been made is that the number of those harmed is comparatively small. So far as the need in equity and justice for such a law is concerned, it seems to be commonly admitted that it is now urgent.

But there is another form of this appropriation which is more common, and consequently more aggravating. It is where a rich and powerful corporation deliberately takes and uses a patented device or invention and then says, coolly and impudently, to the patentee: "Help yourself if you can." Then the issue so made is almost invariably governed by the length of the purse, and in the end the single-handed inventor finds himself outwinded by the long delays he can not prevent and the large expenses he is forced to pay to carry on his suit. We have now in mind a particular form of this organization that is accustomed to use any patented invention in the line of its business that it pleases to appropriate. We refer to the railroad associations, of which there is one at the East and one at the West. Ostensibly these associations are for self-protection against causeless litigation and the annoyance of importunate and unreasonable inventors. So far as this protective idea goes, the motive of these associations is very proper; but when these associations go further and assume the right to appropriate any invention they wish to use, and thus force the inventor into the courts to endeavor to get redress, these associations are all wrong.

The consequence is that the single-handed inventor rarely wins in any such suit. It must be said, in justice to these associations, that they allege that they always pay for the use of any and all really new and valuable improvements. But this assertion is hotly denied by the body of inventors who have, as they assert, been ruthlessly defrauded of their rights.

It seems to us that some law can be framed that will secure justice to both parties; that, on the one hand, will enable the inventor to contest his rights with some show of a fair trial, and, on the other, protect the parties who do not wish to be causelessly annoyed by every inventor who is willing, properly or improperly, to invoke the aid of the law. Under the new patent law in Germany, a wanton infringement is made a criminal act. We do not say this is the way to deal in this country with the matter, but it is one way, and the existence of that law proves that the abuse of which we now write has already begun to attract deliberate attention. The attention of the House Committee on Patents has been called to the matter and an earnest attempt made to secure some legislation by Congress to prevent the alleged abuses.

[From the Scientific American, March 12, 1892.]

Legislation is certainly needed to put a stop to combinations formed like the Eastern Association for the express purpose of nullifying the privileges granted to inventors by Congress.

PROPERTY RIGHTS IN PATENTS.

A decision was rendered last month by the United States Court of Appeals in a suit brought by the Edison Electric Light Company against the United States Electric Light Company that is of interest to many people who are not in any way concerned in proprietary rights in electrical appliances. Edison was the original inventor of the incandescent lamp, where light is produced by the electric current passing through a resisting medium inclosed in a vacuum. Several parties imitated this invention, and have been selling incandescent lamps which seemed to avoid the Edison patents. The court has now decided that every known form of incandescent lamp, and every possible form of this lamp, infringes the Edison patents.

This means practically that when an inventor secures a foundation patent for any device, the imitations which obtain the same results by different mechanical arrangements are infringements. The decision is a little more emphatic than several others previously made of the same tenor. The well-known decision on the Richardson safety-valve patents was substantially the same as that now rendered concerning electric lights.

This decision ought to be of direct interest to many railroad companies, for there is no class using mechanical appliances more given to patronizing articles that are notoriously pirated imitations of patents. The great variety of functions demanded of railway machinery presents an unparalleled field for inventive genius, and it is industriously cultivated. But no sooner does an inventor produce an appliance or improvement which promises to be in demand than there is a host of imitators doing their best to produce something which will do the same functions and avoid infringing the original patent. The principal work done by the mechanical engineers employed by some railroad companies is the designing of forms of patented articles which shall perform the functions of the original without incurring the liability to pay royalty. This is a small, mean business, and is nothing more than dishonesty; for it is stealing a man's ideas and dressing them so that their identity may be disguised.

The plain decisions of the courts ought to discourage this sort of industry. The only reason why railroad companies are not paying royalties on numerous patents that they are using illegitimately is the delay and expense that must be incurred in lawsuits for infringements of patents. Law's delays are so notoriously tedious in patent suits that those who have been injured patiently suffer wrong rather than engage in the long and expensive fight. We have recently heard of a movement among men of means to purchase the orignals of patents that have been largely imitated by railroad companies. Should this be done, some of the companies are likely to have to pay damages that will put the money paid to settle the Tanner brake suits far into the shade.[a]

That in the years 1877 and 1878 the said Eastern Railroad Association, in combination with a similar association in the West, endeavored to secure legislation in Congress which would enable the members of the association to appropriate patented inventions without being compelled to pay for them. The following selections from "Arguments before the Committees on Patents, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, Miscellaneous Document No. 50," represent the views of many reputable patent attorneys and others regarding the railroad combination to appropriate patent property, to wit:

W. C. Dodge, esq., Washington, D. C.:

"On the part of the railroads it is a demand that they shall be allowed to appropriate any invention they please, and then to have the law so changed as practically to prevent their being compelled to pay for them" (p. 69).

"Or, which of these public-spirited railroad companies, now asking you to change the patent laws for their special benefit, would invest their capital in building their roads if, when built, the dividends were to go into other pockets than their own?" (p. 70).

"That resolution was introduced by a member whose firm had been made to pay quite an amount in damages for the use of a patented invention which they had appropriated without leave or license of the owner; and it is a striking coincidence that this movement to change our laws was inaugurated by the railroad combination, who, as they tell you, have in like manner been mulcted in heavy damages for a similar appropriation of patented inventions, and which the owners would gladly have sold or licensed them to use for far less than the sum awarded by the courts. As proof of this it is stated that the owner of the swage block patent, for the use of which these companies complain they have been made to pay an exorbitant price—over $100,000—offered to let the same company have the use of his patent for its whole term for $1,000, which they agreed to pay, but when the papers were to be executed the company insisted on the party taking pay in the bonds of the company, worth only 90 cents on the dollar, and because the owner of the patent refused to be thus swindled out of one-tenth of the price agreed upon they refused to complete the arrangement, and told him they would use it in spite of him, and he might help himself if he could. I submit that it does not become parties who have acted thus to now come here crying like a whipped schoolboy and ask Congress to change the law simply to relieve them from the consequences of their own willful violation of the law" (p. 72).

J. J. Storrow, esq., counsel for the Bell Telephone Company:

"There will be cases undoubtedly where defendants will willfully infringe patents. Nay, there will be cases where rich defendants will band themselves together and say to the patentee unless he will sell his invention to them at a price agreeable to them, that they will drag him for ten years through the courts, at an expense which is a flea-bite to them, but ruinous to him" (p. 135).

W. W. Hubbell:

"These railroad companies infringed a patent beyond all question, and they knew the inventor was poor and could not bring suits all over the United States against these different railroad companies, and they have taken a rule upon him for security of costs, and he, in his inability to furnish it, has been barred and thrown out of court. This was done over here in Baltimore. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company did that to my knowledge, where they infringed a patent" (p. 163). (See standing resolution No. 7 in constitution.)

G. H. Christy, esq., counsel for Westinghouse Air Brake Company:

"I think, further, that it is a dangerous remedy to put into the hands of a wrongdoer, particularly if he is a wealthy party or corporation, and I use the word corporation not in any ill sense, for it is one of the most honest and legitimate ways of carrying on business; but it is especially dangerous to give the power to seventy or eighty wealthy corporations to pounce down on an inventor and snatch from him all his just rights, as was the case with Goodyear, and reduce him to absolute beggary; and as was the case with Pullman when he was jacking up houses in Chicago; or as with Westinghouse, who was not able to pay me his firs t fee for his first caveat.

"Now, if it is good to put in the handsof an associated power representing such a consolidated amount of wealth, and with the unscrupulous character for which railroads are noted (I speak of it only as an entity, and not in regard to its officers)—I say it is a very dangerous thing to put such a grant of power into the hands of such an organization in order that they may sit down on and squelch an inventor without any money to fight them. Now, then, if I have got seventy or eighty railroad companies at the back of me with their capital and their employees, it is a very singular circumstance if I can not cook up some testimony among them.[a] I do not say that Brother Raymond would, but I do not know who his successor might be. It is putting a dangerous remedy in the hands of a most dangerous class—the wealthy part of our country, who want to use an invention without paying for it" (pp. 254, 255).

Hon. Elisha Foote, ex-Commissioner of Patents:

"You might as well do directly what this section does indirectly, and pass an act that every railroad which is not making profits or dividends shall have the privilege of taking any patents they please with impunity; and, if you make the thing entirely consistent and rational, you should also say that they may enter upon anyone's land and cut their ties, and go into rolling mills and take their rails, or any other property they choose to take, and they shall have them without responsibility to anybody.

"Take the case of this Westinghouse brake, which, I understand, the patentee manufactures himself and puts onto cars at a very reasonable price. Now, suppose any of these Chicago railroads, making no money, should think it desirable for them to take and use this brake without paying anything for it. This section would undoubtedly authorize them to do so without any compensation, and they could grab any amount of property with impunity" (p. 413).

"What chance would the poor inventor have against these powerful corporations? None but a very wealthy person could enter into such a controversy. The roads would not need the other provisions of the bill. This would enable them to take and use any patent they please with impunity, and no one would dare to sue them" (p. 415).

"Suppose any of these wealthy corporations should call upon a poor inventor to commence a suit against them, and to encounter a big railroad combination, with all their able and learned counsel in their employ? It would be impracticable; he would have to give up his patent" (p. 418).

Albert H. Walker, esq., author Walker on Patents:

"Now suppose the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company see the wonderful invention, and think that is a good thing, and a good deal cheaper than coal, and say: 'We will proceed to infringe Mr. Vance's patent, and we will fight him ten or fifteen years, if he sues us, with the probable result of his exhausting his means before he gets a decree.' Such a course of defiant infringement is, in many cases, the deliberate purpose of railroad men. It was the avowed practice of H. E. Sargent, the superintendent for many years of the Michigan Central Railroad, and one of the members of the Western Railroad Association. He has avowed it as his universal principle never to pay anything voluntarily to a patentee. He says: 'Whenever our attention is called to a patent of value, we use it, and in a few cases we are made to pay, by plucky inventors; but, in the aggregate, we pay much less than if we took licenses at first.' I admit the railroad companies do not generally avow such a plan of action, but I know they entertain such ideas" (p. 396).

7. That the substance of the following article, which correctly sets forth the character, objects, and methods of the Eastern Railroad Association, was published in the Railway Age in 1891, to wit:

The Eastern Railroad Association should be broken up, because:

1. It is a secret society, with a secret constitution and by-laws, organized, not like most voluntary associations, for charity or mutual assistance in times of sickness, poverty, or distress, nor for moral or intellectual culture, nor for the promotion of science or the arts, nor for the advancement of man's estate, but, judged by its actions for many years, for the spoliation of the property of inventors. It has no charter. It does not report annually to any commonwealth. Its right to exercise its franchises is a usurpation. It is not based upon any contract with the people of any State. It is an irresponsible body. It is organized selfishness.

2. It is a permanent conspiracy, inasmuch as its constitution requires unity of action by all its members in opposing individual patentees, and this whether each member (railroad) is directly interested or not in the particular controversy. It is well-established law that a combination to attain an end, even lawful in itself, constitutes a conspiracy when such combination subjects the individual to its combined and concentrated power.

3. The members of the association intermeddle in what is none of their business. The precepts of international law do not allow a disinterested nation to intermeddle in a contest between two other nations. Our National Government can not intermeddle with the local affairs of a State. The man who interferes with his neighbors' quarrels receives no sympathy if he gets his head broken. Boys in their sports cry: "Hands off!" "Fair play!" The courts have well-defined rules as to when and how interested parties may intervene in suits. But this association will not ask leave to intervene.

4. The association violates section 8, Article VIII, of the Constitution of the

[a] In the Tanner brake suit the railroad associations manufactured evidence which was of such an outrageous character that even the counsel of the Western Association discarded it. A. H. Walker, esq., of Hartford, Conn., author of "Walker on Patents," can give particulars. The Supreme Ruler only knows how much of the testimony in this case was "cooked up."

[a] In 1889 the association "reissued" a patent, with an added drawing, from its office on F street, in Washington. The reissue then was introduced in evidence for the purpose of securing a narrow construction of a patent claim

United States: "To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to * * * inventors the exclusive right to their * * * discoveries."

Mr. W. S. Huntington, in the National Car Builder some time ago, speaking of the Eastern and Western Railroad Associations, remarked: "The inventors are now practically in their power." "Many inventors who had labored to improve railway appliances abandoned the field and exercised their ingenuity in other directions, where there were fewer obstacles."

5. It is a trust; the most powerful and wealthy trust in the United States—the Standard Oil is an infant beside it—more powerful than any that has had being since the enactment of Statute 21, James I, abolishing monopolies. This statute has been called the Magna Charta for British industries, and may equally be called the same for American, inasmuch as it established legitimate competition. "This statute," Hume said, "contained a noble principle and secured to every subject unlimited freedom of action, provided he did no injury to others nor violated statute law." This association closes the market against inventors and owners of patents, and prevents free competition.

6. It interferes with the administration of justice in the courts. Its methods are somewhat as follows: If a railroad wishes to use a patented invention, the matter is referred to the general counsel of the association. He investigates and sees what is most expedient to do. He ascertains whether the owner of the patent is a poor man, without means to bring a suit, or a wealthy and influential citizen; whether it is cheaper to pay a small license fee or to appropriate the invention and fight the owner through the court of last resort. If appropriated and the owner brings suit against the railroad infringer, the entire strength and means of the association are brought to bear to crush him, so as to terrify other patentees from bringing suit for the spoliation of their property, and every member of the association joins in the defense against him, whether using the invention or not. It closes the market against the patentee by the first report on his patent. Its constitution forbids any member paying anything to the owner, because such payment would serve to establish a measure of damages should the owner ultimately win his suit. In one of the association's reports the president exhorts the members to "act as a unit," and says: "This unity of action has been the true cause of our success heretofore." Its general counsel in 1879 boasted that the association had never been compelled to pay anything for infringement of letters patent. The seal of the United States on a patent has no significance in its eyes. The little building 614 F street is bigger than the United States Patent Office.

All suits against any member of the association are defended by its general counsel, who travels on passes while taking evidence and at all other times in defending the suit, and he avails himself of every means within his power per fas per nefas to defeat the suit. Delays, obstructions, manufactured evidence, appeals, and all sorts of trickery are resorted to as occasion demands.

If the complainant is finally successful he can seldom prove "profits" or "damages," and as his patent has generally expired before a final judgment is secured, an injunction will not issue. The complainant has been to great expense and trouble and, after having won his suit, can not collect a cent. It is "more expedient" and cheaper to pay costs than to take licenses in the first instance.[a]

The following boast was made by the association's general counsel, A. McCallum, in closing the thirteenth annual report to the members of the association, to wit: "It appears to be the fact that during the whole period of thirteen years, during which the association has been in existence, no suit defended by it has resulted in a judgment against a member on appeal to the highest court; and that while some claims have been settled after suit was brought, no member (railroad) defended by the association has yet, by process of law, under execution, attachment, or otherwise, been compelled to pay anything on account of infringement of letters patent."

Letters from Whitney, Olney, and Griggs.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1893.

WILLIAM K. TUBMAN, Esq., Baltimore, Md.

SIR: Your petition of August 18 in relation to the Eastern Railroad Association has received careful attention.

The facts stated in your petition, so far as material to the relief asked, are that you are bringing suit in the Federal courts in Connecticut and Pennsylvania, respectively, against two railroad companies for infringement of letters patent for an improvement in railway car windows; that these suits are being defended in the name of the defendant corporations by the Eastern Railroad Association; that one of the objects of this association is to combine all the railroad companies of this part of the country for the purpose of dealing with patentees, it being provided by the constitution of the association that negotiations with patentees should be carried on by the executive committee of the association; that no royalties should be paid, except with the consent of the executive committee, and that all suits for infringements should be defended by the association.

Your claim is that this combination is a violation of the antitrust law of July 2, 1890, and you ask me to direct the United States attorneys for the districts in which the suits are pending immediately "to institute proceedings in equity to restrain the Eastern Railroad Association from continuing in force against yourself the provisions of its constitution above referred to."

The antitrust law provides that every "contract, or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations" is illegal, and that every "person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations" is guilty of a misdemeanor. I do not think that the combination you refer to comes within the purview of the act.

A patentee is the owner of a monopoly of the right for seventeen years to the sole manufacture, use, and sale of the article which he has invented. In this instance the article invented is one that can only be used by railway companies. You are the only producer and they are the only consumers. You allege that all the possible consumers of the article in a certain territory combine against the sole producer for the purpose of preventing its price being raised above the figure which they are willing to pay. It may be that this combination abuses its power, and, as you aver, either reduces the royalty to a grossly inadequate figure or violates the patentee's rights alto gether, relying upon its ability to tire him out in litigation. These evils, however, are not those which the antitrust law was enacted to remedy, and their redress must be found elsewhere. I do not think that a combination of present consumers of a given commodity effects a restraint or a monopoly of trade or commerce within the meaning of the act.

Moreover, I do not perceive that you can not obtain, by proceedings in your own name, whatever remedy, if any, could be afforded by the suit you ask to be brought. It has been the opinion of this Department that the right of a person injured to sue for violation of the act of 1890 is not to be regarded as denied because, by the express terms of the statute, the United States may initiate an equivalent proceeding. General considerations of public policy require that private parties with ample remedies for the redress of their alleged wrongs in their own hands are not to be encouraged to expect Governmental interposition in their behalf. For these reasons the prayer of your petition must be denied.

Respectfully,

EDWARD B. WHITNEY,
Acting Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1893.

WILLIAM K. TUBMAN, Esq.,
Baltimore, Md.

SIR: Your communication of November 27, asking a reconsideration of your petition for the bringing of suit against the Eastern Railroad Association, under the antitrust law act of 1890, has received careful examination. I am unable to perceive, however, that the matter was not properly disposed of by the Acting Attorney-General in his letter of August 23 last.

The remarks of Congressmen quoted by you as to the depression of prices by middlemen in order that they may obtain an undue share of the profit between producer and consumer do not apply to combinations of the consumers themselves to obtain a reduction of prices. You do not refer to any authorities holding such combinations to be illegal in case of purely private sales; nor have I been able to find any.

Nor do I think that my refusal to direct suit in the name of the Government precludes you from relief. I am aware that the late Judge Billings decided last winter in a case in Louisiana that a private person could not sue for relief under section 4 of the act. His opinion, however, contains no reasons for the decision, and it does not appeal to my judgment, and I do not think that his decision alone should be controlling in a matter of so great magnitude. The Department of Justice has but a limited appropriation for maintenance of suits, and it has never been considered that the Attorney-General should commence suit except with the belief that he had a fair prospect of winning it. I do not think that Congress intended to conclude by the Attorney-General's opinion parties believing themselves to be injured.

In your communication you charge that officers of the Eastern Railroad Association are guilty of various acts which are crimes independent of the antitrust law. If you are possessed of evidence which will establish such crimes, it should be submitted to the district attorney for the proper district.

In acting upon your communications it has been assumed that you are the owner of a lawful patent which has been infringed by the railroad companies, although a Federal court has decided that you have no rights in the premises, a decision which might be held to dispose of your application.

Respectfully,

RICHARD OLNEY,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1900.

F. E. STEBBINS, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the matter of the application of William K. Tubman, requesting me to institute proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, commonly know as the antitrust law, against the Eastern Railroad Association, having waited a reasonable time for Hon. J. M. Wilson to appear, I must infer from his failure to appear that he does not care to add anything to the argument you have submitted, and I therefore proceed to dispose of the matter.

The complaint is that a large number of railroad companies have formed this association for the purpose of advising its members with respect to the purchase or use of railway patent rights and of assisting them in the defense of claims for the infringement of such patents. It is urged that patent rights are the subject of interstate commerce and that the association constitutes a combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States.

The same application has been twice made to the Department and twice denied, first by Acting Attorney-General Whitney, in a carefully considered communication under date of August 23, 1893, and afterwards by Attorney-General Olney, in his letter of December 11, 1893.

In addition to the considerations mentioned by them, the following are in point:

A patent right is essentially a monopoly. The patentee is granted the exclusive right, for a term of years, to make, use, or vend the patented article. This right is absolutely within his control. He may omit to use it himself and refuse to permit anybody else to use it. He may permit one person to use it and without assigning any reason refuse to permit another to do so. He may sell the right in parcels, giving one person license to use the patent in one place and another license to use it elsewhere.

[a] The theory of the association regarding patent property is somewhat analogous to that held by the defendant in Campbell Printing Press and Manufacturing Company v. Manhattan Railway Company, 60 O. G., 894, decided March 9, 1892.

Such being the nature of a patent right, may not the association complained of be considered as a reasonable and fair arrangement for the mutual benefit and protection of railroads in transactions relating to patents? Before a railroad company can safely purchase a patent right or use an invention, it must be assured that the patent is valid and its use will not operate as an infringement. So, too, if a claim for infringement is made, the company has a right before paying it to make a full investigation, and may do this individually or through others. In what way does it unlawfully interfere with the rights of the patentee for the railroads to create a board of experts which shall be furnished with all the information they have respecting patents, and to which shall be referred for investigation and report all questions relating to patents? A man who offers a patent for sale does not enter the open field of competition. If his patent is valid there can be no competition.

The patent is a monopoly which no person can lawfully infringe, and which he can refuse to sell at all or sell for what he pleases. There is no competition to fix a reasonable price for patent rights. The patentee may demand a thousand or a million dollars. It is worth what he can get for it. If it is infringed, he has his remedy in the courts. If he makes a claim for damages because of infringement, he can not object to the person or corporation threatened seeking advice and information from any source before paying or resisting it.

Another thing to be considered is, that to provide the safest service and to secure the best results railroads must be built and equipped in a uniform manner throughout the United States. Passengers and employees are alike interested in this, and Congress has recognized the need by requiring automatic couplers and other safeguards on interstate railroads.

For these reasons a patented appliance for use on railroads may be of general concern, in which event one railroad can not safely adopt it without consulting the others. This of itself makes the creation of an association, with a board of experts, to which patents may be referred for investigation and report, of exceptional propriety and benefit.

The application must therefore be denied.

Respectfully,

JOHN W. GRIGGS, Attorney-General.

This letter was written by Solicitor-General Richards and signed by Griggs, who prepared the answer to the bill in equity in the case of United States v. The Northern Securities Company et al.

EXHIBIT I.

OPINION OF WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, MARCH 24, 1902.

A combination of all or a large number of railroads to contest patents on all articles required for railroad use, in which each railroad agrees not to settle with any patentee without the consent of a committee of the combination, nor while any claim is pending against any other member of the combination, and by which the combination agrees to defend all suits against each railroad and to pay the expenses of such defense and pay any judgments which may be recovered, is an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade under the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stats., 209).

The object is to enable the combination to control and fix the prices to be paid as royalties upon all inventions, and does not allow each railroad to make its own settlements with the patentees. It is a conspiracy to get lower prices for what the combination buys, as contradistinguished from a conspiracy to get higher prices for what a combination produces and sells; and both are obnoxious to the law against monopolies.

Patents are property created by express national law. A patented article has attached to it a special value growing out of the patent. Congress having decided that it is for the public good that inventive genius shall be stimulated by patent monopolies, all patents and all patented articles are proper subjects of trade and commerce, and as such are protected by all the laws which protect other merchandise. If it is desirable that they shall exist, it is desirable that there shall be unhindered trade therein, and such trade can not be lawfully lessened by combinations and conspiracies to diminish the value thereof through lawsuits, to fix the prices which shall be paid therefor, and to otherwise prevent free traffic therein.

The railroads can no more combine to fix low prices which they shall pay than an association of patentees can combine to fix high prices which they shall charge.

The fact that the patentees are for a limited period legal monopolists gives no right to the railroads to establish an illegal combination to limit the monopolies. Congress can abolish patents; the railroads can not.

All the above propositions seem clear and not doubtful. The facts in the case of the Eastern Railroad Association are all of record in their own books and reports, and are too plain to need recital. The association is formed expressly for the purpose above supposed, and for no other purpose. To be sure, it is stated that its object is only to resist illegal patents, but that recital does not change the avowed purpose to allow no patents to be settled for by any one member of the association except with the assent of a committee of all the railroads, and to defend any claims against any member and to pay the expenses and the judgment, if any is recovered. The Joint Traffic Association contended that its object was not to fix and maintain unreasonable rates, but only rates which should be reasonable. The subterfuge did not avail with the Supreme Court, and the subterfuge that the open combination of all the railroads to control the settlement for all patents is only intended to apply to illegal patents will be equally worthless.

It is difficult to believe that an illegal combination so plain and evident should have existed during all these thirty years last passed. It can not be doubted that the President and the Attorney-General, when they know the facts, will act with as much promptness and vigor as they have in the case of the Northern Securities Company, where the facts and the law are not so clear and plain as in the present case, because in the first the purpose is not stated in words, while in the latter it is openly and expressly avowed.

The foregoing opinion is given in full view of the letter of Acting Attorney-General E. B. Whitney, of August 23, 1893, and the letter of Attorney-General Olney of December 11, 1893. Those gentlemen were members of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, and, like Attorney-General Judson Harmon, were doubtless influenced in their opinion by their close relations to their President, of whom Mr. William J. Bryan, on March 21, 1902, spoke as follows:

"For four years he stood between the people and reform; for four years he made the White House the rendezvous of cunning and crafty representatives of predatory wealth; for four years the corporations and syndicates controlled his Administration."

Insensibly to themselves, perhaps, Mr. Whitney and Mr. Olney were controlled by surroundings like these, and Messrs. McKenna and Griggs mistakenly refused to reverse the decisions of their predecessors, doubtless overcome by the lingering malaria of the late Administration. But there is no such atmosphere now in the White House or in the Department of Justice. President Roosevelt and Attorney-General Knox are the friends of the people and reform, and not representatives of predatory wealth, and it is impossible that they should not suppress a combination so evidently illegal as that of the Eastern Railroad Association.

WM. E. CHANDLER.

EXHIBIT J.

OPINION OF UNITED STATES SENATOR TURNER.

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1902.

H. B. MARTIN, Esq.,
Secretary Anti-Trust League, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: From the papers submitted to me it appears that the Eastern Railroad Association is a trust formed by several hundred railway companies operating east of the Mississippi River, whereby each company contributes to a fund controlled by trustees, engages to be bound by the action of the trustees, and to do nothing whatever in the matters committed to the said trustees; and under and by virtue of the trust agreement the fund thus created is to be used by the trustees—

First. To investigate concerning the validity and utility of all patents granted for improvements and devices to be used in connection with the operation of the railways.

Second. To defend all suits brought by patentees against railways, members of the trust, for using any such improvements and devices.

Third. To compromise such suits when, in the opinion of the trustees, the patent is valid, provided the sum paid by the way of compromise be not more than it would cost to litigate the suits.

Fourth. When patent rights are found to be both valid and useful, to negotiate and purchase the same for the benefit of the members of the trust, and upon such terms as the trustees may determine.

The companies agree that they will not negotiate or deal with patentees either in the matter of purchase or by way of compromise for illegal use, but that all such negotiations and dealings shall be by the trustees. The effect of the agreement is far-reaching, as a moment's reflection will readily show, upon the value of the property of patentees and upon their ability to vend the same throughout the several States covered by the agreement. The patentees, as to all such States, are reduced to the necessity of dealing with a single purchaser. This purchaser is armed with a large fund to fight in the courts all patents which it can not purchase on its own terms. It is an impudent bully which takes any property that it pleases upon such terms as it pleases, and is armed with a club to beat its victims to death if they decline to submit.

Since the trust is interstate in its scope and operations, has for its object the restraint of trade in patent rights, is created by contract, has taken and maintained the trust form, and is, moreover, a criminal conspiracy at common law, thus presenting all the features denounced by section 1 of the act of July 2, 1890, it necessarily follows that it is illegal if, first, a patent right is property which may be said to enter into and form a part of trade and commerce; and, second, if a combination to lower the value of property entering into interstate commerce is as much "in restraint of trade," within the meaning of the act of 1890, as a combination to raise the value of such property would be.

It does not require either profound consideration or an extended examination of authorities to see that the question of correctness of both the foregoing subjunctive propositions must be answered in the affirmative.

First. A patent right is property. It is created by statute, and the freedom of vending it in all the States is declared by statute. The fact that it is incorporeal in character and intangible does not change its character as property. Justice Davis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss., 309, uses the following language concerning the character of patents and the free right to vend them within the United States:

"The property in inventions exists by virtue of the laws of Congress, and no State has a right to interfere with its enjoyment or to annex conditions to the grant. If the patentee complies with the laws of Congress on the subject he has the right to go into the open market anywhere within the United States and sell his property."

Inventions secured by patents have been specifically declared to be property by the Supreme Court of the United States in the following cases: Brown v. Duchesne, 19 Howard, 197; Cammeyer v. Newton, 94 U. S., 225; Densmore v. Schofield, 102 U. S., 375; Soloman v. United States, 137 U. S., 346.

Being property and the right to freely vend them in the several States being secured by statute, why are not patented inventions as much within the spirit and purpose of the act of 1890 as any other species of property? It is impossible to conceive of any reason why they are not. There is no such reason. Indeed, as to many tangible articles of property covered by patents, the patented idea involved in and connected with them constitutes a great part of their value, and in some instances the greater part. The protection which the law carries for such articles against combinations in restraint of trade therein is a protection for both the value of the articles considered simply as manufactured articles and the value of the patent right which inheres in and belongs to them. We see, then, that the law does include within its purview the patent right when connected with tangible, physical, property, and it is impossible to conceive why it should not be taken to include the patent right when disconnected with the tangible, physical property.

Second. Is it not a combination to lower the value of property entering into interstate commerce "in restraint of trade" within the meaning of the act of 1890? The evil most in the public mind at the time of the passage of that act was the existence of trust combinations formed to increase the price of manufactured articles, but that combinations might be formed for the opposite purpose could not have escaped the intelligence of Congress, and that combinations and conspiracies had existed in the past for that purpose, and constituted indictable crimes at common law, was well known to the members of both Houses. The terms of the act are general. They are "every contract, etc., in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States," etc. Since it is as much in restraint of trade to depress the value of articles of property as it is to enhance them, and indeed more so, and since the history of the law showed that conspiracies for the first purpose were as likely to occur as conspiracies for the second, and that they were equally as injurious as the second kind, it is impossible, in view of the broad and comprehensive language employed, to conclude that Congress did not have both kinds of contracts and conspiracies in view.

It is true that only contracts and conspiracies of the second kind have been before the courts since the passage of the act of 1890, but that is no argument against the view here taken. The law has been in force a comparatively short time and it requires much time for cases involving every phase of any law to arise and be adjudicated. It may be observed, however, of these cases which have been adjudicated that the reasoning on which the judgments proceeded was as applicable to the one case as to the other, and that in none of the opinions is there the most remote suggestion that the law was not intended to cover both classes of cases. Can anyone doubt that if all the grain dealers in the United States should enter into a combination to commit the purchase of all corn bought in the United States to the hands of one firm or corporation, thereby compelling the farmers whose necessities compel them to sell to sell at any price this firm or corporation might fix, that such combination would be declared to be in restraint of trade and commerce within the meaning of the act of 1890? If such a combination would be in restraint of trade and commerce, then this combination is in restraint of trade and commerce. The only difference in the two cases is one of degree in the number of individuals affected and the public injury inflicted.

These considerations do not appear to have occurred to Acting Attorney-General Whitney, Attorney-General Olney, or Attorney-General Griggs when they declined to intervene against this trust combination at the request of Mr. Tubman. Mr. Whitney contents himself with declaring that he did not think a "combination of present consumers of a given commodity effects a restraint or a monopoly of trade or commerce within the meaning of the act." Why such a combination does not have such an effect he does not undertake to show, unless his general statement that a patentee is the owner of a monopoly and that the railroads are the sole consumers and the patentee the sole producer can be taken as a reason in favor of his contention. The considerations stated by him appear to be entirely foreign to his conclusion. The latter is a complete non sequitur.

Attorney-General Olney does not discuss the questions involved at all, and it is evident that he gave them only perfunctory consideration, if he gave them any consideration. Attorney-General Griggs evidently did not see the features of this combination which enabled it to kill competition and to control at will the prices to be paid inventors for their patented inventions. He speaks of it as if its sole purpose was to keep in touch with new inventions affecting railway business and to examine and report concerning their validity, utility, and value. He does make one statement which bears on the subjects I have been discussing, but it is nothing but a bare statement, and, moreover, it is palpably incorrect. He says "if his patent is valid there can be no competition." There can be competition between railways for the purchase of valuable railway patents. Suppose there was only one line of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast having the right to use the Westinghouse air brake, would not that line of railway have a great advantage over its competitors in the matter of passenger traffic, and if such a patent right were put up for sale for the exclusive use of two or more competing lines of railways, would there not be keen competition for its purchase? If the free right to vend patented inventions were not broken down and destroyed by this combination, there would be such inventions for which rival lines of railways would compete.

I have not thought it necessary to quote from the contract by which the Eastern Railroad Association was formed. That contract, and the constitution and by-laws of the association made to carry it out, shows its objects and purposes to be what I have stated. If I have committed an error, it is in understatements rather than overstatements. Neither have I deemed it necessary to quote from, or refer to, the several cases construing and applying the act of 1890. They are too well known to the profession to require more than the mention I have made of them.

In conclusion, I think that the question of the character of this association may well be again submitted to the Attorney-General for examination, and for the action of the Department after such examination, with the confident hope and expectation that that examination will induce a different opinion, and cause different action to be taken from that reached and taken when the matter was before under consideration in the Department of Justice.

Very respectfully,

GEO. TURNER.

EXHIBIT K.

Circuit court of the United States, district of Massachusetts. In equity. No. 2471. William K. Tubman v. Wason Manufacturing Company. Affidavit of John J. Harrower. Filed February 10, 1894.

I, John J. Harrower, of Washington, in the District of Columbia, make oath and say that I am secretary of the Eastern Railroad Association, whose office is at 614 F street NW., in said Washington; that Robert J. Fisher, counsel of said association, has directed me to appear on his behalf for the purpose of having forwarded to him for use in a cause in equity now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, brought by the same complainant, Tubman, against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company (the said Eastern Railroad Association having carried on the defense in both of said causes on behalf of the defendants therein), certain exhibits, being models introduced as evidence by said defendant per said association, entitled in the printed record of this cause as follows: Defendant's Exhibit, "Defendants' car;" defendants' Exhibit," "Roberts's car;" which said models are now in the custody of the clerk of this court.

JNO. J. HARROWER.

Sworn to before me this 10th day of February, A. D. 1894.

ALEX. H. TROWBRIDGE,
Clerk United States Circuit Court, Massachusetts District.

I respectfully request that the said exhibits be forwarded by the clerk of this court to Robert J. Fisher, esq., counsel for the said Eastern Railroad Association, on the condition that they be carefully preserved in their present condition so that they can be returned to the custody of the clerk of this court whenever an order of court may be made requiring such return.

Very respectfully,

JNO. J. HARROWER.

ORDER.

[February 10, 1894.]

Colt, J. Ordered that said exhibits be delivered as prayed for, subject to the further condition that they be kept or used in the said court of Pennsylvania, subject to the order for return to this court.

By the court:

ALEX. H. TROWBRIDGE, Clerk.

FEBRUARY 10, 1894.

Models forwarded to Robert J. Fisher, esq., per Adams Express.

Hearing no further from the President or the Department of Justice, the following correspondence occurred, which closes the chapter of this consistent refusal upon the part of the Administration to act upon the plain facts presented:

THE AMERICAN ANTI-TRUST LEAGUE, NATIONAL OFFICE,
1229 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, SECOND FLOOR,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1902.

Hon. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary to the President.

SIR: You will doubtless remember that on March 26 we placed in your hands an opinion by the Hon. William E. Chandler relative to the violation of the Federal antitrust law by the Eastern Railroad Association, and requested that the same be delivered to the President.

On December 21, 1901, we submitted to the President in person and filed certain printed documents and papers, among them being a copy of the associations' unlawful agreement and a "statement" relating to the legal aspects of the same, and the President promised that he would give the matter careful consideration and call the attention of the honorable Attorney-General to it. Since the above date we have not received any communication from either the President or the Attorney-General relating thereunto.

We would be pleased to have the opportunity of discussing this matter with the President in person if you can make arrangements for us to do so.

Respectfully, yours,

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
F. E. STEBBINS, of Counsel,
Joint Committee Anti-Trust League and D. A. 66, Knights of Labor.

EXHIBIT L.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1902.

Hon. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States.

SIR: On December 21, 1901, the undersigned placed in your hands certain evidence in the form of papers and documents showing that the Eastern Railroad Association, a voluntary combination of nearly all railroad corporations in the fifteen Atlantic coast States, exists and pursues its iniquity in violation of the Federal antitrust law. You received the papers and stated that you would give the matter careful consideration and call the attention of the Attorney-General to it.

On January 23, 1902, we addressed a communication to the honorable Attorney-General, asking what action, if any, had been taken in the matter. Thus far the Attorney-General has failed to make any reply whatsoever.

On March 26, 1902, we placed in the hands of your secretary, Mr. G. B. Cortelyou, to deliver to you in person, a legal opinion by the Hon. William E. Chandler to the effect that the Eastern Railroad Association was an "illegal conspiracy," Mr. Chandler having carefully examined a substantial duplicate of the evidence filed with you on December 21, 1901.

On April 3, 1902, we addressed a letter to Mr. Cortelyou relative to the disposition made of Mr. Chandler's opinion and expressed the desire for a personal interview with the President, and in reply received the following letter from your secretary:

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 5, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 3d instant, and in reply would say that your previous communication was by the President's direction brought to the attention of the Attorney-General on March 27. I would suggest that you communicate with Mr. Knox on the subject.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. H. B. MARTIN,
American Anti-Trust League,
1229 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C.

On May 21, 1902, we called at the Department of Justice and was told by the secretary to the Attorney-General that he was at the White House and that we could call up the Attorney-General's office by telephone at 2 o'clock p. m., and arrange for an interview. Upon leaving we gave the secretary a copy of a legal opinion, prepared with great care by the Hon. GEORGE TURNER, showing that the Eastern Railroad Association was an illegal trust, and requested the secretary to hand the same to the honorable Attorney-General. At 2 o'clock Mr. Martin communicated with the secretary by telephone as agreed and was informed that "the Attorney-General will not be able to take up the case." Mr. Martin replied: "Will not take up the case at all?" and the secretary responded: "He says he will not be able to take it up at all."

Mr. Martin: "We called to see him at the suggestion of the President." The secretary: "He says he will not be able to take it up at all." On the morning of May 22, Mr. Martin received through the mail, and in a Department of Justice envelope, the copy of the opinion by Hon. GEORGE TURNER, delivered to the secretary on the previous day, and which was the sole paper inclosed in the envelope. The postmark indicated that the opinion had been returned very soon after its delivery to the Attorney-General's secretary.

Believing in the law, "the very least as feeling her care, and the greatest as not exempted from her power," and that it should not be suspended and the courts closed, we again request consideration of our petition and that the Attorney-General be directed to institute suit in equity against the Eastern Railroad Association.

Among the papers filed with you on December 21, 1901, is a true copy of the constitution and by-laws of the association, which alone is ample ground for a suit. The decisions in United States v. The Trans-Missouri Freight Association and United States v. The Joint Traffic Association were rendered solely upon the agreements themselves. We will at any time furnish the Attorney-General with the original copy of the Eastern Railroad Association's agreement and proofs of its authenticity, and submit additional evidence of the association's unlawful and criminal acts and doings. The opinions of Hon. William E. Chandler and Hon. GEORGE TURNER should not be disregarded, as they embody the views of most eminent publicists, gentlemen learned in the law, both of them "too wise to be deceived, and too good to do wrong. The Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR has also verbally expressed the opinion that the Eastern Railroad Association violates the antitrust act and it is believed he will reiterate his belief if solicited so to do. The late Hon. Jeremiah Wilson, some two years ago reviewed all the evidences submitted by us on December 21, 1901, and repeatedly in person visited the Department of Justice for the purpose of soliciting the Attorney-General to bring suit.

We submit this communication with the confident belief that if you once fully understand the nature and character of the Eastern Railroad Association you will direct proper action to be taken by the Department of Justice.

In an article written by yourself and published in the Cosmopolitan, November, 1895, "Taking the New York police out of politics," are statements which apply to the enforcement of the antitrust law:

"Our enforcement of the Sunday excise law caused most disturbance. Up to the time we took office no official had ever made a serious and consistent effort to enforce the law. Almost all men of much experience insisted that the law could not be enforced. After carefully considering the matter, however, we came to the conclusion that it could be enforced, and that in any event we had no alternative save to try and enforce it if we wished to retain our self-respect or obey our oaths of office.

"We stood on the principle that the law should be honestly and fairly enforced while it remained on the statute books.

"It is a lamentable thing when the people and the public officials grow to think that laws should only be enforced as far as the officers of the law think that public opinion demands their enforcement. It is such a belief that inevitably leads to lynching, white capping, and all kindred forms of outrage."

In view of all the foregoing facts in this case we are compelled to appeal to you, Mr. President, to take the steps necessary in this emergency to compel your immediate subordinate, the Attorney-General, to proceed at once to enforce the Federal antitrust law against the Eastern Railroad Association. This case has been for months before the Attorney-General, and we believe that further delay can only be subversive of justice.

Respectfully submitted.

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
F. E. STEBBINS, of Counsel,
Joint Committee American Anti-Trust League and District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor.

Mr. SPOONER. As there are several Senators who desire to speak upon this resolution—among others, I think, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]—before it is disposed of I ask unanimous consent that it may go over without losing its privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the resolution may retain its place on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. The request is for one day?

Mr. SPOONER. For one day.

Mr. VEST subsequently said: I understand that the Senator from South Carolina has finished his remarks upon the resolution which I had the honor to submit some time ago on the coal question. If that be so, and if no other Senator wishes to speak on the resolution, I simply rise to move its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several Senators who have indicated a desire to speak, and by unanimous consent the resolution still lies on the table.

Mr. VEST. I wanted to indefinitely postpone it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asked unanimous consent that it might lie on the table, and his request was granted.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon; some one was talking to me at the time and I did not hear the request. Very good; let it lie on the table.

S. R. GREEN.

Mr. SIMON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5561) for the relief of S. R. Green. It is a very small bill and it will take but a moment to dispose of it.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to S. R. Green, of Clackamas County, Oreg., $85, the same being the amount deposited by him, in the names of James Tracy and S. R. Green, in the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., on September 1, 1897, to the credit of the United States Treasurer for office fees in connection with the survey of the Della, Lone Grave, Idle Fancy, and Cyclone quartz-mining claims in Lane County, Oreg., which survey was duly abandoned, and although a demand made for the return of the $85 so deposited, the sum was covered into the Treasury of the United States

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, this bill as it has come to us from the House provides for the admission to statehood of the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona. That part of the bill which admits Oklahoma to statehood contains this provision:

Provided, That the constitutional convention provided for herein shall, by ordinance irrevocable, express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may at any time, or from time to time, attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma after the title to said lands in said Indian Territory is extinguished in the tribes now claiming the same, and the same assigned in severalty and subject to taxation.

A majority of the Senate Committee on Territories have reported adversely upon this bill, and they have recommended in their report that we adopt a substitute which they at one time introduced and subsequently withdrew. I do not know whether it has been again introduced or not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; we withdrew it with notice that we would reintroduce it.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand it has not yet been reintroduced, but that notice has been given that it will be reintroduced at some time in the future. So we may consider it as really before us. They have recommended, I say, that we adopt a substitute, which they have thus brought before us for consideration, consolidating the Indian Territory with the Territory of Oklahoma and providing for the admission of the two Territories as one State, to be known as the State of Oklahoma.

Now, inasmuch as I propose to say very little about Oklahoma, I shall speak of that first. Standing alone, considered on its merits, without regard to the other Territories mentioned, I think all will concede that Oklahoma is entitled to statehood. She has a sufficient area; she has sufficient property to enable her, without burdensome taxation, to support a State government, and she has a sufficient population, both in numbers and intelligence and with respect to every other quality that should be considered in this connection.

There are those, however, who are opposed to the admission of Oklahoma, notwithstanding she possesses these qualities, if, to admit her, they must, at the same time—as passing the House bill would do—admit the other Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, to the admission of which they are opposed for reasons that I shall consider presently.

There are others, and I am one of them, opposed to the admission of the Territory of Oklahoma to statehood if it must be now consolidated with the Indian Territory, as proposed by this substitute measure. I do not object to its ultimate consolidation, as the bill which has come to us from the House proposes and provides. I think it is manifest to all that they are so situated, being contiguous to each other, and one being so much the complement of the other, that they ought to be united. It would not make a State of too great area, and of course it would not make a State of too much wealth or too much population or too much intelligence.

But, Mr. President, the difficulty about consolidating these Territories at this time, as proposed by the substitute measure, is that it is impracticable to do it, as I understand the facts, without doing injustice to the people of Oklahoma Territory.

In order that I may present what is in my mind, in that connection I call attention to the fact, which has already been commented upon by those who have addressed the Senate upon this bill, that all the lands in the Indian Territory originally belonged to the Indian tribes; that they have had no Territorial government in the Indian Territory such as the other Territories have had; that they have had, so far, no school system established. I believe the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] told us yesterday that there are but sixteen schools in the Indian Territory, and they are private schools, as contradistinguished from public schools. He told us in that same connection that in consequence of this condition there is great illiteracy in the Indian Territory, and he appealed to us in the closing sentences of his speech to admit the Indian Territory to statehood because there was that illiteracy, and because they had up to this time no government whatever except only that provided by the Indian tribes, forgetting, apparently, that in the opening sentences of his speech he had appealed to us to reject the petition of Arizona for statehood on the ground of illiteracy and similar unsatisfactory conditions.

Attention should be called also to the absence of other conditions. They have, as I am told, no roads whatever, at least none worthy of serious mention, in the Indian Territory, not even the most common, ordinary highways. If you want to go about through the Territory, you must follow Indian trails or bridle paths, and there are no bridges over the rivers or streams. That is what I am told. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] smiles incredulously. If I am in error, I will be obliged if he will correct me.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator has appealed to me and inasmuch as I have some personal knowledge of the situation there, and I know the Senator wishes to keep exactly within the line of fact, I will state the fact is that they have many good highways, but they have absolutely no system. They have no legal method of acquiring any new highways. They have good highways and good bridges, and the character of the Territory is such that roads are very easily made and require very little expense in making them.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Wisconsin for imparting that information. Perhaps I should have made the statement that there was no system of highways.

Mr. QUARLES. That is quite right.

Mr. FORAKER. Where four or five hundred thousand people are living there is no doubt some way to get from one settlement to another, or of getting about over the country, but I have been told by people who live there and people who have a right to speak from knowledge of the conditions there—I have been told this within the last twenty-four hours—that they have no road system whatever, and if you go about over the Territory you go in some such way as I have indicated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One circumstance alone, I will say to the Senator, will show the inaccuracy of the statement that there are no roads, although of course there is no system of roads.

Mr. FORAKER. I said there was no system of roads.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know. I refer to the very large volume of domestic commerce which exists there. It is very large; indeed, as large as that of Oklahoma.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, while the statement as I originally made it was strictly in accord with the information which had been given me, yet the modification which the information now imparted requires does not change the purpose I had in view in referring to it.

What I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to is that if the Indian Territory be now admitted to statehood, it will be necessary for the State government to provide funds for the construction of highways, if not to the full extent I indicated, yet to a very considerable and a very expensive extent. My informant told me it would cost more than $16,000,000, as had been estimated, to make the necessary highways the Territory ought to have to enable it to be anything like equal in that respect to Oklahoma as it is now. In addition to that, Mr. President, it will be necessary to establish a school system and provide support for it. Now, where is the support for the school system, and where is the money for the construction of the highways to come from? In addition to that, it will be necessary to establish all kinds of ordinary public institutions, benevolent institutions, penal institutions, and asylums. Where will the money come from?

Every Senator here knows, or should know, that the lands of the Indian Territory are not taxable except in a very small part. Originally they all belonged to the Indian tribes and were nontaxable. Under the legislation of recent years there has been an attempt to dissolve the tribal relations and get rid of the tribal title. In that behalf we have provided for allotments in severalty to the members of the various Indian tribes, but the statutes providing for the allotment of these lands provide that they shall not be taxable after an allotment in the hands of the allottees for a period of twenty-one years, in at least most cases, and that if the allottee see fit to sell, having first the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, he may do so after five years, and his lands so sold shall be taxable only in the hands of the allottee.

Now, in addition to that, town sites are taxable, but the town sites that are taxable and the lands that have passed into hands, as I have indicated, where they are taxable are comparatively but a very insignificant portion of the territory embraced within the boundaries of the Indian Territory; that is to say, only an inconsiderable portion of these lands are taxable. Personal property there is taxable, I suppose, but practically the lands are not taxable.

In other words, then, there is no public domain whatever in the Indian Territory. There never has been. There are no lands there that can be thrown open to preemption by homestead settlement. There are no lands there that can be set apart for the endowment of a school system, as in other Territories has been done. There are no lands there that can be set apart for the endowment of penal and benevolent institutions, as was done in the Territory of Oklahoma and other Territories, and there are no lands there that can be set apart for the endowment and maintenance of institutions of higher education, such as State universities, as was done in the case of Oklahoma, and as has been done in other cases.

I call attention to that particularly because the Senator from Minnesota, in his closing sentences on yesterday, told us it would be no hardship upon the people of Oklahoma to unite the Indian Territory with Oklahoma at this time because, in the first place, the bill made provision for the endowment of the common school system in the Indian Territory, just as has heretofore been done in Oklahoma and in other Territories.

I call the attention of the Senate to what the provision is that is thus referred to. I find it at section 7 of the substitute, page 53 of the print, which I have before me. It reads as follows:

SEC. 7. That upon the admission of the State into the Union sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township in Oklahoma Territory, and other lands, equivalent to sections 16 and 36, in every township in Indian Territory, shall be granted from the public domain in Oklahoma Territory, in lieu of sections 16 and 36 in every township of Indian Territory, except sections 16 and 36 in either Territory, or parts thereof, that have been reserved, sold, or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress: Provided, That said indemnity lands, in lieu of sections 16 and 36 of the townships in the Indian Territory, shall be selected in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be granted for the support of the common schools of said proposed State of Oklahoma; etc.

In other words, Mr. President, the provision which has been brought before the Senate in this substitute, and which was commented upon by those who have spoken in support of the substitute, is one that, as I have said, is absolutely impracticable. It is a provision that means, if it means anything, that inasmuch as there is no public domain in the Indian Territory out of which land can be set aside for the purposes of education, we shall set aside, out of the public domain in Oklahoma Territory, an equivalent to two sections for every township in the Indian Territory. How many acres would that require? That would be 1.280 acres for every section, or every square mile, in the Indian Territory. There would have to be that much set aside to put the Indian Territory on an equality with the Territory of Oklahoma. That is what the substitute bill proposes to do. But, inasmuch as the Indian Territory has no public domain, it is proposed to go to the public domain of Oklahoma to get it; and we are asked to accept that kind of a proposition as doing justice as between the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory in the matter of endowing a common school system.

The area of the Indian Territory is about 31,000 square miles, I believe. So there would have to be something more than 3,000,000 acres set aside under that provision out of the public domain of Oklahoma. But that is not to be set aside out of the public domain of Oklahoma, according to the provisions of this bill, until there shall have been first set aside out of that same public domain 1,450,000 acres specifically provided for, and provided for not only in the bill which came to us from the House of Representatives, but provided for also in the substitute reported by the majority of the committee. These 1,450,000 acres are to be set aside for the following purposes:

For the benefit of the Oklahoma University, 200,000 acres; for the benefit of the Agricultura land Mechanical College, 250,000 acres; for the benefit of the Colored Agricultural and Normal University, 100,000 acres; for the benefit of normal schools, 250,000 acres, and 650,000 acres to be disposed of as the legislature may provide, said lands to be selected in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. President, recognizing that to set aside such large bodies of land—1,450,000 acres—to meet these specific purposes, and something more than 3,000,000 acres to meet the general purposes I have spoken of, and not to allow them to be entered upon by settlers or taken possession of or developed—recognizing that that would be a serious drawback in the development of that Territory, the committee have provided in their substitute that all these lands shall be offered for sale to the highest bidder at not less than $10 an acre. In that way they propose creating a fund out of which to provide education for those poor people of the Indian Territory, of whom we heard so much spoken yesterday in commiseration, and to provide for these institutions of higher learning and for the penal institutions and the benevolent institutions necessary to statehood. Naturally, one would be rather pleased with the fairness of that proposition as it reads on its face; and I thought, inasmuch as the Indian Territory had no public domain, it was a right and proper thing for the United States Government to take all these lands from its domain elsewhere, and from nowhere else so appropriately as from Oklahoma, and thus make good the deficiency that existed. But I wanted to see how it would work out, and therefore I went to the office of the Commissioner of Public Lands and got his last official report—that made last year. I wanted to see how much of the public domain the United States Government yet has in the Territory of Oklahoma. At page 198 of this report I find a table, the title of which is as follows:

Statement, by States, Territories, and land districts, and also counties where practicable, showing the area of land unappropriated, etc.

I look at the table there found as to Oklahoma, and I find that there are yet, or were last June, when this report was made—it does not show anything later than that—there were then yet in Oklahoma of unappropriatad lands only 3,789,976 acres. It is therefore out of that 3,789,976 acres that all this appropriation must come, and all the lands so set aside are to be sold at $10 an acre. I thought that that was a pretty good price for wild land, and I thought I would like to know what kind of land it was, and so I made inquiry as to that. I have not had an opportunity to get any official report upon it, but I learn from the report of the Commissioner of Public Lands that 3,000,000 acres of this land is in Beaver County.

I looked on the map and I found that Beaver County was what was known a few years ago as "No Man's Land." It runs across the upper end of Texas, intervening between Texas and Kansas and Colorado; the Cherokee Strip, I believe it was originally called. That is Beaver County. Three million acres of that remnant of the public domain of Oklahoma are in Beaver County. Then I pursued the inquiry so as to learn what kind of land it is which is to sell at $10 an acre to the highest bidder, with which to endow a common school system, and I learned that there was not an acre there, in all probability, that would bring as much as $1, and a great deal of it would not bring anything. A great many homesteaders at first went in and made homestead entries there, but they have practically all been abandoned because it is a dry, arid, rocky, and objectionable kind of soil. It is also topographically objectionable, and the soil is filled with gypsum and other ingredients that make the water so objectionable that the land is not suitable for either men or beasts, and it has been practically abandoned.

Well, that narrows the thing down a good deal. There is not an acre in Beaver County of the whole 3,000,000, more or less, that could be sold, according to the information I have, for one dollar—not one—and there are vast areas of it that could not be sold for anything.

That is the kind of a bill, Mr. President, the majority of this committee have brought here and have asked the Senate of the United States to accept, upon their recommendation, as a provision for the endowment of a common-school system, needed more there, according to the representation of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], made in this Chamber yesterday, than in any other place in the United States—a mere barren provision that will bring nothing.

Now, look a little further. Deducting that 3,000,000 acres, we have 789,976 acres left, or less than enough to make the specific appropriation provided for the State university, for the benevolent and penal institutions, and for other specified purposes. So there would not be one acre left for a school system for the Indian Territory of that which is even passably good land; but there is a great deal of the remaining 789,976 acres that is not good.

In Woodward County, which lies next to Texas and immediately south of the Cherokee Strip, they have practically the same kind of soil, and if you will look at the reports on file you will see there are no settlers there. The Government has had even to withdraw the land office from Beaver County.

Three hundred and forty-nine thousand acres of this residue are situate in Woodward County, which were to be devoted to school purposes in the Indian Territory, to be put up and sold at auction, according to the Senator who addressed us yesterday, at $10 an acre, to create a fund for the support of the common-school system, and all of the same general quality.

I might run through this table and point out other lands of the same nature belonging to this residue, but if you will go south on the map you will see that the county next below Woodward is Roger Mills County, and the one next below is Greer County, and nearly all this remnant of land is in the counties of Greer, Roger Mills, Woodward, and Beaver, and all of that land that remains unappropriated is comparatively valueless land. I doubt if you can find an acre in the whole of it that is worth $10; very little that has any present value whatever.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Are those western counties?

Mr. FORAKER. They are western counties, running down the line.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the land gets progressively bad as you move west?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, until you come to New Mexico. [Laughter.] I shall speak of that presently.

I am talking now, Mr. President, about the substitute bill which the majority of the committee have brought in here as a result of their visit to these Territories and of an "investigation on the ground." They recognize—and the Senator from Minnesota dwelt upon it yesterday at great length—that in the Indian Territory there is an abnormal degree of illiteracy, and that there is an unusual necessity for statehood, in order that a common school system may be established, and that those people may be prepared for citizenship in the United States; and this is the way that it is proposed to do it.

Mr. President, I commenced by saying that I would not say much about Oklahoma, and I will not. I have said all this to support the statement I made, namely, that it is impracticable at this time to consolidate the Indian Territory with Oklahoma and admit the two as one State without doing a violent injustice to the people of Oklahoma. No man will question but that in the Indian Territory there must be highways, and persons have suggested, in giving me information, that that will be a very burdensome expense to the State government. We all agree that there must be a system of education of some kind established; and no system is as good as the common school system, and that, we know, will be burdensome.

If you unite the Indian Territory with Oklahoma Territory at this time, you do it when, practically, there are no lands subject to taxation in the Indian Territory; you do it when unusual burdens must be borne by somebody; and if these unusual burdens are to be borne, by whom can they be borne except only by the people of the Territory of Oklahoma?

Yesterday the Senator from Minnesota, in closing, said also—and seemed rather to congratulate himself on that fact—that, although he had spoken many days in addressing the Senate, and had gone at great length and with great elaboration into this whole subject, he had not found it necessary to speak one harsh or unkind word of anybody. That was his parting consolatory remark.

Mr. President, I have some hesitation about saying what I had in my mind to say in answer to that suggestion by the Senator. I will not say what I had it in mind to say, but I will say that the Senator in making that remark was not justified by the record which he himself had made.

Now, I shall pass that with this simple remark and come to what I want more particularly to say, that in this bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma to statehood is found a provision that I read in my opening sentences, a provision that is fashioned after the provision that was embodied in the law making Oklahoma a Territory. Oklahoma and the Indian Territory were at one time one Territory, and Oklahoma was carved out of the Indian Territory. The provision of that law was that Oklahoma should be added to from the Indian Territory as from time to time the Congress of the United States might see fit to add. The provision in this House bill is that Oklahoma shall now irrevocably give her consent that she may be added to from time to time from the Indian Territory as her lands are freed from present conditions and are made taxable. We have full power as to the Territory, and the purpose of that provision is that we may avoid the necessity of tying on to Oklahoma a Territory for which Oklahoma will have to bear the burden of government without having any help, practically and comparatively speaking, from the Indian Territory.

If we admit the Territory of Oklahoma with the obligation on the part of Oklahoma to put into her constitution such a provision, irrevocable in its character, we can, as these lands are alloted and as they are aliened and come into the hands of people who will have to pay taxes on them, from time to time add from the territory of the Indian Territory, and ultimately the entire Indian Territory can be combined with Oklahoma Territory, and we will have one State of the two Territories, as it seems to me manifestly we should have, and only one; but it would be an injustice to do it now.

Now, Mr. President, I want to pass from Oklahoma. I want to speak about New Mexico and Arizona, but before I speak as to the merits of these two Territories I want to speak a word or two as to the political aspects of this question.

PLATFORM DECLARATIONS.

The Senator from Minnesota opened his speech with a reference to our Republican national platform declarations concerning the admission of these Territories, and in that connection announced that he did not feel bound by them and called the attention of Senators to the fact that they were not made under oath. [Laughter.] They were not made under oath, although I heard a good deal of swearing at Philadelphia; not, however, at the platform. But I appreciate what the Senator said; no, I do not appreciate it either, but I note what he said.

Mr. President, it is not necessary, I trust, that a platform declaration should be sworn to in order to command credibility. I can understand, however, how it is that a Senator who simply sat in the convention at Philadelphia, thinking about who should be nominated for the Presidency or the Vice-Presidency, or what the declaration of the platform should be in regard to the tariff or the money question, might pay but little attention to what would be said about the admission of Territories to statehood. I can understand how he might regard that as not a vital matter, and how he might not pay any attention to it at all, not knowing even what declaration was made at the time he voted for the adoption of the platform. I can understand how a man might even belong to the general committee on resolutions and not have accurate knowlege, or feel bound by a declaration of that kind in the sense in which he would feel bound by a declaration in regard to some matter that was directly in issue before the people; but that is not the case with a man who helped draft it.

It was my fortune to be not only a member of the committee on resolutions in the National Republican Convention of 1896, but I was also chairman of that committee, and I was a member of the subcommittee and chairman of the subcommittee that drafted that platform. I knew then exactly what we were putting in that platform. We put it in after giving a hearing to everybody who wanted to be heard; we put it in there, thinking it would strengthen the cause of Republicanism throughout the West. It was not an idle thing; it was not an ill-considered thing on the part of those who did it; it was carefully considered, and it was done after it had been thoroughly discussed.

When we came to Philadelphia in 1900 I was not chairman of the committee, nor the chairman of the subcommittee, but I was a member of the committee and a member of the subcommittee that drafted that platform. In 1896 we put in a qualified declaration. Let me read it:

> We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

In 1900 we dispensed with all qualifications and boldly and unqualifiedly declared as follows:

> We favor home rule for, and the early admission to statehood of, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

Now, Mr. President, if we are to be told that is not binding because it was not under oath, or if we are to be told that for any reason whatever we are now to disregard it; if, in other words, insincerity is to be written across that declaration of the Republican national platform, it shall not be written by my hand.

I can understand how a man might think even in 1896 or in 1900 that these Territories ought to be admitted to statehood and might now think differently, but before any man has a right to change his mind he must profess to have new light of some kind or other. I have no new light. I was in earnest then. I knew what I was doing, and every other member of that committee knew what he was doing. There was a careful hearing. That declaration was not put in there to help the opposition. It was put in there to help the Republican party; and we put it there because we thought it was right. I feel to-day just as I did then, and I intend to vote now when it is not a mere platform proposition as I voted then, because I am in earnest now as I was then.

Having said that much, I want now to speak particularly about the Territories of

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

When you come to consider the question whether or not any particular Territory is entitled to statehood, there are three general propositions to be considered. One is area. Is the Territory sufficiently large, or is it too large? Nobody objects to area in this case. The area of New Mexico and the area of Arizona are large; but nobody claims that the area of either Territory is too large, and certainly nobody has claimed that it is not large enough. So I pass area by. So far as mere acreage is concerned, mere extent of territory, these Territories are quite acceptable according to every precedent that we have established.

There are only two other general questions remaining. One is, have the people wealth enough within that Territory, sufficient property, to support statehood without unduly burdening themselves by taxation in order to raise revenue? If they have, then the remaining question, and the only question remaining, is one of population. Is that sufficient, and is it of proper quality?

In the report made by the majority of the committee, presented to the Senate by the Senator from Indiana, a great deal is said, to which I shall make response presently, about the rule established by the ordinance of 1787. He speaks in that connection of the rule established as to population, and he seems to argue and contend that we ought to be governed by whatever our fathers, wisely considering the question, saw fit to establish as a rule at that time. I call his attention, and I call the attention of the Senate, to the fact that in the ordinance of 1787, to which he has thus appealed, there is not one word as to how much property a Territory shall have. Except Vermont, Maine, and Texas, all the Territories that we have created into States have come into the Union after having had the ordinance of 1787 applied in their government, or under our treaties with France, Spain, or Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if it is not true that we have admitted heretofore 13 States with less taxable wealth than either Arizona or Mexico now possesses?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. CLAY. And is it not true that Indiana at the time she came into the Union had less taxable wealth than either of these Territories and that Minnesota had less taxable wealth?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the railroads alone in the Territory of New Mexico are worth more than twice all of the taxable property of both Indiana and Ohio at the time those two States were admitted.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION.

What I was going to call attention to, however, is that this ordinance of 1787 does not say anything about property; what it speaks about is "free inhabitants." Whenever there are a certain number of free inhabitants, certain rights shall follow; not when there are so many millions of property.

When you come to the treaties with France, Spain, and Mexico, under which we have admitted all the remaining Territories into the Union of States, there is talk about the inhabitants, but there is no talk about wealth or the property that would be subject to taxation.

The theory under which the framers of the ordinance of 1787 proceeded, doubtless, was that whenever there was a requisite number of free inhabitants, citizens of the United States, in a given Territory, they would have all the other things necessary; and it was not necessary for them to be enumerated to enable them to maintain statehood.

But, passing that, and speaking of it as though it is something that we are compelled by precedent to consider, what is the fact as to property in New Mexico and Arizona? I do not want to be too tedious about this, but, as I said awhile ago, if we look no further than the railroads, they have got more property than many of our Territories had when they were admitted.

On page 13 of Senate Document 2206, part 2, entitled "Views of Mr. QUAY," appears a statement as to the property in New Mexico that would be subject to taxation. I do not want to read it, but I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD just as it appears here. If there is no objection, I will ask that it be put into my speech at this place. I call attention to the fact, however, that it is an itemized statement showing the railroads, showing the acreage fit for agriculture, showing the mines, showing the stock, showing the general products, and showing all the other kinds and classes of property to be found in the Territory, and that the aggregate, according to this statement, is $283,000,000.

The evidence presented before this committee, roughly tabulated, shows the present property of the Territory that will be subjected to taxation when it is admitted as a State as follows:

7,000,000 acres of railroad land, with its coal, iron, and timber, at $5	$35,000,000
7,000,000 acres of private patented land grants, with its timber and, in some instances, its minerals, at $5	35,000,000
2,000,000 acres of agricultural land, at $10	20,000,000
3,000 miles of railroad, with its franchises, equipment, machinery, shops, etc., at $20,000	60,000,000
Patented mines and plants	25,000,000
7,000,000 sheep and goats, at $2	14,000,000
21,000,000 pounds of wool, at 8 cents	1,680,000
1,700,000 head of cattle, at $20	34,000,000
50,000 head of horses, at $10	500,000
100,000 head of burros, at $2	200,000
City lots and buildings	25,000,000
Stocks of goods	12,500,000
Household furniture of all kinds	4,120,000
Jewelry	2,000,000
Cash, bonds, stocks, mortgages, etc	5,500,000
Produce of mines—coal, iron, gold, silver, copper, lead, etc	5,000,000
Produce of farms—alfalfa, wheat, and other crops	2,500,000
All other kinds of property	1,000,000

I have read the report of the governor of New Mexico, and that report sustains all that is said here. I have read the speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and that practically sustains all that is said here. I do not think there can be any difference of opinion, Mr. President, as to the truth of the proposition that they have at least two hundred millions of taxable property in the Territory of New Mexico. That is very conservative. Now, if they have $200,000,000 of property in the Territory of New Mexico, that is, as I said a while ago, much more than we have had as a rule in other Territories which have been admitted to statehood, and there is no question—every man can take a pencil and figure it for himself—that it is sufficient to sustain the burdens of statehood without any undue rate of taxation.

Mr. President, how far are we to go in this matter? We sat here and listened hour after hour to a very interesting and very able narration of facts and data compiled by Senators who have addressed us to show of what the property in those Territories consisted; to show that there was only a certain percentage of lands suitable for agriculture without irrigation, and only a certain percentage that could be irrigated, and that the products of the mines were only of such and such value, and other data like that. All that is not any concern of ours. All we are concerned about is whether or not there is enough property there in the aggregate subject to taxation to support statehood without any unreasonable burden. It does not make any difference whether it consists of agricultural land, of mineral products, of manufactures, of banking capital, or what not. The accidental remark, "banking capital," recalls to my attention something that is not included in this report, I believe; something, however, I saw in the governor's report, that in the Territory of New Mexico they have 14 national banks—I believe that is the number—and 12 Territorial banks or private banks, with an aggregate resource for the whole number of banks of about $10,000,000 and with a surplus of seven and a half millions. And yet Senators talk about a community which has banking establishments of that character and such industries as that represents not being entitled to statehood!

Consider, now, the railroads. According to the governor's report, made early in the year, they had over 2,000 miles of railroad. I do not recall the exact figures. If anyone is curious to know the exact figures by reference to his report he can get them. I saw the statement only a day or two ago that during the present year they have added to it until now they have about 2,600 miles of railroad in the Territory of New Mexico.

I do not take time to consult figures and give them accurately, because it does not matter what the exact figures would show, whether a few miles more or less. All we need to know is what are the aggregates. Details may be interesting, but they are not essential.

What, now, is the value of the railroads constructed and put into operation in the Territory of New Mexico? I saw a statement somewhere, made, I think, by the Senator from Minnesota, that he estimated the railroads as of the value of $7,500 per mile. I made inquiry of the railroad commissioner to know what was the probable average cost of railroads in New Mexico and in that Western country, and his answer was that the railroads in New Mexico and that Western country cost on the average, according to the statistics they had, about $81,000 a mile. That is the response of the commissioner of railroads. That seemed to me very high. But, with the limited knowledge I have about the cost of railroad construction and the value of railroad property after it has been constructed and put into operation, I suppose it would be a conservative estimate to say that these railroads are worth $30,000 a mile. I do not believe they could be constructed and equipped, as all these are, and put into operation for any such sum of money. Mr. President, I know enough about it to know that they could not be. Every Senator here who has made any observation at all must know that fact. If they have 2,600 miles of railroad worth $30,000 a mile in New Mexico, you see at once what a great aggregate of value it makes.

Now, turn to the speech made by the Senator from Vermont, who is opposed to the admission of New Mexico, and who was arguing to show that New Mexico did not have sufficient industrial development to entitle her to admission, and you will find that he says that the annual product of Arizona—it is not the taxable property in Arizona, but the annual product—consisting of copper and silver and gold and other minerals, and agricultural products, is $33,567,537, or twice as much, in all probability, as all the property in Indiana subject to taxation was worth when it was admitted into the Union in 1810, far more than all the property in Ohio was worth when it was admitted, and a great deal more than all the property in Tennessee was worth when it was admitted. That is not the aggregate value; it is the annual product in dollars and cents, and it is not the annual product as I give it, but the annual product as given by an opponent of this measure, the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who made a most able and interesting speech on this subject, so far as the facts are concerned. And this was his statement as to Arizona, the smallest in population of these three Territories.

Now, Mr. President, admitting, however, as the Senator from Vermont did and the Senator from Minnesota did, that New Mexico and Arizona have the property values of which I speak, they say, to use the language employed by the Senator from Minnesota yesterday, that they are now in a stagnant condition; there is no development; there is no going ahead; and there is no prospect as there was a prospect for Indiana and Ohio and Illinois and the other Territories when they were admitted into the Union.

Mr. President, a grosser injustice could not be done to that people. Let us see if they are not going ahead. I have here a statement which shows that during the past twelve months, ending on the 31st day of last December, there were constructed and put into operation within the Territory of New Mexico 358 miles of railroad. Does that look like stagnation? I do not know how many miles were built in Indiana, but I doubt if so many were built there. There may have been. We will all hope so. But it is a pretty lively community in which there is that amount of railroad building going on.

Now, let me call attention to something else. Here are the internal-revenue receipts collected from New Mexico. In 1890 she paid $37,671.19 internal-revenue taxes into the Treasury of the United States. Of course since then the war taxes have come, but they do not account for all the growth. In 1901, the latest year for which I have the statistics, she paid $58,609.31. Here are her post-office receipts. Now, please note what has been done in this stagnant community. In 1890 her total post-office receipts amounted to $45,639.62. In 1902 they amounted to $93,684.17. Since June 30, 1900, when the census was taken, they have established in New Mexico 76 new post-offices, as the post-office authorities have certified. I have their letter to that effect.

It is very difficult for me to keep Arizona and New Mexico apart, and it just occurs to my mind that it is not necessary I should do so. They run naturally together. I think I am safe in saying that if I give the data as to New Mexico, you can assume that everything which has occurred there has occurred also in Arizona in the same proportion that the population of the one Territory bears to the population of the other—practically the same. That will save me the trouble of going into all this in detail as to both. But inasmuch as I have it before me, let me show you what great growth there has been in Arizona in the matter of post-office receipts. This table, sent me by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, shows that for the year ending June 30, 1890, the post-office receipts in Arizona amounted to $28,416.06 and for the year ending June 30, 1902, to $129,267.95. The internal-revenue receipts from Arizona in 1892 were $17,965.90, and in 1901 they were $61,698.96.

Mr. President, does that look like a stagnant community? But that is not all. We have heard a great deal about the undesirability of the agricultural lands in New Mexico. I have some figures here which will show that they are at least sought after by people who are hunting for homes in that far distant frontier country. From June 30, 1900, when the last census was taken, down to the 20th day of December, 1902, there were entered at the various land offices in New Mexico, most of them being homestead entries, 1,271,517 acres.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. In just a moment.

Then I have, written January 1, coming later than that, a letter from one of the registers—the one at Roswell. In this letter, dated January 1, 1903, addressed to Hon. B. S. RODEY, Washington, D. C., the writer says:

DEAR SIR: I have only time to report that this office had 205 homestead entries in December.

That was during the last month alone.

This ought to mean 205 settlers.

J. L. GEYER.

Now I will hear the Senator from Indiana, if he desires.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was not very important. I was going to ask the Senator whether he meant to have the Senate infer from this million or two acres of land entered that that many homesteads had been taken up in the sense that farms had been located and farmers located on them, because the Senator will, I am sure, bear me out when I state that many of these so-called homestead entries are made for the purpose of grazing in conjunction with grazing ranches; mere water holes. That is the point.

Mr. FORAKER. The information I have, and it comes from the representatives of the Government, from the Government officers there who made the entries, is that most of the entries are for actual settlers who propose to live on them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is that?

Mr. FORAKER. Most of them, I say, are for actual settlers.

Mr. BATE. I will suggest there that if these lands are taken for grazing and stock purposes, is it not necessary for some one to be there?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. The statement I have here is that eight-tenths of these entries are for homesteads of a hundred and sixty acres each. About a million and a quarter acres of land have been entered since the census was taken. The Senator suggests that possibly some of this land thus entered was not to be devoted to agriculture as we understand it in this part of the country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator is going to say just exactly what I was going to suggest. I have not the slightest doubt that some, perhaps many, of these homestead entries in the neighborhood of Roswell or in the district irrigated about there were taken up as farms by actual settlers. But the point to which I called the Senator's attention was that many others of them were taken up as portions of grazing ranches. He will recall the testimony of Professor Newell, that last year, in going over a great district of such homestead entries, he found the water holes dry.

Mr. FORAKER. Suppose he did find the water holes dry?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are not farms.

Mr. FORAKER. It is very interesting to know about the rivers that dry up and the rivers that do not dry up, and the artesian wells that flow and the artesian wells that do not flow, but what has that to do with the general proposition? What I am talking about is, first, that there is enough property there to sustain statehood, and when the Senator makes the point that they have uninviting conditions in New Mexico, he but emphasizes the right of these people to the reward of statehood. From the beginning of this Government down to this time we have put a premium upon the action of adventuresome and aggressive men who would go out, contending against the conditions of nature, to subdue nature, and make it a suitable place for people to live.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going to interrupt the Senator again——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not care how much the Senator interrupts me. I am always glad to hear him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thank you.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to debate this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator misunderstood the point.

Mr. FORAKER. I was going on to answer the remark of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The point is that on many of these so-called homestead entries there is not anybody, and therefore there is no person of adventuresome spirit or of any other kind of spirit for the Government to encourage or otherwise. That is the point.

Mr. BATE. If I may be permitted to make a suggestion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. They have to have some one, a family, there before they can make a homestead entry. The law requires it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not a family.

Mr. FORAKER. I call attention to what this officer of the Government says:

I have only time to report that this office had 205 homestead entries in December. This ought to mean 205 settlers.

He does not say it does mean it, but he understood it meant it. What I want to say is that that does not matter for the purposes I have in view in this connection. I am coming to the question of population presently, and I will say something about how many people there are there. For the present I am discussing the question whether they have enough taxable property in the Territory to maintain statehood without being unduly burdened with a rate of taxation. I think I have abundantly shown it; and now I am answering the charge that although they may have enough to support statehood, they are not growing; that they are "stagnant."

Mr. President, a greater libel was never uttered against a brave and intelligent and patriotic people than that which has been repeated over and over again in this Chamber ever since this report came in here. I cite you to the post-office receipts, I cite you to the establishment of new post-offices, I cite you to the internal-revenue receipts, I cite you to the construction of railroads to show that they are anything but stagnant. There is as much business activity there, for the number of people, as you can find among 200,000 American citizens anywhere where the flag of America floats. Nowhere will you find greater activity. It is the very opposite of stagnation.

Now they say, "Yes. these entries have been made"—a million and a quarter acres; 205 homesteads in one land district in one month in New Mexico—"but how do you know that they are not intended for grazing purposes? Nobody will live upon them." I do not care as to that for present purposes. We have been told over and over again since this debate began about the arid wastes of New Mexico; about the millions and millions of acres that are to be found there unsuited to agriculture and which it is impossible to irrigate, and how it is all in consequence of no value.

Mr. President, my information, and I believe it is reliable, is that there is practically not an acre in New Mexico that is not capable of being utilized by that community for their own good, and especially for the good of this whole people. The good Lord in His providence made the arid lands of New Mexico for just the purpose they are subserving. That is to be the great meat supply for the hundreds of millions of people that are to occupy this country in the years to come. There, on those lands, which we are told are of no value, are to be found to-day millions of stock, consisting of horses and cattle and sheep. The majority of the committee do not know it. They did not stop in the Territory long enough to find it out. But that is the fact; the records show it, and every man who is informed knows it. And that is not all. The herds are increasing. More and more the cattle and other stock multiply, and all to our great good. I say all honor to the man who goes into that Territory, braving its hardships, submitting to its privations, engaging in any business he may find there lawful and proper to engage in, whether it be mining or manufacturing or an agricultural pursuit, or the grazing of horses and cattle and sheep.

As I said a few minutes ago, and I do not want to be diverted from that, the committee have proceeded upon the theory that because the people of New Mexico have peculiarly difficult conditions to contend against they ought to be denied statehood. They do have peculiarly difficult conditions to contend against. But all the greater is the reason, when they have surmounted those difficulties, when they have bravely contended against them, that we should remember that they have a right to govern themselves, according to the principles of the American Constitution. That is all we are contending for. That is what will be denied them if this bill fails—something that is not only due them upon general principle, according to general precedent, but which is due them according to contract obligations as solemn as one nation ever entered into with another.

Now I come to another point, Mr. President. Perhaps I have said enough on that topic. The point I wanted to make was that these Territories have a sufficient area, that they have sufficient property subject to taxation, to enable them to sustain statehood without being unduly burdened. In the next place, I have tried to show, answering the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota particularly in that regard, that they are not stagnant, as has been charged, but that they are alive, that they are growing. No community in the United States—and the Senator from Indiana can not find one when he comes to address the Senate and point it out—can show a greater development of an industrial character than that of New Mexico. I mean that he can not find one where among 200,000 people, situated as that people are, there has been an equal growth of post-offices and postal receipts and of internal-revenue receipts and of land entries during the same period of time. And all this is true and equally true, in proportion, of Arizona.

Now, Mr. President, I come to something else. I said a moment ago that there were three general questions which should be considered. One was area, about which there is no contention, and another is wealth and taxable property, and I have dwelt upon that sufficiently. It is all right, although the ordinance of 1787 did not require it, nor did any of the treaties under which we acquired territory require it, to consider whether or not the inhabitants there are progressive and aggressive, developing their resources and multiplying their wealth; and if I have spoken to any purpose I have shown that they are doing that in both New Mexico and Arizona.

POPULATION.

Now I come to the question of population, and before I take it up specifically let me make some general observations. In the first place, the Senator from Minnesota told us with great particularity how long it has been since the first settlements were made in Arizona and in New Mexico, and then he commented upon that and called attention to it and repeatedly called attention to the fact that they were among the oldest settled Territories in the United States; and then he pointed to the fact that notwithstanding they had been settled for two or three hundred years they have only this population, insufficient, as he claimed, to entitle them to statehood.

Mr. President, why is it there has been this backwardness in the growth of population? You do not need to go outside of the speech of the Senator from Minnesota to find the answer. He pointed it out when he told us that New Mexico and Arizona were until only a very few years ago inhabited by wild and savage Indians, and he might have added Indians against whom for our people there the Government did not interpose any sufficient protection. Being thus overrun by Indians, people would not go there until it was made safe, when they could go to some other place where the tide of population was running. But that is not all. Take New Mexico. We acquired that Territory from old Mexico. We entered into a stipulation with respect to private property there—that all rights should be protected and titles be made secure. But how did we discharge that obligation? Not until 1891, I believe it was, did we take any effective steps or measures to settle the disputed Spanish land-grant titles in New Mexico. We then created a court, the Court of Private Land Claims, and set it to work. It is now completing its labors. I believe the time in which it was to complete its labors was extended at the last session until June, 1903. At that time its work will be concluded.

I have here the report of the United States attorney for that court. According to it it appears—I will not stop to read it—that that court has heard and has settled the title to more than 20,000,000 acres. These Spanish land grants, long years ago made, overlapping each other and duplicating each other, made it almost impossible for anybody to go into New Mexico and get a good title. Out of about 26,000,000 acres that were involved in these Spanish land-grant claims the court rejected all except about 2,000,000 acres, thus returning more than 20,000,000 acres to the public domain.

It has been only within the last two or three years that a man going into New Mexico had any assurance that he could acquire a good title to land when he went there. That was enough to keep people out. Did the committee which visited that Territory tell us anything about that? There is report after report on file in the Interior Department and in the Department of Justice as to the effect of this condition on the Territory, retarding development there, retarding settlement there, keeping back the growth of population; and report after report as to the good effect that would follow from their adjudication; and the good effects are following.

It is because these claims have been settled that men can go there now and get title which they could not heretofore, and for that reason they are going. It is for that reason that their post-offices are multiplying, their postal receipts growing, their internal-revenue receipts growing. It is no wonder that the population has not grown more rapidly. The only wonder to me is that it has grown as rapidly as it has grown.

ORDINANCE OF 1787.

Now, Mr. President, let us speak of the question of population. The committee in their report, to which I have already referred, undertake to tell us that the ordinance of 1787 lays down a rule as to the population necessary to entitle a Territory to admission to statehood, and they undertake to state what that rule is. The committee seem to have gone through the ordinance of 1787 as they are reported to have gone through the Territory—too rapidly to have gained a just comprehension as to what the ordinance does provide. The ordinance of 1787 does not establish any such rule as the committee has deduced from it, and there is no warrant whatever for their deduction.

I had before me the speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which has been printed in pamphlet form and in which I marked what I wanted to read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Here it is.

Mr. FORAKER. But I had one here which was marked. As I remarked, I had before me awhile ago the speech made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In that speech he quoted from the report of the committee as to what the committee says as to this rule, and with approval unqualifiedly stated that the ordinance of 1787 did establish the rule as laid down in the report of the majority of the committee. Here is what I refer to, said on that subject by the committee. I will read from the report:

> The last work performed by the Continental Congress relates to this, and, as Daniel Webster declared, is second in the importance, value, and wisdom of its provisions only to the Constitution itself. This was the famous ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory.
> This ordinance provides for the future division of said Territory into not more than five nor less than three States, and it fixed the boundaries of three of them, namely, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The fifth article of that ordinance provides that—
> "Whenever any of said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such State shall be admitted, by its delegates, into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government."

The committee then go on:

It is thus seen that the fathers, even in the eighteenth century, provided—

First. For very large States as to area and resources (for it was then well known that the Northwest Territory was rich in agricultural resources and the natural home of a mighty population); and Second. That each of these States must have a population which, in comparison with the population of the rest of the Republic at that time, was very heavy indeed.

This rule was referred to by President Washington in his message transmitting to Congress the constitution of Tennessee, and President Washington added that—

"As proofs of the several requisites to entitle all the Territories south of the Ohio River to be admitted as a State into the Union, Governor Blount has transmitted a return of the enumeration of its inhabitants, etc."

"SIXTY-THOUSAND RULE" BASIS FOR SLIDING SCALE.

This number, however, was not intended to be a permanent requisite, but a standard referring to the population of the rest of the nation at the time. By comparing 60,000 (the number of people required for statehood in 1787) with the population of the nation at that time we find the ratio which statesmen of that day deemed essential as between communities applying for statehood and the nation itself. At that time the population of the United States was less than 4,000,000. If 60,000 were required as the first requisite for statehood when the population of the nation was less than 4,000,000, the same rule would require a population at the present time of over 1,153,000; and every reason supporting the rule of 60,000 established by the fathers' ordinance of 1787 requires as many more than 60,000 now as the population of the nation itself at present is larger than it was one hundred and fifteen years ago.

They go on at considerable length to further discuss the matter, but I have read enough to show what they claim is the rule established by the ordinance of 1787.

Mr. President, the committee did violence to the ordinance of 1787 when they made that quotation as the expression of that ordinance upon the subject they undertook to discuss. The ordinance of 1787 does state a rule, but it is not the rule of the committee. The only rule that is established by the ordinance of 1787 is that which is found at the conclusion of the declarations which precede the ordinance proper, the whereases, I will call them. There, speaking of the purposes for which that Territory was to be organized and civil government established over it, they say, among other things:

And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these Republics, their laws and constitutions are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory; to provide also for the establishment of States, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original States at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest.

That is the rule established by the ordinance of 1787. No other rule was ever laid down by that ordinance except the one to which I now call attention.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not mean to say, I hope, that the quotation in the committee's report from the ordinance of 1787 is not in that ordinance?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not. The quotation made by the committee from the ordinance of 1787 is correctly made, so far as it goes; but the Senator omitted, when he was undertaking to deduce a rule from the ordinance of 1787, that which was more controlling in the matter of establishing a rule than that which he quoted. When the Senator quoted from the ordinance of 1787 he but partly quoted, and he omitted to quote a proviso which limits and controls that which he did quote. I invite the attention of the Senate to this. Here is the whole clause from which, only in part, the Senator quoted. Now, let us see what it is, the whole of it.

And whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein—

It does not say anything about having railroads, banks, and taxable property besides—and whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such State shall be admitted, by its delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government: Provided, The constitution and government so to be formed shall be republican and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles; and, so far as it can be consistent with the general interest of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

The last part of this clause was not quoted by the Senator when he was establishing his rule.

But is not that a part of what the ordinance said on the subject with respect to which the committee made the quotation? I submit, Mr. President, that if our attention is to be invited to the ordinance of 1787, there ought to be a fair quotation, and if we are to have a quotation from it at all, we ought to have all that properly relates to the subject.

Now, Mr. President, from that the Senator argues in his report that this ordinance required that there should be 60,000 people before statehood could be allowed. This he says was the rule of our fathers. They did not require any such thing. What they required was not that there should be 60,000 people for statehood, but that there should be statehood for 60,000 people.

In other words, Mr. President, the framers of the ordinance of 1787 laid it down as a rule that the Territories of the Northwest should be admitted to statehood whenever that could be done consistently with the general interest, whether they had 60,000 people or not, but that whenever they should have 60,000 people they should have an absolute right to come into the Union; that they should not be kept out any longer.

It was not a percentage that they were trying to establish. The Senator proceeds, after having laid down that rule, to argue that 60,000 was but a certain percentage which he figures out of the then population of 4,000,000, and that, according to that percentage, established by the ordinance of 1787, there ought to be 1,153,000 people in any given Territory to-day to entitle it under that rule to admission. His whole percentage idea is untenable. It finds no warrant in the ordinance.

Mr. President, that ordinance was adopted in 1787. There was practically not a white man living, as a settled inhabitant, in the territory northwest of the river Ohio at that time. The first settlement, with the institution of civil government that followed, was at Marietta, Ohio, in 1788. It was known by the framers of the ordinance that it would be probably fifteen or twenty years, as it was, before there would be any Territory in the Northwest Territory having 60,000 free inhabitants within it to apply for admission, and they knew that the rest of the country would be growing in population in the meanwhile.

They knew then just as well as they knew later that Ohio would not have 60,000 people until some fifteen or twenty years afterwards, and that there would be a growth for fifteen or twenty years of the 4,000,000 then inhabiting the 13 original States before she could apply for statehood; and the percentage of 60,000 would not then be of 4,000,000, but of whatever the population might be at that time.

They knew more. They knew that probably Ohio would be the first, as she was, and that Indiana would probably be the second, Illinois the third, and that of the two other States created out of that Territory, Michigan and Wisconsin, it would be, as it was, probably sixty years after the ordinance of 1787 before the last of them could be admitted. They knew that what they were doing was not to establish a percentage, but that they were laying down an iron-clad contractual obligation for the benefit of the people who might go into those Territories, that whenever they might have 60,000 free inhabitants, no matter if there were 50,000,000 in the United States, they would have not only a right to ask for admission but a right to be admitted. That is what they knew; that is the rule they established; that is the rule they afterwards recognized and followed. Ohio was the first case. She was admitted in 1802, long before she had 60,000 free inhabitants.

She was not admitted as a matter of right, because she had not yet reached the point where she could demand admission, but she was admitted because, according to the rule laid down in the ordinance of 1787, our fathers found it to be consistent with the general public interest to admit her without regard to her population, and so they admitted her when she had only 42,000 free inhabitants.

Indiana was admitted in 1816 and Illinois in 1818. Indiana had more than 60,000 when admitted, though considerably less at the then last census preceding. Illinois had but 34,000 when she was admitted in 1818. Michigan was admitted in 1837, and Wisconsin was not admitted until, I believe, 1848; and when Wisconsin was admitted we had, according to the census taken a year or two afterwards, in 1850, a population of 31,000,000 people.

Mr. SPOONER. The whole country?

Mr. FORAKER. The United States, I say, had a population at the next census, following only a year or two afterwards, that of 1850, of 31,000,000 people.

So the rule laid down by the fathers when they framed the ordinance of 1787 was that any one of these five Territories might be admitted at any time if it should be found consistent with the public interest, without regard to whether it had 60,000 free inhabitants or not; but whenever it had 60,000 it had a right to admission; and the idea underlying the rule was that it was due to 60,000 Americans living in a Territory that we should be willing to give them the right to govern themselves, as a reward for that which they had done for the whole country in going out into the wilderness and conquering it, driving out wild beasts and the still more wild, savage men.

Now, that is not all. Wisconsin had a right to come in when she did in 1848 if she had had only 60,000 people. She had more than that number; but if she had had only 60,000 she would have had a right to come in. The fathers looked forward to that and so provided. In doing so, they were not striking a percentage of 4,000,000 as a basis, for they contemplated only 60,000 in the Territory and 31,000,000 in the United States.

FAMILIAR HISTORY.

Let me here digress a moment to recall some familiar history with respect to our territory.

The ordinance of 1787 applied to the territory northwest of the river Ohio, now the States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and part of Minnesota. Shortly afterwards, in May, 1790, the Congress passed an act extending the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 to the territory south of the river Ohio, expressing in that act that the inhabitants of that territory south of the river Ohio should by virtue of that act become invested with all the rights and privileges guaranteed by the ordinance of 1787.

Two or three years afterwards—I have forgotten exactly the date; in 1794, I believe it was—Tennessee, which was a part of the territory south of the river Ohio, applied for admission into the Union.

Mr. BATE. In 1796.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; in 1796. First, Vermont was admitted. Let me correct what I have said. The territory south of the river Ohio embraced what are now the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi. The first Territory admitted was that of Vermont, which had belonged to New York. There was no stipulation in that case as to the time when she would have a right to enter the Union; but there was a stipulation in the ordinance of 1787 as to all the territory northwest of the river Ohio, and by virtue of extending it to the territory south of the river Ohio the same rights of admission accrued to Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Mr. BACON. I will correct the Senator, with his permission. At that time Alabama and Mississippi were not Territories of the United States, but territory of the State of Georgia.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; they were a part of the State of Georgia, as Kentucky was a part of the State of Virginia and Tennessee was a part of the State of North Carolina.

Mr. BATE. She was independent.

Mr. FORAKER. Alabama and Mississippi were a part of Georgia and South Carolina.

Mr. BACON. Kentucky and Tennessee, I understand, were Territories.

Mr. BATE. The State of Tennessee was the State of Franklin about that time.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true. I do not mean that they were a part of those States in the sense that they were included within the State government. They were territories belonging to those States.

Mr. BATE. Afterwards Franklin came in as a part of the territory of North Carolina.

Mr. FORAKER. For my purposes——

Mr. BACON. That is not true as to the State of Georgia. The jurisdiction of the State of Georgia extended to the Mississippi River in the original grant.

Mr. FORAKER. I think so, but there is a strip across the northern end of both Alabama and Mississippi that belonged to South Carolina. I remember that. I once had occasion to examine it. I did not think this was an important matter and I was not trying to quote accurately. I simply want to say that the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 were extended to the territory south of the river Ohio, and thus came to apply to all this territory.

TENNESSEE.

The first to act under it was the Territory of Tennessee. How did she do? The Senator from Indiana in his report alludes to the message of George Washington in that connection as though George Washington was approving the rule for which he contends. The record refutes the claim.

The State of Tennessee proceeded, without any enabling act being first passed by the Congress of the United States authorizing it to do so, to hold a convention and frame a constitution and adopt it, and to choose a legislature and elect Senators and Congressmen.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And to take a census.

Mr. FORAKER. I will come to that in a minute. She did that, and she sent her representatives here with a notice to the General Government that on a certain date the Territorial government which the Congress had established for her would go out of existence and the State government would come in.

When the Constitution was submitted to George Washington he transmitted it to the Congress of the United States, calling attention to the provision of the ordinance of 1787, which had inured to the benefit of Tennessee by reason of extending the ordinance to the territory south of the river Ohio, and saying, in that connection, that they claimed to have the requisite population, and they did have 60,000 free inhabitants. They had 54,000 whites and 6,000 free negroes, and, so far as the record shows, they did not have anything more. I do not know how much property they had; but there was nothing said about manufacturing establishments, nothing about banks. I do not suppose that there was a bank of issue at that time in the Territory. Of course we know that there was not. There was but little of anything.

Mr. CARMACK. The taxes were paid in 'coon skins.

Mr. FORAKER. The taxes were paid in 'coon skins, as the Senator says. At any rate, we know, Mr. President, that the only question as to Tennessee was, "Do you have 60,000 free inhabitants?" And she answered, "Yes; we have counted them." She did not let us count them. She did not consult the National Government. They said, "We stand on our right, under the ordinance of 1787. We have the right to come into the United States whenever we have 60,000 free inhabitants and we find that we have them; we are entitled to statehood, and here we are." George Washington conceded their right as far as he could. I wish to read what he said—and will do so in a moment.

The point I am contending for in this connection is that what the ordinance of 1787 conferred was a right to demand admission whenever there were 60,000 people. The Senator will remember that the ordinance of 1787 was afterwards extended to Oregon, and Oregon demanded admission on the same ground. She was allowed admission before she had the 60,000, but it was agreed, without any dissent whatever, that because of the conferring upon her of the rights enumerated in the ordinance of 1787 she would be unquestionably entitled to admission whenever she had 60,000.

I read now from House report, first session Fiftieth Congress, 1887–88, volume 4, the committee report, by Mr. Harrison, to accompany Senate bill 967. I call attention to the following as to the State of Tennessee. In this report Mr. Harrison reviewed the history of the different acts of admission of Territories by Congress to statehood:

The following extract from Hough's American Constitutions (vol. 2, p. 318) shows the course taken by the people of Tennessee:

"A convention, elected for preparing a State constitution, met at Knoxville January 11, 1796, and the next day a committee of two from each county was appointed to prepare a constitution. A bill of rights was reported on the 15th, and a frame of government on the 27th, by Daniel Smith, chairman of this committee. Their labors being completed, on the 6th of February an engrossed copy was read and passed; on the 19th an engrossed copy was forwarded to the President, with a notification that on the 28th day of March, at which time the legislature would meet to act on the constitution, the temporary government established by Congress would cease. This notification, with accompanying documents, was received by the President February 28, and laid by him before Congress on the 8th of April. The claims of the new State for admission were not recognized by all, but, after an energetic discussion, the bill became a law on the 1st of June, 1796. The principal grounds of opposition were that the proceedings had not been authorized by an enabling act of Congress; that the census being taken by those most interested in showing a large return might be liable to error; and that it belonged to Congress to decide whether one or more States should be formed in the ceded Territory, and to establish the time and manner of organization."

The message of President Washington, transmitting the constitution to Congress, is so full of interest that we copy it in full:

"Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives: By an act of Congress passed on the 26th of May, 1790, it was declared that the inhabitants of the territory of the United States south of the river Ohio should enjoy all the privileges, benefits, and advantages set forth in the ordinance of Congress for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio; and that the government of said territory south of the Ohio should be similar to that which was then exercised in the territory northwest of the Ohio, except so far as was otherwise provided in the conditions expressed in an act of Congress passed the 2d of April, 1790, entitled 'An act to accept a cession of the claims of the State of North Carolina to a certain district of western territory.'

"Among the privileges, benefits, and advantages thus secured to the inhabitants of the territory south of the river Ohio appear to be the right of forming a permanent constitution and State government, and of admission as a State by its delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever when it should have therein 60,000 free inhabitants:

"Provided, The constitution and government so to be formed should be republican, and in conformity to the principles contained in the article of the said ordinance.

"As proofs of the several requisites to entitle the territory south of the river Ohio to be admitted as a State into the Union, Governor Blount has transmitted a return of the enumeration of its inhabitants, and a printed copy of the constitution and form of government on which they have agreed, which, with his letters accompanying the same, are herewith laid before Congress.

"G. WASHINGTON.

"UNITED STATES, April 8, 1796."

That led to a debate in which some of the most distinguished statesmen of that day participated. Mr. Madison spoke, and he said:

The inhabitants of that district of country were at present in a degraded situation: they were deprived of a right essential to freemen—the right of being represented in Congress.

As far back as that in our history the right of self-government seems to have been greatly appreciated.

Laws were made without their consent, or by their consent in part only. An exterior power had authority over their laws: an exterior power appointed their executive, which was not analogous to the other parts of the United States, and not justified by anything but an obvious and imperious necessity. He did not mean by this to censure the regulations of this provisional government, but he thought where there was doubt Congress ought to lean toward a decision which should give equal rights to every part of the American people.

Mr. Macon said:

"There appeared to him only two things as necessary to be inquired into: First, was the new government republican? It appeared to him to be so; and, secondly, were there 60,000 inhabitants in the Territory? It appeared to him there were; and if so, their admission as a State should not be considered as a gift but as a right."

Mr. Gallatin said:

"The people of the Southwestern Territory became ipso facto a State the moment they amounted to 60,000 free inhabitants, and that it became the duty of Congress, as part of the original compact, to recognize them as such and to admit them into the Union whenever they had satisfactory proof of the fact. * * * Either you must acknowledge that their admission depends solely on the condition of the compact being fulfilled, to wit, their having the number required, or you declare that it rests upon another act, which may be done or refused by the other party; that Congress have the power, by neglecting to lay them out into one or more States, or by refusing to pass a law to take a census, to keep them forever in their colonial state."

He cites some others; but I have read enough to show the character of the debate, and to show that Tennessee, when she presented herself, did not come as a petitioner, but came as one having a right, demanding that she be recognized, that she be admitted, and she did not ask in vain when she applied to George Washington, then President of the United States, for a recognition of her right. He transmitted her constitution to Congress, calling the attention of Congress to the fact that under the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 she appeared to have a right to admission, because she had 60,000 free inhabitants.

MICHIGAN.

Later this question again arose when Michigan, in 1837, applied for admission. I do not want to weary the Senate, but I want to read briefly from one or two of these cases.

Michigan repeatedly asked to be admitted, and admission was denied her. Finally she proceeded without any authority from Congress, or any permission from Congress, organized a State government, and then sent on her Senators and Representatives to Washington; and they demanded recognition, and here is what occurred——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it is pertinent to ask the Senator a question at that point. Do I understand him to indorse the position that Michigan and Tennessee took, that they had a right to declare their Territorial governments terminated by their own act and come here and demand, whether the Congress of the United States saw fit or not, to be admitted into the Union? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is not material whether I indorse that position or not. I think that is a debatable proposition; but the ablest men representing this Government in Congress at that time, Mr. Madison, Mr. Gallatin, and such men, took that position, and George Washington took that position.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did he?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, he did; and I have just read what he said in his message, that Tennessee appeared to have a right to organize a State government and be admitted when she had 60,000 free inhabitants.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The reason I asked the question of the Senator was that I have listened with care to the Senator's able argument, and it seems to me the point he is now addressing himself to is that a Territory may, whenever it has a certain number of inhabitants, terminate its Territorial government of its own motion, and declare, as in the case of Tennessee, that it ceases to exist in that condition, and becomes a State by its own action without reference to the action of Congress. It is important to know whether that is the position of the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not important to know, for I am not making any such contention; but I will answer the Senator with all courtesy and respect if he will just give me the chance to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will.

Mr. FORAKER. No Territory can cease to be a Territory and enter upon the enjoyment of the rights of a State until Congress acts concurrently with it by the recognition of its Representatives, but a Territory can do as was done in the case of Tennessee, take the position that there was a contractual obligation between the United States and that Territory that it should be admitted to statehood whenever it had 60,000 free inhabitants. That position was taken later in the case of Michigan, and the claim was recognized in both instances, after an able debate in each case. It was said in the debate in respect to Michigan:

They have taken a census of the Territory; they have formed a constitution, elected their officers, and the whole machinery of a State government is ready to be put in operation; they are only awaiting your action. Having assumed this attitude, they now demand admission as a matter of right; they demand it as an act of justice at your hands.

So the debate goes on. I read this, Mr. President, in order that I may support myself in denying, as I have done, that any such rule as that contended for by the committee was laid down in the ordinance of 1787. No such rule was ever heard of, thought of, or even suggested until in this instance, so far as I have been able to discover.

I have read enough to show it was contended in every instance, when the question arose, just as I have contended here, that whenever a Territory to which the ordinance of 1787 applied asked for admission, Congress was free to admit it, whether it had 60,000 free inhabitants or not; but that it was compelled to admit it if it did have that population, or violate its plighted obligation. Not only was that claim made, but in every instance that right was recognized until it became an established rule.

OREGON.

The ordinance of 1787 was extended to Oregon, and when Congress came to admit Oregon the same argument was made. I will not stop to read it, but it is embodied in the same report, and anybody can read it who desires to do so.

I want to pass to something else. I want to quit that, however, with this general statement; and if I have talked to any effect I am warranted now in making the statement that the rule laid down by the ordinance of 1787 was not a rule of percentage. That ordinance did not say, or say anything in the nature of such a thing, that a Territory whenever it might have such a percentage of population within its limits of the whole population of the United States as 60,000 bore to 4,000,000 it should be entitled to admission, but it said that whenever 60,000 free inhabitants are found within any Territory they ought to be given statehood, that they should have statehood. That is what they obligated themselves to give, and what they did give in every instance; and where there was any question in the admission of a Territory to statehood after it had 60,000 inhabitants, it was because of some of the phases of the very troublesome question then uppermost in American politics—the question of slavery. There was a time when there was an effort to balance State against State, when States were admitted together, as, for instance, when Missouri and Maine came in together; and in so far as there was any delay in recognizing this plighted obligation, it was due to facts of that character, and to nothing else.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question only for information?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is very familiar with the history of the admission of Territories into the Union. I was at one time, but I am not now. Does the Senator remember any instance, except, perhaps, in the case of Nevada, where a Territory was admitted into the Union which did not possess, excluding Indians not taxed, a population equal to the then ratio of representation in the House of Representatives?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there are instances of that kind——

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I was about coming to discuss that rule.

We have had two rules, and only two.

Mr. SPOONER. But what is the fact?

Mr. FORAKER. I am speaking of a fact now, and I will come to the other facts in a minute. It is not material to follow it out, but I will tell the Senator we have had two rules as to the population requisite. One rule was that establised by the ordinance of 1787, and the other rule was that established by our treaty with France, which we followed in our treaty with Spain when we acquired Florida, and subsequently followed, with a parenthetical modification, in our treaty with Mexico. I will speak of that presently.

In every instance where the ordinance of 1787 applied, or was extended so that it did apply, to a new Territory, the rule prescribed by it was followed and was determined to be the one that should govern as to its admission—and that was that Congress might admit it whenever it saw fit, whether there were 60,000 inhabitants in the Territory or not, but that that Territory had a right to demand admission whenever it might have 60,000 people.

TREATIES.

The other rule was this: In 1803 we made the Louisiana purchase under a treaty entered into with France; a treaty with which all Senators are familiar. There occurred in that treaty language that I want to quote in this connection. Article III of the treaty with France provided:

ARTICLE III.

The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution—

"According to the principles of the Federal Constitution"—that is a phrase to which I call special attention—to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

While I am about it I will call attention to the next treaty in which that occured in connection with territory ceded to us, which was the treaty with Spain entered into February 22, 1819:

ARTICLE VI.

The inhabitants of the territories which His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution, and admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

Then followed, in 1848, the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, the ninth article of which reads as follows:

The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted, at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States), to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution.

Senators will observe that the language is practically the same that I have read from the treaties with France and Spain, and different in effect as to the treaty with Mexico only as it is made different by the parenthetical clause that Congress should have the right to judge as to the time of admission.

ARKANSAS.

Under the first treaty with France we took all that vast domain of territory that has since been erected into so many States and Territories. Arkansas was one of the Territories of the Louisiana purchase admitted to statehood; and in connection with the admission of Arkansas the question arose what was meant by the phrase "admitting her to statehood according to the principles of the Federal Constitution." Everybody, almost, agreed that admitting her according to the principles of the Federal Constitution meant admitting her when she might have a population equal to the unit of representation in the House of Representatives, whatever that unit might be at the time; that in this free, popular Government of ours representation was an essential part of all legitimate government; and that whenever a people inhabiting an area we had designated as a Territory reached the point in the development of population where they were equal to the unit of the ratio of representation, they were entitled to be admitted to the Union. That was the position taken.

Now, Mr. President, I want the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this fact: Not only was that the contention in the case of Arkansas, but it was the contention in the case of Florida as well. She was admitted under the treaty with Spain. In that debate the contention was that she had a population equal to that unit of representation; and she was admitted. The question arose, in connection with numerous other Territories when they applied for admission to statehood, and notably years afterwards, in connection with the application of Kansas to be admitted to statehood.

On this point Mr. Douglass said, in a minority report made by him:

While the Constitution of the United States does not, in terms, prescribe the number of inhabitants requisite to form a State of the Union, yet, in view of the fact that representation in the House of Representatives is to be in the ratio of Federal population, and that each State, no matter how small its population, is to be allowed one representative, it is apparent that the rule most consistent with fairness and justice toward the other States and in harmony with the general principles of the Federal Constitution is that which, according to the ratio of population for the time being, is sufficient for a representative in Congress. A reference to the debates which have occurred in all the cases touching the sufficiency of population in the admission of a State will show that the discussion has always proceeded on the supposition that the rule I have indicated was the true one; and the effort has been, on the one side, to prove that the proposed State had sufficient population, and on the other, that it has not the requisite numbers to entitle it to admission in substantial compliance with that rule. (Page 55, minority report by Mr. Douglass, February 18, 1858. Senate reports, first session Thirty-fifth Congress.)

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And then the rule of 60,000 inhabitants was abandoned.

Mr. FORAKER. The sixty-thousand rule was not abandoned. The sixty-thousand rule was not invoked because the ordinance of 1787 never applied to the Louisiana purchase. What I contend is that while as to all the Territories to which the ordinance of 1787 applied the sixty-thousand rule did apply, and was recognized as applying, whenever it came to territory outside of that purchase to which the ordinance of 1787 was not extended then the unit of representation was the rule, and that in such cases it was adopted and followed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator agree to that rule of representation now?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then what will the Senator say as to Arizona?

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator has asked me a question which he thinks is bothersome.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, I do not.

Mr. FORAKER. The rule which I tell the Senator has always been contended for is this, that Congress could, in every instance, admit to statehood when the Territory was under the ordinance of 1787, without regard to the fact whether it had 60,000 inhabitants or less, but when it had 60,000 it was governed by that rule, and Congress had to admit as a matter of right or disregard our obligation; and that when it came to a Territory organized out of territory acquired under these treaties they could admit before they had a population equal to the ratio of representation if Congress so desired, but that it was the duty of Congress to admit when the population was equal to the ratio. Congress, acting upon this rule, has admitted, in many cases, before the population was equal to the ratio. In fact, in only a very few cases did they wait to admit a Territory until it had a population equal to the unit of representation. In a number of cases they did, but in quite a number they did not. Now, let me read as to that. Here is what John Quincy Adams said—and I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts to it—in the Arkansas case. He said:

I can not, consistently with my sense of obligations as a citizen of the United States and bound by oath to support their Constitution—I can not object to the admission of Arkansas into the Union as a slave State: I can not propose or agree to make it a condition of her admission that a convention of her people shall expunge this article from her constitution. She is entitled to admission as a slave State, as Louisiana and Mississippi and Alabama and Missouri have been admitted by virtue of that article in the treaty for the acquisition of Louisiana, which secures to the inhabitants of the ceded Territories all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the original citizens of the United States, and stipulates for their admission, conformably to that principle, into the Union.

And throughout this debate it was conceded, as in all the other debates substantially, that whenever a Territory which belonged to any of these cessions and was governed, therefore, by that clause of the treaty, had a population equal to the unit of representation, it was entitled as a matter of right to admission.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I ask the honorable Senator a question, that I may understand his very interesting proposition?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator whether by the term "territory," when he speaks of a Territory having certain rights, he means Territory organized under the laws of the United States or whether he means a tract of territory?

Mr. FORAKER. I mean simply what I have been talking about. I have been reading from the record, and I have been showing what was said and what was done in the case of Tennessee and in the case of the other Territories that were governed by the ordinance of 1787. There it was held that they might be admitted to statehood earlier than the time when they had 60,000 inhabitants, but that they had a right to claim admission and to have it conceded to them when they did have 60,000. When it came to the other class of territory, that which we acquired by treaty under cession from France, cession from Spain, and cession from Mexico, the rule has been just as invariable as it has been under the ordinance of 1787, that whenever Congress might see fit to do so it could admit organized Territories from this territory to statehood, but that it was under obligation to do so, whether it discharged that obligation or not, whenever the Territory had a population equal to the ratio of representation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me in one sentence to make my meaning clear. I do not rise for any argument or any delay, but only to understand what I regard as one of the most interesting and important doctrines that could be laid down in debate here.

I understand the Senator—without going into the historical question at all now—to claim that there is an obligation now resting upon the Congress of the United States to admit a Territory which contains a population equal to the unit of representation.

Mr. FORAKER. Whenever such a case is made out.

Mr. HOAR. That is the claim which the Senator is supporting by these historical citations. Now, when he lays down that proposition as to our present obligations to a Territory, does he mean an organized Territory with a legislature or does he use the word "territory" in the other sense of a tract of country containing that population?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, I mean a Territory established by the United States Government, carved out of territory governed by the ordinance of 1787 in the one case or acquired under treaty in the other.

Mr. HOAR. Then that question is preliminary to another, if the Senator will understand——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to interruptions, except that it is getting late.

Mr. HOAR. I will not burden the Senator. He may be quite sure I shall endeavor not to do so.

Then does the Senator doubt that if there be an organized Territory of the United States, with 60,000 people and a legislature, the United States have the absolute power and right, if they think the public interests require, to abolish that Territory, cut it up into a half dozen Territories, or to annex it to some other Territory containing half a dozen times its population?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, I do not know that I comprehend in full the question of the Senator; but whether I do or not, I do not understand the purpose of it. In this case is involved the question—and I do not know whether the Senator has reference to that or not—whether the Indian Territory shall be added to Oklahoma. If so, it is a practical question.

Mr. HOAR. My question is this: I want to test the Senator's argument that there is a right creating an obligation on the part of Congress to admit a Territory when it has a population equal to the unit of representation. Now, I wish to test that argument by inquiring whether the Senator doubts that this being called a Territory which has that right is a being which at any moment can lawfully be abolished by Congress, lawfully be cut up into half a dozen smaller ones, or lawfully be annexed to a larger one with ten times its number, because it seems to me——

Mr. FORAKER. I object, Mr. President, to being any longer interrupted. I want to conclude my remarks.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not see the pertinency of the question, but I shall answer what I understand it to be.

I have been standing here for two hours arguing intelligent propositions, and not hesitating to tell people what I had reference to—not putting anything theoretically. I have been saying that under the ordinance of 1787 a right arose as to the Territories to which that ordinance applied as the organic government. I have been saying that under treaties with Spain, France, and Mexico a right arose as to the inhabitants of the territory ceded by those treaties, and I have been telling what that right is. I am not talking about abstract propositions. I do not know whether the Senator from Massachusetts has in mind Guam, Tutuila, or the Philippines, or what; but whatever he has in mind, I answer him that I am discussing the contractual obligations of this Government, with a view to making application of them to the case before the bar of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. So was I.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, if the Senator in asking me a question will tell me what he has in mind, I will take pleasure in answering him, but I do not want to be involved in theoretical discussions.

I was about proceeding to show to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] that in the debate with respect to Oregon this question arose, and Mr. Harrison calls attention in that connection to this fact. One of the members, Mr. Clark, said:

> I claim that Oregon has a right to come in under the ordinance of 1787, and that it is the duty of Congress to admit her on the same principle and according to the same rule established in that ordinance for the Northwest Territory.

Mr. Harrison, after citing quotations from all the leading debaters in that debate, adds the following:

> It is worthy of remark here that in this debate it was conceded on both sides that the possession of a population equal to the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives was all that could be demanded of a Territory applying for admission.

That is the rule, and there never was a departure from it until this late day. What I have been contending for is simply this, that when we come to a Territory that was a part of the Louisiana purchase, which we have seen fit to organize, or a Territory that was part of the purchase from Spain, the rule was not 60,000 inhabitants, as fixed by the ordinance of 1787, but the unit of representation, whatever it might happen to be at the time. That being the rule, it was followed as to every Territory, nobody disputing it in any serious way; that was the rule that obtained, that a Territory had a right to be admitted whenever she could show that she had a population equal to the ratio of representation and show that she belonged in the territory acquired by either the Spanish or the French cession.

TREATY WITH MEXICO.

I come now to the cession from Mexico. It is said with respect to that cession that the rule which we applied as to the cession from France and the cession from Spain does not apply, because there was interpolated in the treaty the parenthetical clause to which I have already referred. The article reads as follows:

> The Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution.

Now, it is said that because that parenthetical clause is inserted—"to be judged of by the Congress of the United States"—the same rule does not apply to territory acquired from Mexico, which it was conceded by everybody, until very recently, applied to territory acquired from France and territory acquired from Spain. Now, that does modify it. There is no question about that. So far as the naked legal obligation is concerned, it gives the Congress a right to postpone indefinitely admission to statehood. But history, concurrent with the negotiation and ratification of that treaty, shows conclusively that it was understood by the representatives of this Government who framed it and secured its ratification that it meant the admission to statehood of New Mexico, just as California was admitted to statehood, in the then near future, and there was no thought of waiting fifty years for such admission.

I might quote here at very great length, but it is enough for me to quote on that point from the messages of President Polk and President Taylor. President Polk said, in his annual message of December 5, 1848, page 641 of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, speaking of the slavery question and the difficulties arising as to its right to go into the Territories and be there established:

> It is fortunate for the peace and harmony of the Union that this question is in its nature temporary, and can only continue for the brief period which will intervene before California and New Mexico may be admitted as States into the Union.

That is one expression. President Taylor said, in his annual message of December 4, 1849, page 19 of volume 5 of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, after discussing California:

> The people of New Mexico will also, it is believed, at no very distant period present themselves for admission into the Union. Preparatory to the admission of California and New Mexico the people of each will have instituted for themselves a republican form of government, laying its foundation in such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

I might read at much greater length, but I am hurrying through, to conclude, if I can, this afternoon. Then at page 27 of the same volume, in a special message dated January 23, 1850, President Taylor said:

> With a view to the faithful execution of the treaty so far as lay in the power of the Executive, and to enable Congress to act at the present session with as full knowledge and as little difficulty as possible on all matters of interest in these Territories, I sent the Hon. Thomas Butler King as bearer of dispatches to California, and certain officers to California and New Mexico, whose duties are particularly defined in the accompanying letters of instruction addressed to them severally by the proper departments.

Thus he lay before Congress the claims of these two Territories, the claims of New Mexico as well as the claims of California, to admission to statehood under the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, concluded in 1848.

At that time, Mr. President, no one had a thought but that the same rule was to be applied to New Mexico that was applied to California and that had been applied—I mean the same rule of right—under the treaties with France and the treaties with Spain. While, therefore, under the parenthetical clause the legal effect is changed and Congress has a right to judge and has not broken any strictly legal obligation, yet it is in violation of our moral obligation to that people that we have not given them statehood ere this.

So, then, I claim with respect to New Mexico, it being a Territory organized by us, that she has reached a point, as shown by the last census, where her population is sufficiently large to indicate that she is entitled to admission to statehood as a strict moral right under the treaty by which she was ceded by Mexico to the United States. Such being the case, New Mexico has a right to the benefit of the rule arising under the treaties. I want now on that point to read one thing further from Mr. Harrison's report contending for the rule that whenever a Territory shows it has a population equal to the unit of representation it is entitled to statehood. He concludes the discussion with this statement:

> It may be said of this rule that it is not arbitrary, but founded on reason. It preserves an equality of representation. If we go beyond this, it becomes a matter of arbitrary caprice, of whim, or of party emergency.

That seems to me to be good, sound doctrine. It seems to me to be the announcement of a rule safe to follow. We know that it is a rule which has been recognized in every debate with respect to statehood since this Government was inaugurated and Territories commenced to be admitted. Mr. Harrison called attention to the fact that in the case of Oregon it was conceded by everybody, on both sides, that that was the rule of right which should obtain where they had come in under the treaty, and the right was to be admitted "according to the principles of the American Constitution." That clause was so construed by Mr. Madison, by Mr. Gallatin, by all the great men of the early days of the Republic, and has been followed in an unbroken line of cases from that time until this, so far as recognizing and admitting it may be concerned, although it has not always been acted upon.

So I say while Congress is all powerful and not required to follow any rule, except the general interest, yet when it seeks to follow a rule of right, there are but two that have ever been recognized. One is that a Territory shall be admitted, if it come under the ordinance of 1787, when it has 60,000 people, without regard to how great the population of the whole country has become. The other is when it has a population equal to the unit of representation, it is entitled to come in.

Mr. President, at this point, if it is agreeable to the Senate, I should like to suspend until to-morrow, at which time I will conclude my remarks, if the Senate will allow me to do so.

I desire to state, so that nobody will think I am going to take an undue amount of time, that it will require for me to say all I want to say, in addition, not more than three-quarters of an hour at the outside. I shall look over my notes and conclude my remarks to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, if I may have the indulgence of the Senate, I desire to say that I have consulted with the senior member of the minority of the Committee on Territories in relation to the statehood bill, and there is no objection to an adjournment until Monday on this occasion if it is the desire of the Senate to do so. But hereafter any adjournment of that character will be resisted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just one word.

Mr. ALLISON. If I may say a word, I had hoped the Senator having charge of the unfinished business would suggest that we hold a session to-morrow. Of course nobody after this Thursday will make a proposition to adjourn over from Thursday until Monday.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think this will be the last motion of the kind.

Mr. BATE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be resisted if it is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On behalf of the majority of the committee—and the suggestion is brought out by the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania—I merely desire to state that of course it is immaterial to us, as we are prepared to go on at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE AT INDIANOLA, MISS.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. On the 3d day of this month a statement was published in the Washington Post purporting to be a statement made by Secretary Cortelyou for the President in reference to the suspension of business in the Indianola post-office in the State of Mississippi. In that statement I find this language:

The postmaster recently forwarded her resignation to take effect on January 1, but the report of inspectors and information received from various reputable white citizens of the town and neighborhood show that the resignation was forced by a brutal and lawless element purely upon the ground of her color, and was obtained under terror of threats of physical violence.

Immediately after seeing this I telegraphed to Hons. T. R. Baird and P. C. Chapman, of Indianola, and asked them for a full statement of the facts. Mr. Baird was not in town. Mr. Chapman sent me a statement, which I will presently read. I have not before presented this to the Senate because of the fact that the Senate has been engaged in discussing some very important measures, both in the morning hour, and thereafter the regular order of business, the statehood bill, which is now under discussion, and for the further fact that my time has been engaged mostly in an effort to obtain a reopening of the post-office, which was closed, I believe, on the 2d day of this month; probably on the 1st day of the month.

It will be noticed that this statement alleges that "the resignation was forced by a brutal and lawless element purely upon the ground of her color, and was obtained under terror of threats of physical violence." In my efforts to obtain the reopening of this post-office I have been treated with very great courtesy by both the President and the Postmaster-General, but I have failed to obtain the reopening of the office, and I believe now that the President is acting upon misinformation and is ill advised about the matter.

Mr. Chapman is a lawyer of standing and reputation in that community. He is an ex-representative in the legislature of that State. He served a term of four years, commencing in January, 1896, in the legislature as the representative of Sunflower County, in which county Indianola is situated. This is his statement; but before I read it I want to say, lest it escape my attention, that I know the people of that community, and they are not a lawless nor a brutal element. They are a high-toned, chivalrous, intelligent, industrious, and thrifty people, and a law-abiding people.

This is dated at Indianola, January 6, 1903:

Hon. A. J. McLAURIN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your telegram of the 5th just delivered, and I take pleasure in giving you the facts as to resignation of the postmistress—

It will be observed that in this letter she is called the "postmistress," an office that does not exist in the United States, the office being postmaster—

Your telegram of the 5th just delivered, and I take pleasure in giving you the facts as to resignation of the postmistress. The facts are, briefly stated, that about the 1st of October the citizens of Indianola held a meeting and appointed a committee of three to circulate a petition asking Minnie Cox to resign; this petition was to be returned at a meeting of the citizens to be held a week later. The petition was circulated and was signed by a large number of citizens of Indianola. Wayne Cox, husband of Minnie Cox, on the evening of the second meeting, called at my office and said he desired to have me state to the mass meeting that night that he had discovered that the citizens of Indianola did not wish his wife to act as postmistress any longer, and he would therefore request that I read the inclosed resignation of his wife as postmistress to the mass meeting that night, which resignation he delivered to me.

The resignation was signed by his wife. The only request made in regard to the resignation was that his wife should have time to get her reports ready and get the office in shape so that she might get out with a perfect settlement of the affairs with the Government. He stated further that he had been a citizen of this county for years, and that the white people were his friends and had always treated him properly, and that he and his wife did not wish to hold the office when a petition had been freely signed by the citizens of Indianola, asking for her resignation. This resignation was read to the mass meeting, as requested, the resignation was accepted, and the time named for the resignation to take effect was January 1, 1903.

I was present at both of the meetings and can state of my personal knowledge that no threats or intimidations were made by any party at these meetings, no committee was appointed to notify Minnie Cox, and no official representative from either of these meetings had any communications with Wayne Cox or the postmistress relative to her resignation.

I can state further that I have not heard of any intimidations or threats made by any citizen of Indianola or Sunflower County against the postmistress. I can state further that the kindest feeling exists between the citizens of Indianola and the postmistress. She being an intelligent negro and not wishing to retain the position of postmistress after this petition asking her to resign, readily consented to tender her resignation to take effect on the 1st of January and deliver the office to a successor. There has not been any rough-and-tumble element, intimidating and threatening Minnie Cox, or Wayne Cox, but on the other hand everything is quiet and peaceable and no excitement whatever in the town of Indianola, and we, the citizens of Indianola, are much surprised and shocked at the reports appearing in the different newspapers, there being no foundation for these reports and there being no facts stated in them as to threats, intimidations, etc.

There were a number of newspaper correspondents here yesterday, and they were much surprised to see the condition of affairs here, nothing except ordinary usual business being seen upon the streets, except the great inconvenience caused by the closing of the post-office. Our town is not composed of the rough element, but, generally speaking, we have one of the best towns in the Delta for quietude, gentility, and conservativeness, and we can not understand how it is that the President and his Cabinet should desire to punish the people of this community by taking our mail service away from us, because we recognize that we have done nothing in violation of the law, and have simply asked for the resignation of an official. I have even heard where petitions were circulated asking for the resignation of a preacher, in this community and in others, yet I can state that the resignation, as asked for by the people of Indianola, of the postmistress was as genteel and as polite as a resignation asking for the vacancy of a pulpit. What I have stated in this letter can be substantiated by affidavit from 50 of the best men in this community; in other words, if the Department should require this affidavit it can be had right here in this town of the representative element of citizens, and of the rough element, if a tough element exists here.

I especially ask that you who have been so kind as to make inquiry into the matter bend every energy to have our post-office opened. It is a great handicap upon us. It affects the business of each and every one here, and it presents to the world a feature that causes criticism to be heaped upon one of the best elements of society in the South.

A number of citizens join with me in asking that you forward a copy of all correspondence sent to Washington, in order that we may see and learn how it was that such reports appeared in the newspapers. If such a thing can be done, we respectfully ask that you secure them for us, as we know that no honorable gentleman would deliberately falsify against his own citizens and neighbors. We feel assured that the reports have been sent from other places than Indianola.

Let me hear from you at your earliest convenience, Hon. Thomas R. Baird being out of the city.

I am, yours, truly, P. C. CHAPMAN.

This was sent to me by a lawyer of standing in the community, as I have just said, by a man who served the county as a representative in the State legislature for four years, and his statements in reference to this matter, I feel sure, are entitled to full credence.

The advice to the President was, and the statement that goes out from his secretary is, that "the resignation was forced by a brutal and lawless element" and "was obtained under terror of threats of physical violence." It will be seen by this letter that instead of its being forced by "a brutal and lawless element" the resignation was given because a meeting of the citizens, peaceable and lawful, had selected three committeemen to obtain signers to a petition to the postmaster to resign; that this petition was circulated and signed; that it never had been presented to the postmaster; but upon her knowledge of the fact, which came to her from rumor, as I suppose, that it was being circulated, she sent, within less than a week, her resignation, to be read to the next meeting, which was to convene just a week later.

So if these threats were made at all the threats were made between these two meetings; and if the threats were made there must have been some threatener or threateners. If so, they ought to be tangible, and it ought to be that they can be pointed out and the threats they uttered can be named, so that the people of Indianola may have an opportunity to meet them. As I have shown by the letter I have just read——

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to suggest to the Senator that in rising to a question of privilege he gives no one any opportunity to reply to him. If the Senator will get this matter in some way before the Senate so that——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, ever since I have been a member of the Senate I have seen this done, and I was a member of the Senate in 1894. When newspaper charges were made I have seen Senators get up on the floor and make their answers to them. I have seen it done within the last thirteen months in this Chamber, and I have never before heard it questioned. If the Senator from Wisconsin wants to reply, I have no objection to his replying, and if any Senator wants to follow up this indictment and make any charge against these people, I am ready to respond to it. I merely want to say that I am not arraigning anybody; I am not attacking anybody; I do not attack the President or anything he said. I do not attack the Postmaster-General for abolishing the office. I do not think it ought to have been abolished; I do not think that there was ground for it, but that is not a question which has been brought before the Senate—surely not by me. It has not been brought before the Senate, as far as I know, by anybody.

The point I want to get at is that these people have been charged with being lawless and brutal, and have been charged with making threats of violence against the postmaster, and when that charge has gone out with all the force and effect of an utterance of the secretary of the President, I want my constituents to have an opportunity to be heard in their defense, and this is the only way they can get their case before the country as fully as the charge is made by the secretary. That is all I want. I do not arraign anybody, but I deny that those people are a lawless people. I deny that they are a brutal people. I deny that they have made any threats which have been made tangible, that have been made palpable, that I can find. I have tried to find what threats were made and by whom.

As I said before, in my efforts to obtain the reopening of the post-office I have been treated with the utmost deference and consideration by both the President and by the Postmaster-General, and I think that this comes up from the fact that the President has been misadvised as to the state of affairs there.

There is this further statement in the Washington Post article:

The mayor of the town and the sheriff of the county both told the post-office inspector that if she refused to resign they could not be answerable for her safety, although at the same time not one word was said against her management of the office.

I have the statement, not written to me, but over the signature of the sheriff of the county, from which I quote this in reference to that point. It is under date of the 11th of this month:

No notice of lawlessness has been brought to my attention, and if there had been any I would have been the proper official to communicate with. And in any event, regardless of color or previous condition of servitude, my services have always been at the command of the citizens of this county and State.

I will further state that I was present at the citizens' meeting held in the court-house, and the only thing we stand charged with is that the citizens exercised their rights as American citizens to request a resignation of the postmaster. No threats were made or implied—simply a request. The Constitution gives every citizen his right to express his views on any subject.

In this county the population, according to the last census, is 16,084. These figures are considerably short of the total, but at any rate the negroes represent about 75 per cent of the population, and without making a close canvass of the records in my office, I will say that while they represent the above proportion of the population, they pay about 10 per cent of the taxes—paid to maintain the government. Under the above conditions the taxpayers should at least have the privilege of making a request or offering suggestions as to who should be their public servants.

A. C. COX, Sheriff and Tax Collector.

This letter of the sheriff from which I have just read is in the Memphis Morning News of January 12.

Now, then, I have a letter from the county superintendent of education, who is a lawyer, a gentleman of standing. He says:

INDIANOLA, MISS., January 10, 1903.

A. J. MCLAURIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have watched your course in defending the people of Indianola, Miss., with a great deal of pleasure. The interest that you have taken in our behalf, in trying to undo the wrong and injury inflicted on us as a community by the closing of our post-office by order of the President and the Post-Office Department, has endeared you to our people. The people of Indianola feel that the President and Cabinet acted on erroneous information, it matters not from what source it may have come to their knowledge. There is no community in the Union more free from "hoodlumism and lawlessness" than Indianola and its vicinity. Our people recognize in the President a man who has the courage of his convictions, and now that the facts are being printed rather than the inflammatory articles of the daily press, as was the case a few days ago, we feel that he owes it to us, as well as himself, to undo the injury he has done us. The opinion of the people here is that, since Minnie Cox has repeatedly assured the public that under no conditions would she enter the office again, there is but one manly course to be pursued by the authorities, and that is to undo as nearly as lies in their power the wrong and injury inflicted on the people here.

There has been no trouble in reference to Minnie Cox's resignation. She found that the people desired a change in the office and of her own volition placed her resignation in the hands of the Department. Whether or not she entertained any fears for her safety in the event that she reopened the office on January 1, I am unable to say, further than her every statement belies any such state of affairs, or, rather, I should say that she has repeatedly said both in Indianola and Birmingham, if the interviews are to be relied upon, that in no case would she serve as postmistress here again. She remained in Indianola four or five days after the office had been closed and walked the streets with as much freedom as any citizen in the town. She was and is absolutely safe, in my opinion, in returning to Indianola and remaining here as long as she wishes to do so and conducts herself as any citizen should.

There has been absolutely no feeling among the races here. Everything has been perfectly peaceable and quiet here, and but for the daily press no one would have ever noticed anything of an unusual nature. The people have been attending to their usual business as though nothing had occurred, and absolute quiet has prevailed at all times. We of Indianola feel that we have gotten quite a lot of cheap advertisement and notoriety that we did not seek and did not want.

We send our mail twice a day to Heathman, Miss., which is 4 miles west of here. If you can not get the office here reopened, we would appreciate the mail's being put off at Heathman rather than at Greenville. Crawford, the postmaster at Heathman, has two clerks in his store there, and assured me on Thursday of this week that he could handle the mail for Indianola without inconvenience.

The people generally of Indianola join me in thanking you for the tireless energy and interest you have expended in our behalf and for your defense of the good order and civilization of the community.

With every expression of regard, yours, very truly,

D. M. QUINN.
County Superintendent of Education.

Heathman is 4 miles west of Indianola; Greenville is about 30 miles west of Indianola on the same line of railroad; and that is what he means about wanting it put off at Heathman or have it put off at some place rather than put off at Greenville.

Some of these letters contain matter that is irrelevant, but, as was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] the other day, in having an article read as a lawyer it is not proper to withhold any part of a communication from the Senate.

One of the State senators from that district, W. B. Martin, is a man of fine standing there. He is a very reputable physician, and, as I said, is one of the representatives of the district in the State senate, being a man of high character. He says:

INDIANOLA, MISS., January 9, 1903.

Senator A. J. MCLAURIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On the part of Indianola, and myself especially, I want to thank you for your efforts in our behalf. Yes, you can always hereafter count on us for any cause you espouse. I sincerely hope that you will soon succeed in convincing the authorities that our situation is deplorable, very inconvenient, and injurious from every standpoint. You will see a letter over my own signature that will set us right before the world.

I suppose he refers to some letter that has been published by him in some newspaper which I have not had the opportunity to obtain:

If you think best a deputation from this place can come to Washington and give what testimony or help you need. Thanking you again for your efforts, with my best wishes, subscribe myself,

Always your friend, W. B. MARTIN.

What I intended to show is that this man, who is a bondsman of the postmaster, who is a State official representing the district in the State senate, is ready to say at any time that there is no danger to this postmaster, and that there is no lawless element that has ever interfered with her.

I believe that these are about the only documents I want to read to the Senate now. These people, as I have said before, have had no way of putting themselves properly before the country and before the world in answer to the charge that this woman was forced out by a lawless and brutal element of that county, and that she was compelled to resign by reason of threats of violence. There has never come to my knowledge—and I have tried to investigate the matter impartially—any threat that has ever been made by anybody.

It can be seen from this document that the people feel that they have been misrepresented to the President and to the Post-Office Department, and that they have a right through somebody to present their case, and no one, I suppose, could better do it than one of their representatives, either in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, who could put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that it may go out in answer to the charge that they are a lawless or a brutal element of people, or that they had offered any threats of violence.

I stated to the President this morning that I intended to present these documents here in defense of the people against any charge of lawlessness or brutality, or of forcing the resignation of the postmaster by threat of violence.

I thank the Senate for its attention.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. With the leave of the Senator from Indiana, I desire to say that I put to the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] just now a question which he declined to answer, and that I desired very much when he left the floor to state the proposition on which that question was based, which I did not. I still think it was a pretty important consideration in reference to the argument he was making, and I informed him that when the Senator from Mississippi had concluded I should like to state the proposition, and that I thought he would probably find it one which was worthy his attention, and that of the Senate—

The Senator from Ohio has left the Chamber, and I will not at this late hour in the afternoon undertake to ask the Senate to wait that I may make the statement now; but I shall seek the earliest opportunity, either before the Senator from Ohio proceeds or afterwards, to state that point to the Senate.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Monday morning, after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States. I hope that we may be able to consider it and dispose of it. It is an important measure.

DISTRICT OF SABINE, TEX.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of a bill which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

Mr. KEAN. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. BAILEY. It has no Calendar number. It has not been reported.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6039) to create the district of Sabine, in the State of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is not now before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAILEY. And I am asking unanimous consent to bring it before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. It will be necessary to discharge the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. It will be a mere matter of form as to whether you discharge the committee. It was not my desire to submit that motion. This bill has been before the committee almost a year. It has held four or five meetings to consider it. It is a small matter, proposing to create a district in the State of Texas. The session is now drawing to a close, and I had just as well abandon it unless I can get it before the Senate. My purpose is to ask for the consideration of the bill by the Senate without a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that can not be done without discharging the committee from its further consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I was of the opinion that unanimous consent would suspend any rule. If I am put to that necessity, of course I would have to move to discharge the committee, but I think that any request for unanimous consent can be submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6039) to create the district of Sabine, in the State of Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. HANNA. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 19, 1903, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 15, 1903.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Charles H. Marchant, of Massachusetts, to be collector of customs for the district of Edgartown, in the State of Massachusetts. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Col. Edward M. Hayes, Thirteenth Cavalry, to be brigadier-general, January 15, 1903, vice Johnston, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 15, 1903.

POSTMASTERS.

ARIZONA.

F. W. Smith, to be postmaster at Williams, in the county of Coconino and Territory of Arizona.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Jefferson F. Richardson, to be postmaster at Greenville, in the county of Greenville and State of South Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16507) making appropriations for the Army.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last night we had under consideration the paragraph relating to the construction and repair of hospitals. I want to move an amendment, to insert after the word "officers," line 19, page 29, a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, page 27, after the word "officers," insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter purchases of ordnance and ordnance stores and supplies may be made by the Ordnance Department in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $200. And hereafter all funds received as the value of military stores transferred by the several staff departments of the Army to the insular government of the Philippines shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and remain available for the procurement of like military stores to replace those so transferred.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order commencing at the word "and," in line 10, to and including line 15. I reserve it for the reason that Congress is left entirely without knowledge as to the amount of this round-robin appropriation, and I am not speaking of it disrespectfully. I suspect that it is very apt and proper that military stores should be transferred to the insular government in the Philippines, reimbursements coming from the insular revenues, as I understand it.

I only desire to know what amount of such transfers have been made. But to continue my remarks in the shape of a query to the gentleman in charge of the bill, I question very much the other provision in the clause, namely, that the amount received from this transfer shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States. This is proper and is, as I understand it, the law now, but he adds these words, "and remain available for the procurement of like military stores and supplies thus so transferred."

To illustrate what I mean, suppose a million dollars' worth of stores were transferred to the Philippines. As it is the Philippine revenues would reimburse or pay for that transfer and it would go into the Treasury. Now, this takes this amount and reappropriates it. In other words, the United States weekly, or monthly, or yearly, as the case may be, transfers the stores to the Philippines, being reimbursed therefor from the Philippine revenues, and it goes into the Treasury, and this provision, as I understand it, reappropriates not only for the coming year, but hereafter—makes it a permanent law.

It seems to me we lose all track of it. In one sense it is in the nature of a permanent appropriation. I think all permanent appropriations are vicious and all laws that appropriate money that render it practically certain that that is not the end of it, because in the fullness of time abuses grow up and scandal comes and we lock the door after the horse is stolen. It may be that in this particular instance it is not subject to that particular criticism, but I submit that that would in time probably be the result and therefore I reserve the point of order in time and call the gentleman's attention to it, so that if he can make any statement that makes it necessary I can withdraw it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, on page 90 of the hearings before the Military Committee this matter was gone into quite fully. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that in the Subsistence Department of the Army the same provision applies. They furnish subsistence at cost to the Government, and it is deposited in the Treasury and is always available for the purchase of like supplies, whether of the same amount or not, to replace those sold under authority of law. In the Philippines we are arming the constabulary; we make the provision for the manufacture of arms for the Regular Army and for the purpose of accumulating the surplus of arms for this Government—something every member of Congress cordially approves of. During the last year the amount used in the Philippines was so great that they came to Congress for a deficiency, and on the deficiency bill, enacted under the gentleman's lead, this provision was put in:

All funds received as the value of military stores transferred by the several staff departments of the Army to the insular government of the Philippines shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and remain available during the fiscal year 1903, for the procurement of like military stores to replace those transferred.

By that means money that was appropriated could be used for the purpose for which Congress made the appropriation. Some members of the committee were in favor of largely increasing the appropriation for the Ordnance Department, and many of them believed that at the rate at which we are going in the gradual accumulation of reserve supplies it will take too many years for us to accumulate enough improved arms to issue to the National Guard and to the volunteer troops when they are called into action.

Now, it seems to me this is no worse legislation for the Ordnance Department than it is for the Subsistence Department, as to which legislation of this kind has been on the statute book for a long time. And I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee on Military Affairs has such faith in his good judgment and ability as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that when we found he had adopted in the deficiency bill substantially the same thing now proposed in this bill, we had no hesitation whatever in making this provision applicable to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a word just there? As to subsistence, the reappropriation made is quite limited.

Mr. HULL. It amounts sometimes—has amounted within the last few years—to fifty or sixty thousand dollars a year; sometimes more than that.

Mr. CANNON. Generally not nearly so much as that. But if a provision of this kind is vicious, the practice in respect to it ought to be changed rather than be followed as a precedent. My friend will notice the language—

All funds received, etc., shall be deposited, etc., and remain available during the fiscal year 1903.

Mr. HULL. Limited to that year.

Mr. CANNON. Limited to that year. Now, I have no recollection of the item to which the gentleman refers. I will say that in the matters confided to the committee over which I have the honor to preside mistakes have been made from time to time. I will not say they would fill a library, but they might fill a big book. My committee has not the idea that when it dies wisdom will have departed—by no manner of means.

Mr. HULL. But it is expected that you will educate others to follow you.

Mr. CANNON. But observe that the very appropriation to which my friend calls attention as a precedent was for this fiscal year—limited to this year, and thereby confessing and asserting that it ought to be limited.

But my friend (using classic language which he will understand) "sees" the Committee on Appropriations and "goes better" without limit hereafter—for all time [laughter]; not for the coming fiscal year, but the year after, and all the years this "round robin" appropriation is to be made. Now, that just raises the salary, because there is no way of "calling" it. [Laughter.]

Now, I will put to my friend the question whether he believes it important, in the present status of the public service, that there should be a reappropriation of the amounts. Would it not be well to confine the appropriation to the coming fiscal year? Because my friend must admit with me that such an appropriation is along the lines of vicious practices—not corrupt practices, but vicious practices—in making appropriations. The former appropriation was along that line, and this goes much further.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in this case, where we are undertaking to meet a great condition in the Philippines, where the Government of the United States is going to furnish these guns, which are to be paid for out of the insular treasury, and where we appropriate for specific purposes, I am hardly willing to admit that it is a "vicious practice" to allow the money they pay for the exact purposes for which we appropriate money, and in the exact amounts in which we appropriate the money, to be applied in the specified way. I am inclined to think that if my friend will look further into this question he will agree with the Committee on Military Affairs that it is better to provide this money and make the appropriation in such a form that we shall not have to put it in the bill every year hereafter, than it is to make it apply to one fiscal year at a time. The result will be the same either way.

We are trying to build up a reserve supply of arms. We appropriate money for that purpose, and we divert part of the proceeds of that money for another purpose—the arming of the constabulary in the Philippines. Now, when they pay for those guns—when they pay for the munitions we furnish them, either in ordnance or powder, or whatever it may be, certainly no harm can come to the Government from taking that money and immediately applying it as fast as received for the specific purpose for which the Government of the United State has appropriated it.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] was anxious to increase all these appropriations, and I gladly yield to him for anything he may desire to say on this subject.

Mr. PARKER. Might I not ask whether it was not brought out in the hearings that as between the different departments these transfers were credited as regards goods given to the States, but not as regards the Philippines? My recollection is that the hearings brought that out.

Mr. HULL. We have it here on page 90 of the hearings. I called attention to that before the gentleman came in.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit to my friend, if he thinks it important in view of the fact that very large advances will be made to the Philippines, if it would not be well to strike out——

Mr. HULL. The word "hereafter?"

Mr. CANNON. No. Make it apply as to this fiscal year.

Mr. HULL. If the Chair holds the point of order well taken, I was going to offer that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think it is well taken to each.

Mr. HULL. I think it is.

Mr. CANNON. But I do not want to embarrass the gentleman in any way.

Mr. HULL. I realize that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think we better keep track of it.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman prefers it, I will move to strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 10, page 37, down to and including the word "transfer," on the same page, in line 15, and insert the following:

All funds received as the value of military stores transferred by the several staff departments of the Army to the insular department of the Philippines shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and remain available during the fiscal year 1904 for the procurement of like military stores to replace those so transferred.

Mr. CANNON. I would suggest that the Chair sustain the point of order, and then the gentleman can move the amendment and I will not seek to make any point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order and the Chair sustains his point of order. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, page 37, down to and including the word "transfer," same page, and insert:

"All funds received as the value of military stores transferred by the several staff departments of the Army to the Insular Department of the Philippines shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and remain available during the fiscal year 1904 for the procurement of like military stores to replace those so transferred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter details for service in the Ordnance Department under the provisions of the act of February 1, 1901, may be made, from the Army at large, from the grade in which the vacancy exists, or from the grade below: Provided, That no officer shall be so detailed except upon the recommendation of a board of officers serving in the Ordnance Department, senior to the eligible grade, and after at least one examination, which shall be opened to competition: And provided further, That officers so detailed for service in the Ordnance Department in grades below that of lieutenant-colonel shall not be again eligible for such detail until after they shall have served for at least one year out of that department: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to accept the sum of $10,000, tendered the Government by Chaplain C. C. Pierce, United States Army, and the Daughters of the American Revolution, for the purpose of erecting a memorial building, for the physical and moral welfare of the enlisted men, at such Army post as the Secretary of War may approve.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order upon the last proviso, commencing on line 3 and ending on line 10.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that it is subject to the point of order. The reason that the committee put it in was this: The Daughters of the American Revolution have raised a fund of $10,000 for the purpose of erecting a memorial building at Fort Myer, where a large number of people from all over the world visit every year. It costs the Government nothing: they have abundance of ground; the War Department has said that no harm could come to the Government by reason of accepting it. It is a voluntary tribute of the patriotic women of the United States, and the committee, without any dissent, put it in the bill, realizing that if any member of Congress objected to it it would have to go out on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask my friend a question or two. This is a sum of $10,000 for a memorial building. What is it to cost when done—half a million?

Mr. HULL. It is to cost just $10,000 and no more.

Mr. CANNON. Are we not to be called on to supplement it?

Mr. HULL. Not a dollar.

Mr. CANNON. Are we not to be called upon to fill it with memorials, at the cost of half a million?

Mr. HULL. As to that, Congress could do what it pleased. I will read what the Secretary of War says about it, if the gentleman desires to hear it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it long?

Mr. HULL. No.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. HULL. He requested that we put this proviso in, and then says:

Permission has already been given by the act of May 31, 1902, to the Young Men's Christian Association, and by earlier legislation to other bodies interested in a broad way in the welfare of our men, for the erection of similar buildings, and the establishment of such buildings has been attended by very beneficial results. While it is true that the Government is not dependent upon grants of funds from individual citizens, it seems well to foster such patriotic impulse as has prompted these public-spirited women to seek this means of proving their interest in our soldiers. The society has made in writing a full and perfect tender of the funds, and does not propose to retain any semblance of control over the proposed building. The ladies concerned are of considerable prominence and influence in public affairs, and I would deem it good policy to give this approval to their benevolent proposition.

Should the Congress grant the authorization I suggest for the acceptance of the fund in question, the Department is prepared to make use of the same in such way as will promote the welfare and contentment of our soldiers.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. Still, Mr. Chairman, that does not give us any information as to what is to be expended upon this memorial building.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that absolutely nothing is to be expended by the Government, and if in the future any additional expenditures should be called upon to be made by the Government, they would certainly have to come to Congress and get the approval of this body before anything of the kind could be done. I am not authorized to state here, would not have the power or the right to say, that under no possible contingency of the future Congress might never be called upon to appropriate anything for it. I should assume that Congress would have to appropriate to keep it in repair. I should assume that, but the expenditure is so remote and so exceedingly contingent on improbabilities that I can not see any objection to the Government accepting the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want unanimous consent for just two minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman shall have such time as he may desire.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, two minutes is enough. I want to say this. It is a little ungracious to make a point of order against a proposed donation for a memorial building. This does not say where it is to be placed, but the gentleman locates it at Fort Myer, and in the name of adding to the contentment and the enjoyment of those who are artistically inclined in the service of the country.

Mr. HULL. Before the gentleman goes on, I want to suggest that the gentleman from New Jersey calls my attention to the fact that it is specifically stated in the papers that this is for a gymnasium and reading room.

Mr. CANNON. That is good. Why not say for a gymnasium and reading room? But let that be as it may, I want to take this occasion to say that in my judgment the United States, with its 80,000,000 people, prosperous, independent, just, is quite able to pay its own bills where it desires to embark upon an expenditure.

This is a very small matter, and out of deference to the magnificent body of our citizens known as the Daughters of the American Revolution, in whom we all have great pride, some of us individually and all of us in the aggregate, I shall not insist upon this point of order.

But various donations are made by eminent citizens. I have one in mind now. Mr. Carnegie has made great and many donations to libraries. That is his privilege. I do not desire to criticise him for it. He made one here. I see that he gives notice of making now a donation for branch libraries to be scattered over the District. If there is anything we in the District of Columbia are rich in, now that we have the Carnegie Library and the Library of Congress, it is books. What I desire is that no eminent citizen or citizens throughout the length and breadth of the country shall by donation shape the policy of Congress. We are quite able to pay from the Treasury, from the people's money, all that is necessary for the General Government and for its citizens; and for one, speaking for myself, I should be gratified if, from this time forward, so far as the General Government is concerned, no donations should be offered in charity or otherwise by any citizen or citizens for the purposes of the United States.

That which Congress raises by taxation is a burden upon all, and that which is appropriated for is an expenditure for all, and, upon the whole, in my judgment, the manhood of all the citizenship is better conserved by the line of policy that I have indicated.

Now, you say, Why not insist upon this point of order? Simply because, I suppose, I feel that it would be ungracious to do so. This is $10,000, and I subside, so far as I am concerned, in favor of the donation from this great body of American women.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, we passed over some matters yesterday, at the request of the gentleman from Illinois. I think the first one is on page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to recur to page 4, where a point of order was reserved.

Mr. HULL. I do not think it takes unanimous consent. I think we must recur to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is correct. The paragraph was passed over by unanimous consent. The point of order was reserved.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Illinois yesterday reserved the point of order, and asked time to investigate the matter a little more fully. I have here a little brief on the subject that I will submit to the committee.

Section 3682, which is the first one suspended, provides that no clerks shall be paid from contingent funds. It was evidently meant to apply to the ordinary contingent funds of departments. As the word "contingent" is used in the bill, section 3682 holds and prevents a military attaché abroad, no matter what the emergency may be, from spending any of his allotment for clerical assistance. The case presents to my mind very conclusive arguments why this provision should be waived for military attachés and for the Philippine Islands, because it is impossible for them to have regular clerks allotted them, and it is a matter of economy for them to employ them on the ground.

Section 3648 provides that no supplies purchased shall be paid for until such supplies are received. The military information division subscribes for the principal military papers and periodicals published all over the world, and a large portion of our military information is derived from them. The accounting officers of the Treasury have decided that under section 3648 such subscriptions, which all over the world must always be paid in advance, can not be so paid by us, and this causes much embarrassment to the Department.

I will say, further, that from information received since yesterday from the War Department I learn that during the progress of the war in South Africa the military information division subscribed for papers in Europe, especially copies of the London Times and for the editions of the New York Herald, and made up scrapbooks from them, so that they were able to prepare maps following the movements of the war, and were able to give to the Secretary of War information on the subject whenever called upon to do so. They could not, under the recent ruling of the Treasury, have subscribed for any of these periodicals if the provision had prevailed that they must subscribe for them and pay in advance out of their own pockets.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened to the gentleman and have examined the clause very closely. It seems to me that the exception applies only to this appropriation. I think the law is a very wise one as a whole and ought not to be repealed or permanently modified in part. But owing to the condition in the Philippines, largely a terra incognito, I do not feel like insisting on the point of order, as this is restricted to this proposition alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order to the proviso on page 4.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the next point reserved, as I remember now, commences at the beginning of line 25, on page 5, and refers to the cable connecting the Department of the Columbia with Alaska.

Mr. CANNON. Is that provision broad enough?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman suggests that it is hardly broad enough. I will say that it is the same language, practically, under which we built all our line of cable in Alaska.

Mr. CANNON. It says:

For the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of the necessary line.

I was made to believe from the language that it was proposed to buy a submarine cable——

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. Already laid in whole or in part.

Mr. HULL. If you want to make it perfectly clear, you can say for the purchase of material.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to have it modified. Is there a submarine cable belonging to private parties in the waters where you propose to operate by virtue of this appropriation?

Mr. HULL. Not by this Government.

Mr. CANNON. By anybody?

Mr. HULL. Nor by any government.

Mr. CANNON. By any individual?

Mr. HULL. Nor by any individual.

Mr. CANNON. Or corporation?

Mr. HULL. Nor corporation. There is a Canadian line coming from the port of Vancouver that connects with Alaska. Then we have a land line of telegraph connecting with Vancouver, but there is no cable line that connects even the British possessions with our cable line. It is an overland wire, as I understand now, that the Canadian government has established.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to get at is this. Is it proposed by virtue of this appropriation to purchase a telegraph line or a submarine cable from anybody?

Mr. HULL. It is not. It is proposed by this to purchase the material, lay the cable, and control it entirely by the United States Government, connecting the Department of Columbia with Alaska. The Government now controls in Alaska over 1,100 miles of cable, but we have no connection with this from this country at all.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to insist on the point of order. I am willing that the House should dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember of any other point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk has no record of any other.

Mr. HULL. That is all I recollect. Then I move that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16567, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them to the House in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 374 have had the same under consideration, and report the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That immediately after the adoption hereof the bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce shall be the special and continuing order of business until the same shall be finally disposed of, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills, conference reports, or other special orders heretofore made, or matters of privilege under the rules, and said bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the House is aware that some time ago the Senate passed a bill creating a department of commerce and Labor. That bill came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee had considered the bill, and the result was a report by that committee of a substitute bill. It is the purpose of this resolution to call up that bill now for consideration. No provision is made for any curtailment of debate or of amendment or anything of the kind. It is simply made a continuing order until it shall have been disposed of, subject, however, to appropriation bills and other privileged matters in the House. I assume there is no disposition to debate this resolution, and therefore I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of an act (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor, with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I presume that the time for debate will be controlled on the other side of the House by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], who was one of those making the minority report. I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be controlled by myself and by the gentleman from Alabama, and to be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the time for general debate be equally divided between the two sides of the House, to be controlled on the one side by the gentleman from Iowa and on the other side by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some arrangement with the gentleman from Alabama as to the time for general debate. How many hours does the gentleman desire?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Had we not better let it run for a while—say until this evening—and then agree upon the time?

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman prefers that, I am willing. I will now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] who reported the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the House are so well acquainted with the sentiment of the country at large in reference to the establishment of the proposed new department that it is not necessary to make any extended remarks upon the merits of the proposition. And yet, Mr. Chairman, there have been practically but two new departments of the Government created in more than one hundred years, the heads of which departments have been treated as Cabinet officers.

In the first organization of the Government the great Executive Departments which were created were purely administrative offices. It was necessary to have a Department of State to carry on the details of affairs with foreign countries. It was necessary to have a Treasury Department to collect and disburse the public revenues. It became necessary to have a War Department to administer the affairs of the Army. It became necessary to have a Navy Department as an administrative office to administer the affairs of the Navy.

All of the original Executive Departments at the time of their creation were purely of an administrative character. The creation of the Department of Agriculture was in a sense a departure from the previous policy of the Government. But the Department of Agriculture became not merely an administrative office, but it became an office for research and scientific investigation. In its nature it had nothing to do with, and was not required in order to carry on, the ordinary details of the Government; but the Department of Agriculture has shown to the country that an office created for that purpose may become of vast assistance to the people of the country. No doubt the success of the Department of Agriculture has had much to do with the demands or requests on the part of the commercial and manufacturing interests of the country for the creation of a department which should be devoted primarily to the promotion and consideration of questions relating to transportation and the industries of the country.

The only provisions in the Constitution in regard to Executive Departments of the Government are found in section 2 of Article II, wherein it is provided that the President "may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices;" and, again, that "Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

Just what constitutes an "executive department" or the "head of a department" has not been fully determined. It is quite certain, however, that the head of such department shall not necessarily be called into the President's Cabinet in order to constitute the department an executive department within the meaning of the Constitution.

The President's Cabinet is extraconstitutional. It is not provided for by law, but exists voluntarily and by force of custom. It has become the custom, however, that when a department is created and the head thereof is denominated "secretary" or "general" to consider him as a Cabinet officer. There is, of course, nothing to prevent the President from requesting the head of any other department to attend the meetings of what is called the Cabinet. But the force of custom as it now exists is very strong. No departure from it is likely to soon occur.

The meetings of the Cabinet necessarily exercise a tremendous influence upon the policies of the Executive. A department which is represented in the Cabinet is thereby given a great advantage.

The creation of a new executive department, the head of which shall be a member of the Cabinet, is no light matter. Only two additions to the Cabinet have been created by Congress in over a century. The Departments of State, War, Treasury, and Navy, and the Attorney-General and Postmaster-General were established during the eighteenth century and during the first ten years of the existence of our Government under the present Constitution.

EXISTING EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The State Department was the first executive department created and was established under the title of the Department of Foreign Affairs by act of July 27, 1789, the title of the Department being changed to Department of State by act of September 15, 1789.

The Department of War was created by act of August 7, 1789.

The Department of the Treasury was created by act of September 2, 1789.

A salary for the Attorney-General of the United States was provided for in the act of September 23, 1789, and the office of Attorney-General was created in the last section of the act of September 24, 1789. The Attorney-General has always been one of the President's family of advisers, known as a Cabinet officer, although his office was not in terms referred to as an executive office until the act of June 22, 1870, establishing the Department of Justice.

A temporary Postmaster-General was provided for by the act of September 22, 1789, and by the act of May 8, 1794, a general postoffice was established at the seat of the Government, with a Postmaster-General in charge. The Postmaster-General became undoubtedly the head of one of the Executive Departments of the Government, but the law did not in terms so refer to him until the act of June 8, 1872, establishing an executive department to be known as the Post-Office Department.

The Postmaster-General was not originally a member of the President's Cabinet. When Andrew Jackson became President, in March, 1829, Hon. John McLean was then Postmaster-General. He was not in sympathy with the idea of President Jackson that removals and new appointments of postmasters should be made on partisan lines. President Jackson desired that persons in the postal service who were not adherents of his Administration should be removed and his partisan followers appointed in their stead. Jackson therefore named McLean as an associate justice of the Supreme Court, and appointed William T. Barry, of Kentucky, as Postmaster-General on March 9, 1829.

By invitation of the President Mr. Barry became a member of the Cabinet, and the Postmaster-General has ever since been considered a member of the Cabinet and occupied a seat at the table of the President's family of advisers.

The Department of the Navy was created by act of April 30, 1798.

The six departments referred to above were all established practically at the commencement of the Government under the Constitution.

There have been many requests for the creation of new executive departments of the Government in behalf of various interests since that time, but Congress has been very conservative about granting such requests.

By the act of March 3, 1849, the Department of the Interior was established, but the name given to it in the title of the original act was a "Home Department." The Department of the Interior was intended as a "home" department. It was to have charge of those internal affairs which needed representation in the President's Cabinet. The Interior Department is one of the greatest departments of the Government in extent of its varied interests and the number of its employees. Many of its different bureaus or branches, however, have no connection or relationship to each other, and it is not a homogeneous department.

The Department of Agriculture was established by act of May 15, 1862, and placed in charge of a Commissioner of Agriculture, who was not, however, considered as a Cabinet officer.

By act of February 9, 1889, it was provided that the Department of Agriculture should have a Secretary of Agriculture at its head, and the Secretary of Agriculture is considered a member of the Cabinet.

The Commissioner of Agriculture, within the meaning of the Constitution, was as much the head of a department as the Secretary of Agriculture. He might as readily have been called to attend the meetings of the Cabinet; but it never has been the policy of the President to unduly extend the size of his Cabinet. To add greatly to its numbers would destroy its efficiency. It never has been the policy, therefore, of Congress to easily create a new head of an executive department who, under the custom, would be entitled to the courtesy of a seat in the Cabinet.

RECLASSIFICATION OF ATTACHED BUREAUS.

The desire to restrict the number of executive departments represented in the President's Cabinet has caused Congress to place in various existing departments many subjects not at all related to the original purpose of the department. For instance, under the Department of the Treasury we have the office of Supervising Architect, the Bureau of Statistics, the Life-Saving Service, the Office of Steamboat Inspection, the Light-House Board, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the National Bureau of Standards, and the United States Health Service.

Under the Department of War we have the improvement of rivers and harbors as aids to navigation.

Under the Department of the Navy we have the Hydrographic Office, the Naval Observatory, the Director of the Nautical Almanac.

While outside of any of the principal Executive Departments we have the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Department of Labor, the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and the Smithsonian Institution, including under its control such scientific divisions as the National Museum, the Bureau of American Ethnology, the National Zoological Park, and the Astrophysical Observatory.

It is quite apparent from a casual examination that a proper rearrangement of the various divisions and branches of the Government service might in some cases be of considerable benefit. It is also apparent that those things which grow can never have the same degree of uniformity and regularity as do those things which are made to order.

The study which your committee has made of this subject, however, convinces us that a rearrangement and reclassification of the different bureaus and divisions of the public service devoted to scientific pursuit might well be made with great resulting benefit.

The original six Executive Departments were each created because of a necessity and propriety which was apparent. The Interior Department was created because at the time it seemed very desirable to relieve some of the other departments of what were to them excrescences, and also create an official adviser to the President who would give particular attention to the growth and development of our country internally.

The Department of Agriculture was established from a sense of eminent fitness, and its work has more than justified the most ardent prophecies of those who urged its creation.

The same may be said of all the scientific divisions in the different departments. The Weather Bureau, for instance, is the foremost meteorological institution in the world. The Geological Survey is not equaled in any other country. The Coast and Geodetic Survey is the envy of all other nations. The Naval Observatory and the Nautical Almanac direct the course of the shipping of the world. Equal praise might well be given to many other scientific branches of the Government.

It is very evident, however, that some of the statistical or other scientific bureaus of the Government have no special connection with the general purpose of the departments in which they happen to be respectively located.

REASONS FOR NEW DEPARTMENT.

Having in view the conservatism of Congress in regard to creating new seats in the Cabinet, the committee has carefully examined the proposition to create a new department of commerce and labor. We have had called to our attention the fact that interested and public-spirited persons are now urging Congress to establish several new Cabinet positions by creating various new departments, such as the department of commerce, the department of labor, the department of mines and mining, the department of education, etc. It is evident that not more than one new department of the Government is likely to be created at this time in view of our past policy, but it has seemed to your committee that the enormous interests in our country not engaged in agriculture, but now engaged in trade and transportation, in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, might well have gathered together into one new executive department of the Government those branches of the public service clearly related to their interests and which could easily be detached from the departments in which they now are. We think also that the Government might well give special consideration to the home industries of our country by giving them direct representation in the Cabinet as well as by the creation of some new bureaus devoted to their interests.

INDUSTRIAL GROWTH.

The growth of business and laboring interests of our country in recent years has been enormous, as shown by the following table:

FURTHER COMPARISONS.

It may be hardly fair to make a comparison of the present with a century ago, but a comparison of the present with a period immediately preceding the civil war seems apt and proper.

The population of our country in 1860 was 31,443,321; in 1900, 84,233,069; the population at the present time is estimated at 87,233,000.

The true valuation of the real and personal property of the country, constituting its wealth, was, in 1860, $16,159,616,000, and in 1900, $94,300,000,000.

The total number of depositors in savings banks in 1860 was 693,870; in 1900, 6,107,083. We have no record of the total deposits in banks in 1860, but in 1880 they amounted to $2,306,000,000; in 1890, $3,998,000,000, and in 1900 to $7,464,000,000.

The number of farms in 1860 was 2,044,077; in 1890, 4,564,641, and in 1900, 5,739,657.

The total value of farm animals was, in 1860, $1,089,329,915, and in 1900, $2,981,722,945.

The total value of farm products was, in 1870, $1,958,030,927, and in 1900, $3,764,177,706.

Our exports of domestic cotton in 1860 amounted to 1,767,686,338 pounds, but after the abolition of slave labor the amount of export cotton fell, in 1870, to 958,358,523 pounds.

For the fiscal year of 1902 our exports of domestic cotton amounted to 3,500,778,763 pounds.

The above figures exhibit an unparalleled industrial and commercial growth.

But there remains much to be done in the future. The industrial development of our country is far from having reached maturity. For instance, last year we exported 3,500,000,000 pounds of cotton. Much, if not most, of this ought to have been manufactured in mills in our own country into cotton goods before shipment abroad.

The manufacturing industries of the country produce to-day a value in their products of nearly $14,000,000,000, many times more than the total agricultural products of the country. The justification for the creation of the new department is that the business of the country warrants that the Government shall carry on some of the investigations, some of the scientific research, which it can easily do with the facilities at its command and which can be used when known by all classes of the people and all of the people upon even terms, but which now are carried on in secret by the employees of some of the great corporations and used exclusively for the benefit of those corporations. But we find that in the growth of the administrative business of the country there has come up in various departments of the Government different branches of scientific investigation and diifferent bureaus devoted to the work of collecting and distributang statistical information. And one of the purposes of the creation of this department is to gather together all of the different bureaus now engaged in the collection of statistical information, so that the duplication in the collection of statistics which now exists may be done away with, to the benefit both of the Treasury of the country and the people who make use of the statistics.

For instance, we have in the State Department a Bureau of Foreign Commerce primarily engaged in collecting and distributing information of a commercial and statistical nature, gathered through the consular service from foreign countries. As an example of the apparent if not absolute duplication of statistical work, I may call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce of the State Department publishes quarterly a document known as "Exports Declared," which gives the declaration of exports at the different foreign ports. Now, when goods are being shipped abroad to this country, the consignor makes out a duplicate copy of the invoice of the goods. One copy of the invoice is sent by the consul to the State Department in Washington, from which the "Exports Declared" are made up by consular districts or ports abroad. When the person importing the goods in this country receives his invoice and makes his declaration of entry at the custom-house here, he attaches the invoice to the declaration, and the customs officers make up their report of the goods received, based in most cases upon the invoice, and the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department makes its report of the importation of goods, based upon the invoice; and they publish their set of statistics. So that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce publishes one set of statistics, based upon the copy of the invoice which it receives, and the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department publishes another set of statistics based upon the duplicate copy of the invoice. I do not mean to say that this may not be a proper publication, because they are arranged upon a different basis; but even in that case they ought to be arranged with a scientific knowledge of the proper relationship of the two reports.

In addition to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce of the State Department, we have the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Immigration of the Treasury Department, the Census Office, and several other offices, primarily engaged in the collection of statistics. We propose to consolidate all these offices in the new department, so that the collection of statistics may be proceeded with on a scientific basis.

SIMILAR DEPARTMENTS IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

In the peaceful but fierce struggle for supremacy in the markets of the world our people ought not to be handicapped by reason of having no one to specially speak for their interests among the advisers of the President. Other countries have cabinet officers especially devoted to industries and commerce. The United States is almost the only one of the leading nations which fails to have an executive department to promote the interests of commerce and industry.

England has her board of trade, whose president is a cabinet officer, and her supremacy in the world's commerce is largely owing to the influence of her board of trade.

Germany has a minister of commerce.

France has a minister of commerce.

Belgium has a minister of industry and labor.

Austria has a minister of commerce and national economy.

Hungary has a minister of industry and commerce.

Russia has a special imperial cabinet of four sections, one of which is devoted to agriculture and manufacture.

The Netherlands has a minister of public works and commerce.

Spain has a minister of agriculture and commerce and public works.

Portugal has a minister of public works, industry, and commerce.

Switzerland has a minister of agriculture and industry.

Italy has a minister of industry and commerce.

Persia has a minister of commerce.

Most of the Spanish-American countries have cabinet officials whose functions are distinctly commercial in character.

EFFECT OF NEW DEPARTMENT.

Our people should be given every facility in their efforts to extend their influence in the markets of the world. Our people at home should also have the benefits which may come from the application of scientific investigation and scientific principles in the manufacture and transportation of the commodities which they use.

It is very evident to all that the General Government must, in some way and manner, enter upon the regulation of the modern corporation which, with immense capital, seeks absolute control of the markets for its own commodities.

Such regulation, if wise, will benefit and not injure the manufacturing and transportation industries; but if the attempt to regulate be made without due caution and be carried on with bitterness and without wisdom, it may cause a far greater injury to our people and the industries of our country than the evil which we seek to combat.

The Home or Interior Department was created in 1849. Following its creation came the homestead and some other land laws which have done so much toward the rapid upbuilding of the Far West.

Within its few years of active development the Agricultural Department, through its scientific bureaus, has been of inestimable benefit.

We believe that similar results can be accomplished through a department of industries which will seek, through statistical and other scientific investigation, both at home and abroad, to furnish information which will result in inestimable advantage to our people. The manufacturing and commercial interests of our country, now swollen to such enormous proportions, urgently request that they be given the consideration of a department especially devoted to the acquirement of information which will be useful to all people engaged in those pursuits.

With a proper person, of liberal mind, broad information, the acquaintance of a lifetime with subjects of trade, labor, and commerce, with a knowledge of the wants and needs of business, named by the President as the head of a new department of industries, the development of our country, both commercially and industrially, during the next few years will be accelerated to a degree not now believed possible.

If a department of industries be created, Congress ought, in order to make it most useful and effective, to transfer to it those existing branches and departments of the public service germane to the subject of commerce, manufactures, and other industries, so far as they can be transferred without too great friction and without crippling other departments of the service.

BUREAUS OMITTED.

The bill as it came to your committee from the Senate proposed to transfer to the new department the following:

From the State Department, the Bureau of Foreign Commerce.

From the Treasury Department, the Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Board, the Light-House Service, the Marine-Hospital Service, the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Navigation, the United States Shipping Commissioners, the Bureau of Immigration, the Bureau of Statistics.

From the Interior Department, the Census Office.

It also transferred the independent Department of Labor and the office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

Your committee has concluded, after investigation, that some of these transfers, if made under the pending bill, would create considerable confusion without corresponding benefit.

The Life-Saving Service is at the present time dependent to a certain extent upon the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the Revenue-Cutter Service is a part of the customs service, so that no transfer could be made without making provision for other inspectors of the Life-Saving Service and without various changes in existing law. It seems, however, certain that in so far as the Life-Saving Service is now a collector of marine statistics its duty in this respect ought to be transferred to the new department, which it is proposed to make the center of statistical information in the Government.

The United States Health Service, formerly termed the Marine-Hospital Service, has certain duties to perform in connection with quarantine which might produce a conflict of authority with the Treasury Department if that service should be transferred from the Treasury Department to the new department.

Possibly the Steamboat-Inspection Service might be transferred without great injury to the public interests, but that Bureau has largely to do with collectors of customs at the different ports, and it has not been thought wise by your committee at this time to recommend its transfer.

There are some very strong reasons in favor of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation and the United States shipping commissioners from the Treasury Department to the new department. The title of the Bureau of Navigation, however, is not an entirely correct description of the duties of that office. The Bureau has to do with the collection of tonnage taxes. The tonnage taxes are collected from a ship on her entry from a foreign port through a collector of the port. The act of Congress provides that on all questions of interpretation growing out of the laws as to the question of tonnage taxes and the refund of such taxes when collected erroneously or illegally the decision of the Commissioner of Navigation shall be final.

While, therefore, the collection of the tonnage tax is made by the collector of customs, the legality or accuracy of any tax goes to the Bureau of Navigation for determination. It is very evident that in order to preserve symmetry in the matter of the collection of tonnage taxes it would be necessary to have a revision of the laws upon the subject before a transfer of the Bureau of Navigation could safely be made from the Treasury Department. We have not, therefore, included the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation to the new department in the bill as recommended by your committee for passage.

The United States shipping commissioners are officers of the Treasury Department, located at the principal ports, engaged in supervising the affairs of seamen. All seamen who enlist as members of crews of vessels are required to enter into a contract with a proper officer or owner of a vessel before a United States shipping commissioner. He looks after them to see that no unfair advantage is taken of them and generally looks after their welfare. These commissioners report directly to the Bureau of Navigation and through the Bureau of Navigation to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Commissioner of Navigation exercises a sort of appellate jurisdiction over the contracts or form of contracts entered into by the seamen.

While it would seem desirable, for some reasons, to have the United States shipping commissioners under the control of a department of commerce and labor, yet, under existing laws, their duties are so affected by their relationship to the Bureau of Navigation and the collectors of customs at the various ports that it is not deemed desirable at the present time to recommend the transfer of the Bureau from the Treasury Department.

BUREAUS TRANSFERRED TO NEW DEPARTMENT.

The Light-House Service is maintained as an essential aid to commerce. It is an establishment by itself, not closely interwoven with other branches of the Treasury Department, and may well be placed in the new department.

The newly created National Bureau of Standards is a bureau which necessarily goes into a department primarily devoted to manufacturing and commercial interests. This Bureau is destined to exercise great influence upon the development of business and commerce of our country.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey is essentially a scientific bureau, and its work is mainly for the benefit of commerce or science.

The Bureau of Statistics presents some difficulties in the way of transfer from the Treasury Department. That Bureau derives its statistics in the first instance from collectors of customs; but its scope has been recently greatly broadened. The Treasury Department is not primarily a department devoted to the collection of statistics. Statistical information is of primary value to labor, commerce, and manufacturing. We think, too, that all of the branches of the public service directed to the collection and dissemination of statistics ought to be, as far as possible, gathered under one head.

The Census Office has recently been made a permanent bureau.

Your committee therefore recommends that the Light-House Service, the National Bureau of Standards, and the Coast and Geodetic Survey be transferred from the Treasury Department and placed in the new department. We also propose that the Bureau of Statistics be transferred from the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Foreign Commerce from the State Department, the Census Office from the Interior Department, and all placed in the new department of commerce and labor, in order that the collection of statistical information, to which all three are primarily devoted, may be properly systematized and duplication of statistics may be omitted.

We recommend also the transfer of the Bureau of Immigration, including the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department over Chinese immigration, from the Treasury Department to the new department of commerce and labor. The question of immigration is of particular importance to the labor interests of the country. The Bureau of Immigration ought to be in some department in connection with the Commissioner of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Your committee recommends that the Department of Labor, as now constituted, be made a part of the new department of commerce and labor.

There has been some opposition to this proposition. Some of the leaders of organized labor who have expressed an opinion upon the subject have opposed the placing of the present Department of Labor in the new department. The opposition has been based upon the idea that whoever might be selected as secretary of the new department would be a representative of capitalistic influence and not of labor. In view of the opposition of some of the labor leaders to the inclusion of the Department of Labor in the proposed new department, we have given the subject careful and considerate examination. We are satisfied that the opposition is based upon a natural misunderstanding of the situation and a misapprehension as to the effect of such action.

The Department of Labor as now organized has its duties defined by statute. The statute provides that it shall be presided over by a Commissioner of Labor, to be appointed by the President. It is not proposed to make any change in these provisions of the statute. If the Department of Labor is included in the new department, the secretary of the new department will not have the power to appoint the Commissioner of Labor, nor will he have power to prevent the Commissioner of Labor from discharging the duties now imposed upon that office by the present act of Congress.

It is impossible to see, therefore, how there can come any injurious effect from including the Labor Department in the new department of commerce and labor. As the law now exists, the President can, at any time, name some one for appointment as Commissioner of Labor who may be adverse to labor and favorable to capital as against labor. It is not likely that any President will ever do this, and it is equally unlikely that he would do it if the Department of Labor were made a part of the department of commerce and labor.

One of the reasons which has been urged why the Labor Department should not be included in the new department is that there ought to be created a secretary of the Labor Department, with a seat in the Cabinet. Whether this is likely to be done in view of the conservative action in creating new Cabinet officers in the past, is not now the question. But it will be as easy to create a secretary of labor if the Department of Labor is, for the present, included in the new department as it would be if the Labor Department is left out by itself. In fact, it seems much more likely that the Labor Department will grow in the scope of its work, and hence be more likely to warrant the creation of a new Cabinet officer to represent labor interests if the proposed action is taken than would be the case if the Labor Department is left as it now is.

It has been a natural fear on the part of some of the labor leaders that the new secretary of commerce and labor would have a bias in favor of capital and against labor. Granting, for the sake of argument, that this may be true, it still would leave the Labor Department as well off as it now is. No bias of the secretary of commerce and labor could control or affect a Commissioner of Labor, who is not subject to removal by him and whose actions and reports are not subject to his control.

It may very properly be asked, then, why should the Department of Labor be included in the new department if the secretary of the new department will have no control over the Commissioner of Labor? The duties of the Commissioner of Labor largely relate to the collection of information and publication of labor statistics. The Labor Department has a force of statistical experts. Congress occasionally, at the suggestion of the Labor Department, directs that department, by resolution, to gather, compile, and publish certain statistical information of interest to labor. This work is done in addition to the ordinary performance of duties of the Labor Department. There is much information of great value to labor and laboring men which the Department of Labor has not been able to gather, but which it might well and easily obtain if it could help to lay out and plan the work of the permanent Census Office.

The Department of Labor as now constituted is principally a statistical department. Most of its duties pertain to the gathering of statistical and other information. If the Department of Labor and the permanent Census Office are in one new department of the Government it will be an easy and natural thing for the Department of Labor to avail itself of the experts in the Census Office for the collection of statistics in addition to what are now collected, and which the Department of Labor can properly arrange for publication. I believe that the value of the Department of Labor in the collection and publication of information will be increased many fold by including in it the same general department of the Government which contains the permanent Census Office and the other statistical bureaus of the Government.

Including the Department of Labor in the new department will also call attention in a public manner to much information which is now collected, but not made much use of. The Department of Labor has collected since its organization much useful information in reference to labor legislation. Very little of this information has ever been called to the attention of members of Congress in an effective way. It is a burden upon every member of Congress to endeavor to make an examination of the annual reports of the different general departments. A statement or recommendation included in the President's message is sure to be noticed. A statement or recommendation in the annual report of one of the Cabinet officers is likely to attract some attention; but the opinion or recommendation of the head of a branch of the service not connected with one of the general departments is apt to be overlooked—not from design, not from thoughtlessness, not from lack of interest, but from lack of time and endurance.

If the Commissioner of Labor is under the secretary of commerce and labor, he will make a report to the secretary of commerce and labor. That report will be published with the annual reports of the department. If the secretary of commerce and labor approve of recommendations made by the Commissioner of Labor, he will so state in his annual report, and probably the matter will be called to the attention of the President, to go in his annual message. If the secretary of commerce and labor disapproves the recommendation made by the Commissioner of Labor, he will say so in his report, and that will call attention to and advertise the recommendation of the Commissioner of Labor in a way which will call it to the attention of Congress. Undoubtedly, our National Government is behind many other countries in the way of some kind of labor legislation.

I do not favor the inclusion of labor in the new department for the purpose of suppressing labor information and agitation, but for the purpose of advancing the interests of labor, and so that the need of labor legislation may properly be called to the attention of Congress.

The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, as well as the jurisdiction of the Treasury over the fur seal, salmon, and other fisheries in Alaska, should be placed in and conferred upon the new department of commerce and labor.

DUTIES OF THE NEW DEPARTMENT.

Section 3 of the act provides that—

It shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce; the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries; the labor interests; the transportation facilities, and the insurance business of the United States.

BUREAU OF MANUFACTURES.

It is proposed to create in the new department a new bureau, to be called the bureau of manufactures, the chief of which shall be appointed by the President. The province and duty of said bureau shall be to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all valuable and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.

BUREAU OF INSURANCE.

The insurance interests of our country have become so great, and the business of insurance is so essentially a matter of interstate business, and hence largely beyond any effectual control by State authorities, that your committee has recommended the establishment of a bureau of insurance, the chief of which shall be appointed by the President. It is proposed that the duty of said bureau shall be to exercise such control as may be provided by law over insurance companies transacting business in the United States, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying valuable and useful information concerning insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by law.

The fire loss in our country in 1901 amounted to over $160,000,000. Undoubtedly much of this loss could have been prevented through the publication of proper information, and undoubtedly one effect of a bureau of insurance will be to gradually secure greater uniformity in building laws and ordinances, with a view to prevent the enormous waste now suffered annually by fire.

Some idea of the magnitude of insurance interests in our country may be obtained by a reference to the business of the life insurance companies in the single State of Connecticut. During the year 1901 the 30 life insurance companies of Connecticut received in premiums $337,911,766, and received a total income of $425,083,858. The assets of these companies on December 31, 1901, amounted to $1,858,241,350, and the amount of insurance in force on the same date was $8,747,226,743.

The accident, casualty, fidelity, surety, and miscellaneous insurance companies doing business in Connecticut in the same year had an income of $30,402,353 and carried insurance with a risk of $5,164,309,834.

Eighty-five domestic fire and marine insurance companies of the United States and 30 fire and marine companies of foreign countries, doing business in the United States, received, during the year 1901, premiums to the amount of $148,917,206, and had a total of income amounting to $175,261,787, and paid losses to the amount of $91,280,379, and had insurance risks in force December 31,1901, to the amount of $22,507,245,944. These figures do not include all of the insurance companies doing business in our country and do not include a majority of the mutual companies.

It seems evident from figures cited that it is time for the National Government to take such notice of and exercise such control over insurance companies as it may be entitled to under the Constitution, to the extent, at least, of the publication of information of general interest.

The insurance business has grown up in the country since the birth of the country. It is practically but a few years old. It has become a business of enormous proportions. Nearly all of the insurance business of the country is carried on where the insured is a resident of one State and the insurer a resident of another State. Whether it can be called interstate commerce in the language of the Constitution is a subject which is yet undisposed of by the Supreme Court. But we propose in this bill to authorize the Bureau of Insurance to gather information concerning insurance and present methods of insurance companies, which shall be made public to the world. As matters now stand, every State in the Union has different provisions for the gathering of information in relation to insurance companies, and very little of that information is made public in such a way as to reach the people most in need of it. We do not propose to interfere in any way whatever with the authority of the States over their local insurance business. That in the end the creation of an insurance bureau and the publication of scientific information, or information made upon a scientific basis, concerning insurance companies may result in similar or uniform insurance laws throughout the States is not only probable but is very desirable.

BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS.

We also recommend the creation of a new bureau, to be called the bureau of corporations, the province and duty of which bureau shall be to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning such corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law.

The creation of this bureau will make it the duty of an officer of the Government to deal with the matter of corporation information, and to acquire knowledge and report recommendations concerning the manner and extent to which corporation transactions in interstate commerce shall be subjected to the influence of national legislation. We believe that this is a practical step toward the legitimate control of corporations engaging in commerce among the States.

We have not recommended any extended or specific legislation in regard to the character of information to be obtained or the manner of obtaining it, but have left that matter to await further legislation.

In the discussion which has generally been going on of late, and especially in those bills which have been introduced in Congress in relation to the securement of information from corporations, it has been generally suggested or provided that the collection of such information shall be had through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is a semiexecutive and semijudicial commission. It is engaged solely with transportation companies and with shipping interests. To place under its control the collection of all information in regard to corporations transacting interstate commerce would be to divert it from its present very onerous duties, which are sufficient to take up all of the time of the Commissioners, and would be to place a purely executive duty upon a Commission principally engaged in exercising semijudicial authority.

There is no doubt that at the present time, when the Congress and the country are seeking methods of curbing the greed and the rapacity of great corporations, which we choose to call "trusts," there ought to be under the Executive some bureau or department of the Government which can be utilized in the study of the subject, and to which can be committed by Congress the jurisdiction and authority which Congress may choose to confer upon the Executive in relation to the control of these corporations or in relation to the obtainment from them of information to be made public to the country. That can not best be done through a commission; it can not best be done through any office outside of one of the great Executive Departments. Such duties and such power ought to be conferred, when conferred, under the control of the chief of a great Executive Department, and there ought to be a bureau which shall be devoted primarily to these purposes.

TRANSFER BY PRESIDENT OF OTHER BUREAUS.

It is certainly desirable to have the collection of statistical information under the control of one department of the Government so far as practicable. It is also highly desirable that some other branches of the public service, such as a portion of the work of the Geological Survey, be transferred to the new department, provided that transfer can be made without undue friction or injury to the department from which the transfer is proposed.

We have therefore recommended a section in the act authorizing the President to transfer, by order in writing, at any time, to the new department of commerce and labor any branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work.

It is not unlikely that this section of the bill will result in the transfer of the statistical end of the Educational Bureau to the new department. Under this section of the bill it is probable that a bureau of mines and mining will grow up out of the transfer of a portion of the work of the Geological Survey to the new department. Other changes and transfers will suggest themselves to the executive department which will result in the more thorough system of scientific investigation and in a great saving of work which is at present duplicated in different branches of the public service.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. Relative to the provision authorizing the President to transfer statistical bureaus in the other departments of the Government to this department of commerce and labor, is it obligatory upon the President to do this or is it done when his discretion moves him to do it?

Mr. MANN. It is not obligatory upon him and is not intended to in any way make the transfer of the statistical branch of the Agricultural Department. I suppose that is what the gentleman had in his mind.

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose that under this provision of the law that transfer will ever be made, and certainly it will not be made unless it should be a matter recommended by the Agricultural Department itself; but there are various branches of the public service engaged in the collection of statistics where that collection is a duplication practically of the work done in the Census Office, and it is desirable to permit that work to be done by the new department. If we did not authorize the transfer it would throw out of gear the machinery of the Government, if the work were to be done in the new department and stopped in the old department, which would be the other way of getting at the same results. This provision also will permit the President to transfer to the new department, if it shall be his will, the main portion of the Geological Survey, scientific in its character, but which we could not well transfer in this bill because a portion of the work is devoted primarily to the land surveys and it would have produced a confusion to make a transfer of the entire survey.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. My question relates to the transfer of these statistical bureaus from the other departments. Is there anything in this bill now that proposes to do away with this duplicate work, or, in other words, are we to carry on this duplicate work by two or three sets of men gathering different kinds of statistics?

Mr. MANN. This bill incorporates into the new bureau the five chief branches of the Government service engaged in statistical work. It proposes to authorize the President to transfer to the bureau other branches of the service engaged in statistical work. I can not say how far that may be done. For instance, here is the Commissioner of Education. A large portion of his work is not statistical; a large share of the work now performed by his office is statistical. A great deal of the work performed by his office is also performed practically and to a large degree by the Census Office. This bill would permit the President to transfer to the new department the statistical work done by the Commissioner of Education, if he chooses to do so. It would permit the statistical work done by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be transferred to this department. The Interstate Commerce Commission has certain divided duties, one of those duties, and the principal one, being semijudicial in its character. It relates to railroad rates and discriminations, and to the punishment of those who receive rebates. Another of its duties is purely statistical.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman does not seem to get my idea.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of the bill is to do away with the duplication of statistics.

Mr. MADDOX. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MANN. And we try to reach that in the bill so that we will do away with the duplication of statistics entirely.

Mr. MADDOX. That is the object of the bill?

Mr. MANN. That is one of the main objects of the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, that is a good purpose if that is what it means.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. I notice that it transfers the seal and salmon fisheries in Alaska to this new department. Now, under the present arrangement, the law is enforced through the Revenue-Cutter Service. This will take away from the Secretary of the Treasury the control of this business, transferring it to another department, which will have no machinery with which to enforce the law. Is there not danger of that, and has that matter been considered by the committee?

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend from Iowa that I understand that the transfer of this branch of the service meets the approval of the Treasury Department. I am not certain but that the gentleman may be correct as to the need of the Revenue-Cutter Service in order to properly protect the seal and salmon fisheries of Alaska. I promise the gentleman that I will look into the matter further. I am not personally acquainted with the service.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, if the Revenue-Cutter Service is not needed in connection with these fisheries, what is there for the Revenue-Cutter Service to do in Alaska? As I understand it, the principal work that they have been performing there has been to look after the seals and salmons.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows my views upon the subject of the Revenue-Cutter Service and perhaps that is the reason he asks the question.

Mr. LACEY. I was not asking for the gentleman's views. I was delving for facts. I wanted to ascertain what arrangement there is to protect the seals and the fisheries there if we transfer this business to a department that has not anything afloat with which to look after these various matters. Seriously, it seems to me, that this transfer ought not to be made, and there ought to be some good reason for making it, if it is transferred to a department that has not anything in the world with which to enforce the law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has given a good deal of consideration, as I remember it, to the subject, not only of game, but of fisheries, in Alaska and elsewhere, and there is no one in this body for whose opinion upon that subject I have greater respect; and I will invite his attention to this thought: The seal business of Alaska amounts to but little now. We all know the regulations in regard to it, and we all know the difficulties about enforcing any regulations which we may seek to make; but the fishery business of Alaska is of great importance. The Alaska fisheries are of value. The Alaska seals are not of much value now.

The gentleman from Iowa well knows that there is danger that the salmon-fishing business of Alaska will be wiped out of existence. The gentleman from Iowa well knows that the other Alaska fisheries are now threatened with extinction for lack of proper regulation and control. The Treasury Department is not engaged and can not be engaged in the protection of the industrial interests of the country. The Treasury Department has the great questions of finance, of income and disbursements, upon its shoulders. It has the questions of currency which agitate us so often. But here is a department which we propose shall devote itself primarily, after the collection of information, to the protection of the industries of the country, so that it may make to Congress proper recommendations and reports upon these subjects; and no doubt when the Alaska fisheries are transferred to the new department of commerce, and the secretary of that department, through his subordinate officials, gives to this subject his best attention, we will have presented to Congress in some proper and forcible manner the need of legislation, for lack of which the fisheries are in danger of becoming extinct.

Mr. Chairman, with the transfer of the Bureau of Immigration to the new department, we have proposed the transfer of the control over the subject of the exclusion of Chinese. We have endeavored to guard this matter very carefully. The provision in the Senate bill has been changed, but I am not sure yet whether the gentleman from California [Mr. COOMBS] may not desire to present some further amendment upon that subject for the consideration of the committee.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if we create this department we will find that it meets the approval of all the interests of all our country. While in the end it will undoubtedly entail some additional expense upon the country, it will in some of its particulars restrict the present expenditures, and our country, which is growing great so rapidly, can afford at this time to create a branch of the service, the head of which shall have a seat in the President's Cabinet, devoted to the industries of the country, devoted to furnishing information for the benefit of the people of our country engaged in industrial pursuits, a department which, like the Department of Agriculture, will take its place among the scientific branches of public service in the world.

No branch of our public service anywhere stands so high abroad for its scientific work as our Department of Agriculture does. May we hope in the future that the department of commerce and labor may occupy a position upon an equally high plane. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who informed the House that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On January 15, 1903:

H. R. 16649. An act to provide rebate of duties on coal, and for other purposes.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think it advisable at this stage of the discussion for me to explain as well as I can the position of the minority on the question of this department of commerce and labor. At the proper time I will move to strike out from the title of the bill and from each section in the bill the words "and labor," so that it will read, "To establish the department of commerce." I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, why there is such an anxiety to include the present Department of Labor in the department of commerce and labor. It is readily and easily understood, it seems to me, and will be readily comprehended by any gentleman on the floor of the House who will take the trouble to read the extensive hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the subject, that whenever that is done, the independent Department of Labor as it is to-day, created by an act of Congress, will be placed in an overshadowed and subordinate position.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if anyone will read carefully, calmly, and dispassionately the hearings on this subject it will be perfectly manifest that that will be the position of labor in this department of commerce and labor. It will occupy a subordinate and overshadowed position. This bill in effect strips the Department of Labor of the dignity it has earned and deserves. Any man that is fair in this House would see, if he would think of the matter for a moment, that the secretary of this department of commerce and labor is in no wise likely to be a representative of labor, either organized or unorganized. You may say that a secretary ought not to represent the interests of any class. So do I say that. But can any man shut his eyes to the overwhelming probabilities, yea, certainty, in this matter? Who is asking for the Department of Labor to be included in this new department of "commerce and labor?" I propound that question, and I ask that it be answered in the discussion of this bill. Labor is not asking it, but is earnestly protesting against it. I am not here, Mr. Chairman, in the most indirect manner to indulge or engage in "pyrotechnics" or so-called demagogism of any kind whatsoever, but to present a fair, just, and proper consideration of this great subject. I am not here to ignore that which is right and ought to be done. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Order of Railway Trainmen, the American Federation of Labor, and the Seaman's Union all have entered an earnest protest against the passage of this bill with the Departpartment of Labor included in it. The recent report of the United States Industrial Commission shows that the number of employees engaged in railway service—which these railway labor organizations represent—approximate fully 1,000,000 employees, upon whom 5,000,000 people are dependent.

These are the people who protest most solemnly and earnestly against this transfer of the Department of Labor to the new department of commerce and labor, giving good and solid reasons for it. Mr. Chairman, it can be safely said that more than 10,000,000 of our people are engaged in manual labor, earning their subsistence from daily wages. It is not necessary for me to enter into these details and statistics. Then, I ask again, who are the people and what are the interests, in the face of this protest, that demand that the transfer of the Department of Labor be made? We know that the labor interests object. Why, Mr. Chairman, that great interest of the employers, who in a comprehensive sense are synonymous with commercial men, among whom friction upon the question of labor arises. They are the people who are asking that labor be transferred to this department. I say, if any friction arises, judging from the past, it arises exactly with those interests, those enterprises, and those industries to which labor will be subordinated in this new department of commerce.

Will not such a forced and unwilling and incompatible relation create on the part of labor suspicion, distrust, and discontent, and measurably destroy the usefulness and efficiency of the new department? Now, Mr. Chairman, I will refer briefly to the character of the interests and the representatives that ask that labor be included in the proposed new department, and in doing so I in no manner desire to reflect upon the intelligence, the sincerity, or the patriotism of the representatives of those interests. I accord to them full honesty. The first I notice is the statement of the president of the Manufacturers' Association of the United States. He said before the committee:

> The creation of an additional Federal department of the character suggested, with representation in the Cabinet of the President, would be of great advantage to the business interests of the country, and would thus promote the material welfare of the nation. There are innumerable problems which very vitally concern the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country, the consideration of which would properly come within the scope of the proposed department.
> To cite a single specific function which would properly fall to that department, I need only point out the enormous importance of the export trade of the United States in manufactured products. During the calendar year 1901

the total exports from the United States amounted to $1,438,000,000, of which $495,000,000 consisted of manufactured products, equal to over 27 per cent of the total.

In the last ten years our exports of manufactured products have increased more than threefold, and to everyone who has studied the possibilities of our export trade it must be apparent that the growth of the next ten years in this particular direction will probably exceed very largely the increase of the past decade.

It should be the function of such a department as is proposed in the pending bill to assist in every feasible way in the extension of the export trade of our manufactures.

We had also the statement of Mr. Noyes, of Chicago, Mr. Anderson, of Pittsburg, Pa., both of whom were highly cultivated commercial gentlemen, and Mr. Bass, a manufacturer of machinery in New York and an exporter, together with Mr. Prince, of New Mexico, and Mr. Butler, of San Francisco, who jointly represented the trans-Mississippi Congress. There were several other representatives who also made statements before the committee, but these serve to illustrate and define clearly the interests and influence urging the passage of this bill and the submergence of labor in the new department. But yet it has been earnestly contended by many of the representative gentlemen whom I have referred to, and indeed by gentlemen on this floor, that they knew better what was to the interests of labor than the laboring classes or labor organizations knew. Mr. Chairman, it is but the impulse of human nature to look shyly on the motives of those who protest that they love and look after our interests and our welfare better than we can look after our own interests. They freely ignore the accepted idea that self-interest is the first law of nature. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I will read from the statement of Mr. A. Furuseth, representative of the Seaman's Union, which expressses most forcibly the opinion of labor on this subject:

The CHAIRMAN. Give the committee your idea now of that class of advice, that class of consultations between the President and the head of this great department; for instance, on the subject of commerce that would be inimical to labor, or on the subject of labor that would be inimical to commerce, as it would be considered by the head of a great department like this.

Mr. FURUSETH. Well, I have not personal experience or personal knowledge enough about either to be able to say what kind of advice a Government officer gives, but I want to say this:

I have no knowledge of what a Cabinet officer's duties are, but what I am concerned in, and what labor above all other things is concerned in, in my opinion, as I know it, is that the information furnished the public, furnished to Congress for its use, dealing with the condition of the working people as to the hours of work, as to the time, as to the pay that they receive for it, as to the prices of things that they have got to buy to live, their actual everyday living conditions—that which touches us every morning when we go to work and touches us again at night when we come from work—these questions are to us everything in the world, because upon the condition that we have there depends our whole life. It determines what kind of education our children shall have. It determines what kind of clothes our wives shall wear. It determines the hopes and aspirations we may have for ourselves and our posterity.

The CHAIRMAN. But is not that common to all the people?

Mr. FURUSETH. It is; but not in the same degree that it is common to labor. Since you have asked the question I might as well state a word more—one that I said in the labor committee about a year ago. There is in the minds of the working people, as I know it, a fear, not only that the condition is not going to be better, but that the condition is going to be worse. There is a fear that in the changing of the industrial system that is taking place the working people are to be again placed by legislative act and assisted by legislation, in the relation to industrial appliances, in the same position that they once were placed with reference to land. There is a fear of that. Whether that is justified or not is a question, but that the fear is there and that they look upon and look toward every step taken as either a step from that fear or toward that danger, there is no question at all.

The Labor Bureau is a department which has been organized for the specific purpose of giving to the people the truth officially—the truth as to the actual conditions of the working people—to the end that the statesmen may use that in order to arrive at better and better conditions without disruption of existing forms of society. When the workingman finds that this is to be covered in something else in such a way as to take away its strength, its efficiency, its reliability, he is at once full of suspicion—he fears it. He fears it as he fears arbitration laws. He fears it as he fears injunctions. He fears it as he fears those combinations that make it possible for one man to say how much I shall get a day and how many hours of labor I shall work, or whether I shall work at all or not.

He feels it. He feels it every day and fears it, and through those fears and apprehensions there runs the sentiment of the working people, something that very few men who have not been among the working people, who do not live there and feel there all the time, can grasp or get hold of. It is a fear that at the present time is almost nameless, because it is not understood even among themselves; but the fear is there, and anything that is done toward creating a stronger fear, anything that is done that will add to that apprehension, will have a disquieting influence and will be disastrous to the confidence that the working people would so gladly continue to have in the legislative branches of the Government of the United States.

Can anyone read the above statement made by the president of the Manufacturers' Association of the United States and not plainly see that he thinks that the chief function of the department of commerce and labor would be to look after our export trade? Do you or anyone else believe that the Manufacturers' Association would accept a representative of labor as a suitable man for secretary of such a department? Why, no. The next that I call attention to is the statement of the general counsel of the National Business League, Mr. John W. Ela:

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, I am not understating the importance of the manufactures of this country, but I am calling your attention to the fact that while you are laying a great deal of stress—and properly—on the manufacturing interests, does not labor occupy a position equally important, and would it not be of as much importance as the manufacturing interests?

Mr. ELA. I certainly think so, and I think the interests of labor will be much better taken care of in this department than if they were left in a bureau by themselves.

I refer now to the statement of Mr. George H. Barbour, representing the Western manufactures.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am simply here to represent the Western manufactures, which you of course all know during the last twenty-five years have become very prominent. In my own city, Detroit, we excel in some particular lines of manufacture. In the line which I represent, stoves, we do one-fifth of the business of the whole United States, $5,000,000 of products, and there are $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 of products in the United States.

To mention some other varieties of manufacture, 21,000 wooden cars are turned out by the American Car Company, at a value of over $13,000,000, giving employment to over 4,000 people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the situation in this case? Why, sir, this is no new question. It has been under discussion for many, many years. By an act of Congress of June 27, 1884, a Bureau of Labor was created and placed in the Department of the Interior and was under the charge of a Commissioner of Labor with a salary of $3,000 a year. Afterwards, on the 13th day of June, 1888, Congress passed an act to establish a Department of Labor. The Bureau of Labor assigned to the Interior Department was by this last act abolished. Under the act of 1888 labor was elevated and accorded more dignity and more position by putting it in an independent department. The authority of the Commissioner of Labor and the scope of the authority and province of the Department of Labor was greatly enlarged by reason of the very beneficial work that the Bureau of Labor had done for years past. The work performed by the Department of Labor in its independent capacity and free from the control of any of the great departments of our Government is in every respect creditable. Congress has manifested its confidence in the Department of Labor by the passage of joint resolutions and otherwise calling for valuable information. I will call the attention of the committee to a few of such instances.

Joint resolution No. 29, August 2, 1886:

The Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized and directed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make a full investigation as to the kind and amount of work performed in the penal institutions of the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, as to the methods under which convicts are or may be employed, and as to all the facts pertaining to convict labor and the influence of the same upon the industries of the country, and embody the results of such investigation in his second annual report to the Secretary of the Interior.

Bill of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, contained the following item:

The Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized to make an investigation relating to the economic aspects of the liquor problem, and to report the results thereof to Congress.

Joint resolution No. 43, August 15, 1894:

The Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report upon the effect of the use of machinery upon labor and the cost of production, the relative productive power of hand and machine labor, the cost of manual and machine power as they are used in productive industries, the effect upon wages of the use of machinery operated by women and children, and whether changes in the creative cost of products are due to a lack or to a surplus of labor or to the introduction of power machinery.

Bill of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, contained the following item:

To enable the Commissioner of Labor to collect and report to Congress the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, $10,000.

Second special, Labor Laws of the United States: This report, published in 1892, was prepared at the request of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, to which had been referred a resolution of the House "providing for the compilation of the labor laws, etc., of the various States and Territories and the District of Columbia." By concurrent resolution of March 5, 1896, 5,000 additional copies were ordered to be printed—and the Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized to revise said report to include the labor legislation subsequent to the year 1891, and to annotate the report with reference to decisions of courts under the laws comprehended therein.

Senate resolution of December 4, 1890:

The Commissioner of Labor is hereby directed to examine and report the extent of the phosphate industry in the United States, the number of laborers employed, and the opportunities for the employment of labor in the future development of the phosphate deposits.

Joint resolution No. 22, July 20, 1892:

The Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a full investigation relative to what is known as the slums of cities, confining such investigation to cities containing 200,000 inhabitants and over, as shown by the Eleventh Census. The investigation shall relate to the occupations, earnings, sanitary surroundings, and other essential facts necessary to show the condition of residents of such localities, and to show so far as it may be done the condition of such residents compared with residents of cities of similar size in other countries.

Statistics of cities, chapter 546, section 1, Laws of 1898:

The Commissioner of Labor is authorized to compile and publish annually, as a part of the Bulletin of the Department of Labor, an abstract of the main features of the official statistics of the cities of the United States having over 30,000 population.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 29, 1897.

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Labor be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a statement of the cost per thousand feet, board measure, of producing white pine lumber in the United States and in Canada, respectively; the statement to include the cost of lumbering, or the work in the woods, and the cost of manufacturing, or the millwork, in two separate items, including also the cost of stumpage.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 26, 1897.

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Labor be, and is hereby, directed to collect from official sources, or otherwise if necessary, information relating to total cost and labor cost of production in fifteen of the leading industries common to this country, Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Germany, and report the results of his inquiries to the Senate as soon after the meeting of the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress as possible: Provided, That the inquiries hereby authorized shall be carried on under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

WM. R. COX, Secretary.

A report on the "effect of the international copyright law of the United States" was made in compliance with a resolution of the United States Senate on Jauuary 23, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Labor be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the effect upon labor, production, and wages of the international copyright act approved March 3, 1891, and report the results of his inquiries to the Senate or through the Bulletin of the Department of Labor: Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized shall be carried out under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

The data furnished heretofore refer to publications already issued. There is now in the hands of the printer a report of the Commissioner of Labor on Hawaii, to be known as "Senate Document No. 169, first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress," prepared in accordance with the following provisions of an act approved April 30, 1900:

It shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Labor to collect, assort, arrange, and present in annual reports statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the Territory of Hawaii, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and to all such other subjects as Congress may by law direct. The said Commissioner is especially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and as often thereafter as such information may be required, the highest, lowest, and average number of employees engaged in the various industries in the Territory, to be classified as to nativity, sex, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, and to report the same to Congress.

All that the Department of Labor lacks now is to have a secretary to take a seat in the Cabinet of the President. Why should this independent Department of Labor, that is off to itself, and has accomplished such great good—which the record clearly shows—why should it be transferred to the department of commerce along with the Bureaus of Fish and Fisheries, Light-House Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and so on? It is now an independent department, doing good service for the country, and why change it? Again, Mr. Chairman, I think I have the right, on an occasion of this kind, when this great subject is under discussion, without being charged with being alarmed at the "rustling of the overalls," as some gentlemen are willing to say, to refer to the action of the two great political parties of this country on the subject of labor. It is true that a distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, the Senator from Pennsylvania, in commenting on the platform of the Republican party of 1900 favoring the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma, said that he hoped that this certain paragraph in his platform was "not a lie," yet the Senate, controlled by the Republicans, received many months since the omnibus bill passed by the House for the admission of these Territories to statehood. The spectacle is now daily witnessed of the Republican Senate seeking every parliamentary device to kill the bill. I hope that no great political party in this country will ever again stand in that attitude before the people. These platforms ought to speak the truth and express the sentiments that the framers entertain. The country is tired of duplicity and of meaningless platitudes. The people are honest and they have the right to demand and expect honest, plain, fair ealing from both of the great political parties that seek supremacy in the Government.

The Republican platform of 1900, in telling the country what the Republican party would do if retained in power, said:

In the interests of our expanding commerce, we recommend that Congress create a department of commerce and industries in charge of a secretary, with a seat in the Cabinet.

The Republican party, in the same platform, emphasizes its high regard for labor just before the last national election by saying relative to the wage-earners of our country:

Their constantly increasing knowledge and skill have enabled them to finally enter the markets of the world.

Mr. Chairman, if labor has accomplished this great work, hampered as it has been in the past—if it has aided so materially in making our Government a "world power" among the nations of the world, is it just and right, is it a fulfillment of the Republican platform pledge, to reduce the independent Department of Labor to the position of a bureau, and as such put its light under a bushel in the department where the magnates of commerce and the leaders of great industries will be the supreme rulers?

Would it not be more to the interests of all the people of our country—would it not be promotive of the peace, happiness, and prosperity of the great laboring classes of our country to recognize their just rights and accord to labor a separate department, with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President? The answer to this question rests alone in the hands of the leaders of the Republican party. The Democratic party stands ready and willing to redeem its pledge, made in good faith, and now at this time join enough Republicans and vote for a separate department of labor with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President. We will then cheerfully join you in creating a department of commerce of the same dignity and importance. The responsibility for failure will abide with the Republican party. You may say that commerce enters into and pervades all the varied and broadening interests of our people. You are bound to concede the same functions to labor. They face each other with equal dignity and importance, and are alike entitled to Congressional recognition. I yield to no gentleman on the floor of this House a more sincere and patriotic desire to aid and contribute to the development and growth of our foreign commerce than I possess myself. I am buoyant with hope for the increase of our trade with the Orient. It means the increase of production, industries, and enterprises to the people of all sections of our country. It means a multiplication of the cotton mills of the South, and I accept it as a long stride in the ultimate commercial supremacy of the South. That day is not far distant.

The laws of nature fashioned and are directing this supremacy. It will partake of no sectionalism. My own native State, Alabama, is conceded now to be the "iron State" of the Union, and the position of being the "iron State" of the world will yet be accorded to this great and promising commonwealth, and her sister States of the Union will find glory and pride in her wealth and power. It is a startling fact that Alabama, with not one-quarter of the population of the great Empire State of New York, has, in the last few years, increased her railway mileage until she now has 50 per cent of that of the State of New York. The grand old State of North Carolina, teeming with proud memories and populated by a thrifty, enterprising people, having a population about equal to that of the State of New Jersey, but possessed of but few of the manufacturing interests and facilities that New Jersey has, to the amazement of the world has developed and increased her railway systems and tracks until to-day North Carolina has 50 per cent more railway mileage than New Jersey. Georgia, the Empire State of the South has twice as much railway mileage as the great State of Massachusetts, and Arkansas has three times as much as Connecticut.

What does this mean? What significance has it to the man who is looking for remunerative investment? These Southern States are but instances of what the Southern States all are doing. But a few years since these same States that I have specially mentioned were poor and needy and commercially inaccessible. It is their great natural and undeveloped mineral resources, their rich and cheap lands, their manufacturing advantages and superiority, that has invited and secured this wonderful development of their transportation facilities. Men interested in railroads are not given to the construction of lines merely for health or pleasure; but they build them as they ought to build them, for the purpose of making money. All of this is but a precursor of the future prosperity of the South. When we remember that it is the laborer and the wage-earner that makes the foundation of this great development—is the key to the arch of our prosperity—it behooves us to mete to labor its just rewards by giving it its proper recognition.

But it is said, Mr. Chairman, that no one came before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee bearing authentic credentials to speak for labor as a class in opposition to including the Department of Labor in the department of commerce. I submit the following:

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have a credential here showing whom I represent, a copy of which I will leave with the committee.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 2, 1901.

To whom these presents may concern, greeting:

This is to certify that the bearer hereof, Mr. H. R. Fuller, whose signature appears below, has been duly chosen to serve as the representative of the above-named organizations at Washington, D. C., during the sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress, in matters pertaining to national legislation.

P. M. ARTHUR,
Grand Chief Engineer Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
F. P. SARGENT,
Grand Master Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.
E. E. CLARK,
Grand Chief Conductor Order of Railway Conductors.
H. P. PERHAM,
President Order of Railway Trainmen.

I wish to say first that I desire it to be understood by the committee that I do not come here to oppose any of these bills creating a department of commerce; but I come here to oppose all provisions which may appear in any of them which seek to put the present Department of Labor under this new proposed department. This is my prime motive, but I want to say, however, in addition to this, that I wish to urge upon the members of the committee the necessity of also giving labor a distinct and separate place in the President's Cabinet, free from any other department whatever. I listened here yesterday to the friends of this bill, and was very much interested in what they said, and I want them to thoroughly understand my position. We are not here opposing their bill in the least.

Why is this department of commerce asked for, Mr. Chairman? It is because it will advance and facilitate and promote our commercial interests with the world. These interests have grown and increased so wonderfully in the last ten or fifteen years that this department of commerce is necessary to maintain and represent these great interests. This is doubtless true, and it should be gratifying to the country to know that it is true, and I have no doubt but a department of commerce will be of vast benefit in promoting our export and foreign trade. "Their constantly increasing knowledge and skill has enabled them to finally enter the markets of the world," is what the Republican party says about labor.

If that paragraph in the Republican platform is true and Republicans propose to stand by it, then by parity of reasoning the department of labor should be created just as well as the department of commerce.

The Democratic platform, Mr. Chairman, of 1900, says:

In the interests of American labor and the upbuilding of the workingman as the corner stone of the prosperity of our country we recommend that Congress create a department of labor in charge of a secretary, with a seat in the Cabinet, believing that the elevation of American labor will bring with it increased production and increased prosperity to our country at home and to our commerce abroad.

I have presented the platform declarations of the two great political parties of this country on the subject as to the position labor should hold in our Government. Their record is clearly before the country. Antielection promises are readily and cheaply made. I repeat, now is the accepted time to recognize labor according to its merits and seek by proper legislation to avert the lamentable and disastrous strikes of the recent past.

If there had been a secretary of labor in the Cabinet of the President, having authority to speak for labor and to confer with the President, the President could have avoided the necessity of inviting Mr. Mitchell and other labor leaders to join the coal operators with him in conference in an effort to adjust the differences of the great anthracite coal strike. More than that, had there been such a secretary then by the President, the creation of the strike commission, admitted to be unauthorized by law, would have been avoided.

Mr. GILBERT. What did you read from?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I read from the Democratic platform of 1900. The majority of the committee in their report, Mr. Chairman, substantially concede that, in view of the "conservative action in creating new Cabinet officers in the past," if the department of commerce and labor is established now the Department of Labor will not have much chance for a long time to come to have a Cabinet officer. Any gentleman knows, and there can be no dodging about this matter, that when you create a department of commerce and labor, with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President, representing, as he will and as he is bound to do under all the conditions and circumstances surrounding us, not organized or unorganized labor, but representing, as I believe he will unconsciously do, judging from the past history of our country, the interests with which labor comes in conflict, when you pass this bill with labor in it, subordinating, overshadowing, and clouding it, it is farewell to any department of labor with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President. I sincerely believe that no one can fairly question that fact. It is true in every respect.

I think I am right when I state there have been only two departments with a secretary in the Cabinet created within the last sixty-two years.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

Mr. MANN. For the last one hundred and two years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think I am right about that, but I am not positive. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the purpose of establishing three new bureaus—the bureau of manufactures, the bureau of insurance, and the bureau of corporations? Who are they intended to benefit?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not labor, I think. The bureau of insurance is intended to benefit and uphold the insurance interests of the country, investigating, promoting, and advancing them.

Mr. MADDOX. How about the corporations?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If you can tell me what statutes and laws of the country apply to and govern many of our colossal corporations I would be glad to be informed. I do not know of any. It seems that they have been above the law, or a law unto themselves.

Mr. MADDOX. I wanted to ask you something about that, and if you thought they were not able to take care of themselves.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think corporations have demonstrated their ability to take care of themselves, but I do not believe that labor will be able to take care of itself, surrounded by insurance, corporation, and other different bureaus.

Mr. MADDOX. Does not the gentleman think the corporations run the whole concern and take care of all of us now, and that they do not need any bureau?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. To a casual observer it appears that way, judging from the worried anxiety of the Republican party to do something in the name of regulating the great trusts and combinations of which the country so loudly complains.

Mr. Chairman, I am not prone to turn to the monarchical powers of the world for lessons of instruction touching matters of public policy relating to the welfare of our Government. This may arise from that natural prejudice that we imbibe from the spirit of our free institutions against monarchical forms of government. It can not be denied that the history and the progress of the wage-earner in England are worthy of the closest study of the men who seek, without bias or prejudice, to establish by law the highest and best standard for friendly relations between capital and labor.

The policy of the laws of Great Britain is to promote among the laboring classes industrial independence and worthy and honorable citizenship. This is evidenced by exemption from strikes as compared with our own country. England has a board of trade whose president holds a seat in the ministry. Germany has a minister of commerce. France has a minister of commerce. Russia has a special imperial cabinet with four bureaus, one of which is devoted to agriculture and manufactures. In neither of these great Governments is commerce and labor under the control of the same department. The experiment of keeping capital and labor free from the domination of either, in the same department, has proved successful in these foreign Governments.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill as it comes from the committee—

First. Because it practically reduces the now independent Department of Labor to a bureau in this proposed new department.

Second. Because the interests of labor will be overshadowed by the engrossing and absorbing interests of expanding foreign commerce.

Third. Because practically all of the laboring classes and labor organizations that have given expression on this subject have earnestly protested against the Department of Labor being included in the same department with commerce.

Fourth. Because the present Department of Labor has contributed greatly to the uplifting and industrial independence of the working classes of our people.

Fifth. Because, if included in this department, the laboring people will become suspicious and jealous of a fair recognition of their rights, and thus impair the usefulness and efficiency of the department.

Sixth. Because I believe the true function of a department of commerce is to promote the interests of our export and foreign trade, and the efficiency to that end will be hampered by the interests of labor.

Seventh. Because I believe that the laboring interests of this country are entitled to a separate department with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I submit as a part of my remarks the views of the minority:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are unable to agree with the committee in its favorable action on Senate bill No. 569, entitled "A bill to create the department of commerce and labor." We do not believe that it will promote the interests and welfare of the laboring classes, or the interests of the country, to transfer or include the Department of Labor in the proposed new department of commerce. It must be patent to the most casual reader of the evidence given in the hearings by the committee on this subject that the interest and care of labor in this proposed new department would be subordinate to other interests, and we can safely predict that the secretary of the department would not be a representative of either organized or unorganized labor.

The laboring classes are not asking for this transfer, but strong and earnest protests have been made against it, but the demand comes from other sources. By the act of Congress of June 27, 1884, the Bureau of Labor was established and placed in the Department of the Interior, which act provided for the appointment of a Commissioner of Labor. On the 13th of June, 1888, an act entitled "An act to establish a Department of Labor" was approved. This act of Congress provided that there shall be at the seat of government a Department of Labor. The Bureau of Labor organized and conducted in the Department of the Interior was abolished and the independent Department of Labor was created and the authority of the Department and the Commissioner were enlarged as to all industrial interests and kindred subjects.

We do not hesitate to say that after a careful examination we believe that the record made by the Department of Labor since its establishment by Congress is highly creditable and has been of great benefit in the distribution of practical and useful information among all classes of people in all matters pertaining to labor in its most comprehensive sense. It has contributed to the uplifting of the working class of our people. It is not our purpose to clothe labor with any distinctive or particular interest and thus create a class antagonistic to some other special interest or class. The genius and theory of our Government is opposed to such legislation. However, we insist that no conditions or relations should be created by law that tend to promote or invite friction between the interests of capital and labor, but everything should be done to place them as near in accord as practicable.

The bill, to which we object, practically reduces the present Department of Labor to the position of a bureau in the new department of commerce and labor. This subordinate and overshadowed position that the Bureau of Labor will occupy in the proposed new department will be such a discrimination as leads us to fear that distrust and suspicion will result in friction or create such relations as would seriously impair the usefulness and efficiency of the Department.

For these and other reasons we dissent to the report of the majority of the committee.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
ROBT. W. DAVIS.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that every gentleman may be allowed to print or extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. For how long—five days?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will make it ten days.

Mr. HEPBURN. Say ten days.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Very well, ten days.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CAPRON). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that everyone who speaks on the bill may be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD for ten days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to investigate this bill thoroughly, nor did I know until a moment ago that I would be expected to discuss it. But I take the floor for the purpose of trying, at least, to get at some of the reasons why we should absorb, in this way, the "commerce" of the States—that which is not Federal commerce.

It is proposed in this bill that we take charge of the functions of the States, drawing them, as it were, pell mell here to Washington, to be run by the heads of these different Federal departments. I want to promote commerce, but legally always. Since I have been in Congress, I hope, I have not done anything to retard its legitimate growth; but we certainly should promote it within constitutional limitations, not by running roughshod over the States.

Sir, take as an illustration the insurance bureau, which we are proposing to create by this bill. Why, sir, this provision is directly in the face of the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States, reaffirmed time and time again—to the effect that "insurance is not commerce," that it is a contract between individuals, and is not susceptible of control by Congress. Yet this report, strange to say, says "insurance business" is "essentially a matter of interstate business."

This whole question—that is, whether insurance is interstate commerce, or is even commerce of any sense—was raised in the case of Hooper v. California (155 U. S. Reports, 648), in which the opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice White. I turn to that decision and briefly read this language from page 665:

> The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse; and in this respect there is no difference between insurance against fire and insurance against the perils of the sea.

Citing and affirming cases from Paul v. Virginia and others, on down to the day of this decision in 1894.

This question arose in a case where the State of California had made it unlawful for its inhabitants to enter into an insurance contract with any foreign corporation till that corporation had complied with the laws of that State.

The corporation in question was a foreign marine insurance corporation, which, of course, the State had the right to "exclude entirely." That insurance is not commerce was clearly settled in that case. This is old law. In the earlier decisions of this court, and coming down to recent years, it has been declared that a State has the right to exclude entirely a foreign corporation from doing business within the State, or can admit it and regulate it. But we see the decision in this case goes on and clearly and succinctly, without equivocation, declares and holds that "insurance is not commerce."

Mr. Justice White referred to and quotes from the case of Paul v. Virginia, in which case the court through Mr. Justice Field said:

> Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. The policies are simple contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, entered into between the corporations and the assured, for a consideration paid by the latter. These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter, offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another, and then put up for sale.
> They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different States. The policies do not take effect—are not executed contracts—until delivery by the agent in Virginia. They are, then, local transactions, and are governed by the local law. They do not constitute a part of the commerce between the States any more than a contract for the purchase and sale of goods in Virginia by a citizen of New York whilst in Virginia would constitute a portion of such commerce.

This language was reiterated in the case of the Philadelphia Fire Insurance Company v. New York.

Now, the opinion in Hooper v. California was approved in a noted antitrust case, Pierce Oil Company v. The State of Texas, decided a few years ago.

I submit that if you can adopt legislation of this kind under the limitations of the Constitution—if you can reach down into the jurisdiction of a State and drag up her commerce and take charge of it, should we do it? If insurance is a local contract—and that is what the court here declares—if it is a contract between individuals within the State, will you tell me what right the Government of the United States has to take charge of and meddle with that contract?

In such action, Mr. Chairman, are we undertaking to absorb, by the right of might, if you please, the powers and rights of the State? Is not such legislation an invitation for the Government of the United States to rush down and undertake to attend to all the varied business of the States and crush the latter? If we continue to do this—and we see the great tendency toward it—how soon will it be before the States are destroyed—the States that created the Union? Without the States we should have no United States, as the court said in the case of Texas v. White, a noted case—without the States we should have no United States, but a United State. I may add, how soon, if this matter of insurance, about which there is no complaint, is taken away from the police powers of the States in this way and hoisted here to Washington to be regulated—it matters not how you regulate it, whether by good legislation or bad—before all commerce of all kinds will be in the hands of Congress?

I have heard no complaint on the floor of this House during the discussion of this question that the States have failed to control insurance companies, though I did not have the pleasure of hearing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If such a policy is pursued, how long will it be before we have the same kind of laws extended in almost every direction, to the detriment and infringement of the rights of the States—their utter prostration? I submit we should stop and think, and think seriously, just here.

Here is a plain proposition. The courts have settled that insurance is a local matter and that it is "not commerce;" yet we are proposing to take the pitchfork of Federal legislation and dig up this business, take it out of the control of the States, and out of the hands of private individuals controlled by the laws of the States and bring it here to Washington, whether it is commerce or not. And heaven knows, if we are going to enforce such a law as this if enacted as we are enforcing some other Federal laws that have been placed on the statute book, such as that undertaking to help the States in the matter of trusts, no good will come of it.

We have one trust statute, alluded to by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in his resolution appropriating $50,000 a few days ago, to execute a provision incorporated in the Wilson tariff law and carried in the Dingley tariff act, which is a law to-day, but under which not a solitary suit has yet been filed. The antitrust act of 1890 is left unenforced while the people are robbed of food and coal right in this city to-day.

We hear no complaint about the laws of the States being insufficient on that subject or that they are not being executed. We hear no complaint from the people.

I am opposed to wild-cat insurance companies and want to exclude them from the use of the mails and am preparing a bill for that purpose that may become law. That we can legally do. I say, if you waive the question of constitutional power and assume that we have this power to go down into the States and dig up State commerce, why should we do so?

Passing from that question and coming to the question as to the propriety of creating a bureaucracy, I say, with all due respect to the gentlemen who have joined in reporting this bill, why should we create more bureaus for the purpose of doing through Federal power that which has been done heretofore by the States and in regard to which there is no complaint?

Why should we create these additional offices? Of course, there are people who want offices, and always will be; and if offices are created, competent citizens, of course, have the right to fill them. But such a measure as this must involve increased expense. It necessarily involves increased taxation and increased burdens upon the people and the Congress of the United States—burdens altogether unnecessary to be assumed, as I contend. Now, why should we do it?

Again, the insurance companies are not suffering. We know that the State laws are all stringent and that it is the rarest exception when the Federal court ever holds that a State law on the subject of insurance is contrary to good morals or to the fundamental laws of the State or of the United States. It is the rarest occasion it is done. Insurance companies are able to take care of themselves, the living and dead, and to print all of their reports, and they do so.

There is not a decent insurance concern in the United States to-day that does not publish and send out to the people throughout the United States a report of the condition of its business. These reports are published in the newspapers; they are published by private letters, and we are constantly getting them through the mails under 1-cent postage stamps; we are constantly getting them in the shape of catalogues. Here is publicity, if you please, and yet we destroy this; we take charge of that and say, "Now, we will promote your business."

Let us see what the language of the bill is on this point:

That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of insurance, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law.

Increasing Federal patronage and, therefore, the power of the President for good or bad—good, I hope. I read further:

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or District wherein the same is organized, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the Secretary or provided by law.

"Provided by law!" What law? Where is the power in Congress to control State business; insurance being a local business, the courts say.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, in all candor, that to say this promotion is to be carried on by "gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance" is unnecessary. That is already done. Nobody will deny that. Nobody objects to it, and everybody is informed. The States can exclude these insurance companies. They can admit them. The States can prohibit their people from negotiating or contracting with foreign corporations unless they are legalized by the States to operate within the limits of the State.

Now, why shall Congress take an individual private business, exploit its profits, its deposits, its loans, and the manner in which it conducts its business and republish that, when these very concerns which have thousands and possibly millions of dollars are publishing this very data and glad to do so? Why tax the people to do this? Why should we destroy their business by taking the strong arm of the Federal Government and saying, "We will publish that for you?" This is wrong. This thing of reaching down and helping those people that are plenty able to help themselves, helping them by the strong arm of the Federal Government, when that arm is raised and made strong and mighty and just by the taxgathered money of this country, is wrong.

It may be that this board can be empowered to sit here and say to an insurance company in New York, "You shall not go to Tennessee and transact business; you are a foreign corporation, and you shall not go across the State line;" but the Supreme Court, it seems to me, in this case held that the question of insurance itself was not commerce; thence not interstate commerce.

Now, then, I say that, even conceding the possibility that this bureau can control foreign corporations in their transit from one State to another and better our condition, it is very doubtful whether it can do it under these decisions.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I agree with my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] on the question of creating a bureau of commerce and uniting with that the Bureau of Labor.

Why, Mr. Chairman, should this great ocean of commerce, this bureau of commerce, takes charge of and absorb the Bureau of Labor, this institution which has grown up in the United States since the Democratic party in 1868—the first party to do so—recognized labor unions or labor organizations in its platform? We have all united in building up this Labor Bureau, because labor was in existence before commerce; man was here before commerce, and we say that we can not have any commerce unless we have labor.

Commerce is selfish. We are all more or less selfish. It is natural for one to take care of his own and himself. The Good Book teaches us that, but I say commerce, this unholy greed, this thing to-day that is mastered by the "cormorants," as they were yesterday designated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is controlling to-day very largely the interstate commerce of this country and trying to control labor, and that commerce is the only commerce that this bureau has the right to take charge of and control.

Why should this great ocean of commerce, this great chasm of selfishness, backed by these "cormorants," take charge of the Bureau of Labor and the laborers of this country? The question is, Which one would survive—the laborers and their bureau or the cormorants and theirs? I say that commerce would overshadow the other and soon crowd out this Bureau of Labor.

I am willing to aid commerce and labor, too, but I am not, as I am now advised about the provisions of this bill and the possibility of this friction and ill feeling arising, willing to unite the "cormorants" of the country with the laborers of the country. I think it is bad policy.

If this bill is to be of any account at all, if it is to be as serviceable as it should be, this department will have all it can do when it gathers up the things that are commerce, leaving labor to take care of itself.

When did labor get to be "commerce?" It is property. I believe it has been announced by the courts—possibly in dissenting opinion—that the right to lease or sell one's labor is a personal right and therefore is property; but I am not sure that any court, dissenting or otherwise, has ever declared that labor per se is "commerce."

The propriety of this policy of amalgamating labor in this manner is very doubtful in view of the danger that peace will not be maintained as it should be between commerce and labor. For the present, at least, Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose the proposition and the insurance clause and trust to regulating wild-cat insurance companies in another and legal manner.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART], a member of the committee.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss the merits of this bill, as I have found it necessary to disagree with the majority of the committee as to the wisdom and necessity of its passage, and I ask the Clerk to read my views as expressed in my minority report.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF MR. STEWART.

I am reluctantly constrained to differ fundamentally with the majority of the committee with reference to the wisdom and necessity of establishing a separate and distinct Cabinet department of "commerce and labor," or a distinct department of either commerce or labor.

A proper consolidation of existing statistical divisions scattered through the great departments of the Government in one division under an existing department would, in my opinion, fulfill all the conditions required by the proposed new department.

The alarming feature of the bill is that it will result, in my judgment, in transferring all the vexed questions of capital and labor which for years have harassed and embarrassed our State governments and municipalities to the arena of Federal discussion and agitation.

Being opposed to the whole scheme of a separate department of commerce or labor, it is unnecessary for me to discuss what I consider the objectionable provisions of the bill.

JAMES F. STEWART.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I yield back my time to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS], a member of the committee, such time as he desires.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the attention of the committee for but a brief time. I joined my distinguished friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] in a minority report against the bill for the establishment of a department of commerce and labor, and I am frank to say that I did it chiefly because of the persistence of the committee that reported the bill in including labor in that department.

Per se I have no objection on earth to the creation of a department of commerce. So far from objecting to it, I favor it. I believe that the great commercial interests of this country ought to be represented in a separate department, and that it ought to have a member of the President's official family to represent it and look after its interests. I want to say that I am just as fully impressed with the idea that the great labor interest also should be distinctly and directly represented there, and I have no hesitancy in asserting that when the Congress of the United States fails to give the labor interest of this country a representative of its own in the Cabinet it fails to do justice to the interest of labor.

For years and years we have heard the demand for a department of labor, and more recently a demand for a department of commerce. I want to show to the members of my own party on this side of the Chamber that they are, by their own party declaration, bound to afford labor an independent department. The last Democratic national platform, adopted at Kansas City, said this:

A DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

In the interest of American labor and the uplifting of the workingman, as the cornerstone of the prosperity of our country, we recommend that Congress create a department of labor, in charge of a secretary, with a seat in the Cabinet, believing that the elevation of the American laborer will bring with it increased protection and increased prosperity to our country at home and to our commerce abroad.

As a Democrat, I should want to be consistent with the platform of my party, even if I were not so fully impressed (as I am) with the intrinsic merits of the proposition for the creation of a department of labor.

It may be said that we are not here discussing a separate department of labor. I grant you that; but we are here discussing the proposition to create a new department of government to be called commerce and labor, in which labor is practically subordinated, and which bill, in my humble judgment, is a blow at the labor interest. No one who reads this bill can form any other rational conclusion. In the report of the majority of the committee—and I call the attention of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who wrote this report, to the fact that although he says the existing Department of Labor would not be interfered with should the pending measure become a law, he shows later in the same report that it would be subordinated. Here is what the majority report says at one point:

It has been a natural fear on the part of some of the labor leaders that the new secretary of commerce and labor would have a bias in favor of capital and against labor. Granting, for the sake of argument, that this may be true, it still would leave the labor department as well off as it now is. No bias of the secretary of commerce and labor could control or affect a Commissioner of Labor who is not subject to removal by him and whose actions and reports are not subject to his control—

Yet, before they have finished that report, we find them using this language as an argument why labor should be made a part of the bill:

If the Commissioner of Labor is under the secretary of commerce and labor, he will make a report to the secretary of commerce and labor. That report will be published with the annual reports of the department. If the secretary of commerce and labor approves of recommendations made by the Commissioner of Labor, he will so state in his annual report, and probably the matter will be called to the attention of the President to go in his annual message. If the secretary of commerce and labor disapproves the recommendation made by the Commissioner of Labor he will say so in his report, and that will call attention to and advertise the recommendation of the Commissioner of Labor in a way which will call it to the attention of Congress.

So that although they undertake to say in one part of their report that the status of the present Labor Department will not be changed or hampered, in another part of the same report they distinctly show that it is subordinated. It is known to us all that the Labor Department is now an independent department of this Government, although the Commissioner has no seat in the Cabinet. But the Department of Labor is independent and is attached to no other department of the Government. We propose here, instead of recognizing and dignifying labor, instead of listening to the demands of the laboring classes to give them a department, we propose to make them worse off than they now are. They ask for bread and we give them a stone. They have an independent department as the law stands, amenable to no other department of the Government, and this we propose to take away from them. We propose to subordinate them to another great interest. We propose to make their present department a mere bureau for, after all that has been said, that is practically what we do if we pass this bill.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBB. Is not the Commissioner of Labor usually selected from the laboring class—that is, some one who is identified with labor?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. He certainly ought to be.

Mr. ROBB. Then, I will ask, what in all probability will be the result if this department of commerce and labor be established?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. If my friend will permit me, I am going not only to say something on that point, but to read what the labor representatives tell us about that; and perhaps, having had my attention called to it, now is as good a time as I will have to do it.

We had before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a number of hearings on the subject of the creation of this new department. Gentlemen came before us representing commercial interests and representing laboring interests. Among the latter was Mr. Thomas F. Tracy, representing the American Confederation of Labor, an organization consisting of 90 national and international unions located throughout the United States, 22 State bodies, 300 local and central bodies, and 1,200 federated unions, of all organizations of labor throughout the country, and he undertook to speak before us for this vast number of laboring people of this country. He said this:

We have no particular objection to the creation of the department of commerce, but we ask that in the creation of that department there shall also be created the other department independent of that, known as the department of labor. We feel that in the President's official family, where the interests of organized labor are being discussed, that advice and counsel should be given by a man who is in close touch with organized labor and who knows and realizes what its needs are.

We are not committed or opposed to any of the bills that have been submitted along the line of creating this department of commerce; but when the bill that passed the Senate, the Nelson bill, was under consideration we wanted to ask that the Department of Labor be left entirely without the scope of that bill, and without taking up the time of the committee I would read a letter that was addressed by Mr. Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, to Senator FRYE, President pro tempore of the Senate, when that bill was under consideration:

JANUARY 20.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The bill pending before your honorable body, Senate bill 569, is, as you know, to establish a department of commerce, with the creation of an office to be known as secretary of the department of commerce. A perusal of the bill shows that it proposes to transfer the Department of Labor to the proposed department of commerce, and it is to this particular feature to which your attention is respectfully directed.

As you know, the Bureau of Labor Statistics was created at the earnest solicitation of the organized labor movement of America, and subsequently changed to the higher position of the Department of Labor. This, too, in response to the earnest request of the American Federation of Labor, and the hope has been long entertained that time would demonstrate the wisdom of an independent executive department and its chief officer a secretary with a voice in the councils of the President affecting matters particularly relating to the great interests of labor.

No keen observer disputes that the all-absorbing and burning question of our time is expressed in the terms, the labor question. In the effort to establish the rightful relation of the workers to society, in the production of wealth, and in its just distribution is encompassed all the complex questions of our lives.

That justice should be meted out to all the workers no thoughtful man will deny.

Anything which is not based upon ethical considerations for all no intelligent trade-unionist asks.

Questions often arise in the official family of the President of the United States in which justice, fair dealing, ethics, and the law and its administration must frequently be under consideration, and unless there is some representative of the workers competent to speak in their name, to advocate their cause, to convey to the Executive head and his advisers the laborers' side of labor's contention, he and they must be deprived of valuable and far-reaching information. It is to supply this present deficiency that the American Federation of Labor has asked, and should repeat and increase its efforts to secure, the enactment by Congress of a law creating a department of labor, with a secretary who shall have a seat in the President's Cabinet.

The creation of a department of commerce with the provision for the subordination of the Department of Labor will minimize the importance of labor's interests and minimize the present Department of Labor. Against such a procedure, in the name of American labor, I enter my most solemn protest.

There can be no question that the members of a President's Cabinet are representatives of the employers' and business men's side of industry, commerce, and finance. Our ambassadors and consuls to foreign countries are agents and advocates of the same interests, and there can be no good reason for the creation of a department of commerce, particularly when the Department of Labor, which was created for a particular purpose in no way germane to a department of commerce, and which it is purposed shall be absorbed thereby to the detriment of the interests of all our people.

It is therefore urgently requested that in the event that the honorable Senate should deem it wise to enact Senate bill No. 569, that the Department of Labor, as now constituted, may be eliminated from its provisions. I trust, too, that you may extend the courtesy of submitting this communication to the Senate of the United States.

I have the honor to remain, yours, very truly,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

I want to read a little further from Mr. Tracy's testimony before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. We have had only two additions to the Presidential family in fifty-three years, and these departments are created usually at long intervals. Your contention would involve the addition of two members, when it is altogether possible, and to my mind more than probable, that your purpose would be met by the establishment of one.

Mr. TRACY. I would say that the labor organizations have been agitating this question for thirty-five years. We have not reached the point yet where we can have a representative in the Cabinet, but we hope to some day, and we intend to keep on, because the influence of labor is of sufficient importance in this country for it to have a representative in the President's official family.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do you not believe that if the department of commerce was established the manufacturing interests, as has been illustrated here already, would overshadow the labor part of it?

Mr. TRACY. Unquestionably so.

Mr. DAVIS. And you think that if the President selected a man whose education fitted him peculiarly to overlook the labor interests, the commercial interest would kick?

Mr. TRACY. Undoubtedly, and vice versa.

Mr. DAVIS. And if the President suggested a man peculiarly fitted to overlook the interests of commerce the labor interests would undoubtedly feel neglected?

Mr. TRACY. They certainly would.

Mr. COOMBS. You think that your interests would be so lost that they would not develop to the extent of demanding a separate department?

Mr. TRACY. I beg your pardon.

Mr. COOMBS. I say, do you think that your interests would be so lost and absorbed that they would not develop further, and would not be able to assert themselves as they do now?

Mr. TRACY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOMBS. You are afraid of getting lost?

Mr. TRACY. In the shuffle; yes, sir.

Now, there is what is said by this gentleman representing the large labor organizations which I have named. I want to read you what another laboring man said before that committee. H. R. Fuller, representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers said this in his argument before us.

Now, we object, first, Mr. Chairman, on general grounds. We know this, that the people, with all respect to them, who have asked for the creation of this new department are commercial men, and, secondly, employers of labor. We can safely say that in regard to this question the words "employer" and "commercial men" are synonymous terms.

Now, we tkink, just as it was stated by the chairman of the Manufacturers' Association of the United States here yesterday, that a department to be beneficial to the interests that it represents should devote its whole energy—those are the words that he used—to that end. Now, energy means something more than simply interest.

I wish to stop there for a moment and digress to say that these people who have asked for the creation of this department are employers of labor, and should this bill become a law, or this new department be created, it does not matter whether you folks see fit to strike the Labor Department from it or not. Every member of this committee has had experience enough in political affairs to know that these influences which have brought about the passage of this bill can consistently claim of the President that they are entitled to recognition in the selection of this man to be placed at the head of this department.

They do do it; they do do it in the other departments. When there is a vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission, for instance, the railroads of the country get together and select a man, and, usually, he is put there to fill that vacancy. And we feel that even if you allow this bill to go through as passed by the Senate, calling this the department of commerce and labor, they will claim the right—not the absolute right—but a right to this extent, at least, that the President will listen to their claims. We do not dispute that right. If they have brought about this agitation that creates the department, I will not say that they have not a right to do that.

Now, then, so far, I want to say that a man who represents those interests, if he is selected to represent this department in the Cabinet, although he may be honest, and I have reason to believe that he would be—we have no reason to believe that any man is otherwise until we find him so—is not competent to represent labor. He is not competent to sit down at the Cabinet table with the President when something very vital is up before that council in which labor is interested, and to speak. It is simply that he is like the laboring man—a man of environments. His whole life has been spent in something else—in furthering the interests of employers—and consequently he is not capable to speak for labor, even though he felt honestly disposed to do so, and I believe that he would be.

And during the examination of Mr. Fuller by the committee, this colloquy ensued:

Mr. RICHARDSON. In that connection, do you believe you represent the entire sentiment of labor in this country when you say that this labor department ought to be put under a commerce department?

Mr. FULLER. I think so, from my experience among the men and my talks with them.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you not think it would be unfortunate, both for labor and for capital, to undertake to combine them in one general head this way?

Mr. FULLER. I do.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you not think it would produce future distrust and bickerings?

Mr. FULLER. I do. As I stated yesterday, Mr. Davis, I said that a man representing capital was not competent to represent labor in this department; that I also thought that the ordinary representative labor man could not represent all of the interests that are merged under this department of commerce.

Mr. DAVIS. Aside from that, Mr. Fuller, do you not think when the President commenced to form his Cabinet there would naturally be a contest between capital and labor as to which one of the two classes would capture this Cabinet office?

Mr. FULLER. I think so.

Mr. DAVIS. And do you not think if the President should appoint a capitalist who is not thoroughly familiar with labor conditions it would displease labor?

Mr. FULLER. It certainly would.

Mr. DAVIS. And that if he should select a laboring man it would displease capital?

Mr. FULLER. It certainly would. After I had concluded my remarks on this point yesterday a representative of capital came to me and said he thought I was right on it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do you think from the spirit and trend of this bill that the manufacturing interests would have largely the advantage in securing a secretary?

Mr. FULLER. I think so. I stated that yesterday. If this department is created they can claim the credit for its creation, because they are the ones who have asked for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these extracts which I have read speak more forcefully than I could possibly do.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will my colleague permit me to ask a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman stated, or read, I think, the sources of information that one of these gentlemen had as to the conditions of labor. Now, I want to ask you if any of the men who appeared before that committee professed to have been authorized by any organized body of labor? They said they represented that number and this number and the other number, but did any man say that any set of men had sent them here?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. In reply to my friend I will say that so far as anybody coming before us with credentials, no; so far as any man coming before us exhibiting authority to represent any particular body, no. But they who spoke for labor spoke with as much authority as they who spoke before us in the interest of commerce. And my friend, the distinguished chairman of the committee, knows that they were credible gentlemen; they said they represented labor in sentiment, and I believed and believe they did.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I care to say on this bill. I want to repeat that if the word "labor" in the title and all through this bill, wherever it occurs, can be stricken out, as will be moved by my friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] as an amendment to the bill, I shall have no objection to its passage. I shall be glad to cast my vote for the measure. I am willing to see the commercial interests of this country represented in the President's family. I repeat that, in my judgment, this great interest ought to be represented there; but I do not believe that, when labor has been standing up for more than thirty years asking for a representative in the President's family, we ought to insult that element by making the present Department of Labor what will be tantamount to a mere bureau in the department of commerce. I hope the House of Representatives will not go on record as doing so. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion; but the question propounded by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the chairman of the committee, who reported this bill, can be easily answered by reference to the report of the committee accompanying this measure. On page 10 of the report I think that, so far as he is concerned and so far as concerns the majority who have reported this bill, his question is answered, against what I take to be his contention.

The distinguished chairman seems, by his question, to dispute the proposition that organized labor is opposed to being taken under the wing of this so-called department of commerce. The distinguished chairman by his question challenges the assertion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS] that organized labor is opposed to playing "second fiddle" to the department of commerce. Organized labor, so far as any member here knows from private correspondence or private conversation, is opposed to this measure. It does not lie in the mouth of the chairman of the committee to dispute that proposition. I read now from the report of the committee, page 10:

There has been opposition to this proposition. A majority of the leaders of organized labor who have expressed any opinion upon the subject have opposed the placing of the present Department of Labor in the new department.

There is an admission that the majority of the leaders of organized labor who have expressed any opinion upon the subject are opposed to placing this Department of Labor in the department of commerce.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. My recollection is that four gentlemen representing labor, or connected with labor organizations, appeared before our committee. The gentleman is correct in saying that three of them expressed their opinions in the way he has stated. The point I was trying to make—as the gentleman, if he had paid close attention to my remarks, might perhaps have known—was this: While I do not dispute the fact that certain gentlemen came there and assumed to speak for labor, I say that no man came there with credentials or pretending that any body of labor had sent him to represent their views. That is what I said.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was not present, of course, at the hearing of the committee; I do not know personally about this matter; but I take it that what the gentleman says is true. I can not doubt it. That, however, Mr. Chairman, does not affect the controversy. The fact is—and this report shows it to be a fact—every man who has discussed this proposition admits it to be a fact—that organized labor is opposed to being placed in the department of commerce.

Now, the report of the committee undertakes to answer that fact. It concedes it to be a fact, and tries to argue away from it. Now let us admit this fact. Let us not inquire into whether these men who testified before the committee had credentials properly signed, or whether they meet all the red-tape requirements of the most fastidious gentleman who has served on committees of credentials in conventions.

Mr. CLAYTON. Just one more minute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Thank you. The gentleman admits in his report the fact to be that organized labor is opposed to being taken into the department of commerce, and the admission which I have already quoted is strengthened by the argument which is made in the report in an endeavor to nullify that position of organized labor, for the report goes on to say:

The opposition has been based upon the idea that whoever might be selected as secretary of the new department would be a representative of capitalistic influence and not of labor. In view of the opposition of some of the labor leaders to the inclusion of the Department of Labor in the proposed new department, your committee has given the subject careful and considerate examination. We are satisfied that the opposition is based upon a natural misunderstanding of the situation and a misapprehension as to the effect of such action.

The Department of Labor as now organized has its duties defined by statute. The statute provides that it shall be presided over by a Commissioner of Labor, to be appointed by the President. It is not proposed to make any change in these provisions of the statute. If the Department of Labor is included in the new department, the secretary of the new department will not have the power to appoint the Commissioner of Labor, nor will he have power to prevent the Commissioner of Labor from discharging the duties now imposed upon that office by the present act of Congress.

It is impossible to see, therefore, how there can come any injurious effect from including the Labor Department in the new department of commerce and labor. As the law now exists the President can, at any time, name some one for appointment as Commissioner of Labor who may be adverse to labor and favorable to capital as against labor. It is not likely that any President will ever do this, and it is equally unlikely that he would do it if the Department of Labor were made a part of the department of commerce and labor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that admits the contention of my colleague from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS], that the laboring people are opposed to having the Department of Labor merged into the department of commerce. They are jealous of surrendering whatever independence that department may have to an officer who may be controlled entirely by commercial influences, and who may not be in touch and sympathy with the great laboring masses of the country. Therefore

I shall support the amendment offered by my colleague from Alabama. The Department of Labor, instead of being a mere bureau in another department, subordinate to some Cabinet officer, ought to have an officer in the Cabinet. The laboring interests of this country are as important as the interests of commerce.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that we could not conduct commerce, that the great industries of the country would stand still, were it not for the laboring people, and they are jealous of the supervision of people who may not be in sympathy with them. The better proposition would have been, and the better proposition now is, to defer to their wishes and not only to create this department of commerce, if you wish it, and if that is to be created, to create also a department of labor, with a Cabinet officer, so that labor may have a representative in the Cabinet to voice the wishes and the sentiments of that great class of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Iowa now use some of his time?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I am very heartily in favor of the general provisions of this bill. When the last department was created, in 1862, our people were principally engaged in agriculture. That was the great branch of industry in our country, and the creation of the Agricultural Department has demonstrated the great usefulness of such branches of our executive office. Since the creation of that Department we have constructed vast railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, until every part of our great country is supplied with rapid communication and transportation. Since that time there has been developed in almost every city, village, and hamlet in our country institutions for the manufacture of our natural resources, until the products of the farm and the factory far exceed the capacity of our people to consume them. We are to-day forced into a greater field. Hereafter we must pursue a broader view and endeavor to expand our influence in foreign commerce. From the time when the first nation was created down to the present time commerce has been king.

All things created by God or man have their infancy and grow and expand until they reach the zenith of their influence, then wither and die. This is as true of nations as of men. Therefore if our nation is to go on and its power and influence in the world is to be extended, we must meet the growing demands of the people by the creation of a department of commerce to assist its growth. The greatest interests, influence, and wealth of the people to-day are embraced in industrial enterprises and commerce. I therefore think that this measure is most opportune and wise.

Now, with reference to the Department of Labor being incorporated, there has developed in this country an aggregation of capital, a combination of interests, many of which are wise and beneficial, and they are associated intimately with labor. The organization of capital has not gone forward more rapidly than the organization of labor. The effect of these two combinations of labor and capital upon our great interests may be likened unto the two hands of man. Capital is necessary and labor is indispensable to the success of our people and our nation. Great progress has been made recently toward the union of these great interests. The creation of the Civic Federation and the establishment of the Coal Commission by the President are doing much toward the advancement of the interest of labor.

I appreciate the fact that many of the labor organizations do not desire the Bureau of Labor to be incorporated as a part of the commerce department, and I hesitate to vote against their wish in the matter. I believe, however, that if labor is to go on and derive the just benefits to which it is entitled, it must be recognized as a part of the industrial and commercial interests of our country, inseparably and forever united, and I look forward to the time when capital and labor engaged in all character of industries and commerce will be united in harmony and their differences settled by the just tribunal of arbitration.

It is suggested that a secretary of commerce and labor appointed under this measure might be disposed to favor commerce rather than labor; but our recent experience under President Roosevelt leads me to think that under the present Administration, at least, labor will be protected and her interest guarded far better than in a separate bureau.

We have gone on for years appropriating vast sums of money for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. We have been occupied for many years in the discussion of the great isthmian canal, and have authorized the expenditure of millions of dollars to develop this highway of commerce, and the time is ripe for the extension of our foreign trade and the expansion of our commerce with foreign countries. No department of our Government to-day has jurisdiction thereof or can give to our industrial and commercial interests the information that is necessary to enable our people to take advantage of the markets of foreign countries.

In the last session of Congress we appropriated, I think, nearly half a million dollars for the benefit of a private or State institution located at Philadelphia, for the purpose of building up a bureau of information to enlighten our manufacturers with reference to foreign markets. If that was wise, it is certainly better that the Government expend such money in a bureau or in a department especially created for the benefit of commerce and labor.

Mr. Chairman, there is one provision of this bill to which I must make objection. Section 6 authorizes the creation of a new bureau of insurance. The business of insurance is not commerce. A contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce, and the creation of this bureau is unnecessary and, in my judgment, unwise. The insurance companies of our country, located in different States, are properly regulated by State laws. There is no complaint that any investor in insurance, whether it be life, marine, or fire, is not furnished with all the information necessary with reference to the stability of the corporation, the character of its policies, statistics with reference to losses, etc., in the statistics now published by the corporations themselves. You might as well create a bureau for the investigation of the value of securities that our people desire to purchase, such as railroad bonds and industrial stocks and things of that kind into which people put their money.

I want to call the attention of the House to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States with reference to insurance. Congress has no power to regulate the insurance business. It is a useless expenditure of the public money. Let me read from the opinion of Justice Field with reference to any kind of insurance:

> Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. The policies are simple contracts of indemnity against loss by fire entered into between the corporations and the assured for a consideration paid by the latter. These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different States. The policies do not take effect—are not executed contracts—until delivered by the agent in Virginia.

That opinion was written in the case of Paul v. Virginia.

Mr. HEPBURN. When?

Mr. CORLISS. It is reported in 8 Wallace, 168. I can not tell the year when it was rendered.

Mr. PERKINS. Back in the sixties, I think.

Mr. CORLISS. I am reading from 155 United States Reports, in which that opinion is quoted, and that was of later date, 1894. Justice White, now on the Supreme Bench, in rendering the opinion in the case of Hooper v. California, said:

> The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse, and in this respect there is no difference whatever between insurance against fire and insurance against "the perils of the sea."

I will also call attention to the case of Fire Insurance Company against New York (119 U. S. Reports, p. 110):

> Insurance is not commerce; it is not a contract over which Congress has any control under the Constitution.

Why, then, burden the people by a creation of a department and the appointment of officers and the payment of salaries merely for the purpose of giving employment to some one? It can have no beneficial effect. Congress can not regulate it. If you find that the great insurance companies of New York are speculating on Wall Street, and thereby endangering the interests of the policy holder, Congress has no power to stop it. Congress has no jurisdiction over it. Therefore I submit that paragraph in this bill should be stricken out.

I believe that the Department of Commerce will become the greatest power and influence for good of any department of our country. I would perhaps personally go further, and incorporate other interests. The bill as it came from the Senate incorporated too many bureaus, and the committee has been wise in narrowing the measure down to the proper administration of that branch of our Government. Capital is only labor combined. Labor and commerce are indispensable to each other. They should be enlarged and advanced by every influence. I am therefore heartily in favor of the bill, with the exception mentioned.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question or two with reference to the insurance proposition.

Mr. CORLISS. I would be glad to answer any questions that the gentleman may ask.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there any bureau or division in any bureau of the department that has jurisdiction of the subject of insurance now?

Mr. CORLISS. I think not, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand that statistics relating to insurance, fire and life, are collected by the Census Department.

Mr. CORLISS. There is no doubt but what the Census Department and some other departments have obtained statistics upon that subject. Certainly the Census Department has gathered statistics pertaining to it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill as it is now provides for the creation of an independent bureau devoted exclusively to the subject of insurance, as I understand.

Mr. CORLISS. And the publication of information pertaining thereto.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman to read those words.

Mr. CORLISS (reading):

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law—

And there can be no provision by law, under the Constitution—

over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or District wherein the same is organized, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States—by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and use ful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the Secretary or provided by law.

Now, my point is this: I believe that under the Constitution of our country we have no jurisdiction over insurance. We can not hereafter pass laws affecting it. You may develop all the information you possibly can and it will be of no benefit to the people. They are furnished the information now in the States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, though I was not originally very enthusiastic for the creation of a new department, I have, during the hearings and investigation of the subject, reached the conclusion that if a department including commerce is to be established the title of the present bill was wisely retained by the Senate and equally wisely retained by the House committee.

If anybody is jealous as to the use of names or terms or the particular place of names in the titles of bills, I am perfectly willing to transpose the names in the title of this bill, and denominate it "the department of labor and commerce." I did not, until the agitation of this bill came up, understand that there was any very loud demand throughout the country for a department of commerce. There had been a demand for a department of labor, and I know that the demand was in at least one platform of my party.

Now, if some gentleman should move to strike out "commerce" and leave this the "department of labor," there might be some reason for supporting that on this side of the Chamber. I do not propose to consent, by the establishment of this new department, to a declaration of war, declaring or recognizing by law a state of war between capital and labor. I am quite sure, and it is not denied here, that those representatives of labor who appeared before the committee, objecting to placing labor in this new department, were actuated by the sole reason that they expected as soon as this department was established to use it as an additional argument for the establishment of another department—a department of labor.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. What representative of labor made that remark before the committee?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not remember the name of the particular gentleman, and I did not say that any man made that remark before the committee. I said I so understood it, and it has not been denied here. But while my distinguished friend was speaking I remember either hearing him read or say something that sounded very like such an admission.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. What I said and what I read from the remarks was that the gentleman hoped that at some time labor would be separately and independently represented.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that that is the reason of the objection by the representatives of labor—of all who did object—that they expect immediately to procure the establishment of a department of labor. I stated to my colleagues on the committee, and I reiterate the opinion here, that if labor should be stricken from this bill, and the department of commerce alone left, that would come before the proper committee of this House and secure the report of a bill establishing a department of labor, and it would become the law of the land before this bill received the signature of the President, in my humble judgment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. With great pleasure.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If labor were to do that and secure a separate and distinct department, would the gentleman be opposed to it?

Mr. ADAMSON. I would vote for it, and so would you. I just stated that if you struck commerce from the bill, there would be more sense in it than in striking out labor.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understood the gentleman to say that if labor is left in the bill, he would vote against the department of commerce and labor?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I support the bill as reported. If you strike out labor, I have not stated what I would do.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understood that to be the position of the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I may have said in committee that if labor were stricken out, I would vote against it, but I have not said it here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understood the gentleman to say that if labor was left in the bill as it is now the gentleman would vote for the bill, but that if labor was stricken out he would not vote for the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. The deponent has not stated what he would do if labor were stricken out, but when the roll is called I will try and vote loud enough for the gentleman to understand without any mistake. I have not agreed to vote for the bill if you strike out labor. I do not believe it would be as wise a bill, and I do not believe there is as great demand for the department of commerce as there is for a department of labor. I believe that every executive department of the Government is more or less devoted now to the interests of commerce.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that we should have the insurance bureau?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not believe the Federal Government should interfere with insurance or any business of the citizens of the States beyond a possible bureau of information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have we not already all the information we need about insurance?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know. I opposed at first the suggestion that the Federal Government take jurisdiction over insurance for the reason that I feared it might be taken advantage of by spurious companies to defeat the precautions and protection which the States have inaugurated for the defense of their citizens.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Would not the reports be frankable, and so relieve the insurance companies of that burden?

Mr. ADAMSON. It might be of some corresponding advantage to citizens who deal with insurance companies. I would go far enough to say that as to any of these matters the Federal Government, with its superior advantages and facilities, might be able to get up more satisfactory information and disseminate it throughout the country. That far I have been willing to go on all these questions; but this bill, as I understand it, in so far as it provides for an insurance bureau, emphasizes the idea that it is to be a bureau of information.

Now, I was going on to say that every existing department of the Government is more or less now devoted to the interests of commerce. It might have been that a reclassification or collocation of the different bureaus might have obviated the necessity for this department, but there came from all over the country demands for this department. The only word of discord heard was an occasional reference to the differences, purely artificial, that exist between different interests and the manifest jealousy, foolish and wicked, between labor and capital.

I have no patience on the face of the earth with differences of that sort. I see no sense in transferring to the Cabinet surrounding the President a chronic row, entirely artificial on its face and vicious in its vitals, and which always ought to be discouraged rather than encouraged.

If it can not be composed in a department, if it can not be discouraged there, I can not see how the situation could be rendered less acute by dignifying the position of both parties and placing the warriors at the Cabinet table.

I do not know how to draw these lines, anyway. I do not know many men who can tell whether they are laborers or whether they are capitalists, whether they are employers or employees. Most men manage to keep about even, and owe as many people as owe them. Most men are willing to hire hands if they need them and can pay them. Most men are willing to hire out to anybody else who will pay them. Most men who are now capitalists have been reared as laborers, and if now they do not labor assiduously with their own hands, if in lieu thereof they are able to employ the industry of other men, it is their good fortune that they have been able to economize and save their earnings and have developed judgment enough to utilize the labor of others as well as their own; and they are no less the men of brawn and industry because they have saved their wages and improved their fortunes than when they were daily laborers themselves. It were well with them if they "forget not the rock whence they were hewn," and few of them do.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that, in so far as this Government bestows a bounty upon any particular business, it ought to recognize the particular interests which are engaged in the production of wealth under that bounty; and for that reason I have often urged the doctrine that wherever labor and capital are engaged in a business which enjoys profit by reason of protection, the Government ought to see that in such a case the bounty of the Government is fairly shared and divided between the laborers and the owners of the capital operated upon. I believe that, in so far as it is proper for the Federal Government to take part in the adjustment of disputes and hear the complaints of this man or that man or the other man engaged either in labor or in lending money or investing money in manufactures, the Government ought to regard them as fellow-citizens, with common and reciprocal interests, and do nothing and say nothing, enact no legislation, that will authorize any of them to forget that all labor and all manufacture and all production and all trade is commerce.

Commerce is trading together. Labor produces. Manufactures take the product and change its form and character and value. Other people, engaged in merchandising, in importing and exporting, take the products and the raw material and transport them to the uttermost parts of the earth, and in another form of commerce convert them into other things that the original laborer and intermediary manufacturer most need. These products, whether raw material or finished by skill, go from one end of the country to the other, or from one country to another; and it is all commerce. And the man who would stand up and undertake to differentiate between the different citizens and classes of his country, and seek to encourage the divorcing of interest from interest, seek to promote bickerings and strife to the point of making a legal declaration recognizing a condition of existing warfare between the different citizens of his country, is not performing the part of a patriot, no matter what his intentions and motives may be. [Applause.]

I believe, Mr. Chairman, the part of wisdom now is to pass this bill as reported by the committee; to say to those laborers who have, fortunately, gotten rich, "You are still laborers, though the character of your employment may have changed;" to say to the poor man, the man at work with the overalls on, "Every mayor, every Congressman, every governor, every Senator, every dignitary, every capitalist in the land, with few exceptions, was once just such as you. Do not show your littleness, do not show your envy, do not confess your inferiority by going round with a chip on your shoulder begging somebody to insult you and discriminate against you. Stand up and do your duty as a man; take your growth, and some day you will be one of these same capitalists that you are now trying to get the chance to fight." But you will be no more honorable in the eyes of honesty and intelligence than now, when you are not ashamed to work. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak so long. I thank the committee for its close attention.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15345. An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 16642. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], a member of the committee, so much time as he may desire.

[Mr. SHACKLEFORD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The time of Mr. COCHRAN having expired, Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama yielded to him ten minutes more.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to my friend that he fix some time for the termination of this debate.

Mr. COCHRAN. I decline to be taken off the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman's side has occupied two hours and four minutes, and one hour and ten minutes has been occupied on this side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. We are not going to object to any length of time. As I understand, it is unlimited. There was no limit put upon debate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Your proposition was that at 4 o'clock we would agree on some time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. About 4 o'clock, yes; that we would try to agree; and I am ready to fulfill my proposition now. I will try to agree.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is not coming out of my time, I hope.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman's time will be preserved.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think we had better take the vote to-morrow, say, at 3 o'clock.

Mr. HEPBURN. To-morrow will be otherwise occupied.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am ready to comply with my proposition to the gentleman that we should try to agree.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose we close debate after four and one-half hours?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. General debate?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. When will that stop the general debate? You do not propose to close it this afternoon, do you?

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to close debate about 5 o'clock. We want upon this side a half hour more of time. That will give an hour and forty minutes to this side. You have already had two hours and four minutes. Now, will ten minutes more satisfy gentlemen on that side?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I should not like to agree on that, because there are other gentlemen here who want to speak and I do not desire to cut them out of the opportunity of speaking. I am disposed to think that we ought to adjourn about 5 o'clock and let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. LAMB. To-morrow is war claims day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. My proposition strikes me to be very reasonable.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the general debate ought to be concluded to-night.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call for the regular order. I should like to proceed with my remarks. I do not think gentlemen are going to reach an agreement now. I shall finish in ten minutes and then they can finish their colloquy.

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask now unanimous consent that general debate be concluded in thirty-five minutes, ten minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and twenty-five minutes by myself. That will make two hours and twenty-four minutes on the other side and one hour and thirty-five minutes on this side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I want to yield now to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why can not the gentleman agree to that now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will agree if no one else wishes to speak after the gentleman from Texas concludes.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman does not know of anyone else who wishes to speak, what precludes him from agreeing to the proposition now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Because I am afraid that some one might want to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that general debate be concluded in thirty-five minutes, ten minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama and twenty-five minutes by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I object. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WOOTEN].

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WOOTEN] is recognized for ten minutes, as the Chair understands.

Mr. WOOTEN. I do not think I shall consume that much time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield the gentleman from Texas ten minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then I yield to him ten minutes additional, making twenty minutes in all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] yields to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I thought the gentleman from Iowa had taken his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for ten minutes in the time of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WOOTEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to further prolong this discussion at this late hour; but I feel like going on record against this bill. I believe the bill to be, in its practical purposes and its inevitable tendencies, wrong. I think the very title of the bill itself, taken in connection with its contents, is misleading and misrepresents the real purposes and effects of the measure. This is entitled "An act to establish the department of commerce and labor."

Now, I have searched in vain through the various sections of this act to find a single reference to labor as such, or to a department or bureau of labor, except so far as section 4 incorporates and consolidates with this proposed department the old Department of Labor now existing. There are provisions in this act for a bureau of insurance, a bureau of corporations, a bureau of manufactures, and the head of the department is denominated, in general terms, "the secretary of commerce and labor;" but nowhere in the bill is there any provision made, or any duty imposed, or any function defined that can be reasonably related to the cause and the interests of organized labor in this country.

The party to which we on this side of the House belong demanded in its last national platform a department of labor as one of the independent departments of this Government; and by so doing it recognized the necessity for a department that should be wider in its scope, more efficient in its operation, and more intelligent in its action upon these questions than the existing Department of Labor. Yet this act simply incorporates the old Department of Labor, inadequate and inefficient as it has heretofore proven, and even destroys what little virtue there was in that department by rendering it subordinate and subsidiary to the jurisdiction of this misnamed department of commerce and labor. So far as labor is concerned in this country it is not recognized.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] intimated that he would not recognize any conflict or antagonism between capital and labor. Mr. Chairman, I fail to understand or appreciate the peculiar intellectual and moral attitude of any man who, in view of the history of this country for the last twelve months, can say there does not exist a radical and a critical antagonism between these two departments of industry and enterprise. For the last nine months one of the greatest necessities of this country, one of the great factors in the civilization and the commerce and even the very existence of our people—the fuel supply of the country—has been paralyzed by this antagonism.

For the last sixty days, nearly, a joint high commission, appointed by even the President himself, has been seeking to solve this dangerous and critical antagonism. And yet gentlemen come here and say that labor can afford to lie in an unequal and subordinate position in a department organized simply and purely in the interest of commerce and the commercial interests.

I undertake to say that the laboring people of this country have asked for bread, and this bill gives them a stone. They have asked for representation in an adequately organized and efficiently conducted department of the Government, and this bill takes away from them even the poor pittance that they now enjoy under the Department of Labor as it now exists.

More than that, I am opposed to this bill on principle, and on what I conceive to be sound considerations of public policy. Under this bill almost every important function of this Government, so far as our domestic affairs are concerned, is consolidated and centralized under this new department. The bill seeks to take from nearly every other department all statistical operations. It consolidates here a mass and a complexity of interests and functions that will render it in many respects the most important and far-reaching department of the entire Federal Government. And the result of it is simply to nationalize and federalize and centralize every interest and industry in this country in the hands of a Federal department of this Government and to leave practically nothing for Congress to do, nothing for the people to be heard upon.

This bill belongs to that school of political philosophy, that school of commercial exploitation, to which we have been subjected under the dominant political party for a number of years past, whose policy it has been to nationalize all these interests of the people, practically to abrogate and abolish the functions of their representatives on this floor, and to turn them over to a congeries of bureaus and boards to be administered without regard to the interests of the people. That is what the bill means in its practical effects, and that is what it will accomplish, and it was intended to accomplish that result.

I wish, as I said, to go on record against the bill, as being hypocritical, deceptive, and misleading in its attempt to answer the demands of labor; and in the next place, on account of the fact that the bill itself is vicious in all its tendencies, and, in my judgment, is calculated simply to hasten the day when the real interests of the people will be relegated to a lot of boards in this capital, surrounded by that sort of environment and subject to that sort of influence that furthest remove them from a response to the real burning needs of the Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. WOOTEN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I have some time left out of the time yielded to me. I would like to yield that to somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the right to yield time which has been yielded to him.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to ask for any time in the debate upon the pending measure, and I should not do so now were it not that I feel impelled to place on record my very emphatic dissent from some of the views which have been expressed here this afternoon.

Nearly all those who have expressed opposition to this bill have based that opposition upon the declaration, in substance if not in set terms, that the interests of labor are so divergent from if not absolutely antagonistic to the interests of commerce that it would be wholly illogical to include both these interests in one executive department. It has been declared here in effect that this new department, if created, would be dominated so completely by the capitalistic interests that labor would receive but scant consideration, if indeed the interests of labor were not actually sacrificed and betrayed.

To all such expressions, Mr. Chairman, I must emphatically dissent. I have no sympathy whatever with the sentiment which assumes the division of the people of America into distinct and necessarily and inevitably antagonistic classes. It is utterly repugnant to all my instincts as an American citizen to hear "labor" spoken of as a distinct and clearly marked class, and "the interests of labor" alluded to as something wholly differentiated from and necessarily hostile to other American interests. There is no such distinction in fact and there certainly ought to be none in legislation.

To strike out from this bill that part of it which provides for the incorporation in the proposed department a labor bureau, with the plain purpose, as we all perfectly understand, of hereafter demanding the establishment of a separate executive department devoted to labor alone, is in effect for this Congress officially to declare that the alleged conflict between capital and labor is not only inevitable, but irreconcilable, and that the best the statesmanship of the future can hope to do is to give these two classes a fair field and no favors and let them fight it out.

I can not subscribe to that sentiment. I believe that the interests of commerce and labor are mutual and not antagonistic, and I shall support this bill because I believe it will do more than any measure that has yet come from this House to demonstrate this mutuality of interests, and in that way help to hasten the good day which, however long it may be delayed, we all hope is coming, when strikes and lockouts and boycotts as weapons of industrial and commercial warfare will be as obsolete as the crossbow and the catapult are as weapons of physical warfare. [Applause,]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in twenty-five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in twenty-five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I have been able to observe, the opposition to this measure is not to the bill in its entirety, but to a single section or paragraph of the bill. I think that the greater number of gentlemen upon that side of the House are quite content that this department of commerce should be created, but they are unwilling that the present Department of Labor should be included in that department. That opposition to my mind is based upon two erroneous propositions: First, that there is antagonism between the interests of labor and the interests of employers that we here as a part of the lawmaking power of the United States ought to recognize.

Gentlemen, I believe that that is a fallacy. I do not believe that the Government of the United States should recognize in any official way antagonism or warfare between those two great interests, those two great classes in the United States. [Applause.] The interests of labor and the interests of that capital which employs labor must be identical. They are identical. Their interests must move side by side; they must be joined hand in hand if this Government of ours is to be all that we hope it may.

Gentlemen assume that the officer called upon to preside over this great department would be hostile to the interests of labor. Why do you assume that? What right have you from experience or observation to make statements of that kind? To-day we have an anomalous sort of organization called the Department of Labor, for whatever it is worth; not so much as it should be, not so much as it will be if this union is effected. It has been presided over by one man, and with all the changes of politics in the administration of national affairs no change has been made in the head of that department.

Democrats and Republicans alike have retained the same officer. He meets all the requirements, I am told, of the labor organizations. They are content that he should remain there. The capitalist is content that he should remain there. The laborers are content, the employers are content. May we not learn something from that experience as to what will probably be the result if this department is created? This is to be the department of commerce and labor. You gentlemen seem to feel it necessary that you should, in speaking that sentence, always emphasize commerce. It is as much the department of labor as it is of commerce. A gentleman says, "Why, labor is referred to only in the most casual way."

I am glad to know that that gentleman is from Texas. I understand that if he had read the law first creating the Bureau of Labor and then the Department of Labor, he would have learned that there was much in the statutes upon that subject, and that whatever there was is continued, and whatever powers are lodged in that Bureau first, and that Department finally, are to be lodged in it still. The only difference is that there will be one other man, one superior, whose genius, whose talents, whose patriotism will augment the qualities possessed by the gentleman who now presides over the Department of Labor.

You take nothing from the Department of Labor; you add to the Department of Labor by another with more power, with more influence, and probably with qualities that will enable some additions of usefulness to be made. This proposition is not in derogation of labor. It is not subordinating in any sense the Department of Labor. It is adding to, it is augmenting, it is enlarging the scope and the power of this department. It places this department, that now has no voice in the Cabinet, in the councils of the President, as high as the highest. It will have the same place as the interests that cluster around the State Department, or the Interior Department, or the Post-Office Department have. Labor will have its own representative in the Cabinet.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. For a question; yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that no other civilized government or power of the world has undertaken to organize the department of labor in the language and with the title that this bill does?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I do not know; I am not a linguist.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that in many of the great foreign powers a department of commerce exists, single and alone, without mentioning the department of labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. That may be. This is an improvement upon the effete nations on the other side of the Atlantic.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then why should this Government depart from the experience of the world on that subject and create a department that will be different from any other that ever has been created, touching the interests of labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the people of this country have on many occasions taken the liberty of passing beyond the precedents that had been established on the other side of the Atlantic. I think our fathers did it when they established this Government.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. Do you know anything in this bill or any reason elsewhere that would prevent the President, if so disposed, from designating as the secretary of this new department a man friendly to labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, surely there is nothing in it that would prevent him from doing that, and there is no inclination, probably, existing anywhere that would deter the President of the United States from appointing a man to this office who would be entirely acceptable to all the labor interests of the United States. The President of the United States, no matter who he may be, will be large enough to know what the labor interests of the United States are to our past, to our present, to our future. He will be large enough to know that these men of whom we speak sometimes as the labor interests are the creators of our wealth; that they are the bulwark of our nation; that they are the men who make progress possible. The President of the United States will know that it is as much his duty, his pleasure, as it is that of every other citizen of the United States, to augment, to honor, to promote, to dignify labor.

We have long passed, and so has the man who will be President of the United States long passed, that age or period when men look upon labor as a badge of degradation, as a mark that was put upon one to show the wrath of God. Ah, no! We recognize, all of us, the fact that it is labor that creates the State, that it is labor that does all in the great race of progress and in the promotion of the civilization that we enjoy and of which we are so proud.

Gentlemen, how can you, with the ideas of the American, constantly prate as you do upon the differences and distinctions between labor and capital, giving in all instances to labor the inferior place and the place with the least of power? There is no logic, there is no patriotism, there is no Americanism in a proposition of that kind. [Loud applause.] Labor stands first among all true Americans; and so we propose to place it here. We are going to augment, to add to, if it is possible, the dignity of labor by giving it a department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman if there was any proposition before his committee which, if these departments had been separate, would have been compelled—the President—to appoint any different character of man as the head of the labor department than he would as the head of the department of commerce?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think there was. I think that the committee recognized the fact that the President of the United States chooses the heads of departments for their fitness—for their capacity to attend to the details of their business and as his constitutional advisers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point I wanted to bring out was, would not the objection that the head of the department of commerce and labor would be hostile to labor apply equally to the head of the department of labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, I think so. If there is a fear that the President might make an appointment hostile to the interests of labor under the provisions of this bill, might not we fear, and ought not the fear to obtain, that if there had been a separate department he would yield to the same influences and bend to the same hostile views on labor?

Mr. Chairman, considerable discussion has been had with reference to the provision of the bill creating a bureau of insurance. Learned gentlemen have discussed the constitutional power of this body to legislate upon this subject. I do not care to enter upon that discussion. I will simply hazard this humble opinion: That whenever the question is brought before the Supreme Court of the United States on a question upon an insurance policy—a marine insurance policy, covering merchandise that is a part of interstate commerce—the Supreme Court, in my judgment, then will hold that it is commerce, that it is interstate commerce, and that the Congress of the United States have the power to legislate in regard to it.

Why, gentlemen may talk about this particular interest not constituting commerce. Maybe in some phases it does not; but I want to remind you, Mr. Chairman, of this fact: Obliterate the insurance of the United States and you obliterate largely the commerce of the United States. I undertake to say that it would languish wonderfully if you destroy insurance. Who would venture, who would send his cargoes and his vessels upon the high seas, subject to the storms and the vicissitudes of ocean travel, save for the consolations of his insurance policy? Who would engage in interstate commerce among the States if it were not for the possibilities of insurance? Who would engage in the various businesses that make commerce possible if it were not for insurance?

Insurance of three kinds interests every citizen, almost, in the United States. It is an interest colossal. Think of it! There are three insurance companies in the United States that in the aggregate of their assets are worth more than a billion of dollars. Think of the multitude of men, women, and children whose interests are bound up in that colossal interest! This body which we propose to create here is simply one of publicity, of inquiry, to find out the facts, to publish those facts to the world, to put the innocent upon their guard. Here in my hand I hold a list of more than 150 bogus insurance companies doing business in the various States of the Union. It is not the duty of any State, of anybody, to search, to inquire, to ascertain with regard to the status of these companies. No one takes the trouble upon themselves. There is no publicity that is reliable, and hence, in my judgment, infinite good will come from this provision in this law.

Somebody will inquire, somebody will find out, it will be the duty of somebody to place in the public journals, or in the public reports, the character of these unworthy candidates for public favor, who, day by day and year by year, are fleecing the public out of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars for insurance that is not worth the paper upon which it is written.

Mr. Chairman, it is exceedingly difficult, as any gentleman will see who has given any attention to the subject, to prepare a bill of this character, to determine just what bureaus and divisions of the Government shall be placed within it. Some that would strike one gentleman as a proper subject of transfer to this department, upon a little further investigation would be found was so connected, was so interwoven in their duties with another department, that the change from one to the other would be a dislocation of the public business that would be harmful in the extreme. Then, again, there are certain interests in the departments, perhaps; men had their attachments, they were located in one particular place, they had been accustomed for a long time to doing business right there, and strenuous efforts were made, as my colleagues will bear me out in saying, to prevent these changes that many of us thought ought to be made.

We have done the best we could. We do not assume that the bill is perfect, but it is the groundwork, the basis, and there is within it a provision giving to the President of the United States ample authority for the transfer of a division or a bureau that will in the course of time make it what it ought to be. I confess that it does not exactly suit me; I do not think it exactly suited any member of the committee, but it is the best we could do, and while gentlemen have said "Who asks for this?" it was not, I am glad to say, a member of the committee who made that inquiry, for members of the committee know that from one end of the land to the other there were demands by letter, by memorial, by petition, by the personal presence of eminent men from all over this country, for the creation of this department.

Mr. WOOTEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WOOTEN. What objection has the gentleman to an independent department of labor. Would the gentleman favor it?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would not.

Mr. WOOTEN. Why not?

Mr. HEPBURN. At this time it is not necessary. I would not do it certainly if I believed as the gentleman from Texas does. His idea, as I understand it, and the reason why he wants an independent department of labor, is because there are antagonisms, there is hatred, there is wrath, between him who would be the head of the department of commerce and him who will be at the head of the department of labor. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, we do not want to introduce quarrels, contests, and fights into the councils of the Chief Executive. Of all places, there we want peace.

Mr. WOOTEN. The gentleman does not state my position. I have not said that there was any hatred; I said there was antagonisms and diversity of interests. I ask the gentleman if he thinks there has not been antagonism in this country between capital and labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe on the part of ignorant men there is a feeling that the gentleman speaks of. [Laughter.] I do not want to be offensive to the gentleman, but I do mean to say——

Mr. WOOTEN. Does the gentleman mean by "ignorant men" the laboring men of this country?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I do not mean the laboring men; I mean the inferior class of laboring men of this country. I have never talked with an intelligent laboring man in my life who has not been ready to say that there was no real antagonism between labor and capital. [Applause.] That is the opinion of the intelligent laboring men of the land. It is only where ignorant men have their passions played upon by demagogues that this feeling of hatred exists. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WOOTEN. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman can see that I have only a minute. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. WOOTEN. The gentleman speaks of the inferior class of laboring men. Will he define what he means by "inferior class?"

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not hesitate to answer that. I mean the sort of creatures that year by year we are allowing to come into the country from the south and east of Europe. That is what I mean.

Mr. WOOTEN. Why don't you shut them out?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would if I could have my way, but I have found whenever a contest was made every Democrat voted against it. [Applause on the Republican side.] If we could abolish the Democratic party, we could abolish this evil. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the reading of the bill be commenced.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the department of commerce and labor, and a secretary of commerce and labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 16, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DIRECTOR OF COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER directed the Clerk to read the following announcement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCCLELLAN is to be appointed a Director of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, in place of Mr. Lanham, who has resigned.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House (Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering claims on the Private Calendar.

WILLIAM P. MARSHALL.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 647) for the relief of William P. Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200 to William P. Marshall, late a private in Company H, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, being the amount due him for bounty.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

HAMILTON M. SAILORS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Hamilton M. Sailors, late Company K, One hundred and first Indiana Volunteers, the difference of pay and allowances between those of a private and those of a second lieutenant from May 26, 1863, to October 10, 1863, he having performed the duties of said office, under proper appointment and assignment, during that period.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OWNERS OF BARGE CHARLIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1937) for the relief of the owner or owners of the barge Charlie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the legal owner or owners of the barge Charlie, of Douglassville, Augustus B. Miller, master, alleged to have been damaged by collision with the United States steamship Eutaw, in the Potomac River, below Alexandria, Va., on or about the 3d day of July, 1863, be referred to the Court of Claims, to hear and determine the same to judgment, with the right of appeal as in other cases: Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. TELLISSE W. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5036) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Tellisse W. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of Tellisse W. Wilson, late a resident of Corinth, Miss., the sum of $4,419.15, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army at Corinth, Miss., during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where the property of these parties, Mrs. Tellisse W. Wilson and two daughters, she being a widow without anyone to look after her interests, was taken near Nashville, and the affidavit of General Dodge and other officers established her loyalty. The amount in the bill is the exact amount proven up before the Court of Claims a great many years ago, but this woman, not understanding business, did not realize that she had to prove up her loyalty in order to make it a legal claim, and while the amount was rendered as found by the Court of Claims, exactly as put in the bill, it was left for several years afterwards for them to establish their loyalty. As soon as their attention was called to that they at once secured the evidence of Gen. Grenville M. Dodge and his staff and established their claims fully under the law, both as to the property being destroyed and as to the loyalty of the claimant during the war. I think that is all there is in the bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

SEWELL B. CORBETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 91) for the relief of the representatives of Sewell B. Corbett, deceased.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 6511) for the relief of personal representatives of Sewell B. Corbett, deceased, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

B. F. MOODY & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2672) for the relief of B. F. Moody & Co., or their legal representatives.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,446.65, in full liquidation of a balance due said firm under their contract of date September 30, 1861, executed by Cyrus Busey, agent, under authority of Maj. Gen. John C. Frémont, acting for the United States, for the equipment of the Third Iowa Cavalry.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this claim is presented to the House by Congressman RUMPLE, of the Second Iowa district, who is lying seriously, and, I fear, dangerously, ill, and who has requested me to briefly present the claim to the committee. In 1861 the Third Iowa Cavalry was raised. Colonel Bussey, at that time aid-de-camp to Governor Kirkwood, of Iowa, made a requisition upon the quartermaster's department at St. Louis for the equipment of this regiment. The requisition was not honored because of the fact that, 300,000 men having recently been called into service, that department was unable to supply this regiment with its equipment.

General Frémont wrote a letter to Governor Kirkwood, of Iowa, which was carried by the distinguished Iowa Congressman, Colonel HEPBURN, directing him to equip this regiment at the expense of the Government. At the time that this order or letter was received the governor was not actually present at the seat of government. The letter was transmitted by his private secretary to Colonel Bussey, who telegraphed General Frémont the situation, and General Frémont directed Colonel Bussey to himself equip the regiment immediately. The letter to the governor was on the 14th of September, 1861. At that time there was great disturbance in northeast Missouri, and it was important that this regiment be hurried to the front. It was therefore necessary that it be equipped immediately, and Colonel Bussey, within sixteen days thereafter, signed a contract with these claimants, Moody & Co., for the equipment of the regiment, the entire equipment to be furnished within forty days.

Moody & Co. went to Chicago, to New York, to Boston, everywhere, seeking houses that could promptly supply these goods, and within the time limit, forty days, all of the goods were delivered and inspected by the quartermaster of the regiment and accepted by the Government. After this had all been done questions arose as to the administration of General Frémont at St. Louis and a commission was appointed, with Hon. David Davis as chairman, to investigate claims in that department. This commission reported, not that there was any fraud in the contract with Moody & Co. (and I do not think anyone will want to claim that Colonel, afterwards Brevet Major-General, Bussey, and one of the heroes of Pea Ridge, was in fact guilty of any fraudulent conduct in connection with this transaction), but it was claimed that General Frémont had no legal authority to contract with Moody & Co., or to authorize a contract with Moody & Co., but that the contract should have been made through the quartermaster's department.

Upon this technical ground this claim was cut down intentionally about $8,000 and unintentionally by a mistake in calculation about $400 more. The contract between Moody & Co. and Colonel Bussey provided that the payment for these goods should be made within thirty days from their delivery, and they were all delivered by about the 10th of November, 1861. Moody & Co. received no pay whatever until April, 1862, at a time when interest charges were excessive in that region. They suffered incalculable loss in various ways from the failure of the Government to perform its contract, but they ask now only that the Government pay to them the balance expressly stipulated in the contract, without interest and without any other charges whatever.

It is said here by one of my associates that they receipted in full for their claims. It is true that under the direction of this commission, refusing to pay them any portion of their money until a receipt in full was signed, with bankruptcy staring them in the face if they failed to obtain at least a portion of this money to apply on their large contracts they had made in Chicago, New York, and Boston, they did sign a receipt; but there is absolutely no dispute that the full amount mentioned in this bill is due them under the terms of the contract, without interest and without any form of damages for all this long delay.

It is further true that immediately after this trouble the books of Moody & Co. were destroyed by fire and, in ignorance the fact that other and sufficient records existed, they failed to prefer this claim to Congress until the Fiftieth Congress. It was then presented to the Committee on War Claims and unanimously reported favorably. It has been favorably reported in substantially every Congress from that day to this, but has never up to this time been reached upon the Calendar.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, this is a typical war claim. It is a reminiscence, not of the service and honor of the war, but of the greed and rapacity that took shelter under the darkness of those days.

I ask the patient attention of the House. My voice is not strong and I have something to say about this case from the record that I think will be interesting.

As my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Iowa] has said, these transactions have their beginning, so far as the record shows, on the the 14th of September, 1861. This is a claim for supplies for the equipment of the Third Iowa Cavalry. As my colleague has told you, Cyrus C. Bussey was its colonel. Lieutenant Rankin, afterwards Colonel Rankin, was its honest and efficient quartermaster. About the time that I have stated, Colonel Bussey telegraphed—I am simply speaking from the record in the report of the committee of the Fifty-third Congress and other records which I will produce—Colonel Bussey telegraphed to General Frémont, who was then commander of the Department of Missouri, for authority to make a contract to equip this regiment.

General Frémont gave him that authority, or attempted to give him that authority, by telegraph. The firm of B. F. Moody & Co. had been organized, composed of B. F. Moody, some one else unknown to me, and Oscar Kaiser. These were the confessed members of the partnership. Oscar Kaiser was the brother-in-law of Cyrus C. Bussey. General Bussey, under this authority given him by General Frémont, proceeded to make a contract with his brother-in-law's firm without advertisement, without notice, without concurrence of the quartermaster of his own regiment, whose duty it was to make such contracts and to attend to such business. Thus, secretly he permitted Moody & Co. to take this contract, practically on terms prescribed by them.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEDGE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Do you say that the quartermaster of that regiment had any vestige of authority from any mortal man to buy any of those goods?

Mr. HEDGE. I say it was the duty of the quartermaster of the regiment to purchase supplies for the regiment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Was not the authority, as you well know, granted to Colonel Bussey, and did not Colonel Rankin, to whom you refer, inspect and approve all of those goods?

Mr. HEDGE. He may have approved the goods after they were purchased.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HEDGE. But he had nothing whatever to do with the purchase of the goods.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And no authority to purchase them.

Mr. HEDGE. No; he did not have any authority from General Frémont. The gentleman is right. I answer his question affirmatively that Colonel Bussey did make this contract by permission of John C. Frémont, and John C. Frémont had the same right and authority to authorize that contract that a St. Louis alderman to-day has, in jail or out of jail, and no more.

I will read as a part of my remarks a brief paragraph from the report of this commission that my colleague has called attention to—a commission called into existence when the Government ascertained that around my friend's city of St. Louis the thieves were gathering; that almost all the contracts there made were tainted with fraud, contracts made under this same authority, with the same brothers-in-law. Let me read what David Davis said, and this is his language signed by himself as chairman of the committee, and also signed by Joseph Holt, who afterwards became Attorney-General, and his associate, Hugh Campbell, a retired merchant of St. Louis, whose intelligence and integrity in that neighborhood nobody ever doubted. This is their language, taken from Executive Document No. 94, Thirty-seventh Congress, included in a letter addressed to Galusha A. Grow, Speaker of the House of Representatives, by Edwin M. Stanton.

I herewith transmit the report of the commission.

And this is what David Davis and Joseph Holt and Hugh Campbell are telling this House. They tell us that here to-day.

On the 14th of September, 1861, General Frémont, by telegraphic dispatch, authorized Colonel Bussey, of the Third Iowa Cavalry, upon his request, to make a contract for the entire equipment of his regiment. No reason has been assigned why this most responsible duty, which the law imposes upon the quartermaster's department, was thus assigned to one who had no peculiar fitness for its discharge, and who might encounter interests and temptations to abuse the trust.

Colonel Rankin had bought all the horses for the regiment, and he bought them for $40,000 less than any other regiment was able to secure them, and better horses. It was the best mounted regiment of cavalry in the Northwest.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to say that every horse of this regiment was bought by Mr. Bussey, and not by Colonel Rankin.

Mr. HEDGE. David Davis and Joseph Holt say otherwise.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They say so from testimony that was before them when you know that Colonel Bussey was away in the Pea Ridge campaign and not able to testify.

Mr. HEDGE. I am not talking about Colonel Bussey's conduct at Pea Ridge. I am talking about Colonel Bussey at St. Louis.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. You were talking about testimony taken when he could not be present to testify.

Mr. HEDGE. As to the fine qualities of Colonel Rankin, the commission says:

Colonel Rankin, the then quartermaster of this regiment, we have had occasion to present in another connection as an officer as distinguished for his efficiency as he is for his integrity, but as these qualities would have stood in the way of the speculators, the commanding general was prevailed on to thrust him aside. Colonel Bussey accordingly, without having given any notice or inviting competition, entered into a contract for this purpose with three persons residing at Keokuk, one of whom was his brother-in-law. He did this at Chicago, having gone there with some of these parties and ascertained that the equipments could there be obtained on reasonable terms. A firm of Chicago merchants have deposed before us that they would have sold the equipments to the Government at lower rates than they were in fact contracted for by these parties; but as this would have deprived his brother-in-law and friends of the large commission on these purchases, amounting to upward of $100,000, which they proposed charging the Government, the Colonel did not feel justified in permitting it. The bills being before us, and the case so strongly portraying the evils which have grown out of the commanding general virtually superseding in his administration the Quartermaster's Department and the Ordnance Bureau, we concluded to inquire how far our views of the illegality of such a course were sustained by officers of high rank and large experience in the military service.

They go on and give the testimony of Colonel Andrews, a paymaster of the Army, an officer of the Regular Army for forty years, who testifies to the illegality and the want of authority in General Frémont in assuming this right. We do not wish to dig up this chapter of history. We all want to forget the fuss and feathers, pomp and circumstance, the drums and kettledrums, which betrayed the General's notion of the realities and essentials of war. But it is necessary for us, in order that we may understand this case, that we should know what his own sense of responsibility was, what his measure of his duty was to his country, standing as he did not only in command as a soldier, but also with the general interests of his country in the State of Missouri in his charge. Here is a conversation with Mr. Shepley in connection with him on this very question:

He spoke pleasantly, but said: "The people of the United States were in the field: that he was at their head; that he meant to carry out such measures as they (the people) expected him to carry out, without regard to the red tape of the Washington people."

This man had been dizzied by his elevation. He regarded himself as something more than a man of destiny. I charge no corruption against him personally, but I do charge that through his carelessness and through his vanity he gave indulgences to brothers-in-law all over St. Louis to break the eighth commandment.

But there is another point. As I said, this commission was appointed, composed of David Davis, Joseph Holt, and Hugh Campbell, and they say to you to-day that they carefully and diligently, and with particularity and conscientious scrutiny examined all these claims. Will any gentleman, will my colleague from Iowa, doubt the ability, the integrity, of David Davis or Joseph Holt? Was not David Davis able to examine an account, and was not he the sort of man that would tell the truth about it after he had examined it?

Now, here is the account. Here is the certified copy of the original bill in four vouchers with a general heading. Here are the items: Overcoats, jackets, and pants. An overcoat, jacket, and pair of pants cost the Government $29 apiece and was charged at $29. If I had the time I would like to tell the story about a case where, in Des Moines County, Iowa, a man was up, being charged with stealing a valise full of clothing. The punishment depended upon the value of the goods, and so it was important to ascertain their value. A witness for the State testified to the contents of the valise—that there were three shirts, worth $2 apiece, a pair of pantaloons valued at $4. What else was there in it? A Bible. What was that worth? About a dollar. That is all. The Des Moines County jury, on the suggestion of the attorney, perhaps, disregarded and rejected the testimony of that witness because he valued a pair of breeches above the Word of God. [Laughter.] Now, I do not charge that against these patriots whose patriotism was limited and defined by their notion of their own self-interest, these patriots who when the boys of this country, rising to the demands of the highest duty to serve their country, became recruits, these fellows, with the desire that the country should serve them, became contractors. [Laughter.]

Here are the bills literally copied from the original bill now on file in the Treasury Department. Here are the deductions made from them, recorded in red ink and signed by David Davis, president, by J. S. Fullerton, secretary. Each voucher is signed. These vouchers amounted to $8,200 that they had overcharged in the estimate of that commission who took testimony, as I am informed by one who was there, one whose word will never be doubted by the Fifty-seventh Congress. They took testimony of the best men and the most intelligent merchants in St. Louis and Cincinnati and other cities. The commission decided that these deductions were proper.

Mr. MILLER. When did the commission decide it?

Mr. HEDGE. I do not know, but——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In 1862.

Mr. HEDGE (continuing). I know that on the 11th of April, 1862, B. F. Moody accepted the decision, for on that day he signed a receipt at St. Louis, dated April 11, 1862, to Maj. Robert Allen, quartermaster, United States Army, and it is signed B. F. Moody & Co.

Now, then, these claimants, as the report will show—and I ask the attention of every member of the House to the report—my friend has said that their books were burned soon after this event. I should think there was brimstone enough in them to produce spontaneous combustion. [Laughter.] Listen to their excuse. The books were burned, and therefore they were passive, patient, and quiet from 1862. They did not claim, before 1886, that they ever took exception to the finding of the commission or complained of the allowance of their claim. But in 1886 Mr. Benton J. Hall was a member from that First Iowa district, a lovely gentleman, an able lawyer, and he told them if they had a claim against the Government they could find a statement of their account, evidence of their claim, on file here. What a grand surprise that was to these men! Take any merchant of any town in which you live, if he loses his savings-bank book, if it is burned up, and he waits quietly and patiently until twenty-four years after, when some lawyer tells him that the bank keeps books, too. [Laughter.] Did the gentlemen have the slightest suspicion that any of these claims were not on file in the city of Washington? Further than that, they lived in Keokuk, Iowa, the moral seat of government for many years, a little town of not more than 10,000 people. Everybody knew everybody else.

They were near neighbors of Gen. W. W. Belknap, an able lawyer, the Secretary of War, a most generous and accommodating man, who would have been more than willing to render them any assistance to obtain justice from this "oppressive" Government. No suggestion is made that their neighbor, General Belknap, was ever told about this claim. J. B. Howell, the editor of their town paper and their postmaster, was Senator along about 1870 for two or three years. There is not a sign that Howell ever heard about this claim, and he had a "nose for news." George W. McCrary was a member of this House, a resident of Keokuk, practicing law there, and intimately acquainted with all these men. He was a member of this House for at least six years, possibly eight. Afterwards he was Secretary of War. Not a suggestion on the part of anybody that George W. McCrary was ever approached for assistance in securing justice at your hands. They knew McCrary, and is it uncharitable for me to think that they did not approach McCrary or Belknap or Howell, because they knew that McCrary and Belknap and Howell knew Kaiser?

Not till 1886 was the suggestion ever made. Not until 1894 was ever any claim presented before the Committee on Claims. What Fabian patience! Now Davis was dead; Campbell was dead; Holt was dead.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask whether he does not know that in the Fiftieth Congress there was a favorable report upon this case.

Mr. HEDGE. It is of your own report that I am talking. I do not doubt but you have knowledge that I can never dream of possessing.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have the report before me. It says that in the Fiftieth Congress the claim was reported unanimously, and in every Congress since.

Mr. HEDGE. How long ago was that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That was not in 1894.

Mr. HEDGE. Perhaps it was twenty minutes earlier. [Laughter.] But David Davis was dead; Joseph Holt was dead, and Mr. Campbell was dead. Everybody who could possibly testify about this thing, or who had personal knowledge of the reasons why the Government reduced this claim, was dead. Then their "patience ceases to be a virtue." Not until all the best evidence is gone do these men dare to galvanize the corpse which the just judgment had condemned into a vindictive vitality. [Laughter.] It so happens that the reporter of that commission is now here. There was no printed record of the case, because, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], to whom I refer, can tell you, President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton did not want a publication showing the rascality that was dominant even then in St. Louis, for fear it would dishearten the people.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I hold in my hand every scintilla of testimony taken before that commission, officially reported, and a part of the archives of the Treasury Department. That record is complete in every respect as to everything heard before that commission.

Mr. HEDGE. I know it——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Instead of the matter not being now accessible, here lies the testimony of every witness who testified as to the merits of this claim.

Mr. HEDGE. I did not say it was not accessible; you did not understand me. My voice was not good enough to reach your understanding. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. You said that Lincoln wanted to obscure it——

Mr. HEDGE. No; I said it does not appear in print, and I said the reason it was not printed was probably——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is a public record.

Mr. HEDGE. Because Lincoln and Stanton and other men here in Washington, plain people—different from John C. Frémont—feared that it might dishearten the people.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the House for its attention. I am happy that I have one here who can corroborate every fact I have stated, whether he can agree with my conclusions and opinions or not. If I have any time left, I would ask the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] to yield to him as much of it as he may want. [A pause.] Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MAHON. I want to give these other gentlemen some time——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to enter into any discussion——

Mr. HEDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Chair announced that his time had expired. I do not want to prevent the gentleman from Illinois from addressing the House. I shall be delighted to hear him.

Mr. HEDGE. I do not understand under what rule my time could have expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE]. The gentleman from Illinois can be recognized in his own right, but the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HEDGE. I took the floor in my own right.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was doubtful about that. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] takes the floor in his own right. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], as the Chair understood, yielded him time. It does not make any difference, as the gentleman from Illinois can be recognized in his own time.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, since the debate arose my attention has been called for, I may say, the first time in forty years to the work of the Holt-Davis commission in examining into Frémont's administration in 1861. I have looked a moment at this brief printed report which has been handed to me, and recall vividly the faithful, arduous work of those men. I took down all the evidence in their long investigation of irregularities and disheartening frauds at St. Louis, and the huge manuscript which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has brought to the House and raised in his hand is, I suppose, in my writing, though I have not yet seen it, and is a part of that unprinted report. Since it has been called up, I now remember the claim for the equipment of this Third Iowa Cavalry Regiment by the colonel's brother-in-law, because it differed from the others in its irregularity. The extravagance and fraud in furnishing clothing was a great item in the investigations at St. Louis by that commission.

Mr. Joseph Holt, one of the members of the commission, had just come from Washington, where he had been Secretary of War and was perfectly familiar with all the details of the equipment of troops, while Mr. Campbell was a great merchant of many years' experience in Philadelphia and St. Louis. Judge Davis you all know. They sat during the day in the United States building. The claims presented by mercantile houses of Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis for furnishing goods, clothing, hardware, and other articles were severely scanned, and a great amount of testimony was taken on the true market value of such articles as make up this claim of B. F. Moody & Co. That testimony was applied to claims such as that now before the House, and the reductions and adjustments were made in the evening in a room in the Planters' Hotel when I was present. I read over to the three judges the essential testimony that had been given which was directly in point on a case or a claim when called or a class of claims.

A great deal of testimony was applicable to a claim which had not been given by the persons who were the claimants or who were directly or personally connected with the particular claim or the manner in which it accrued. Those frauds were not alike in all the cases, but the facts, especially of true market values, were applicable to many in reducing them to truth and justice. These reductions were made immediately, upon going over the testimony in the evening, by these three judges; the reductions were indorsed on the bills, and before the final adjournment of the commission these various vouchers, scaled down and accepted, were presented to the claimants and they signed receipts, as Moody & Co. have done on these vouchers, for the money then paid them in settlement. The amount that was taken off the Frémont administration claims ran up into many millions. The circumstances, to which the gentleman from Iowa on my right [Mr. HEDGE] referred, in the extraordinary conduct of General Frémont, are painfully true. General Frémont seemed to have lost all idea of subordination in the Government; he paid little attention to the regulations; he constantly said he did not care for red tape, and he was superseded in command upon a visit by the then Secretary of War, who found his methods, whatever might be the motive, to be intolerable and extravagant. The expenditures were examined into, and these millions of deduction were the result.

Now, it is only a few moments since I looked at this report and I can not say anything in reference to the items of this particular deduction; but I can say that I was present and made the synopsis of the testimony for those judges in every claim among the many hundreds that were there as long as my health enabled me to work, for I broke down by and by; and I believe that the House can repose confidence in the intelligence and integrity of Joseph Holt, David Davis, and Hugh Campbell, three men whose patriotism and whose arduous diligence were so often tried.

I remember well the fact referred to by the gentleman in regard to the publication of these scandals, peculations, and irregularities. At first publication was allowed of the proceedings until Judge Davis said it would make the people despair to know what was going on. Secretary Holt and Mr. Campbell agreed with him and the doors were closed to all reporters and correspondents. The disclosures every day met were exasperating. For example, I remember at this moment of a farmer who came from Edgar County, Ill., near where, I believe, Mr. CANNON lives. He with his neighbors gathered together all the good horses 'round about, and he brought them down and offered them for sale at the lowest price possible in order that the boys might be mounted—their own sons, who were down in Missouri in arms. He testified before us that the horses were refused to be looked at and he was kept waiting to beat down his price until all the money he had was used in paying for their keep; and then they were sold at a low price, I think at $70 or $71 apiece, and vouchers given him to sign for $119.50 apiece; and thus nearly half of the price was retained by the cheats who were swindling the Government.

Now, is it wonderful that the commission scaled them down? Is it wonderful that David Davis wrote to Mr. Lincoln that nothing ought to be said to dishearten the people more in those sad days of 1862, for those good farmers out in Edgar County would not eagerly send more horses down. That is why that huge manuscript was never printed. I handed it to Mr. Stanton and Mr. Stanton said, sorrowfully, "We have no money to spare for anything but the war, none for the printing of documents, and I understand it is not well that this be printed for it would have a discouraging effect." That is why that great bundle of faded manuscript lies there now on the gentleman's desk unprinted and tied with the red tape which I suppose was put around it in 1862. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is no part of my intention to suggest any lack of ability or fidelity in the great commission which passed upon these claims. It is no part of my intention to enter upon any defense of the administration of St. Louis by John C. Frémont. It is no part of my intention to enter into any discussion as to the legal authority of John C. Frémont to authorize this contract. Suffice it to say that the governor of Iowa, Samuel J. Kirkwood, believed that this authority existed and sent Col. W. P. HEPBURN, a member of this House, to St. Louis to obtain authority. Colonel HEPBURN is a fair lawyer, and if Colonel HEPBURN and Governor Kirkwood thought that John C. Frémont could give this order, and a valid order, then possibly these merchants and Colonel Bussey may have been justified in believing that he could give a valid order.

It is no answer to the just claim of Moody & Co. to say that there were frauds at St. Louis and therefore there must have been frauds at Keokuk. General Bussey's character in Iowa is not the subject of impeachment. No man is more respected by the people of that State than he is. It is true that General Bussey's brother-in-law had a trifling interest in the firm of Moody & Co.; but the interest of Moody was more than two-thirds of all, and the interest of Hosmer was more than three-fourths of the balance. This contract was let in strict accordance with instructions from St. Louis, that were believed to be valid by Governor Kirkwood, assumed to be valid by Colonel HEPBURN, assumed to be valid by General (then Colonel) Bussey. This contract was performed with wondrous speed and rapidity, at a time when the Government needed prompt service, but when so much of corruption was being discovered in John C. Frémont's administration, men were only too ready to credit the idea that there might have been corruption here.

As I have stated, in interrupting my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE], General Bussey was absent in the discharge of his official duties and could not testify before this commission; but the committees of five Congresses have reported to this House that even computing this upon the basis fixed by the commission a clerical error was made against these claimants, and that upon the very basis of the finding of this commission about $400 additional ought to have been paid to them. But there was not a finding by this commission that this claim was fraudulent in any sense. The commission never said it was fraudulent. They said it was technically not binding because of lack of authority of John C. Frémont, and therefore they cut the claim down.

There has never been a finding by any commission anywhere that this claim was fraudulent in law or in fact. It was found that technically there was no authority to bind the Government, even though Samuel J. Kirkwood and WILLIAM P. HEPBURN and General Bussey all thought the authority existed, and on that technical ground this claim was cut down because the contract was not binding, although these men spent their money like water in going from place to place-seeking manufacturers who in the crowded condition of the market at that time could supply this vast amount of goods within forty days.

This claim is just, and it is no assault upon the distinguished commission that passed upon these claims to say that it is. It is no assaut upon the their ability; it is no assault upon their integrity; it is no assault upon their industry. The most important witnesses for this claim were all in the South at the time of this hearing. The members of this regiment were in the South.

Mr. HEDGE. What could they have testified to?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They could have testified to the quality of these goods, as Colonel Rankin could have testified to the quality of the goods.

Mr. HEDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will, with pleasure, and will answer it if I can.

Mr. HEDGE. Did not the commission learn what the real value of these goods was?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The commission found——

Mr. HEDGE. Did they not undertake to learn?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think the commission tried to find out what some goods that were not there were worth; yes.

Mr. HEDGE. And did they not allow what they supposed to be the value of those goods?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They did their duty faithfully as they understood it, and as best they could; but the goods were not there. They were not subjected to inspection by the witnesses. There was no means of ascertaining the truth at that time in full, by reason of the absence both of the clothes and the other equipments furnished, and by reason of the absence of the witnesses who knew as to their quality.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to state as briefly as possible that this bill has been reported time and again. The Committee on War Claims went all through that package of papers which they had from the War Department. There is no criticism to make, with this exception: There is no charge against these people that they delivered goods that were fraudulent and not up to the standard. The committee acted on this theory, that General Frémont was an officer of the Government, that General Bussey was an officer of the Government. They were Army officers, and as such they authorized these men to furnish these uniforms. These men did their duty. Now, the simple question is just this: It appeared that General Frémont had no authority and was technically wrong, and these officers, in ordering these uniforms for this regiment, were technically wrong, because the authority should have come from a regular quartermaster of the United States Army, when probably there was not a quartermaster within two or three hundred miles of this place. But these were merchants, and not knowing the niceties that grow up in Army regulations, they in good faith furnished these goods, and, as the evidence shows, the goods were all right.

Now, this commission, which nobody is going to criticise, arbitrarily reduced the item on uniforms alone of $8,000. This claim was originally for $50,000, and the War Claims Committee has reported the bill giving them $8,000. The committee has no special interest in the bill, and therefore, to bring it to a vote, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 70.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes that the bill be laid aside with an unfavorable recommendation.

Mr. HEDGE. That it be reported to the House with the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion would not be in order. A motion to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table would be in order.

Mr. HEDGE. I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. HEDGE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table?

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the next number, 74 on the Calendar, be passed without prejudice.

Mr. CALDWELL. I could not hear the motion of the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. We have in the committee a resolution to send a lot of these claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CALDWELL. With the understanding that this is to go into the omnibus resolution, let it be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

There was no objection, and the request was agreed to.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF HENDERSON, KY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 288) for the relief of the Christian Church of Henderson, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Christian Church of Henderson, Ky., the sum of $1,500, for rental of and damages to said church while occupied by United States troops during the war of the rebellion.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "one thousand," and in line 6 strike out the words "and damages to."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MAHON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the evidence in this case shows that during the years 1864 and 1865 the fully constituted military authorities of the United States under the commands of Col. John W. Foster and Colonel Glenn took possession of and occupied for a period of a year the Christian Church in Henderson, Ky. During that time the congregation were entirely deprived of the use of the house; that by reason of the occupation great damage resulted to the plastering, to the pews, to the pulpit, and to the floors of the house and to the house in general. The evidence in the case shows that the damage amounted to about $1,500 or $1,800, as the report shows, but the committee have seen fit to disallow any claims for damages, but thought $500 to be a very reasonable and low rent for the house for the time that it was occupied by the Federal authorities.

Mr. SCHIRM. How long was it occupied?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. For about a year. This is a unanimous recommendation of the whole committee, and has been reported for the last five or six Congresses favorably, but not until now reached on the Calendar.

Mr. SCHIRM. And the services were suspended during that time?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. They were entirely.

Mr. PAYNE. After the precedent that was adopted here several years ago in a noted case, I do not think it is worth while to interpose further opposition.

Mr. MAHON. It is only a little church matter. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

T. A. WOODRESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of T. A. Woodress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay T. A. Woodress, of Grundy County, Mo., the sum of $135.60, to cover expenses and transportation paid out by said T. A. Woodress, to convey his son, A. C. Woodress, late a private of the Third United States Cavalry, in the Spanish war, from Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to the insane asylum at St. Joseph, Mo., and thence back to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., including the cost of attendants, and a sum sufficient to pay said amount is hereby appropriated.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I think there can be no reasonable objection to the passage of this bill, which provides for the payment of one hundred and thirty-five dollars and some cents to T. A. Woodress, the father of A. C. Woodress, who was a soldier in the Spanish war and who, while at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., became temporarily insane. The officers in charge notified the soldier's father and requested him to take his son to an asylum, which he did. He took him to the insane asylum at St. Joseph, Mo., where he remained a few months, until his reason was restored. Then, upon the recommendation and request of the officers, he was reconveyed back to the barracks. This bill is for the actual cost of transportation of the soldier and the attendance, nothing for the father's attention. The payment has been recommended by the officers in charge and by the Auditor for the War Department at Washington. I will be glad if the Clerk will read the report of the committee in this case, which sets forth all the facts and is very brief, if the gentleman from New York desires to hear it.

The report by (Mr. KEHOE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of T. A. Woodress, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to T. A. Woodress, of Grundy County, Mo., the sum of $135.60, to cover expenses and transportation paid out by said T. A. Woodress to convey his son, A. C. Woodress, late a private of the Third United States Cavalry, in the Spanish war, from Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to the insane asylum at St. Joseph, Mo., and thence back to Jefferson Barracks, including cost of attendants.

The claim was filed with the chief quartermaster, Department of the Missouri, for settlement. The case was referred to the officer commanding at Jefferson Barracks for report. February 10, 1899, the officer in command submitted the following report:

JEFFERSON BARRACKS, MO., February 10, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant-general Department of the Missouri.

Mr. Woodress made two trips to this post, as far as I know. First was on June 10, 1898, when he came after his son; second, December 17 1898, when he brought his son to be examined by surgeon. On account of the condition of his son the visits were necessary. No transportation was issued to father or son on either occasion. Under the circumstances, it appears to be a just claim and should be paid.

J. H. SMITH,
Lieutenant-Colonel Twelfth Infantry, Commanding.

The claim was then referred to the Quartermaster-General of the Army for instructions. That officer on February 27, 1899, referred the claim to the Auditor for the War Department for his action on the case. The Auditor for the War Department, on October 25, 1899, disallowed the claim for the following-named reasons, viz: There is no law authorizing the reimbursement claimed.

Your committee is of the opinion that the claimant should be reimbursed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, there are a large number of claims from all over the country for the services of physicians in attending soldiers of the Spanish war after they had returned to the town from which they were recruited and before they were discharged, some having become sick and remaining ill even for weeks after their regiment had been mustered out. I understand that these claims have not been paid, on the ground that the Government provided a regimental surgeon, whose services they might have had during this sickness, but as they proposed to take their own family doctors, etc., they must pay the family physician for the attendance during this time. Now, there is not a great deal of difference between this case and the cases which I have mentioned, except that in this case, I understand, it was a case of insanity, which could not properly be taken care of by the Government, and therefore the soldier was removed to a State hospital for the insane in Missouri by his parent, and treated thereat, and that this bill is simply for the transportation of this father and his soldier son to that hospital and return. That is the whole claim.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York said, there are quite a number of those claims before our committee, and we have been asked to report some general law, but we have refused to do so. We have taken the position that all these cases should stand each on its own merits.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GRIFFITH W. PAXSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 109 (in lieu of H. R. 10014), referring the claim of Griffith W. Paxson to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that that be passed without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

MAURICE F. CAWLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2490) for the relief of Maurice F. Cawley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Morris F. Cawley, late surgeon, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, the sum of $200 for the loss of a horse in the Porto Rican campaign during the Spanish-American war.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if we have paid any other claims in other wars under similar circumstances?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; but not in all cases.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there can be no question of the righteousness of this claim, but there is a question as to the amount the Government should pay Surgeon Cawley.

The facts are brief and I sketch them for the information of the House, although they have been fully set forth in the committee's unanimous report.

Mr. Cawley was a surgeon in the National Guard of Pennsylvania, and when war had been declared by the United States against Spain, like many thousand brave men of the Keystone State, especially such as were at the time connected with the several regiments of the State National Guard, he stepped forward at the call of his Government for volunteers, and, regardless of business sacrifices or family considerations, took the oath and was mustered into the service of Uncle Sam.

The regiment to which he belonged, the Fourth, was ordered forward into the field, and as a mounted officer he was ordered to take his horse—which was his own private property and the one he used at home in the practice of his profession—along with him, which he did.

He used him in the Army until the Fourth Regiment was ordered forward to Porto Rico to take part in that campaign. Cawley and his horse went on the transports provided by this Government. During the unloading of this transport, the Massachusetts, at Ponce the horse sustained such severe injuries that he was killed by order of the military authorities there.

He seeks to recover the value of the horse. The committee, fearing that his moderate claim of $200 might be excessive, on general principles undertook to cut the amount claimed to $150. This action of theirs, which they say is usual, in this case is most unjust to the claimant, and I will ask that the amendment of the committee be disagreed to and the original amount of $200 be allowed to stand.

From the information which has been furnished me in this case I am satisfied that the horse could not be replaced for $300. The amount asked for, $200, was so fixed because that was the limit allowed by the act of March 3, 1849, and subsequent legislation which amended and changed some of its provisions.

In fairness to the claimant I will read a short letter received from him:

ALLENTOWN, PA., January 6, 1903.

Hon. HENRY GREEN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of December before me and note its contents. I appreciate the fact that you have done as much as possible in the matter of my claim. I hardly know what to say or think about the reduction of the amount to $150. I am certainly not pleased with it. I have been trying to replace the horse ever since, but have not been able to find his equal. Two years ago I purchased a combination driving and saddle horse, the price of which at public sale was $275, but it is not as good a saddle horse nor as fast a driver as the one I lost. I purchased another last year at a cost to me of $435. A year before I bought him a friend paid $505 for him at public sale. Neither of these horses is equal to the one I lost in Porto Rico.

I do not ask for the value of the horse. I claim the customary $200. I have not been able to replace him for $435. I consider $200 a very modest claim. Why should it be cut down from $200 to $150, when $200 was far below his value? It is not right. The honorable gentlemen composing the committee would not like to be treated in the same way if I were in their place and they in mine. I write in this manner to you, not in the spirit of censure or complaint, but to give you information with which you might prevail upon the committee to place the amount at the original figure. I am not in a position wanting to get as much as I can out of the Government nor to take what I can get. I simply want justice.

Very truly, yours, MORRIS F. CAWLEY.

Mr. MAHON. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee was unanimous in reporting this bill, and that he let it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I hope the committee will allow it to be raised to $200, and let this claim pass. I ask that the amendment for $150 be voted down and the bill pass at $200 as presented. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MAHON. All I can say is that the horse was not worth more than $150.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. He was worth over $300, and he cost the man more than asked. I speak for the claimant. He says if he can not get what the horse is worth, if he can get but $150, why, all he can do is to take it; but he thinks he ought to have $200. When the bill was presented it was presented for only $200, the ordinary allowance. If the House decides that he can only receive $150, why, he will have to take it, but it is absolutely an honest claim and ought to be paid in full. We may boast much of our Volunteer Army, admire the patriotism and self-sacrifice of the men who constituted it, but when it comes to pay one of them a trifling sum for an actual loss, you pare it until the blood comes.

The liberality of Congress never encouraged sacrifices in time of war, and the merchant and speculator in the rear was always the favored man when claims were paid.

Mr. Cauley has waited five years for this money, and it is a shame that there is not some tribunal before whom these claims can be prosecuted and the full amount recovered. And a worse shame if this $200 is not paid him.

Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote on the amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF CARTERSVILLE, GA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1147) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to D. W. K. Peacock, J. G. M. Montgomery, J. H. Gilreath, and M. L. Pritchett, deacons of said church, or their successors in office, in trust for the use and benefit of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga., the sum of $5,000, in full for all the damages claimed by said church, or any person heretofore or hereafter claiming to represent said church, for brick and all other building materials taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war between the States; and the acceptance by said trustees of this sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every name and nature for the said use or occupation of said church, or the appropriation and use of the materials of the same, or in any manner arising or growing out of the use thereof.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope, Mr. Chairman, there will be an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MAHON. The bill, Mr. Chairman, was offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], and I think that any war claim bill that he would stand for will go through the House. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I only want time to have the report read. The report gives a full explanation of the facts in the case.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. KEHOE), as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1147) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga., beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

The proof filed in support of the bill shows that in the year 1864, while the Army of the United States were in possession of said town of Cartersville, the Baptist Church building was torn down by them and the brick and lumber of said church building was used by said United States soldiers in building for themselves quarters and in building chimneys to their tents. The brick and lumber taken and used by the Army was valued at the time at $5,000.

When buildings are torn down, if the materials are taken to erect other buildings for the use of the Army, such materials thereby become supplies, and their value, as materials for the purpose for which they are used, is paid to the owner. It is a very inadequate compensation to him. But this rule, which allows only for the materials as supplies, and nothing for damage to the building from which they are obtained, has been acted upon uniformly for many years, and is regarded as an established usage not to be departed from.

Capt. George A. Clarke, late provost-marshal, makes the following affidavit:

"That from July 5 to November 12, 1864, he was captain of Company H, Fourth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and provost-marshal of the Third Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, United States Army, and was stationed and in charge at Cartersville, Ga., and was well acquainted with the circumstances of the destruction of the First Baptist Church of said city. That about the last of the month of September or the first part of the month of October, 1864, a portion of the cavalry troops belonging to the command of General McCook were stationed in said city, and they took and carried away, for the construction of huts and shelters for themselves, the seats and pews of said church, and also stabled their horses in said church, and that afterwards, during the same fall, said troops and other United States troops tore down the walls of said church and used the brick and other materials of said building for the erection of chimneys to their huts and tents, and for their use and comfort. That said church was the property of the Baptist Church of said city to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, and was used by them as a place of worship, and was a nice brick church worth from $5,000 to $7,000. That said United States troops received the full benefit of the materials of said church buildings and the use thereof.

"GEORGE A. CLARKE,
"Late Captain, Fourth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry,
"and Provost-Marshal Third Division, Fifteenth Army Corps,
"United States Volunteers.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this June 24, 1899.

"F. M. DURHAM,
"Clerk Supreme Court, Bartow County, Ga."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why the bill provides for the payment to be made to certain individuals, named in the bill as deacons of the church, and then afterwards that this payment is to be made to, and a receipt in full taken from, the trustees. Why not pay it to the trustees of the church, who represent the legal corporation, and not to the deacons?

Mr. MADDOX. I think that is exactly what the bill provides. The bill says: "To pay to D. W. K. Peacock, J. G. M. Montgomery, J. H. Gilreath, and M. L. Pritchett, deacons of said church, or their successors in office, in trust for the use and benefit of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga."

Mr. PAYNE. And then afterwards it says that the trustees shall receipt for it.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; it says: "And the acceptance by said trustees of this sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every name and nature."

Mr. PAYNE. The trustees have not been named. Why not pay it to the trustees?

Mr, MADDOX. The trustees are the deacons of the church.

Mr. PAYNE. The deacons are not trustees necessarily.

Mr. MADDOX. They are the trustees of the Baptist Church.

Mr. PAYNE. Trustees usually have charge of the temporal affairs of the church, while the deacons have charge of the spiritual affairs.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I would be willing to accept the opinion of the gentleman from New York on a question of tariff, but I doubt very much his knowledge about church affairs. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. As my friend from Georgia has become so far converted as to accept my opinions about the tariff, I do not know but I ought to be content. [Laughter.] Still, I think this bill ought to be amended by striking out the names of these individuals and inserting "trustees."

Mr. MADDOX. It is wholly immaterial.

Mr. LACEY. I want to suggest another amendment, to which I hope the gentleman from Georgia will agree. I wish to move to strike out, in line 13, the words "between the States." It is all right on the floor of the House for us to talk about "the war between the States," but there never was any such war, and if there was, the States, not the United States of America, would have to settle these bills. We have not heretofore used that phrase in any act of Congress, so far as I know. I move to strike out those words. I hope my friend from Georgia will agree to the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] propose to insert in lieu of the words stricken out?

Mr. LACEY. I would insert "the war of the rebellion," but I am afraid it would hurt the gentleman's feelings. I am willing, therefore, to let it read "the late war."

Mr. MADDOX. I will accept the gentleman's amendment. The other question we will discuss at some other time. [Laughter.]

The amendment of Mr. LACEY was read, as follows:

In line 13 strike out the words "between the States;" so as to read "the late war."

A MEMBER. That would mean the Spanish war.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LACEY, it was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I move further to amend by striking out, in line 5, these words: "D. W. K. Peacock, J. G. M. Montgomery, J. H. Gilreath, and M. L. Pritchett, deacons of;" so as to read, "pay to such church."

Mr. MADDOX. Not the church. If you pay this money to the church, you must pay it to the trustees.

Mr. PAYNE. We might make it read "corporate authorities of the church."

Mr. VANDIVER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VANDIVER. It is that we have no order. We can not hear what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order and gentlemen will take their seats.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to amend by striking out in lines 5 and 6 on the first page of the bill the words "D. W. K. Peacock,

J. G. M. Montgomery, J. H. Gilreath, and M. L. Pritchett, deacons," and insert in lieu thereof "the trustees."

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. PAYNE). Say "legal representatives."

Mr. PAYNE. Very well; I modify my amendment so as to insert "trustees or other legal representatives of said church."

The amendment of Mr. PAYNE as modified was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM C. O'BRIEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 110, a resolution (in lieu of H. R. 5042) referring the claim of William C. O'Brien to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I ask that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. For what reason?

Mr. MAHON. Because we have a resolution which includes all these claims.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. All right; I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON]? The Chairs hears none; and it is ordered accordingly.

PROPELLER TOWBOAT COMPANY, OF SAVANNAH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11127) for the relief of the Propeller Towboat Company, of Savannah.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah, the sum of $2,929.45, for the damage done the steam tugboat Cynthia, belonging to the said company, by the transport ship Chester, belonging to the United States, in the Savannah River on the 30th day of November, 1898, for which the United States is liable.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MAHON. This bill was introduced by Judge LESTER, of Georgia, who is thoroughly familiar with the case, but on account of the condition of his voice he is unable to make an explanation to the House. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11127) for the relief of the Propeller Tow Boat Company, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the sum of $2,929.45 be paid to the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah, Ga., for the damage done the steam tugboat Cynthia, belonging to said company, by the transport ship Chester, belonging to the United States, in the Savannah River on the 30th of November, 1898.

The evidence submitted shows that the collision occurred through the threatened grounding of the Chester, to prevent which her pilot gave a sudden order to her engineer to reverse her engines and go astern at full speed, before he communicated such order to the Cynthia, which was lashed to the port quarter of the Chester, whereby the lines between the tug and Chester were broken and the tug was drawn by the suction created by the Chester's propeller under the quarter of the Chester, where the tug suffered considerable damage.

It also discloses that there was no negligence or want of care displayed by the tug or those aboard of her, and that nothing they did contributed toward the collision, and nothing they could have done would have prevented it.

The pilot of the Chester had absolute command of her and her tugs, and was the Government's agent, the collision being, therefore, due directly to his orders, and the contact of the boats arose through their not receiving the same command simultaneously.

The owners of the tugboat presented their claim to the depot quartermaster at Savannah, Ga., for settlement, and it was referred to the Quartermaster-General for decision and instructions relative to the settlement of this claim. The Quartermaster-General reported that there is no appropriation under his control applicable to payment of such a claim, and referred the case back to the depot quartermaster at Savannah for report as to the custom in the mercantile service for adjustment of such cases and recommendation as to the justness of this claim.

The following is the reply of the depot quartermaster:

OFFICE DEPOT QUARTERMASTER,
Savannah, Ga., June 10, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the Quartermaster-General, Washington, D. C.

The following is the law bearing on this case:

First. In Federal Cases, No. 8645, where in the case of the Lyon was adopted the following decision from the case of the Gypsey King (2 W. Rob. Admy., 537), where it was held: "A vessel in charge of a licensed pilot, although under the tow of a steam tug, is to be considered as navigated by the pilot and not by the tug."

Also see Desty's Shipping and Admiralty, section 390, edition 1879.

Second. For the responsibility of the owners for tortious collisions, where the vessel is in the hands of pilots, see the Merrimac (14 Wallace, 199) and the China (7 Wallace, 53), where it is held:

"The fact that a steamship is in charge and under the control of a pilot taken on board conformably to the laws of the State is not a defense to the proceeding in rem against her for a tortious collision."

Third. For the liability of the owners for damage done to either tug or tow resulting from the giving of improper commands, or the failure to give proper and timely commands to either or both, see the C. P. Raymond (26 Federal Reporter, 281, 284).

Fourth. For the fact of the Government's ownership of the vessel does not change in any manner the responsibility which maintains in the case of a mercantile vessel, see the Siren (7 Wallace, p. 152), where it was held:

"A claim for a damage exists against a vessel of the United States guilty of a maritime tort as much as if the offending vessel belonged to a private citizen."

It will be seen from the inclosed affidavits—

First. That the Cynthia was lashed to the Chester, and that the relationship of tug and tow maintained.

Second. That the responsibility of the owners of the Chester was intensified, due to the fact that she was using her own steam. (See the Virginia, 3 Bissell, p. 48.)

Third. That a licensed pilot was on board the Chester and was giving all commands necessary for the movement of both tug and tow.

Fourth. That he acknowledges to have given the command which caused the Chester, while moving forward, to suddenly reverse her engines at full speed, but did not give the proper orders to the tug until, as he states in his affidavit, "as soon as possible thereafter."

The pilot should have cautioned the tugs before making such a movement, and if this were not practicable, owing to the conditions which existed, the owners of the vessel are liable for and should assume the damage done to the tugs.

Having personally gone over the cases referred to above, as well as others bearing on this matter, and having maturely considered them in relation to the facts of this case, I am of the opinion that the Department is liable for this damage.

I have prepared and forwarded herewith vouchers covering the repairs actually made upon the tug, according to the inclosed affidavits, and vouchers for the service of the tug while she was being repaired, for approval for payment, which I recommend.

Considering all the facts of the case, the bills, both for repairs and time, are quite reasonable.

J. B. BELLINGER,
Major and Depot Quartermaster.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MAHON. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

DAMAGES AT MANASSAS ENCAMPMENT, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9632) for the allowance of claims of certain citizens of Virginia for damages to their property incident to the encampment at Manassas and march from Camp Alger to Thoroughfare Gap, Virginia, as recommended by a board of officers appointed for the consideration of claims for damages to property by volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to claimants in this act named the several sums appropriated herein, the same being in full for and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final release and discharge of their respective claims, namely:

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation of a little over $3,500. During the Spanish war the Secretary of War appointed a board of officers to go down into that country and investigate claims that had been filed in the Quartermaster's Department. Those claims were all thoroughly investigated and the board made its report. That board was composed of Lieut. Col. Frank A. Cook, Maj. F. J. Deffry, Maj. Chase Doster, and First Lieut. W. H. Simons. Now, this bill represents in detail the amount allowed to these people whose property had been taken for camps, and the Department asks that this bill be passed. In fact, the Department drew the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I understand from the title of this bill that it is a bill which provides payments of certain amounts for damages done to property in the State of Virginia, reported by the board of officers appointed under the provision in the sundry civil bill in the latter part of 1900. The duties of that board were prescribed by that bill and were to investigate claims of citizens of the United States for damages to property taken or damages done to property during the Spanish war. Is that correct?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this bill, but I want to make some inquiry about other claims of a like nature. The commission that was appointed reported a number of claims that grew out of contracts. They have been paid by an omnibus bill. That commission also reported that under the provisions of the sundry civil bill which authorized the appointment of the commission and prescribed its duties and powers it had no power to find or to assess damages because of torts. I have not the report before me, but I am familiar with it. The report goes on and classifies the claims, certain claims arising by reason of contract and by reason of tort, and because they were torts this commission was not authorized to find against the Government claims which originated in that way. Therefore the commission did not report in their favor. It simply found the facts. There are a number of cases reported by this commission where it found the Government to owe the money, but on account of those claims arising out of torts committed by the United States soldiers that commission had no right to pass upon them.

Now, I have no objection to gentlemen in Virginia, or any citizen of the United States, who has a tortious claim against the Government because of damage done to his property by reason of the encampment of soldiers, or in any way, if it be valid, having it paid; but I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of this committee, a question. There are in that same report numbers and numbers of cases reported by this committee of damages done to property in various other States. There have been a number of bills filed before that committee asking for the payment of damages. Those bills were referred to this commission, and this commission has reported upon them. Now, I want to know why it is that only those claims which originated in the State of Virginia, where the soldiers were encamped, were embraced in one bill and the claims of other citizens of the United States, which that same commission investigated, were not also taken up and considered?

Mr. MAHON. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that there are no claims in this bill that have been allowed where soldiers went out and raided a saloon or a chicken coop, or any such thing as that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not referring to that kind of claim.

Mr. MAHON. Those are torts that have never been passed by Congress, and perhaps never will be. But here are cases where, for instance, the soldiers were encamped over night in a field of rye, worth, say $150, and which was destroyed by reason of that fact. That is not a tort, but it is the taking of property. These are claims of that character. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] had this matter in charge, and I will ask him to explain further.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] that the Secretary of War authorized special agents to investigate the claims in other States, and they are doing so now—the claims, for instance, in Georgia, in Alabama, and in my own district, the claims in Pennsylvania and in other places where there were camps of United States soldiers during the Spanish-American war. These claims, being in the vicinity of the city of Washington, were first investigated and first reported. In due time, I will say to the gentleman, the committee, when the reports from the Secretary of War come in, will report the bills for payment of all claims that have been approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BARTLETT. That answers my inquiry. I wanted to know why this was given special preference, and this in a measure answers the inquiry, but the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken in some respects, because the very report from which the gentleman gets these items contains items of damages to property done in the State of Georgia and elsewhere, my recollection is. I have not read it recently, but I was at one time very familiar with it. It contains instances of damages done to property and people in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON]. For instance, they would go in and take property and injure the land. There is a large claim pending before that commission by a citizen of my own town.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that the Secretary of War——

Mr. GIBSON. We have passed a bill, which is now a law, providing for the payment of a great many of these claims, including a claim from the State of Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that.

Mr. GIBSON. And perhaps many from the State of Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. I remember that while the bill was here under discussion, in consequence of the smallness of the amount allowed to a citizen of Georgia, his Representative got up and refused to receive the amount.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true, because the commission reported that only $300 was due that citizen arising out of the contract, and that the other amount which had been found for damage that had been done to his property by the soldiers while in camp was a matter of tort, and the committee did not report for that because the commission reported that they had no authority to pass on matters of tort. It was very much like this case.

Mr. GIBSON. All we have done is to follow the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand.

Mr. GIBSON. Not feeling justified in going behind that report.

Mr. MAHON. A committee of this House could not examine into these questions of tort. We drew the distinction there, and so an act was passed authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint boards to investigate all these cases in your State and every State, which they are now doing. All our committee knows is from the statement made by the War Department and the bill which accompanies it. Of course they pared down all these claims nearly one-half.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman knows very well that if a bill like this passes we shall at once have inquiries made of us, What has become of the other claims which are also pending? I am not opposing this bill and do not intend to, because I take it for granted that the committee that reported the bill, as they have said, would not have reported it unless they had gone into the circumstances very thoroughly. The answer given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON], a member of the committee, is no doubt the proper answer as to why these other cases have not yet been passed. That is, that the committee arrived at a conclusion about this first, and that the others will, in due time, be favorably reported.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GARDNER & LAKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10936) for the relief of the legal representatives of Gardner & Lake.

The bill was read.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, that case has gone to the Court of Claims, and I move that the bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEANDER C. M'LELLAND, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8650) for the relief of the estate of Leander C. McLelland, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Leander C. McLelland, deceased, late of Cobb County, Ga., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,020, with interest from May 1, 1865, being for cotton taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for hospital purposes during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on War Claims, was read:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "$12,020, with interest from May 1, 1865," and insert in lieu thereof "$5,500."

Mr. MAHON. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give us an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MAHON. This bill was reported by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON], and I can not make any clearer statement than his report makes, and I ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8650) for the relief of Leander C. McLelland, deceased, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments:

This is a bill enacting that the sum of $12,020, with interest from May 1, 1865, be paid to the estate of Leander C. McLelland, late of Cobb County, Ga., being for cotton furnished to the military forces of the United States for hospital purposes during the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

The committee find that the decedent and his family were loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war of 1861-1865; that in the month of June, 1864, General Sherman's army was needing material for beds in the many hospitals at Marietta, Ga., and took from the decedent 22 bales of cotton, which was used in said hospitals as bedding for sick and wounded soldiers, which at the time and place of taking were reasonably worth ——, and no payment has been made therefor.

The proof shows by affidavit of R. M. Goodman, who was a resident of the town of Marietta for forty years, and was living there during the war between the States, that the late Leander C. McLelland was the largest cotton buyer in the town during the war, and that he had cotton on hand in the town at the time the army under General Sherman passed through the town; that said McLelland was a man of high character, was a Union man and was opposed to secession, and that his cotton was taken by Sherman's troops.

Also, affidavit of Carrie Shepard, the wife of an old colored man, Ben Shepard, who worked for said McLelland during the war, and who remembers that fully 10,000 Union soldiers were buried at Marietta, Ga.; that a battle was fought at Kenesaw Mountain and that a great many soldiers were killed and wounded in the battle; that the Union soldiers used the churches in Marietta as hospitals; that she worked in the churches and waited on the soldiers, and that her husband, Ben Shepard, hauled the cotton that was used by the Federal Army, and that the cotton belonged to said L. C. McLelland, and that he hauled to the hospitals 22 bales of cotton belonging to Mr. McLelland.

Also, of Mr. Humphrey Reid, stating that he was a citizen of Marietta during the war; that the town was almost deserted, and that the Federal troops burned nearly the whole town before they left. During their stay they used all the public buildings for hospital purposes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to explain two points connected with this bill: First, why the amount should be cut down a little more than one-half, if it is a valid claim; and, second, why the claim has not been paid by proceedings against the Government in the Court of Claims, or in connection with the various commissions that have had charge of matters of this kind in the past; in short, why this now comes to Congress at this late day, instead of having been disposed of years ago. I should like to hear the gentleman on both those points.

Mr. MAHON. First, as to the cutting down of the claim. This claim was made up of items and the price fixed. The value of the cotton was placed at the New Orleans market. The committee took the trouble to ascertain what the cotton was worth in the city of New York, and we adopted the New York market as being the better market of the two, because it was an open market.

Mr. LACEY. Ought it not to be cut a great deal more than that?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. LACEY. It would take off the value of the cotton shipped to New York. Why give the New York price on cotton in Georgia?

Mr. MAHON. We took the price of cotton delivered in New York, which is less the freight. We went to the trouble of ascertaining what the freight was.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to explain to the gentleman that the difference between the value of this cotton in New York and New Orleans was about one-half.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir; I went to the Congressional Library and got the reports of the cotton market in New Orleans, and we adopted the New York price, because New York was an open market with cotton coming in all the time, and took that market in preference of New Orleans which was a hard market to enter. We therefore took the price of the cotton in New York with the freight.

Mr. LACEY. In other words, gave only for the cotton with the difference in the freight.

Mr. MAHON. We deducted the freight.

Mr. SIMS. Is not it a fact that we further cut down the price to about 50 cents upon every dollar?

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. LACEY. Why should you still further cut it down if it was a just claim?

Mr. MAHON. We cut it down, because we wanted to satisfy the House that we did not want to make the appropriation so large. We have to do that in handling claims of this character.

Mr. LACEY. Is it not a little suspicious circumstance that the claim has been going on for so long?

Mr. MAHON. The lady is really entitled to the value, $12,000, and she insisted on having that amount, but I took responsibility as chairman of the committee and insisted that this cut be made. This lady was a minor, a very young girl, and when she became of age and got to be about 30 or 40 years of age she had this claim and came to Congress, and I think that no man could fairly urge against her the doctrine of laches. She has used all her means so as to get this claim paid.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will permit me a short answer to the second question. The old man died pretty soon after the cotton was delivered, and until this lady became of age no one attempted to collect the amount. She came to Congress, and I introduced this bill for her.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say further, that the lady came to me and the committee took charge of the case for her. She is a stranger in the city and she has no attorney. The gentleman from Georgia and my colleagues on the committee took charge of the case, and I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, we have two matters in which every member of the House is interested. The committee instructed me at this time to make a motion to take up a case, and I will explain that after a bill I shall ask to call up. We have what is known as the omnibus resolution, sending a large number of cases to the Court of Claims, and then one or two other minor matters, and then we will go back to the Calendar again. I now move that the committee take up Senate bill 1902 (Calendar No. 681) and my reason is this: This is a bill for an old lady here in this city, with a claim that everybody agrees ought to be paid, and out of kindness to her, considering her old age, we want to take this bill up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that Senate bill 1902 be taken up. If there is no objection, this order will be made. The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

FLORA A. DARLING.

The next business laid before the House was the bill (S. 1902) for the relief of Flora A. Darling.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Flora A. Darling, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,683, in full satisfaction of all claims growing out of her arrest, imprisonment, and the seizure of her property by military authority at the city of New Orleans, in January, 1864, while on a flag-of-truce boat under protection of a safe-conduct given her by Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then commanding the Department of the Gulf.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN].

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, this claim has been before Congress since 1871. It has been favorably reported ten different times by committees of this House. It has passed this House several times, and on two occasions has passed the Senate, and is a claim for the payment to Flora Adams Darling of a sum amounting to $5,683. This claim was referred to the Court of Claims on April 15, 1884, and on May 31, 1887, the Court of Claims found a finding of facts. The facts are these: Mrs. Darling was born and brought up in the State of New Hampshire. Just previous to the breaking out of the civil war, or in 1859, she married a man by the name of Edward I. Darling and moved to Louisiana. After the war broke out she went North to her native State. Some time later, her husband being wounded, she applied for a permit or flag of truce, in order to care for her husband, and she was sent from Washington to Richmond and then to Dalton, Ga., and there she nursed her husband until he died, in 1863.

After the death of her husband she applied to General Bragg for a flag of truce to come back to her home. He gave her a letter to Gen. Dabney Maury, then at Mobile, Ala. He applied to Gen. N. P. Banks, who then had command of New Orleans and the Department of the Gulf, and sent a boat to Pascagoula, where she was sent, taken on board the flag of truce boat, the Alice McGuigan, with her baggage and maid. The boat started for New Orleans, and when it got within 6 miles of the city the boat stopped at a place called Hickocks Landing, and the captain went to the city, telling her to remain aboard and he would send a carriage to take her to the city. While she was on the boat, and some two hours later, a United States sergeant came aboard and demanded the keys of her trunk, took her trunk, put her under arrest, and she was imprisoned in New Orleans for seven or eight days.

She was later released on parole and finally sent North on a troop ship to New York, and she has always resided in New York since. There was nothing found against her. She had nothing in her trunk in the least connected with the war. In her trunk were $5,000 in notes of the banks of Louisiana and Tennessee. There was $28 in gold and $15 in silver and some personal jewelry, amounting to something over $600. These were taken and never returned to her. Her trunk was later on returned to her.

According to all international law it is the duty of the government where they have received persons under a flag of truce to give them proper protection with their baggage. It seems to me all the rules of honesty and fair dealing require that this woman should have refunded to her this sum of $5,683.

Mr. LACEY. What was the value of these bonds?

Mr. OTJEN. The Confederate bonds were entirely cut out of this claim.

Mr. LACEY. What were the value of the other bank notes?

Mr. OTJEN. They were put in at their face value, the bank notes being good.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OMNIBUS CLAIM RESOLUTION.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have been instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent to take up out of order House resolution 362.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up out of its order House resolution 362. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bills (H. R. 6511, H. R. 9380, H. R. 10014, H. R. 5042, H. R. 8262, H. R. 9479, H. R. 5717, H. R. 5720, H. R. 10127, H. R. 10128, H. R. 10081, H. R. 1764, H. R. 2211, H. Salyer, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act approved March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on War Claims, was read, as follows:

On page 3, line 21, insert:
"estate of C. G. Raleigh, deceased; Peyton Atkins; estate of S. M. Davidson, deceased; heirs of Mrs. Susan L. Bailey, deceased; John Barfield; estate of John Kirk; trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of Charlotte, Tenn."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MAHON. I ask that the gentleman withhold his amendment for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, this resolution includes 85 different claims. They are all for stores and supplies, claims of one character, and they have all heretofore been favorably reported by the committee, and are separately upon this Calendar. The total amount carried by all of these claims, or what is claimed in these claims, amounts to $391,886.

Now, the Court of Claims for a number of years past has been allowing at an average rate of about 8 per cent of the claims of this character. So if all these claims are sent to the Court of Claims with the usual result that has taken place within the last few years this bill would mean a sum of money amounting to a little over $31,000; but even if 10 per cent was allowed it would amount to only $39,000. It will take all of these claims off the Calendar and we shall get rid of them and they will be sent to the Court of Claims, where I think they properly belong, for adjudication.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I think this is the proper way to dispose of these claims. As the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated, at Congress after Congress members present these bills, they come to the committee, they have got to be taken care of, and all the papers filed, and when Congress adjourns they go back to the file room. The examination which our committee have made since the war of all the claims that have been sent to the Court of Claims shows that the average amount allowed on the whole of the claims is 14¼ per cent. That is the actual fact.

Now, probably in some of these cases 50 per cent will be allowed, in others probably 40 per cent, and in perhaps one-half of them nothing will be allowed; but this is the history of taking these claims to the Court of Claims. The committee has the right to do it under the Bowman Act, and we have sent up hundreds of claims. When they get into the Court of Claims, where they must face a court of seven judges, where they must produce their witnesses to be cross-examined by the attorneys of the Government, over one-half of these people who have bills in this Congress abandon their claims, and that is the end of it. They never go into the court. Now, we are perfectly safe in referring these cases to that court, admittedly a court which investigates claims as thoroughly as any court we have in this country, having at heart the interest of the Government and taking that into consideration as well as the interests of the claimants.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has an amendment. We have left out a few of these claims which have been down there since the bill was reported. The committee has examined the claims, and we have no objection to those of the three or four gentlemen who wish to offer an amendment coming in. I want to say, further, we have not put in all of the claims which come to our committee. The committee examined these claims, and quite a large number we have refused to include in this resolution, because we thought they were utterly without any merit, not even enough to burden the docket of the court with them, and we selected only such as we thought had merit and that ought to go to the Court of Claims. The committee has no objection to such a claim as is proposed in the amendment to be offered by Mr. COWHERD.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the several committee amendments ought first to have consideration, and the question, therefore, is upon the committee amendments.

Mr. LACEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to oppose the committee amendments?

Mr. LACEY. Yes. I want an explanation from the chairman of the committee as to the effect of this reference upon the statute of limitations, whether or not any laches of the claimants in the past are to be deemed waived by reason of this reference to the Court of Claims—the effect, in short, of this reference, under the Tucker Act, of these old claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman that a House resolution could not waive the statute of limitations.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I would state, in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], that that is one purpose in making the reference to the Court of Claims, to remove the bar which, by act of Congress, otherwise would obtain by reason of the failure to present the claim within the time under the statute. Is that what the gentleman desires to know?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disagreement between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH]. One of them informs us that the effect of the resolution would not be to in any way remove the bar of the statute of limitations, while the other says that the object of the reference to the Court of Claims is to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. I would like to have some harmony between these gentlemen in support of the bill, or some explanation by which we could arrive at the actual legal effect of this reference.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. There can not be any doubt about the law, I imagine. The statute provided that these claims were to be presented within a certain number of years. They were not presented within the time provided by the act of Congress, because of the failure of the parties in interest to present them as they should have been presented. In some cases the parties were insane, in other cases there were minors, and there were things of that sort which appealed to the committee to remove the bar, and that the claimants now should have an opportunity of a hearing in the court on the merits of their claims.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I find under section 14 of the Tucker Act in the reference of this matter the statement that the Court of Claims should be asked to report "any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitations should be removed, or which shall be claimed to have excused the claimants for not having resorted to any established legal remedy." Now, that language, I presume, has been construed. I asked for light from the gentlemen connected with the committee, because no doubt in their investigations of these claims they are entirely familar with the Tucker Act and the construction which has been put upon it.

Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman that all claims under the act can be referred direct where the statute of limitations has not barred them, because otherwise it would be useless if the plea were raised by the United States attorney. The passage of this resolution removes the bar—the mere fact that Congress passes the resolution referring it to the Court of Claims, that court has construed, lifts the bar and that Congress has sent it there to be investigated by that court. The court is not, however, to enter judgment, but to find the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. I have not the record before me, but I do not recollect any case where there has been a resolution adopted referring 100 or more bills at one time to the court.

Mr. MAHON. I have had such resolutions passed by the House.

Mr. PAYNE. If so, it seems to me it is a very bad practice. The House can not be informed as to the merits of these numerous bills. The House, if it understood the merits of the different cases, might differ with the committee as to the propriety of removing the bar of the statute. I do not think we should by a general resolution remove the bar of the statute of limitations in respect to a number of claims without the House being informed as to the merits of each case. I do not mean to question the action of the committee, but I think that the House ought to have some information about the facts in each case, and of course that would be impracticable if 100 bills are to be acted upon in a lump. I think it a bad practice for a resolution of this kind to be brought in here and passed, taking up 100 or more bills and removing the bar of the statute, and reopening cases which may have been closed for different reasons.

Mr. OTJEN. This has been done heretofore. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, I believe, a resolution of this kind covering 44 cases was passed.

Mr. MAHON. In the Fifty-third Congress the question was raised whether a resolution of this kind——

Mr. PAYNE. We are not responsible for the legislation of that Congress.

Mr. MAHON. Still, I had a great admiration for the Speaker of that House.

Mr. PAYNE. But he did not bring in the bill.

Mr. MAHON. Speaker Crisp, following a number of decisions which had been rendered, decided that this could be done. It has been the practice of the Committee on War Claims for many years to bring in resolutions of this kind.

Now, there are reasons for action of this kind. The House can not take up a body of bills of this class one by one and consider them. It saves time to take them up in this way and get them into the court, where they may have a hearing.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, and it would "save time" for us to make general appropriations without limit.

Mr. MAHON. We are not making any appropriation in these cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Ninety-five per cent of the claims referred in this way are disallowed by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between the number 10995 and the word "for," in line 8 of page 2, the following:
"H. R. 3435, H. R. 3438, and H. R. 16417."
And on page 4, after the word "Sulzer," insert "heirs of Alexander Bradshaw, heirs of Andrew J. Surber, and heirs of O. H. Cogswell."

Mr. COWHERD. I will simply say that these bills are identical in character with the other bills included in the resolution. They are for supplies furnished to the troops during the civil war; and a resolution referring them to the Court of Claims has been reported by the committee. So that they stand "on all fours" with the other cases.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish the gentleman would go a little further and explain what the other bills are.

Mr. COWHERD. As I have said, they are all bills for supplies furnished to troops during the civil war—bills which have not been heretofore referred to the Court of Claims; and this amendment is simply to refer them to the court in order that it may pass on the question as to whether anything is due, and how much.

Mr. PARKER. Were these claims before the Commission on Claims which sat just after the war?

Mr. COWHERD. Had they been filed before the War Department at that time they would have been referred by the committee under the Bowman Act without the necessity of a resolution of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. What reason is there that these claims have not been presented heretofore? What excuse was there for waiting until now?

Mr. COWHERD. The Tucker Act seems to have been passed for the very purpose of giving to claims of this kind a day in court upon resolution of either House.

Mr. PAYNE. That was passed a generation ago.

Mr. COWHERD. There are some of these cases in which the parties did not know of the limitation imposed by the act of Congress. One of the cases which I represent has been pending ten or twelve years.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand the gentleman, there is a resolution on the Calendar to refer these three cases.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Why not take up that resolution when we reach it regularly?

Mr. COWHERD. Because it would not be reached at this session. I simply offer it as an amendment to this bill, which was first reported last session with certain claims on it, and to which the committee has added other claims. Now, I simply move to insert these additional claims which have already received the same action at the hands of the committee.

Mr. LACEY. Why not add all of these bills that they have favorably reported?

Mr. COWHERD. That the committee has reported? I have no objection and I do not understand that the committee has any objection to the including of the bills that it has reported.

Mr. LACEY. In the opinion of the gentleman, would this be a safe form of legislation, for the sake of convenience as to the Calendar of the House, to take up a bill that is somewhere else on the Calendar and attach it to the bill under consideration, in order that it may be acted upon earlier?

Mr. COWHERD. Most assuredly it would in a case of this kind. This bill is brought in as an omnibus bill, to include all cases of this kind, identical in character, that have been reported by the committee, referring them at once to the Court of Claims. And most assuredly if you bring in an omnibus bill to refer all that have been reported, a bill that has been reported a few days after the others is entitled to the same consideration if it is identical in character and if it has a similar favorable report.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman's argument would be a good argument to address to the committee, but addressed to the Committee of the Whole it is a different proposition. If this is a proper matter of amendment, the Committee on War Claims ought to move it.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman probably did not understand that they accept it.

Mr. LACEY. I did not.

Mr. OTJEN. The Committee on War Claims assented to putting this in.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. COWHERD. Is this an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes; it is to be inserted after the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

Insert after the former amendment the following:
"Also, the bills (H. R. 4253, 6391, 7083, 12258, 4251, 12895, 14640, 4252, 4250, 4249, 4248, 4246, 3496) for the relief of the First Baptist Church, North Carolina; the estate of Frederick J. Jones; the heirs of John H. Richardson; the heirs of D. W. Morton; James M. Howard, administrator of Thomas S. Howard, deceased; C. G. Perkins, Joseph B. Banks, D. S. Barrus and others; Henry R. Bryan; O. H. Perry, administrator of the estate of George W. Perry; Richard Berry."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the bills included in this original resolution have all been examined by the committee and favorably reported to go to the Court of Claims. The bills included in this amendment have never been acted upon by the committee. They are not on the Calendar, and are claims of a different character altogether. The committee want to be fair to the House. We have only one class of claims here, for stores and supplies, and only those that the committee have considered and favorably reported are included in this resolution. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to throw any obstacle in the way of the passage of the resolution. I am in favor of it. I have introduced a number of war-claim bills in behalf of citizens of my district, and some of them are included in this resolution. There are some ten or twelve war-claim bills introduced by me which I have incorporated into this amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and if I can get them also in this resolution I would like to do so now. I think that all the claims included in my amendment are for stores and supplies. It is true some of them have not been reported upon by the committee. Some of them, however, have been reported by committees in previous Congresses, according to my best recollection. These are simply claims which have been omitted by the committee, and I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] will allow them to come in and let them go to the Court of Claims. It is just a question of the court passing upon the merits and facts of the cases, and I trust that the gentleman will not object to including them in the pending omnibus resolution. I am simply making an effort on behalf of my constituents in order to get these additional claims considered without antagonizing the pending resolution.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to accommodate the gentleman if I could. This is an omnibus resolution and the House can not examine it as they can a printed bill. The Committee on War Claims aim to be absolutely fair with the House when it comes to a proposition of this kind and to tell the House exactly what is in it. The bills included in our resolution are solely measures for stores and supplies, bills which have been sent to the committee, which the committee have examined, in which they believe there is merit. A great many others have no merit and they did not include them. Now, I can not allow that that item shall go into this resolution, because if they are all put in this resolution will be loaded down with amendments; and I want to be perfectly frank with the commitee and say that as chairman of the committee I will oppose it.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is to include claims which had been passed on by the committee and were not included in the resolution?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. And that the proposition here is to put on this bill as an amendment a number of bills that have never been passed on by the committee and never reported. Is that it?

Mr. MAHON. On a different class of claims.

Mr. DALZELL. We may as well put all the bills on the Private Calendar in it, then.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The papers have been duly filed. These are simply some that have been omitted. However, if these claims do not go into this bill, I hope that they will go in some other bill, and I will withdraw the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina will be withdrawn.

Mr. COWHERD. Can I have a vote on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to discuss the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina differs only in degree as to the badness of the whole bad practice under this resolution. I do not believe that we ought to go back and follow the precedent of the Fifty-third Congress in regard to these claims. It does not strengthen the position any to say that the Fifty-third Congress did something of this kind. I think when the House is called upon to vote upon a proposition to take away the bar of the statute of limitation as to any claims, the House ought to know something more than that it is simply to be informed of the number of the bill and the fact that in the past the bill has been favorably reported to the House. You might just as well give the whole legislation of this House to the Committee on Claims.

Now, I want something more than to have a list of claims; just what this resolution is. It tells the number of the bills; that the bills are H. R. 6511, H. R. 9380, and so on, mentioning 85 bills, as they say, and the House knows nothing, even about the title, of any of these bills, and yet we are called upon not simply to refer them to the Court of Claims, but we are called upon to waive the bar of the statute of limitation now running against all these claims; and some of these claims have been presented to the accounting officers; some of them have been reported as presented to some commission—the Southern Claims Commission—that they might have adjudication upon them, and they have adjudicated upon them and rejected them.

It opens up claims which have been rejected and refers them back to the Court of Claims with the statute removed against them, some of them only commenced within a few years, and with not only the statute running against them years ago, but a statute which has been again and again extended by Congress to enable these claimants to come in. Now they gather up a number of stale claims in which the claimants have had an opportunity to go before this or that commission or to present their case before this or the other department of the Government, and they bring nothing now but the proposition alone that a committee has favorably reported the bills, and on that we are asked to remove the bar of the statute of limitation. I do not think it ought to be done. If it was done in the Fifty-third Congress, so much the worse for the Fifty-third Congress.

I do not believe in omnibus bills anyway. It is a class of legislation which ought not to be indulged in by Congress. There are too many opportunities of logrolling, too much interest the Representative has in the claimant who lives in his district. We ought not to indulge in this thing, and I hope this House will throw the resolution out and let the committee bring in these claims one by one, and let the House say whether we shall remove the bar and refer the case.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The gentleman says that these bills should be brought in one by one. Would the gentleman favor bringing in a tariff bill to consider each schedule one by one? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the question requires an answer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You voted for the omnibus public buildings bill that carried $20,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. I protested against it coming in.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. If these bills are to be brought in, each on its own merits, would the gentleman be willing to bring in a rule so that members could get up here and have consideration on their merits?

Mr. PAYNE. I am only one member of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You are the whole thing very often. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the argument made by the gentleman from New York, on behalf of myself at least, as a member of the committee, I desire to say that there is nothing blind in this bill. There is no bill in this resolution which has not had a report made and filed upon it. If the gentleman or any other member of this House be in ignorance as to the character of each particular bill, it is within his power to inform himself as to the merit or want of merit of every bill embodied in this resolution, for every bill has been reported upon and a thorough consideration given, based on evidence, and a report has been made and filed in this House, and the bills are upon the Calendar, every one of them; so gentlemen may discover whether they are unjust, and each member of the House may know every item, and know the merit or want of merit in every bill which is now under consideration. If it is desired to consider each of these bills separately, an opportunity is given any member of this House to do so. All he needs to do is to call for the reading of the report of each particular bill mentioned in the omnibus resolution, that the House may have full and ample information as to each item.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me, I am willing to adopt his suggestion and after the amendment is voted upon—of course there is only five minutes upon each side for this—I shall ask for the reading of the report if I am recognized by the Chair, that the House may be informed as to these various bills.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I want to say another thing. I have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] suggest many times to some of us who might temporarily have some doubt as to the merits of some measure before the House, "Follow the committee. You ought to have confidence in the committee." [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. When did the gentleman ever hear me say that?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. So I say "follow the report of the committee." The committee having charge of these bills has not been logrolled or lobbied with any more than other committees of this House have been logrolled or lobbied with. We have made a thorough investigation, throwing out, I presume, 90 per cent of the bills presented to the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Have you ever reported one adversely?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, yes; many of them.

Mr. PAYNE. Where is there one on the Calendar?

Mr. MAHON. They do not go to the Calendar.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. They do not go upon the Calendar.

I am complimented to be able to instruct the gentleman from New York through the chairman of our committee. We have cut out every one we thought had no merit in it. The most of these are rendered necessary through some technical failure to comply with the law. I recall one in which it failed to have consideration in court because there was a failure to appoint a guardian ad litem. The Government took advantage of the technicality to bar the suit and set the claim aside. We thought it was only fair to relieve the claim of that technicality and give the claimant an opportunity to be heard in some court.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to heartily approve of all that the gentleman from New York has said about omnibus bills in general. But I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that when for the first time in the history of this country there was an omnibus public building bill the Committee on Rules brought in a rule, and the House adopted it, and we heard not a word of objection to it by the gentleman from New York. I thought it was very bad legislation, and if the gentleman from New York had opposed it we could have beaten it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, "it seems to me, howe'er it be," that only a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] referred an omnibus bill of claims to the Court of Claims for a crowd of millionaires who had paid tariff duties on steel rails. The amount involved in that bill amounted to many hundred thousands of dollars. Nobody ever heard of the claim until the gentleman approved of that kind of a bill, until he approved that measure, until it was sent to the Court of Claims through the United States Congress with an order in the bill on the Treasury to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in each case.

Again, there was another bill a few days ago of a similar nature—I can not call to mind the title of it now—but the distinguished gentleman who protests against this little bill that will not give everybody relief, but which will give some people somewhere in the United States some relief that has been long deferred——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Tennessee ought to know, as a member who keeps track of my record and who is so accurate about it, that I resisted that bill that he speaks of——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman did not resist it on the ground that there was anything "omnibus" about it. [Laughter.] The gentleman did not make his usual omnibus arraignment of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I objected to it and resisted it on its merits.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did not the gentleman object to it on that ground? It was an omnibus bill, was it not?

Mr. PAYNE. I think I resisted it on both grounds; that it was an omnibus bill, and because the items, which I knew or had discovered something about, were thoroughly bad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that he knows everything about everything that passes through this House? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. No; I will leave that to the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think I look more closely into some things than my friend does.

Ordinarily, Mr. Chairman, I think omnibus bills are objectionable forms of legislation, but circumstances alter cases. And particularly when these adverse circumstances, Mr. Chairman, are brought about by somewhat cruel, strong, and unwieldy rules that are made every day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. They go out in the Speaker's office and manufacture a rule in a minute or two that would hold down Napoleon's army in this House, and yet the gentleman from New York does not modify these rules so that bills can be brought up here, each bill on its own merit, as he suggests. I hope the rules will be so modified that we shall have no more omnibus bills here.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding "House bill 6723" to the end of the number, and the words "Berks County Agricultural Society" to the title. I will state that this bill is recommended by the committee and stands on all fours with these other bills. It was omitted, I understand, by mistake, from this bill, and it is a bill for supplies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "House bill 6723," and after the word "Coggswell" in the amendment insert the words "Berks County Agricultural Society."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to have read by the Clerk, in my time, the report on House bill 6511.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this amendment. It is not germane to the bill, and I ask the Chair so to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill reported from the Committee on War Claims recites by number different bills. There is nothing in the bill indicating the class of bills included in this omnibus bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers as an amendment a bill designated by number. So far as the Chair is informed or can be informed upon the bill pending and an amendment offered, the bill offered as an amendment is germane. Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. MAHON. This bill refers to claims filed under the act of 1887, generally known as the "Tucker Act." Now these claims of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are not filed under the Tucker Act at all.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Very well, I will withdraw the amendment. But I want to have this bill considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] asks leave to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question being then taken on the amendment of Mr. COWHERD, it was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 72, noes 19.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out "H. R. 6511;" and in support of that motion I desire to have the Clerk read the report on that bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6511) for the relief of personal representatives of Sewell B. Corbett, deceased, beg leave to submit the following report:

The evidence offered in support of this claim is in the form of ex-parte affidavits, and your committee have no opportunity of subjecting the witnesses to a cross-examination, and are therefore of the opinion that this claim should be referred to the Court of Claims, where depositions can be taken in the usual manner prescribed by law, counsel for the Government and for the claimant having the right to cross-examine the witnesses making such depositions; and when the facts shall have been determined by the court upon the legal testimony thus taken and submitted, said facts to be reported to Congress for its consideration; and report herewith a resolution to that effect, and recommend its adoption.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that this report furnishes no reason whatever for removing the bar of the statute of limitations in this case. Nothing is presented showing any excuse for the laches in failing to bring the claims before the proper tribunals provided by law in proper time. And such being the case, I have confidence to believe that the House will adopt my amendment and strike this case from the resolution. I presume that my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. MAHON], does not desire to have this resolution loaded down with a claim which the report does not show any reason for including in this resolution removing the bar of the statute. I appeal to him to favor my motion.

Mr. MAHON. "The chairman of the committee" understands the motive of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as well as the House does. His purpose is to kill this bill by killing time.

Mr. PAYNE. No; I am seeking for information.

Mr. MAHON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am only applying the same rule which the gentleman applied on a public bill passed the other day—the bill to remove the duty on coal, which affected the interests of a great many thousands of people. What data did the gentleman furnish in his report in regard to that bill? The Committee on Ways and Means brings in here bills to put on a duty or take it off; and although they may have taken testimony running up into hundreds of pages, they never include it in their report. In fact, the shortest reports coming into this House are those from the Ways and Means Committee, though they affect the gravest questions.

Now, the gentleman does not want these facts, and I do not propose to argue the matter. If he wants to kill this bill, all right. There is not a claimant affected by these bills who lives within a thousand miles of where I reside. In this matter I am simply acting as the chairman of the committee, believing with the committee that these people should be allowed to go to the Court of Claims and have their cases heard. Whether they get there or not is personally a matter of no moment to me whatever.

If the gentleman does not want to take, even if he is serious, the action of the committee, I can not give him the light on the floor of this House that he is after, unless we go out to the file room, bring in all the evidence, affidavits, and everything, and have them read. Now, in the future, if he will give to this House all the evidence that he takes before his committee as chairman, I will agree to produce all the evidence before my committee on everything that comes in here. We simply report the facts, and in every one of those reports the court has found, as he will find printed, whether these people have been guilty of laches or not, and the reason why. As far as I am concerned, I have no personal interest in this bill. If I had constituents who were interested in it and I could get the men to stand around me, I would stay here until to-morrow morning until 6 o'clock and give the gentleman all he wants.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no objection to staying here with the gentleman all night. I do not know but I have been in worse company more than once. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Both of the gentlemen would be in good company.

Mr. PAYNE. I would have no objection to that if I could get a little light on the situation by remaining with the gentleman so long as that, but I do not seem to be able to get any light. I called for the reading of the report and that shows nothing. The gentleman answers my inquiry by saying that the report on the coal bill was a short report. I fancy that stated pretty much the whole case, if it was short. I was rather "stuck" on that report myself, because it stated the whole thing in so few words. We had no evidence before the committee, as the gentleman seems to think, but we relied upon the general information of the House.

Mr. MAHON. And we are relying on the general good sense of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. But take this bill. After a while the report is found and read. It furnishes no reason for removing the statute. I appeal with tears in my voice to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. MAHON] for some reason, so that I can satisfy my conscience in voting for these claims, but he gives none. Further than that, he says he can not give any.

Mr. MAHON. Whenever I see the tears I will give it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Why, they were in my voice. Of course the gentleman could not see them. He can not give any information, he can not give any reason why this bill should be taken up and the bar of the statute removed. Now, I have been looking around for reports. I have had half the force of the House looking for reports. They come back to me one after another and say that no report was ever made on this bill. Still, these claims have found their way into this resolution. How does that happen, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MAHON. The reports are in the file room.

Mr. PAYNE. Has there been a sort of love feast here, and claimants invited to put in their bills, whether the committee has considered them or not? How did they get in here?

Mr. MAHON. What bills?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, we were assured, in the first place, they could not find any reports on the first ten bills, and finally we have found one.

Mr. MAHON. Does the gentleman tell me these reports are not in the document room?

Mr. PAYNE. I have been told so.

Mr. MAHON. Who told the gentleman?

Mr. PAYNE. One of the employees of the House.

Mr. MAHON. Well, if they are legislating for the House, then we will withdraw.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. They are all noted on the Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. I am speaking only of the difficulty of getting any information on the subject.

Mr. MAHON. Send it to the Court of Claims and that court will get the information for you.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; but in the meantime we remove the bar of the statute. That is the evil of it. If you do not remove the bar of the statute, I do not care how many of them you send to the court, but you remove the defense of the Government in this case. Time has removed their witnesses, time has sealed the facts to the Government, and the Government does not have a fair chance to make its defense. So we are left open to these claimants——

Mr. MAHON. Let the gentleman be fair.

Mr. PAYNE. By the action of the War Committee, which does not even know the reason for it.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman could have sat in the Court of Claims, which sits in this city, and has for the last twenty-five years, and listened to the cases with reference to stores and supplies, rents, and that sort of thing, he would know full well that the Government calls no witnesses. It has none to call. The claimant calls his witnesses to support his claim and the Government makes its defense simply by cross-examination.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to have the gentleman agree with me that the Government has no witnesses.

Mr. MAHON. If the witnesses are all dead, then the witnesses for the claimants as well as for the Government are dead.

Mr. PAYNE. They are all dead, and these claims come in here.

Mr. MAHON. If the witnesses are all dead that is bad for the claimants, because it is necessary for the claimants to make out their case.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no reason stated in the report, and I venture the assertion that there is no reason in the mind of the chairman or in the mind of any member of the committee, why the statute of limitations should be removed from this case covered in the bill H. R. 6511. I call for a vote on the motion to strike out 6511.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Chairman. I want to locate these things.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 68.

Accordingly, the motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

On page 2, line 7, after "H. R. 3803," insert the following: "H. R. 3639." On page 4, line 1, after "T. P. Salzer," insert "Payne, James & Co."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to explain this. This bill has been reported in every Congress since the Fiftieth.

Mr. OTJEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. OTJEN. Are these bills now on the Calendar, favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims of this Congress?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not advised of the fact if it is.

Mr. OTJEN. Then I will have to object to this going into this resolution, because this resolution contains claims for stores and supplies——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not for a speech. I will yield for a statement.

Mr. OTJEN. This resolution is for claims for stores and supplies. Every one of these bills has been favorably reported, and is on the Calendar. If the bill referred to by the gentleman has not been so reported, I must object to that going in.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late, because the bill has been discussed. The gentleman from Tennessee has been discussing it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that provides for the payment of a claim that matured in 1862 in the city of Nashville. The right of recovery against the Government grows out of the fact that the military authorities took charge of the large warehouse of Payne, James & Co., in which there were more than $200,000 worth of dry goods. They were ordered to take those goods out. The goods were thrown out upon the public square in the rain in April of that year and greatly damaged. They remained out for several days in the rain, and the reason why this warehouse was ordered by Gen. John F. Miller, afterwards a member of Congress, to be taken was because the place where over 2,000,000 rounds of ammunition and war supplies were stored was in an unsuitable building—the roof had caved in, the chimney had fallen down, and the rains were pouring in and ruining the ammunition. Immediate possession was demanded and at once given.

These gentlemen were loyal men. Here are reports from the Fiftieth Congress down to this, made in Democratic Congresses and Republican Congresses, in which, without a single variation or equivocation, they state that these merchants were not only loyal to the Union but that they were of great service to the United States Government at that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a favorable report made April 20, 1890, by Mr. Simonds, a Republican from Connecticut. I hold in my hand a favorable report made by Mr. Herman, a Republican from Oregon, March 2, 1895. I hold in my hand a favorable report made by Mr. DAVIDSON, a Republican, in 1898. I hold in my hand a favorable report made by Mr. Pugh, a Republican, in 1896. I hold in my hand a favorable report by Mr. Enloe, a Democrat, in 1892, and one, favorable, by Mr. Stone, a Democrat, of Kentucky, in 1888, and one, favorable, by Mr. HENRY, a Democrat, to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

"I have stated all these parties were loyal and that they were of great service to the Government," said General Miller, who was then in charge at Nashville. That this claim is a meritorious claim has been stated in elaborate reports, and official records are produced showing the taking of the goods and the various other items including in loss from damage, from rent, moving, etc. Every item is fully proven. Not only did the claimants move out once, Mr. Chairman (and these officers stated it was a great accommodation to the Government for this to be done), but they "moved four times," and in each instance they were put to a great expense and loss. There was a great loss to their trade. For the loss of trade they lay no claim; but they do ask for just compensation for the actual damage to their storehouse, the loss of rent, the loss of a great deal of their property that was made perfectly worthless, as well as that partly damaged. As to all this the proof is clear and unmistakable, and so are all the reports from the Fiftieth Congress down to this.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any member of this House who has the slightest suspicion that these parties were not loyal—and not only loyal, but did not do great service otherwise to the Government—I stand here ready with the official documents of the military forces, taken at that time and taken subsequently by the Government of the United States and by the parties at interest in this matter, to disprove such contentions. I challenge inquiry. I would read the evidence, but my time is too brief and it is unnecessary, and I do not want to delay the passage of this resolution.

Now, here were these rich merchants of forty years ago, faithful to the Union, gave up their storehouses willingly, by order of United States officers, whereby their goods were destroyed, their property taken, and because of this afterwards lived and died in penury. They who survive and their children now ask for just compensation and you would at this late day deny them. To deny them is an outrage and a shame.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not object to the gentleman from Tennessee continuing his remarks. I hope he may ask that he may have five minutes more. I will ask it myself. I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five minutes more.

Mr. MAHON. With the understanding that the gentleman will not consume any more time, I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not use all this time, but shall be brief as possible. Most of these original claimants have gone to their final resting place, leaving widows, tottering with old age, penniless but still honored and respected: while others survive, but in need, with large responsibilities and decrepitude with which to battle. By honorable means have they urged this would be, and should be, generous and just Government to reimburse them, but without success—a sad commentary on our Republic and Congress. But it is true, and why? There has never been the least charge or intimation of fraud or demerit about this claim by any man, woman, or child of which I ever heard. Not a single finger of suspicion was ever pointed at it or these claimants, past or present.

Why, then, deny justice longer? Death will soon claim the balance of the old people. Already we have waited too long.

Let me read from one of these reports:

The report of Mr. Simonds, of Connecticut, states:

> The subsequent result was that Buckner H. Payne died in an almshouse at Nashville, Tenn.; Robert A. Barnes died at Nashville, old and poor, leaving a widow who is now gaining a living by her needle, and John D. James is now an old man in poor circumstances, living in Orange County, Cal.

Proud history for a just Republic!

Mr. Chairman, that is all I shall have to say on that point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of this committee [Mr. MAHON] knows all about these facts as well as I. He will not deny a single one of them. Furthermore, he knows that I have made all of the insistence in this matter that I could to have this claim reported and paid, and finally, as a last resort, that I urged that it be placed in this resolution and finally disposed of by the courts. Now, I ask you to put this claim in this omnibus bill and send it to the Court of Claims, where the facts can be found, and let that which is found to be due to these people of the $82,750 they claim be paid to them and their children, so that they may not die in the poorhouse and that their bones may not be interred in the potter's field.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move the debate upon this section and amendment be limited to one minute.

Mr. PAYNE. On this section? Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out one "minute" and insert "three hours."

Mr. MAHON. All right; we will take a vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to limit debate on the section and amendment to one minute, and the gentleman from New York moves to amend by inserting "three hours." The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to limit debate to one minute.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to amend by inserting "two hours" instead of "one minute." All I want is a reasonable debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the motion is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to limit debate to two hours.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—33 ayes and 66 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out "one minute" and insert "one hour."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask to be heard upon that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PAYNE. But the point of order is debatable.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the motion is not debatable, the point of order would not be debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is debatable. If the gentleman from New York wishes to be heard, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, no man in this House can believe from the motion I have made that I am doing anything except to get a fair debate upon a proposition to remove the bar of the statute of limitation from 85 claims.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. I should think that what I have said thus far would appeal to the intelligence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Of course if this is dilatory, it is because of the action of those who are seeking to pass this scandalous bill here in the House. When I say I first offered three hours, and then two hours, and then a motion for one hour, it shows that I am simply seeking to get time for a fair discussion as to the merits, if it has any merits, or the demerits, of this resolution now before the House. Of course I am aware that three hours, or two hours, or one hour is not sufficient to satisfy any man in this House to vote for this bill who has not some interested constituents, because there is no man in the House that knows the character of this bill.

Amendments are offered here. An amendment was offered just now by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], and I am informed that that amendment is one of the bills that the committee has reported adversely. That has not been stated to the committee, but I was so informed by a member of the committee. There is nothing to guide the members of the House in their votes for this proposition. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am simply asking for debate—not unlimited debate, not dilatory debate, but a debate on the merits of this proposition—and for some reason or other gentlemen here fear debate and fear the light upon this proposition which is brought before the House. What their reason is, what their interest is, why they wish to vote this bill through blindfolded, why the friends of the bill wish to do that, I am at a loss to determine. It is almost impossible to find the reports, because when the officers go to look for reports they find it is not the bill that is reported, but some resolution—100 on bill No. 6000—and so they are blinded in finding the reports. When I asked that the report be read they could not find one for the first five bills in the resolution.

The reports are not upon the bills, but upon resolutions, and I want to find out if there is any reason—if there is a single claim in the resolution that the committee can give any reason to the House for removing the bar of the statute of limitations from; and so I contend that I am acting fairly with the House in trying to get some chance for debate on this question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I was out of the Hall on an important matter—one of my bills—for a minute. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] stated that the bill which I discussed before the House a few moments ago had been adversely reported this session.

Mr. PAYNE. I was so informed by a member of the committee, Mr. HENRY C. SMITH.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That, of course, can not be so, because it has not been reported at this Congress. It has been reported in every other Congress since the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. The statement was made to me that it had been reported adversely.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That statement is not true, because it has not been reported at all. The papers have been in the hands of the chairman of the committee for a long time, and I have urged him time and again to report it last session and this session and as late as a few days ago; indeed, as late as yesterday.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I think so, Mr. Chairman. I desire to say that in what I said to the gentleman from New York I perhaps misstated what is known technically as the report. The committee considered the bill and put it in the pigeonhole. It was determined that it was not a proper bill to report to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the way your committee report claims adversely?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, sometimes it is not worth while to have a bill printed where the committee determine that it is not worthy of consideration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending. If the gentleman desires to discuss the point of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was unaware of that. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: The statement of the gentleman from Michigan is the first that I have heard of any opposition to this bill from any source whatever.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, just what is happening at this time illustrates that this is not a dilatory motion. Here is a proposition for time enough to ascertain the facts about 85 different and separate claims. The proposition is made to limit debate to one minute, and an amendment is offered to extend it to one hour. The claim is made that it is a dilatory motion. It seems to me that this shows of itself that the motion is not dilatory. We have found out indirectly why the point of order should not be sustained. We have found out that this claim which is offered as an amendment has been adversely acted upon; and that we could not have found out in one minute's debate.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman answer one question? How much is involved in this bill?

Mr. MAHON. The amendment now offered is no part of this bill. It is offered independently of the committee. The committee will take care of that amendment and will give the necessary information to the House in half a minute. It will not take three hours.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman answer me?

Mr. PAYNE. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to close all debate on this section and all amendments. If he simply wishes to close debate on this amendment, I have not the slightest objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order. The Chair asks the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] whether his motion was to close debate on this amendment or upon the section and all amendments?

Mr. MAHON. My amendment was to close debate on the section and all amendments pending. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not got his amendment in yet.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes, he has.

Mr. PARKER. As to this question, whether the motion now made is dilatory, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, so that the House may understand the matter, how many thousand dollars are involved in this amendment. Can the chairman of the committee give me that information?

Mr. BARTLETT. I rise to a point of order, which is that the discussion now going on and the question asked have no relevancy to the point of order now presented to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of order.

The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order that the motion of the gentleman from New York to limit debate to one hour is dilatory. The Chair, taking into consideration the character of this bill, which includes 85 bills, each one having a separate report, thinks that one hour would not be too much time in which to debate these several questions, and therefore thinks that the motion of the gentleman from New York is not dilatory, and is in order. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. PAYNE)—ayes 41, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether it is the purpose of the committee to shut off all debate, but I will offer an amendment to close debate in thirty minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I will accept twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves to amend by inserting "thirty minutes."

Mr. MAHON. I move to amend the amendment by making it twenty.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises on the original motion.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has offered no amendment. The question is on the original motion as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to be obliged to oppose the amendment offered by my friend the gentleman from Tennessee. It has seemed to me desirable that we should get as much light as possible——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I see where this bill is going; I see this effort to block the passage of this bill with or without my amendment, and rather than defeat the bill by urging my amendment I ask permission to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to the withdrawal of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is their objection?

There being no objection, the amendment of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was withdrawn.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out "H. R. 9380;" and I ask the Clerk to read the report in that case. But before the report is read I want to call attention (for I am trying to get all the light possible on this subject) to a statement in this resolution which shows something about the longevity of the running of a statute of limitations upon these claims. Of course, they all go back to the war of the rebellion. They are all forty years old, more or less. But I did not suppose that any of them had such extreme antiquity as I find by a glance at the resolution; for I discover that among other persons to be relieved from the running of the statute of limitations are Agnes and Maria, heirs of Melchisedec. [Laughter.] I have not been able to find the report on the case of Melchisedec.

A MEMBER. It went up in the Ark.

Mr. PAYNE. But I am going to send for a Bible and have some portion of that read; or I would do so, if it would not discomfort my friend from Pennsylvania. Still, I would like to know what reason this committee has for removing the bar of the statute from Melchisedec.

Mr. MAHON. Because they are old Melchisedec's children.

Mr. PAYNE. Just now I am seeking light upon the second bill, and while I have industriously sent out for these reports, and while I have tried to find out the reasons in any one case that I may present it to this committee as to why the Committee on War Claims asked to have this statute of limitations removed, I can not find any reason anywhere in any of their reports.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. It would not interrupt me.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has said something in reference to the statement that this bill or resolution which we are about to pass does something which changes the statute of limitations which runs in favor of the Government if it runs at all against these claims. Now, the gentleman does not want to convey that impression, I apprehend, unless it is correct?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I want to say to the gentleman that I get that from the learned gentlemen who are on this Committee on War Claims. I suppose they are thoroughly posted as to the law, because I know they are able lawyers. They might make poor jurors on a question of fact, however.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not doubt they are good lawyers, but if the gentleman understood the members of the committee to say that there is anything in this resolution which changes the law with reference to the statute of limitations now upon the statute books with respect to these claims, he is mistaken. I would call his attention to section 14 of the Tucker Act, under which these bills are to be referred.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to my friend that that matter was gone over before he came in an hour or two ago.

Mr. MAHON. I would state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] that under the Tucker Act claims not barred by the statute can be referred direct by the committee, but if they are barred by the statute of limitations it can only be lifted by a resolution of this House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. These are here because they are barred, so that the gentleman is a trifle in error.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think I am.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is what the chairman of the committee says.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, people can differ in respect to these questions.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I would ask that the Clerk read the report which I called for a while ago.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the report.

During the reading,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized I will have the report read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized unless some one desires to be recognized in opposition.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I will state that I introduced the bill in lieu of which this resolution is now on the Calendar and also incorporated in the omnibus resolution. The claimant in this case is a widow woman, not a millionaire. Her husband did not deal in the manufacture of gunboats, was not connected with any corporation under the sun, that I know of, and she is a poor woman.

The bill that I introduced was to give the relief that I thought that poor constituent ought to have and that I still think she should have. The report provides only that the claim named in this resolution be referred to the Court of Claims, a coordinate branch of this Government, where justice can be done, I believe, the poor and the rich alike. For that reason I have favored the reference of this claim and similar claims to the Court of Claims, believing that in that court at least justice could be had to the poor and the rich alike. Therefore this report was offered by me referring the claim in the resolution to the Court of Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am glad even for as much information as the gentleman has given as to one of these claims. As I understand, it is presented by the gentleman because she is a poor widow woman. That is an item of merit which I did not suspect existed in these claims at all, but I am glad to get that much information. As to what the claim is about, of course the gentleman has not seen fit to enlighten the committee. We have no knowledge upon the subject. I have the report before me, and the report reads suspiciously like the report I had the Clerk read before. It is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9380) for the relief of Sarah Grisson, beg leave to submit the following report:

The evidence offered in support of this claim is in the form of ex parte affidavits, and your committee have no opportunity of subjecting the witnesses to a cross-examination, and are therefore of the opinion that this claim should be referred to the Court of Claims, where depositions can be taken in the usual manner prescribed by law, counsel for the Government and for the claimant having the right to cross-examine the witnesses making such depositions; and when the facts shall have been determined by the court upon the legal testimony thus taken and submitted, said facts to be reported to Congress for its consideration; and report herewith a resolution to that effect, and recommend its adoption.

Now, while that report is exhaustive upon the merits of this claim and detailed them most fully and thoroughly, and while the committee must have labored hard to get up such a report as that, they have omitted the important fact that this claimant is a poor widow woman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. Probably it would cost this Government more to print the evidence taken about this little claim than the claimant will get on her claim when it is referred to the court. Now, the gentleman ought to be fair. If he had the power to prevent it, he would not consent that the Committee on War Claims should pile up expense upon this Government, amounting to thousands and thousands of dollars, for printing about these small resolutions referring claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication—printing that the House would not read if it had it.

Mr. PAYNE. I want another minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Let me yield it. This report says:

The evidence offered in support of this claim is in the form of ex parte affidavits.

Now, does not that show as plainly as can be that there is evidence before that committee, and that it is in the form of an ex parte affidavit? The committee think that while that makes out a case, there ought to be some tribunal to cross-examine the witnesses.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know but that is all the information the House is entitled to from that committee, that there is evidence in the form of ex parte affidavits; but still, being somewhat of an inquiring mind, it would have satisfied me still further if they had stated some of the facts in the case as fully as the gentleman informed the committee who introduced the bill into the House.

But there is another point raised by the chairman of the committee about which I want to say a brief word. The gentleman says it would cost the Government so much to print adverse reports in these cases.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; favorable reports.

Mr. PAYNE. Some one else advanced the idea that they did not want to go to the expense of printing adverse reports in these cases. Why, did the committee ever stop to think, when they were recommending a bill here to pay some claim of $30 or $40, that the cost to the Government was a good deal more, perhaps, than the claim itself?

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the House has a right to the information. It has just as good a right to an adverse report as the claimant has to a favorable report, and the committee ought to present the facts and place them upon the files of the House, showing the reasons for an adverse report, so that after they have decided adversely upon a case the claimant can not come into the next Congress and warm up his claim and revamp it and revivify it after it has been in the hands of some claim agent near or far from the Capitol, to present it in some shape that may deceive some future Congress into passing these very claims upon which there has been an adverse conclusion.

I do not agree that it is economy not to print these reports. On the other hand, I believe it would save the Government of the United States thousands upon thousands of dollars if that committee, in every case where they come to a conclusion against the claimant, should spread their conclusion upon the records of the House of Representatives, so that each party might know the reason why the committee came to that conclusion. Then, if they would go a little further, and not be too economical about printer's ink, and would print some reasons and present to the House some reasons why these claims should be referred to the Court of Claims, and given the breath of life which they have not now—which they can not have because of their antiquity—I should be satisfied; so that I should be able conscientiously to vote with my friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], and these other gentlemen who are interested in these claims.

I have a right, and every other member of the House has a right, to information upon this subject in order that our consciences may be guided and that our votes may be given in the right direction when they bring a claim here against the Government.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the object of this resolution. In the first place, we have in this city a Court of Claims composed of five judges. Congress has heretofore passed a law which has been on the statute book nearly twenty years, providing that when Congress, or a committee of Congress, desires to have a question of fact investigated, to have a claim presented by a bill or resolution fully investigated, that Congress or the committee has the right to refer that bill or resolution to the Court of Claims, to the end that the court may fully investigate the facts of the claim, and ascertain what merits or demerits there may be in it.

Mr. Chairman, the War Claims Committee has before it about 4,000 bills for war claims. It is a physical impossibility for the committee to go through these 4,000 claims and determine their merits; so we have adopted the rule of examining a claim, not thoroughly, for that is another physical impossibility, but enough to see that there is probable merit in the claim; not enough manifest merit for us to report the bill to the House for payment and passage upon ex parte testimony, claims often involving $4,000, $6,000, $8,000, or $10,000; but the committee culls out all of the cases that are prima facie meritorious and refers them to the Court of Claims, to the end that the Government may have a chance to be heard, and that the witnesses may be cross-examined and the facts thoroughly sifted.

That has been the practice of the War Claims Committee and the House for many years. There are now on the Calendar or before the committee many bills asking direct appropriations for war claims. The committee, instead of recommending these bills, and asking for immediate and direct appropriations, recommend that these bills be referred to the Court of Claims in order that the Court of Claims may investigate into the facts and merits of the cases and make their reports to Congress. When these reports come in we can better determine the justness of the claims.

Mr. Chairman, in the last twenty years there have been referred to the Court of Claims war claims aggregating about $24,000,000, and of that amount about $2,000,000 have been allowed. Nearly 90 per cent of these claims have been rejected, and it is safe to say that out of the eighty-odd claims proposed to be referred to the Court of Claims by the pending resolution there will not be twenty of them favorably reported on by that court, and even when they are favorably reported only a small per cent of the amount is allowed. The average of the gross amount of the claims allowed for the last twenty years is about 11 per cent—eleven dollars out of every hundred dollars.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then they have got to come back to this House for appropriation?

Mr. GIBSON. Then they have to come back here in the shape of reports from the Court of Claims for further investigation and allowance. The findings of the Court of Claims are examined by the Committee on War Claims before they are reported for payment. Then is the time to fight the claims on which the Court of Claims have reported favorably; those unfavorably reported, the vast majority, are never heard of again.

Now, a word as to the lapse of time. Where was the outcry of the honorable gentleman from New York and the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, who have antagonized this resolution because of the staleness of the claims—where was their outcry when the big gunboat claims were referred to the Court of Claims [loud applause]; gunboat claims old and stale, twice paid, twice examined by boards or commissions, and after two payments again referred to the Court of Claims, with the approval and aid of the honorable gentleman from New York and the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania; and, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PAYNE. Are you entirely sure about that?

Mr. GIBSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to know where the honorable gentleman from New York was——

Mr. PAYNE. Let me answer you.

Mr. GIBSON (continuing). When the claims for French spoliations were here, claims nearly one hundred years old——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more, and in that two minutes I want to tell him where I was.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

Mr. GIBSON. I have it. Now, I want to know where these gentlemen were when these ancient French spoliation claims were referred to the Court of Claims and afterwards paid, amounting to millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIBSON. But I have moved to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. MAHON. I object. Have the twenty minutes expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes of that time are remaining.

Mr. MAHON. I agree that he have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But the two minutes go to the other side.

Mr. MAHON. Then I object.

Mr. GIBSON. I will take the floor again at another opportunity.

Mr. PAYNE. I am very sorry my friend from Pennsylvania objected. I think if the gentleman had not looked at me so vigorously in the face he would have discovered where I was "at" and changed somewhat the tone of his comments. I am very sorry to have stopped him in the midst of a burst of eloquence which ought to have been heard by the House. I now call for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I hand to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after the words "seventy-eight hundred and sixty-one," insert "(H. R. 1493);" and on page 4, after the word "Salyer," insert the words "The heirs of William Heryford, deceased."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The time for debate is exhausted.

Mr. RUCKER. I merely want to say that this has been reported favorably many times.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the motion of the gentleman was on the section and pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one section to the bill, and closing debate on the section certainly closes debate. There can be no further debate in that case.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that certainly is the case when the motion is to close debate on the bill and all amendments; but it was limited to the pending amendment, and the debate was closed on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the reporters' notes show that the gentleman moved to close debate on the section and amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand the Chair that the reporters' notes show that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to close all debate on the section and amendments thereto? The Chair asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania what his motion was.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and the gentleman afterwards said it was on the section and pending amendments, but, as a matter of fact, the motion was to close debate on section and amendments thereto.

Mr. PAYNE. But the House was bound and informed by the last statement of the gentleman. It was as if he had modified the amendment. It was on the understanding that it was to close debate on the section and pending amendments, and it was in reply to a question asked.

Mr. MAHON. The question was asked by the Chair whether it was on the pending amendments or amendments, and my reply was, "On the amendments."

Mr. PAYNE. Previous to that we all heard the gentleman say "pending amendment."

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was to close debate on the section, and after closing debate on the section there can be no further debate on any amendment offered to the section. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The motion was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were 60 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to simply correct a clerical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "H. R. 330" and insert in lieu thereof "H. R. 8830."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add to the amendment an amendment changing the number 10127 in the third line to 10129, a mere typographical error.

Mr. KEHOE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment changing the spelling of a name in line 18, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN]. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be considered separately. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 1, change the number 10137 to 10139.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KEHOE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 2, change the spelling of the word "Frazier" so it will read "Frazee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question on the motion was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were—ayes 62, noes 35.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration various bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report the same back with a favorable recommendation. Also, that that committee had had under consideration House bill 2672, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reports that that committee has had under consideration certain bills and directs him to report them back with a favorable recommendation; and that the committee has also had under consideration House bill 2672 and has directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on all these bills.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman can not move the previous question on all of them at once.

Mr. MAHON. Well, if the gentleman from New York objects I do not care to press it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 2682) for the relief of B. F. Moody & C., with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection this bill will be laid on the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally taken up and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 647) for the relief of William P. Marshall;

A bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors;

A bill (H. R. 1937) for the relief of the owner or owners of the barge Charlie;

A bill (H. R. 5036) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Tellisse W. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of T. A. Woodress;

A bill (H. R. 11127) for the relief of the Propeller Towboat Company, of Savannah; and

A bill (H. R. 9632) for the allowance of claims of certain citizens of Virginia for damages to their property incident to the encampment at Manassas and march from Camp Alger to Thoroughfare Gap, Va., as recommended by a board of officers appointed for the consideration of claims for damages to property by volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 288) for the relief of the Christian Church at Henderson, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 3940) for the relief of Morris F. Cawley;

A bill (H. R. 1147) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga.; and

A bill (H. R. 8610) for the relief of the estate of Leander C. McLelland.

The bill (S. 1902) for the relief of Flora A. Darling, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, was taken up, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

House resolution 91 (in lieu of H. R. 6511) for the relief of the representatives of Sewell B. Corbett, deceased, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was taken up and adopted.

WAR CLAIMS REFERRED TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was House resolution No. 362.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of this resolution as amended.

Mr. PAYNE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 34, noes 79.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 97, nays 52, answering "present" 13, not voting 191; as follows:

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

An act (S. 5953) granting a pension to Ann M. Green—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. 6614) granting an increase of pension to Bertha R. Koops—to the Committee on Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. GILBERT, for ten days, on account of important business.
To Mr. RANDELL of Texas, for two days, on account of sickness.

THOMAS J. GEORGE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1194) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. George, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PENSIONS FOR FREEDMEN, ETC.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11404) to provide pensions for freedmen, etc., and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the special order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls for the regular order, which is Senate bill 569. The Chair is of the opinion that the better and safer form is to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 569.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce and labor, with Mr. HULL in the chair.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the first paragraph of this bill was read and then an adjournment took place, cutting off the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] from offering an amendment which he proposed. I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph, in order that the gentleman may offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the committee return to the first paragraph of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "and labor."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Alabama will allow me, I understand that the first paragraph that was read was of the Senate bill, which our committee have recommended to be stricken out. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill be dispensed with, and that the reading of the amendment proposed by the House committee be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill under the five-minute rule be dispensed with and that the reading of the House amendment be taken up in lieu thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now if the Clerk will read, then the gentleman can offer his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there shall be at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the department of commerce and labor, and a secretary of commerce and labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of Title IV of the other Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "and labor" where they occur in lines 20 and 21, in the section of the bill just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the word "and," in line 20, and the word "labor," at the beginning of line 21.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a very few minutes in the remarks that I propose to make on this subject. I believe that this amendment is the gist, at least, of the objection of a great many gentlemen on this side to this bill, and I also believe that a great many gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber coincide with me and those that I think that I represent upon this motion.

The objection, Mr. Chairman, that I myself have to this creation of a new department of commerce and labor is the inclusion of the Department of Labor in this new department of commerce and labor. As I have said before, I do not believe that it is in the interest either of labor or of commerce to include the independent Department of Labor in this new department proposed, with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President. I do not hesitate to say that I am not individually opposed to the establishment of a proper department of commerce, if the Department of Labor is not included; but, as I said just now, I do not think it is necessary or to the interest of labor or to the advancement of the commercial interests of our country to transfer the independent Department of Labor as it is now organized and operated and the good that has been accomplished by it, and submerge it and overshadow it as I believe conscientiously it will be when placed in the department of commerce and labor.

Now, I have been somewhat surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the contention that has been made by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, particularly, contending that labor should be transferred to this new department, and notably surprised at the remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who with extraordinary earnestness and zeal, and with his usual ability, contends that any action on the part of Congress of this character, leaving the Department of Labor out of the department of commerce, will be on the part of the law a recognition of an antagonism and a warfare between the interests of capital and labor. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that legislation of that kind will have that effect at all. This was not the effect of the act of Congress creating the present independent Department of Labor. The bill recently passed to take tariff off coal did not recognize antagonism or warfare.

I believe, as I think every gentleman believes on this floor, that labor and capital should always go hand in hand with each other and that the very best and most cordial relations should be maintained between those two great conflicting interests as near as can practically be done; and I believe that any legislation upon the part of the Congress of the United States that tends to prevent any friction in the future between the great interests of labor and capital should be accepted by Congress and will be accepted by the country as a harbinger of peace instead of a recognition of warfare and antagonism. We may say what we please; we may contend on this floor in the most earnest and emphatic terms that the English language affords that the law ought not to recognize any antagonism or conflict between capital and labor. That does not make it so. We confront a condition and not an impracticable theory. I believe, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not for the present.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that labor and capital will go hand in hand on peaceful terms as long as the process of production is going on. But whenever you come to the point of coming to a division of the products of labor there you will find one man seated on one side of the table who is seeking, according to the laws of nature, to appropriate to himself the greatest benefits from his labor; you will find the other man seated on the other side of that table, the capitalist, who is seeking to appropriate to himself the largest benefit from furnishing the money to labor to create these products. Hence I say that the principle of self-interest has been planted in all these things in the bosom of man. Self-interest is the first law of nature. Why, then, chase these shadows and rainbows about, the law not recognizing the natural conflicts between the interests of labor and capital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say much more in addition to what I have already said; but we have heard the maxim from our youth that "Labor dignifies all things." Now, I appeal to my colleagues on this side of the House, at least, let us dignify labor by heeding its demands. Labor has said in unmistakable terms that it does not want to be incorporated into this department. Let us now see that labor gets just what it needs, and let us regard the views of labor and not thrust it into a department where it has said it does not want to go. I appeal to everybody who is interested in this question at this time to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama, and say to the laboring people of this country that the Congress of the United States is willing to consider their interests and wishes in the enactment of law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no proposition before the House for the creation of a department of labor with a secretary in the Cabinet at this time. The proposition before the House is whether the Labor Department of the Government shall be advanced one step higher up. The gentlemen on the other side of the House are refusing to give the attention to labor which it deserves and are claiming that they are the friends of labor and at the same time seek to strike down this effort to raise up labor.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that the Department of Labor as now organized is a statistical department. It is engaged in gathering and distributing statistics in regard to labor. The conditions in that office are well set forth by the Commissioner of Labor himself. All of the gentlemen friendly to labor in the country, friendly to the organized labor, and particularly those affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, express the highest degree of satisfaction with Carroll D. Wright, the present Commissioner of Labor, and with the manner in which he conducts that office. Mr. Wright has stated, and his statement is in the hearings of our committee:

> The Department can determine many things by the statistical method, and it must work emphatically on that method. It is often said that it should undertake the agitation of certain features of reform; in other words, that it should become the instrument of propagandism. But when this proposition is made the question should be asked, Whose ideas of reform should be adopted, of what propositions should it become the propagandist, and to what extent should it argue for or against the platforms of this or that party or organization? It seems to me that all men who comprehend the value of accurate knowledge must see at once that for the Department to enter upon such a course would result in its immediate abolition; that should it become the advocate of any theory, it would thereby become partisan in its work and thus destroy its own efficiency.

Those are the words of the present Commissioner of Labor, with whom laborers are perfectly satisfied. They are perfectly satisfied not only with his words, but with his work. He says the duties of the Department of Labor are statistical. What do we propose to do? We are organizing a great statistical branch of the Government. The Commissioner of Labor has stated repeatedly that he is unable to furnish as much statistical information as he will be able to if we give him greater facilities at his command. We will give the Commissioner of Labor the facilities of all statistical branches of the Government. We will give him the use of the Census Office. We will give him the use of the Bureau of Statistics. We will give him the use of all the statistical information which the Government collects, and he can prepare his reports as freely and as independently then as he can now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. The original opposition to the proposition was presented through a misapprehension of the facts. Some of the gentlemen who appeared before our committee, representing in part the American Federation of Labor, a great and powerful labor organization, stated that they based their opposition upon the proposition that the Commissioner of Labor would become a mere clerk of the secretary of commerce and labor.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Labor will remain as independent, if he is included in this department, as he now is. He will still be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate in the same manner in which he is now appointed. His duties will still be defined by the same law that is now upon the statute books. We take nothing away from his power; we confer additional responsibilities and power upon him, because we give him additional facilities. And since, Mr. Chairman, this has been made plain to the leaders of organized labor, they are not asking that the Department of Labor be taken out of this bill. I deny that organized labor desires to have the Department of Labor stricken out of this bill. They are content with the bill as it now stands.

The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle are simply seeking to agitate labor for the purpose of gaining the possibility of votes in the future, knowing that labor itself is satisfied with the report of the committee and with the bill before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I sent a copy of the bill presented to the House with the report of the committee, giving the reasons for including the Department of Labor in this new department, to the Federation of Labor at Chicago, one of the principal constituent companies of the American Federation of Labor, and asked for their opinion on the subject.

I have this morning a letter from the Chicago Federation of Labor, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and one of the chief labor organizations in the country, in which they express the hope that the effort to pass this bill will prove successful. They know that the Republican party has never stricken—as gentlemen on the other side would indicate—have never endeavored to strike down the interests of labor. If we had before us a proposition to organize a department of labor, the question might be different. But here is a proposition to place labor alongside with commerce, upon equal terms, upon an equal footing, with the same chance and preferment in the new department of the Government, the third department of Government created in more than a hundred years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The gentleman will recollect, as a member of the committee, that the statement of Mr. Theodore C. Search, the president of the Manufacturing Association of the United States, was accepted by the committee as one of the most important statements outlining the functions and province of this new department. Now, I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he does not concur with Mr. Search in saying that this which I am about to read states the principal function of the department that we are asking now to have created? Mr. Search says:

> It should be the function of such a department as is proposed in the pending bill to assist in every feasible way in the extension of the export trade of our manufactures.

Now, I ask the gentleman whether that is not the scope and purpose and principal object and function of this new department of commerce, and wherein and how does the Labor Department become interested in that matter, when Mr. Search has stated that the principal function of this new department is to promote our export trade? Why not, as the gentleman says, let the Department of Labor——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. SHACKELFORD and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama asked that the time of Mr. MANN be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Let me complete my question. If the gentleman says that the Department of Labor is simply one of statistics, and if it has accomplished great good in the past, why does he, in opposition to the interests of labor and the laboring classes in all parts of the country, desire to take it from the field where it has been accomplishing good and put it in a department of at least doubtful efficiency in this connection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, we do not propose to place it in a field where its power or efficiency will be doubtful. We give to it additional facilities by placing it in this department. It has done much good undoubtedly, but I will say that, in my opinion, there is not one member in twenty-five, possibly not one in fifty, on the floor of this House who has read the report of the Commissioner of Labor for last year. It would be far better for labor if the reports of the Commissioner of Labor were brought home to the House through the report of a secretary of a department, and possibly through the President's message. Sometimes legislation is suggested in the report of the Commissioner of Labor, but with the many duties which the members of this House have to perform they do not see his report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. I should be glad to do so, but I have not yet answered the question of the gentleman from Alabama. Still, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman has assumed that the secretary of this new department would bring before the House what the Labor Bureau might report. But suppose that the secretary should not be pleased with what the chief of the Bureau had reported, would he return it to the House, with the possibility that there might be brought up here in discussion views and arguments which he did not approve?

Mr. MANN. If the head of one of the great Departments of the Government should refuse to call attention to the suggestions of one of the divisions or bureaus under him, it would elicit more information on the floor of the House than if he did call attention to it, because it would be a gross abuse of the power lodged in the secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. Would not that very fact tend to call the attention of the public to the matter, leading men to study the question more closely than they would have done otherwise?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] has reached the kernel in the shell. If the secretary of commerce and labor should be so opposed to organized labor or labor interests that he would refuse to present in his annual report suggestions made by the Commissioner of Labor, either with or without approval, it would be such an abuse that it would produce a revolution practically in administrative affairs, and the attention of the public and of all members of Congress would necessarily be called to the situation.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] has asked whether I do not think that the statement of Mr. Search represents the scope of this department. I do not think so at all. I do not think that any gentleman who appeared before the committee and stated his particular or peculiar views concerning the duties of this department has begun to outline the scope of its work.

I do not see how this department shall be devoted particularly to the export trade. The duties of this department, as defined in this bill, will be, first, to gather information for the benefit of the whole country and its people. That information may relate to manufactures; it may relate to foreign commerce; it may relate to labor. This will not be a partisan department. It will be a department of information; and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that included in that department of information, as one of its principal divisions, will be the department organized to aid the progress of labor and work in the interest of labor—the present Department of Labor.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman allow me one question before he sits down?

Mr. MANN. Very gladly, if I have time.

Mr. PALMER. You will get the time. You say that the labor organizations want this bill passed, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] says they do not. Now, on what evidence does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] base his statement? I hope he will be allowed time to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed for one minute.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more. It is an important part of this discussion.

Mr. MANN. I think that one minute will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I stated that I sent to the Chicago Federation of Labor, which I believe is the largest organization of labor in the country affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, a copy of the bill as reported to the House and a copy of the report of the committee giving the reasons why the Department of Labor should be included in the department of commerce and labor, and I have this morning a reply in the shape of a letter from the Chicago Federation of Labor, stating that they have received the bill and report, that they appreciate the favor of sending them to them, and hope that the efforts to pass the bill will prove successful. I know of no better instance that can be given of the actual feeling of labor than a letter of this sort from probably the greatest body of organized labor in the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before taking his seat, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question, which I desire to ask in view of the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] in regard to the statement of Mr. Search before your committee? Is it not a fact that an intimate knowledge of the labor situation and condition of labor is a very essential element in the matter of promoting our export trade, and is that not a reason why the department of commerce should have control of that situation?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course, as the gentleman from Minnesota suggests, everyone knows that all commerce, all manufacturing, all business depends for its foundation upon labor, and that you can not promote or injure one without promoting or injuring the other. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of expressing my approval of the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and to say that I will vote for that and all other amendments offered for the purpose of striking out all reference to the Department of Labor where those words may appear in the bill.

I wish to say, however, at the outset, that I am not opposed to the establishment of a department of commerce. On the contrary, I think that the time has come in our commercial growth and development when such a department is desirable if not imperatively demanded. But I do not think it wise to incorporate the Department of Labor with a department of commerce, as is sought to be done in this bill. I do not believe that the two great industrial forces of labor and capital are so closely allied as to make it advisable to commit their in some respects divers interests to one and the same departmental head.

I know it is sometimes said—indeed, it was said by the gentleman from Iowa who has charge of this bill—that their interests are and in the very nature of things must be identical. To this proposition I agree in part, but it is only true in a general and limited sense. In the abstract the proposition is sound enough, but in the concrete we find it untrue. In matters of detail we see many conflicts arising between these two great forces. This is true also of other interests as well, and is the result of a law, a natural law, as old as humanity itself. The interest of the producer and consumer, of the vender and the purchaser, while in a general sense identical, are nevertheless antagonistic in other respects. The desire of the producer or the vender is to obtain as much as possible for what he sells, whilst it is within certain limits to the interests of the consumer or purchaser to buy as cheaply as possible.

So, too, with labor and capital, with the employer and employee. In a general way what benefits the one may and often does help the other. When capital is prosperous, labor is more apt to be so, too, but all this does not alter the fact that in the daily contact of these two forces many conflicts arise; often growing out of the natural desire of each to obtain the best price for what he has to sell. But whatever the cause the conflict is ever being waged and will go on until our civilization has reached a higher point in its upward march than that which it has ever yet attained.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we are constantly reminded of this truth. Witness the strikes that are every day occurring; the great coal strike, for instance, one of the greatest and one of the most disastrous in the history of the country, has just ended; and a little more than a year ago one harmful in some respects occurred in my own town—the city of Tampa—which for nearly six months kept in paralyzed condition the business of that enterprising city of 25,000 people. So frequent have these conflicts become between these two great forces in the world's development that one of the serious problems of the age, one with which statesmen have to grapple, is to find some way of adjusting the differences between labor and capital, differences which give rise to these strikes.

Some have advised, and in these views I concur, that a board of arbitration should be created to consider and decide all questions between labor and capital when conditions between them have reached that acute stage which threatens a strike. But that is only one of the details. I believe there should be an executive department of labor as well as one of commerce, and I believe the necessity is as great for the establishment of a department of labor as it is for the establishment of that of commerce.

The utterances of the Democratic party in its last national platform speak in no uncertain tones on that subject. They declare unequivocally in favor of the establishment of a department of labor. But while I admit the necessity for the establishment of a department of commerce, for the reasons above given and for others which time will not permit me to mention, I am unalterably opposed to the uniting of the two departments under one head.

Labor, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most important of the world's economic forces, and I would not like to give my vote in favor of a measure that would dwarf its dignity, that would minimize the importance of the Department of Labor, as this bill would if it should pass unamended.

I may add that these are the views of the labor organizations throughout the country, as I gather them from the expressions of representatives of those bodies as shown in the reports of the hearings before the Committee on Commerce when this bill was under consideration, and if I had no other reasons for supporting the amendment that consideration alone would be sufficient, as I should and do attach much weight to the views and wishes of those most intimately concerned in labor legislation, and who, therefore, are supposed to be as well if not better able to judge of what will work to their benefit as members upon this floor. I shall, therefore, Mr. Chairman, vote for the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. WOOTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The Chair will state that the Committee of the Whole is considering the amendment to the Senate bill. There is one amendment pending to the amendment, so that no further amendments are in order until this is disposed of. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama) there were—ayes 52, noes 93.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama and Mr. HEPBURN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 103.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. I have an amendment to the first section of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers the following amendment to the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Said secretary shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said department, of such device as the President shall approve; and judicial notice shall be taken of the said seal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant secretary of commerce and labor, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. He shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress; and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive all accounts accruing in or relative to the department of commerce and labor and examine the same, and thereafter certify the balance and transmit the accounts, with the vouchers and certificate, to the Comptroller of the Treasury for his decision thereon.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out of said section all of lines 16, 17, and 18, on page 9, and inserting in place thereof the following:

"And certify the balances arising thereon to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same manner as the balances on similar accounts are certified under existing law."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that is simply to conform to existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentlemen on the other side of the House, in endeavoring to escape the inevitable and logical results of their proposition in this bill, are seeking to impose upon this side of the House, by misstatements of the record and of the history of matters that have taken place in this House, the responsibility for attempting to exclude labor from this bill.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], in closing the general debate on this bill day before yesterday, and when there was no opportunity for replying to his statements, with a degree of recklessness that even exceeded his usual habit of unfairness in debate, made a statement in regard to the attitude of this side of the House on the question of immigration as related to labor that is absolutely falsified by the record in the House.

It will be remembered that in the course of his remarks I asked the question whether he was in favor of an independent department of labor, and if not, why not? The colloquy between us occurs on page 856 of the RECORD of January 15. He replied that he was not in favor of it, because he did not consider it necessary; that he did not recognize the existence of any antagonism between capital and labor except, as he stated, among "ignorant men;" and when I insisted on what he meant by "ignorant men," he said he meant "the inferior classes of labor," "laborers of the sort that come to this country from the south and east of Europe;" that they were the cause of all the agitation and antagonism in this country between capital and labor. And when I then asked him the question why he did not shut them out, as that side of the House has had the power to do for these many years, he made the statement to which I now desire to reply, and to which I had no opportunity to reply at that time, which was as follows:

Mr. HEPBURN. I would if I could have my way; but I have found that whenever a contest was made, every Democrat voted against it. If we could abolish the Democratic party we could abolish this evil.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, when the debate on the immigration bill took place in this House last May, as may be found by consulting the RECORD, it was on this side of the House and by leading and prominent members of this side of the House that the chief efforts and the leading speeches were made looking to the restriction of immigration upon an educational basis, and for the purpose of securing just what this gentleman says we ought to have—an intelligent class of labor.

I find that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a very able speech and advocated an amendment imposing an educational qualification upon immigration to this country, in order to exclude this inferior and ignorant class of whom the gentleman from Iowa so contemptuously spoke in his remarks the other day. I find that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] was the leading opponent of any such restriction, and was ably aided and abetted by other Republicans on that side of the House.

I find that two distinguished Missouri gentlemen [Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. CLARK], both Democrats, made able speeches here at length in favor of a rigid discrimination against the ignorant and the lawless and the incompetent classes from the Old World, and that they were met by opposition on the other side of the House. These proceedings are all reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under dates May 21, 22, 29, on pages 5768, 5813, 5989, and following.

There was no recorded vote here upon the bill, but I state, as a fact that can be verified by the personal observation of every member of this House, that when the vote was taken upon that immigration bill nearly every member on this side voted in favor of restricted immigration. And I will call attention to another fact. That bill passed this House. It has been in a Republican Senate ever since and lies there unacted upon, when, if it was the desire of the Republican party of this country to restrict immigration, as the gentleman from Iowa thinks it ought to be, it could have been readily done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question—whether I understood him to say that I was opposed to the educational test as a matter of principle?

Mr. WOOTEN. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want my friend to say whether I am correct in understanding him to claim that I was opposed to the educational test?

Mr. WOOTEN. You made a speech of great length on the subject, which speaks for itself.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. My view on the matter was this——

Mr. WOOTEN. The gentleman can not make a speech in my time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman will not do me an injustice.

Mr. WOOTEN. I do not care to have my time taken up in that way. The gentleman was heard at great length on the subject. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. WOOTEN. Now, I say that the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, and which has been inferentially attempted to be confirmed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who spoke a little while ago upon another amendment, that this side of the House has ever taken any other position than that of favoring such a restriction as to the immigration of laboring classes into this country as would restrict it to such persons as were competent to become intelligent American citizens, or that we have ever taken any other position than that labor is a coordinate branch of individual enterprise in this country, which ought to be independently recognized by Congress, is not correct.

The position occupied by that side of the House and by the Republican party at large upon this issue is one of alternate cajolery and contempt for the laboring classes and one of consistent duplicity and deceit in dealing with their vital interests. They may deny that there is any sort of antagonism between organized and incorporated capital and organized labor, and they may seek by vague, generic definitions of labor, as including all classes of industries, to reason away and theorize out of existence the significant facts that they are dealing with; but they can not by speculation and sophistry destroy the status that is recognized by everybody as it exists in the controversy between syndicated capital and organized labor. They try to ignore that, but they can not thereby remove or remedy the evil that overshadows all other problems at this time in this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary nor does it follow as a logical result that because a man calls attention to the existence of a fact he is thereby indorsing the condition represented by that fact. I am not here nor is any man on this side of the House here ready to indorse or encourage any sort of hostility or antagonism between these classes. But I do say that no man on this floor on either side of the House can deal candidly and courageously with himself or the country without recognizing the fact, however much he may deplore it as a fact, that there is a conflict between corporate capital and organized labor; that it is a fact that has come to stay until the conditions are taken away that have built up the fact. And I want to say that bills like this and that legislation like this, which seek to subordinate and to practically ignore the great interests of labor, are not calculated to remove the conditions, but simply to emphasize the hostility between these classes.

The bill itself recognizes this distinction. It calls the proposed department a "Department of Commerce and Labor." Why should the two words be used if, as the gentleman from Illinois undertakes to reason, commerce covers all labor? I understand that theory of government which is favored on that side of the House, that commerce is synonymous with civilization; I understand that school of political thought which believes that the commercial interests are the only interests that ought to be considered in this House; but I want to say that I have no sympathy with it, and whenever the opportunity arises I desire to raise my voice against any such vicious and ruinous policy of administering this Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come to hunt the origin and history of this bill and of this measure, you will find them by referring to the Republican platform of 1900; there is where you will find them properly designated and their character properly defined. I find upon reference to the Republican platform of 1900 this plank:

Department of commerce.

That is what it was headed. They did not then undertake to deceive the country by including "labor." They said:

A department of commerce.

And here is what they demanded:

In the interest of our expanding commerce—

Not in the interest of "organized labor;" not in the interest of settling these irreconcilable conflicts that are arising daily between corporate capital and organized labor; but "in the interest of our expanding commerce we recommend that Congress create a department of commerce and industries," etc.

Not "labor." Now, we all know what "industry" means. Industry simply means that kind of enterprise that results in the production of any commodity of commerce, whether by mental or manual energy; and in that sense it includes every product of human effort and ingenuity. It does not signify labor in the sense here meant and for which I contend. We all know and we have all read in the metropolitan journals and magazines who the "captains of industry" are.

Such men as Morgan and Frick and Baer and those who represent to-day the organized greed and tyranny and oppression of corporations and capital in this country. This is the kind of a department that the Republican party asked to be created, and this is the kind of department that the gentlemen are now seeking to create by this bill. In contrast with the Republican platform on this subject, which is embodied in the pending measure, I prefer to stand by the demand of the Democratic party in its last national platform, which was in these words:

A DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

In the interest of American labor and the uplifting of the workingman as the corner stone of the prosperity of our country, we recommend that Congress create a department of labor, in charge of a Secretary, with a seat in the Cabinet, believing that the elevation of the American laborer will bring with it increased prosperity to our country at home and to our commerce abroad.

This is what Democrats believe in, and in default of which I must decline to accept this compromise measure, which is in fact a deliberate attempt to deny to the American laborer his just participation and protection in the organization of the Government. The other side of this House seem determined to refuse to labor even the small right it enjoys under the so-called Department of Labor now existing, and to swallow it up in the proposed commercial bureau here deceitfully denominated "a Department of Commerce and Labor." They have hypocritically yoked up in the bill the name of labor, without recognizing in any form the interests of labor or the rights and responsibilities of that great class of our people. I do not believe that in all its career of unblushing iniquity and fraud and hypocrisy the Republican party ever presented to this country a more infamous and hypocritical measure than this. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, the transportation facilities, and the insurance business of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I offer the following amendment:

Amend by adding to section 3 at the end thereof the following:

"All unexpended appropriations, which shall be available at the time when this act takes effect, in relation to the various offices, bureaus, divisions, and other branches of the public service, which shall, by this act, be transferred to or included in the department of commerce and labor, or which may hereafter, in accordance with the provisions of this act, be so transferred, shall become available, from the time of such transfer, for expenditure in and by the department of commerce and labor, and shall be treated the same as though said branches of the public service had been directly named in the laws making said appropriations as parts of the department of commerce and labor, under the direction of the secretary of said department."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In line 23 are the words "including the insurance business of the United States." I would wish to know for what reason or purpose the insurance business of the United States is covered into the department of commerce and labor.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it was believed by a majority of the committee that it would be a wise provision of law to have some department charged with the duty of securing proper information in regard to this immense business. The insurance business of the United States is colossal. The wealth of the insurance companies is greater than all of the values of all property in the United States at the time this Government was formed. The business of the insurance companies is greater in volume per dollars and cents than all of the combined business of all regions of this country at the end of the Revolutionary war. It is colossal. There are three corporations doing business in one single city in the United States whose assets aggregate more than $1,000,000,000.

Now it has come to pass that all commercial business is in a large measure dependent upon insurance. As I said the other day, if you were to obliterate the insurance of the United States you would well-nigh obliterate the commerce of the United States.

The business of commerce could not be undertaken were it not for the protection and influence of insurance. It is of wonderful importance to the people, and there is nobody, no authority in the United States, charged with the collection of information and its proper dissemination. There are certain of the States that collect statistics with regard to companies that do business in their States and disseminate it in their States, yet there is no one charged with the duty of securing information in regard to all of the insurance companies that are candidates for business and allowing the people to know as to them.

Three times we have, at periods of ten years distant, required the Census Office to secure some information bearing upon this subject, but at intervals of ten years. I might say here, in passing, that the information gathered by the present census force for the Twelfth Census is not yet in print. I submitted the day before yesterday a paper containing a list of 150 bogus insurance companies that were doing business in the United States and were perpetrating their robberies and fraud upon innocent and ignorant people. The committee, I think, with almost unanimity regard this provision as a most important one. I hope that there will be no disposition upon the part of this committee to strike it out.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has answered my question, as I understand, by stating that the insurance business is covered into the department of commerce and labor, because it is desired to collect information in regard to the insurance companies of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the words of the section are "to promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce" and "promote and develop the insurance business of the United States." I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what right or power or authority he claims for the Federal Government over the insurance business of the United States?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to attempt to make an argument upon that question just now. I know that the Supreme Court of the United States in two or more cases where they were discussing interests that were involved in building, in insurance of that kind, have held in the form of obiter dicta that that kind of insurance was not permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments covering this subject that I desire to have read now, and I include section 6, as it is the same subject-matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 23, page 9, the words "and the insurance business of the United States."

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I discussed briefly this provision yesterday. I read three authorities of the Supreme Court upon the subject. I was surprised that the chairman of the committee ventured the prediction that the Supreme Court would, in case of a marine insurance contract being submitted, hold it to be interstate commerce.

I hold in my hand a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered in 1894 by Justice White, commenting upon all the other decisions bearing upon fire insurance and life insurance, but deciding the question raised specifically upon a marine insurance policy; and this was the case of Hooper v. California, which appears in the record. The court there said:

The contention here is that inasmuch as the contract was one of marine insurance—

That is a matter of interstate commerce—the very identical question to which the chairman of the committee referred when he predicted that the Supreme Court would decide that it was commerce. In rendering this opinion the court stated positively that a marine insurance policy and the business of marine insurance are not commerce; that the contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce.

Now, I submit that it is not within the control of Congress to undertake to legislate upon this subject; that the insurance business is not commerce; that the Constitution does not permit us to control it; and that to do so or attempt to do so is a dangerous step. To-day the insurance companies are vast; their influence is great; they are controlled by laws of the several States; they are taxed in the States properly. Every State requires insurance companies to deposit a large sum of money, or to give a heavy bond, to protect the insured. Should Congress undertake to recognize this business as commerce, the right of the several States to tax the insurance business may be affected. When insurance business becomes commerce and such contracts are held to be interstate commerce, the State will lose control. The business of telegraph companies and of telephone companies has been held to be interstate commerce, and the Supreme Court has decided that the State has no right to specifically tax it.

I therefore say that this is an unwise step, an illegal step; that it is the creation of a bureau for no purpose whatever but to give publicity to facts which are now published broadcast over the land. You might as well establish a bureau to collect statistics and other information with reference to stocks and bonds issued by different corporations.

The chairman of the committee calls attention to the fact that there are 60 fraudulent insurance companies. Why, Mr. Chairman, how many fraudulent mining companies are there that are scattering their stock broadcast over the country?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CORLISS. Being a member of the committee, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Has the Supreme Court of the United States ever decided that insurance contracts with reference to merchandise which are the subject of interstate commerce is not itself commerce?

Mr. CORLISS. The case to which I refer was upon a marine-insurance contract relating to a subject of interstate commerce.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Was the subject-matter of the contract a subject of interstate commerce?

Mr. CORLISS. It could not be otherwise. The articles in question were being transported into the State of California on the sea. The court held that the transportation was commerce, but that a contract of marine insurance did not embrace the element of commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me unwise to create this bureau for another reason. You are imposing an additional burden upon the people. You are creating unnecessary bureaus. You have here authorized a chief of bureau at $4,000 a year, and a number of clerks. What for? To investigate facts which are now well known all over this country, facts which are published broadcast by the different States; and the benefit which is expected to be derived from this is that it furnishes information to the investor. That is all. The investor in an insurance policy may desire to know whether a particular company is fraudulent or not. Can the chief of this bureau ascertain such information under this proposed law? I submit not. The insurance companies are great corporations. What right has the chief of a United States bureau to go into a State and investigate the affairs of a corporation to ascertain facts not voluntarily given?

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we are creating an unnecessary bureau where unnecessary expense will be incurred, and I fear these great corporations may avail themselves of the opportunity to get into the courts a case upon which they may secure a decision that an insurance contract upon products in transportation is commerce. You then deprive the States of the power of controlling and regulating the insurance business. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, with very great respect for the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], who is my friend, it seems to me that in his speech he has simply been batting the air. There is not a line or a word in this bill which purports to confer on this department or upon the Government jurisdiction over insurance as interstate commerce. I do not yet know that the Congress or the Government of the United States has jurisdiction over the weather, but still we maintain an expensive weather department to publish information. I have yet to discover that the National Government has jurisdiction over the farmers' soil, and yet we maintain an expensive establishment, called the Division of Soils, for the purpose of making an examination of the soil; not soil belonging to the National Government, not soil over which the National Government has jurisdiction, but for the purpose of publishing information.

I have yet to learn that the National Government has jurisdiction over the cotton crops, but the distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who are so interested in the cotton crop properly ask that the National Government shall obtain and publish information concerning the cotton crop and statistics in regard to its amount and its quality. The same thing is true of insurance. I do not know whether insurance is interstate commerce or not. This body can not decide that question. That question will be disposed of when reached by the Supreme Court of the United States. We do not assume that jurisdiction, but we say that in a business which has grown to the great volume that insurance business has it is proper for the National Government to voluntarily obtain and publish in a way that every person can receive it information concerning the insurance companies and the class of insurance business. Not only that, but the insurance department of the Government may obtain and publish information concerning the companies which will be of value in other countries where our companies are transacting business.

Mr. Chairman, the insurance business is simply enormous. It is beyond conception almost. Last year nearly thirty life insurance companies in the one State of Connecticut received in premiums $337,000,000, and they received a total income of $425,000,000. The assets of those companies a year ago amounted to $1,858,000,000. Those assets are not owned for the benefit of the insurance companies. They are owned for the benefit of the people who are insured.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Section 6, on page 13 of this bill, which provides for this department of insurance, uses the following language:

> It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or district wherein the same is organized, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.

Now, I would ask if the word "control" as there used does not begin to inaugurate a system, whether it is done in this bill or not, as to which future Congresses, taking this as a cue, can pass laws for the purpose of giving the Federal Government under this department the right to regulate and control the business of these insurance companies everywhere? Is not that in contravention of the laws of the various States controlling and regulating the business of insurance in those States?

Mr. MANN. I think not. The words in the bill provide for control as may be provided by law. There is no one in the House, and so far as I know no one in the country, who desires to have the power conferred upon the National Government, even if it could be constitutionally conferred, to regulate the insurance business and take it away from the control of the States. But those words are usual in creating a department; they ought to be in the bill. They mean nothing unless hereafter in some way some power is conferred upon the department. It might be a power simply to collect statistics, as we confer power upon the Census Office; but it is not the purpose and not the meaning of the law to take away the power of the State and confer it upon the National Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman another question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, this, I think, is rather a remarkable provision. It is to "foster, promote, and develop" the insurance business of the United States, a business which, as the chairman of the committee stated to the House a short time ago, is already an enormous business. Yet we are to foster, promote, and develop it through the agencies of this new department of commerce and labor. Why is not this called the department of commerce and insurance? Why do you not tack onto the name the word "insurance" as well as the word "labor?" Certainly the insurance interests will be satisfied with the substance, and you propose to satisfy, if you can, labor interests with a jingle of words. What reason there is upon the earth for a department in this Government to foster, promote, and develop insurance, until the discovery was made by the gentlemen who project this bill, was a mystery to the world. This clause is an addition to what was in the Senate bill. Those who refer to section 3 of the Senate bill, proposed to be stricken out to make way for this amendment, will find that it contains nothing in relation to fostering, promoting, and developing insurance.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests that these harmless words "foster, promote, and develop" will have no weight and can do nothing unless there be other legislation. Does the gentleman, in the simplicity of his soul, suppose that it is intended that there shall be no other legislation? Can he not with the eye of fancy see a bureau presided over by a chief and an assistant chief and a chief clerk, assistant clerks, and a horde of useful employees, to "foster, promote, and develop" the insurance business of the United States, and incidentally—I might say principally and primarily—to foster, promote, and develop the interests of themselves and of those who put them into these fat but useless offices?

There are a great many things in this bill the absence of which would be an improvement; but striking and unique in these samples of strange legislation is this feature:

To foster, promote, and develop the insurance industry in the United States.

If this were not serious legislation, it would lack but little of being a roaring farce—creating a department of the Government, having an officer in the Cabinet of the President to foster, promote, and develop the insurance business of the United States, and not to leave him alone and unassisted, not to burden him with overwork, but to supply him with an abundance of subordinates so that he and they, colaboring, putting their massive intellects and their great industry into operation, may effectually and satisfactorily to those interested that way, foster, promote, and develop the huge, the enormous insurance business of the United States.

This provision did not straggle in by accident. It did not get in through some fortuitous circumstances. I think it is due to the House that those who know how it got into this bill, that those who know who got it into the bill, that those who know who are to profit primarily and directly from the putting of it into the bill ought, in a generous burst of confidence, to impart a little of the information to the House. It would not occur to the ordinary man in the ordinary way, the ordinary promoter of commerce, the ordinary friend of labor in words—it would hardly as a mere matter of accident, as a matter of fortuitous inspiration, occur to any of these to light upon this scheme to provide for fostering, promoting, and developing the insurance business of the United States. I think we can see following this the organization of some huge Federal insurance companies. I think we may witness the power of organized wealth banded together in the various insurance companies taking possession so far as they please of the machinery of the Government, using it to throw out of gear and to destroy the machinery of the States, perfected to a considerable degree for the control of the insurance interests and business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to make two suggestions in regard to the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]: First, as to the use of the language "foster, promote, and develop."

Those words are used not in their ordinary meaning, and certainly not in the meaning that the gentleman from Missouri has given to them. The purposes covered by the enactment have received complete explanation and limitation by the words that follow in the bill itself. He is to "foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States." How? By any such means or measures as the gentleman has spoken of? Certainly not; but by exactly the same processes that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has already explained in regard to the cultivation and growth of cotton, the production and propagation of fish, the control of the weather, and all of the other things that are covered by this bureau of information, by the Government.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not quite stated my point. It is to be done—

by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance business. And to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law.

So the whole action of this bureau in the matter of insurance is limited. First, its power and purpose are described, and then limited by the act itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman now yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman now has given his explanation of the meaning of foster, develop, and promote the insurance industry of the United States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. By the processes and means laid down in the statute, and limited expressly to those processes and those powers, and none other.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. What fostering, promoting, or developing does the insurance business of the United States need at this time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I call the gentleman's attention to one matter which I think he has lost sight of. It has not been quite one year since there was pending in this House a most important measure, calling upon the Federal Government of the United States to interfere to protect the vested rights and interests of three of the greatest insurance companies of the world in a foreign country, and the State Department was invoked, and had been for years before, to supervene in the matter of the wrongs that were said to be done to those companies by the legislation or regulations of the Empire of Germany. And so it was that the President of the United States put on foot, through the State Department, examinations, and reports came, and the President's messages referred to them on two different years. So there was one matter of the greatest importance that no State could have interfered with or had anything to do with. This department of insurance, had it been in existence at that time, would have had that information, all the facts that would have been necessary to have settled that matter in a very few months. As it was, two, at least, of our insurance companies suffered enormous loss of business while the pendency of insurance regulations were being attended to.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the main answer to it all, as supplementary to what the gentleman from Illinois has said about this interest of insurance, of vast importance to every man, woman, and child interested in it, that there shall be a systematic means of knowledge open to all the people of the country when there is any future legislation. There is no attempt by this measure to control the action of the State, nor to prohibit the action of a State, nor to act in place of a State. It is simply to transfer or to give power to this department to make such investigations as will give to the people of all countries, our own country as well, all necessary information whenever they have occasion to use it.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, let us neither deceive ourselves nor be deceived by any doubts of jurisdiction on the one hand or disclaimers of intent on the other. If the gentleman from Michigan is right in his legal contention, this provision, together with section 6, ought to go out of this bill. If the gentleman from Iowa is right, then more emphatically both provisions ought to go out of the bill.

It is in vain to say here to intelligent men who know anything about the history of bureaus of government, particularly any man who has any knowledge of what has been called the "hogging of jurisdiction" from the States, that the foundation here laid does not disclose the purpose of this bill. A part of the insurance capital of the country has for more than a half a century been aggressively seeking to escape State regulation.

Whenever they have had an opportunity in a case having apparently interstate commerce features it has been carried to the courts of the United States; and there has not been a year since I can remember that legislation like this would not have been here for enactment had anybody been able to offer assurance of success in either House of Congress. It has not been here because there was no encouragement to bring it here. But now a sentiment has arisen for the creation of a department of commerce and labor it is seized upon as a vehicle to carry into the domain of national legislation and jurisdiction a question that they would not risk standing alone.

This bill provides for an insurance bureau, and the words now under consideration are the foundation for the rest of the purpose. The provision is, "shall exercise such jurisdiction and control as may hereafter be provided by law." Does anybody who knows anything about the history of bureaus of the departments not know that very bureau will from now on report necessary additions to its power, and that the secretary of the department will recommend it, and that it is intended that the whole matter of interstate insurance shall be beaten into such shape under the Congressional hammer that it will become interstate commerce and directly under the control of the national bureau?

If this bill passes this session the year 1904 will not come until litigation arises thrusting this question of regulation of insurance into inextricable confusion in every State having an insurance department. Gentlemen tell us how gigantic this business has become. It is a prosperous and great business. Has it grown up under national control? No; but under State regulation. Every State, or all of the older States, have insurance departments, under competent men. They provide certain conditions under which companies may do business in the States, and the kind of information that this bureau can give is already in the hands of the States for every insurer.

That is not what they seek in this bill, Mr. Chairman. The kernel in this nut is that most of the States require certain conditions for the transaction of insurance business within their limits. And one of them is that they require a deposit of bonds or securities with their financial officer, and thus provide an amount of money within the State for those who suffer losses within the State, and in case of a suit and judgment there is something within the State to be reached by execution. That is the thing from which escape is sought, and it is one of the chief motives for pressing this measure.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill contains no feature more dangerous than that relating to insurance. It says "it shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law."

As has been very well expressed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER], the great insurance companies of this country would be very glad to have provided by law some regulations that would keep the States from controlling them as they now do. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had much to say about information for the benefit of the people. In the State from which I come we have an insurance bureau, whose duty it is to know the exact condition of every insurance company that does business within its borders, and to compel that company to exhibit its affairs for the inspection of that commissioner and let him say whether or not it is solvent and sound. Every insurance company within the boundaries of the State of Missouri is compelled to show its condition, and in doing so they find it sometimes an embarrassment to them, and to escape this embarrassment they want to come here under some sort of blanket law that will take away from the States the powers they now exercise.

As I said in a speech yesterday, in the State of Missouri we have some insurance regulations which were violated by the companies doing business in our State. We called them before the courts and took away their charters and they were not permitted to do business again until they paid fines to the State amounting to more than $100,000. They do not want to do that. They do not want to comply with the regulations of the State law. They come here with this insidious measure, and are now attempting to get Federal control where they are now controlled well by the States in the interests of the people. Every State in the Union to-day has a good insurance law and good insurance regulations, or can have them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any provision of Federal legislation that has for its object to take away from the States this wholesome and healthy control of the insurance companies doing business within their borders. A few years ago they were driven from Kansas because they would not comply with the State laws. A few years ago they threatened the State of Arkansas that they should have no insurance in that State unless they repealed the insurance laws. They tried to override the laws in my State. As has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER], this is the first step in the march of the insurance companies to the goal where the States will have no control over their affairs. To-day the insurance companies would have the questions adjudicated by a Federal tribunal. They do not want to submit to the judgment of the State courts. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that debate is exhausted on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he should not include in his amendment to strike out the words "in the United States," because that refers to other business above mentioned.

Mr. CORLISS. I think that is a good suggestion and I will adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, strike out the words "and the insurance business."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEPBURN) there were—ayes 59, noes 40.

Mr. HEPBURN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. CORLISS and Mr. HEPBURN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 70 ayes and 65 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the following-named offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service, now and heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, and all that pertains to the same, known as the Light-House Board, the Light-House Service, the National Bureau of Standards, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Bureau of Immigration, and the Bureau of Statistics, be, and the same hereby are, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the same shall hereafter remain under the jurisdiction and supervision of the last-named department; and that the Census Office, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby is, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of commerce and labor, to remain henceforth under the jurisdiction of the latter; that the Department of Labor, and the Office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby are, placed under the jurisdiction and made a part of the department of commerce and labor; that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and labor and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the Bureau of Statistics, with a chief of the bureau; and that the secretary of commerce and labor shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce and labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

That the official records and papers now on file in and pertaining exclusively to the business of any bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, together with the furniture now in use in such bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to the department of commerce and labor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I offer several formal amendments to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out of line 8, page 10, the word "service" and insert in place thereof the word "establishment."

Amend section 4 by inserting in line 9, page 10, after the word "survey," the words "Commissioners of Immigration."

Amend section 4 by inserting, after the word "immigration," in line 9, the words "immigration service at large."

Insert in line 18, page 10, after the word "labor," the words "Fish Commission."

Strike out, in line 5, page 11, the word "complete."

Amend section 4 by striking out of said section all after and including the word "and," in line 7, page 11, down to and including the word "interest," in line 11 of said page, and inserting in place thereof the following:

"And the secretary of commerce and labor is hereby given the power and authority to rearrange the statistical work of the bureaus and offices confided to said department, and to consolidate any of the statistical bureaus and offices transferred to said department."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendments will be submitted together.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the House briefly upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] authorizing the secretary of the department of commerce and labor to rearrange and coordinate the statistical work of that department, and to merge and consolidate statistical bureaus and offices wherever and whenever considerations of economy and desirability may require it. The functions of the new department, when created, will be chiefly the gathering and dissemination of statistical and other information that may advise the people of the country respecting the condition of commerce and labor in their various relations, and suggesting methods by which their interests may be promoted. The department will have no power to regulate and control either commerce or labor. Authority is conferred by the Federal Constitution upon Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and to this extent the department may administer laws enacted by Congress that bear upon this class of commerce. Beyond this the functions of the department will be purely ministerial and advisory in their character.

The original departments of the Government deal with essential governmental functions. The executive power of the Government is primarily vested in the President, and to enable him to satisfactorily administer that power various departments have from time to time been created. Until the Department of Agriculture was established every administrative department of the Government whose chief officer was honored with a seat in the council of the President's advisors was created expressly to assist the President in executing powers of government that were imposed upon him by the Federal Constitution. The Secretary of State conducts diplomatic negotiations and has control of general intercourse with foreign nations; the Secretary of the Treasury collects the revenues and conducts the fiscal operations of the Government; the Secretaries of War and Navy have to do with matters of public defense and the control of general military operations; the Attorney-General is at the head of the legal department; the Postmaster-General administers the vast and complicated postal system of the Government, and the Secretary of the Interior administers public lands, pensions, patents, and relations with the Indian tribes.

All of these functions are inherently governmental, and the propriety of distributing them among the several departments and of making the heads of the respective departments members of the President's Cabinet is natural and obvious. If the President shall successfully administer the vast interests that pertain to the executive branch of the Federal Government, it is but natural that heads of departments having control of these several branches of administrative service should meet with him and impart information respecting their condition and needs.

The first departure from the logical arrangement of the executive business of the Government was in the creation of the Agricultural Department. The Federal Government has no authority over the subject of agriculture at all, and the Secretary of that important Department can not be presumed to supply the President with information in relation to the duties imposed upon the Chief Magistrate by the Federal Constitution, because agriculture is not one of those duties.

The importance, however, of the agricultural interests became so great, and the fact that agriculture is generally known to be the bedrock of civilization, were sufficient to justify Congress in elevating the Bureau of Agriculture to the dignity of a Department and making the head of that Department eligible to admission into the President's council of advisors. But this action of Congress did not and could not change or add to the powers of the Chief Executive.

Following the precedent of the Agricultural Department, it is now proposed to create a department of commerce and industry, placing it, as far as it can be placed by legislation, upon the same footing, in relation to dignity and authority, as the other great Departments of Government. Its duties are not governmental. Commerce during all time has been, and probably for many generations in the future will continue to be, the subject of purely private enterprise, but the transcendent importance of commerce and labor in relation to the welfare and advancement of civilization make these subjects worthy of the high consideration they will receive in the creation of an independent department dedicated to their promotion.

It is of great importance to the country to have accurate information respecting conditions and methods of commerce, not only here but in other lands, and also to know of the true interests and relations of labor in the numerous productive activities of the country. It is expected that the new department will gather and disseminate all the information that can be gotten in relation to these highly important subjects. This information will be of incalculable value to individuals and private enterprises in suggesting improvements of methods of production and better conditions of life. It may also be made the basis of information necessary to intelligent legislation upon the part of Congress and the several States. I am in favor of creating the new department and believe if it is properly organized and administered it will many times repay the cost of its establishment and maintenance.

But, as I said at the outset, the functions of the department will be chiefly in the gathering and the distribution of statistical information, and it ought to be so organized and conducted as to supply such information, not only for the people of the country, but for the use of all of the other departments of the Government, as far as it is possible to do so. Every statistical bureau, office, and division in all of the departments should be included in the department of commerce and labor, in order that this great work may be conducted scientifically and in a businesslike manner. One general statistical bureau, with a competent chief and a sufficient number of statistical experts, with a trained corps of assistants and a sufficient number of ministerial officers, can more efficiently and economically gather and disseminate statistics than if the work shall be apportioned among ten or a dozen bureaus and offices scattered around among the various departments of the Government, each acting independent of the others.

There are now nine different bureaus and offices for which appropriations are made expressly for the purpose of collecting and distributing statistical data, each one presided over by a high-salaried chief and an efficient and highly trained corps of staff officers. One such organization ought to be sufficient for the entire work. I refer now to statistics for general use and those that may be used by the several departments of Government in administering their functions. I admit that statistical information respecting the administration of some of the subdivisions of the departments that is of peculiar value to those departments can better be collected by the departments themselves in some instances than by a general bureau, but in most instances there is no need for more than one bureau with a chief and staff of experts for the collection of statistics.

Under existing conditions the work of collecting and distributing statistics is duplicated and reduplicated, as high as four times in some instances, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are wasted every year by such unnecessary work. It is the natural tendency of every department to enlarge, ramify, and extend its functions so as to make itself as nearly independent of all other departments as possible, and to this end a department which may require statistical information, instead of going to a statistical bureau for it, organizes a division of its own, and employs a corps of clerks to collect the information. If there were one statistical bureau, properly equipped to enter upon all general fields of statistical and scientific research and investigation, charged with the duty of supplying all the other departments with such information as may be necessary to enable them to administer their several functions, it would be a long step toward simplifying and putting upon a common-sense basis the administration of the Government.

The pending bill proposes to include within the department of commerce and labor the Census Office, the Bureau of Statistics, and several other offices whose duty is chiefly the collection and distribution of statistical information. It does not include the Bureau of Education. I am unable to understand why this Bureau was omitted. Its work is peculiarly statistical. That Bureau has no authority over the schools of the country. It has no power to regulate or control their work, but can only collect useful information to be distributed throughout the country for the information of those engaged in school work generally. There is no occasion for maintaining an independent bureau for that work under the control of a high-salaried chief with a corps of expert assistants. It could as well be included in the Census Office—since that office has been made permanent—as a division, without in any respect impairing its usefulness, and a great saving would thus be accomplished. I would insist upon an amendment to the measure, including that Bureau, if it were not that authority is expressly conferred upon the President to transfer from other departments bureaus and offices engaged in statistical work, wherever he deems it for the public interest to do so. I sincerely hope and believe that at an early date the Educational Bureau will be transferred to the department of commerce and labor.

During the last session of Congress the Census Office was made permanent with the expectation that it should become the chief bureau for the collection and dissemination of statistical information for the entire Government. It was thought wise to make it a permanent institution, and from time to time charge it with the duty of making investigations relating to the activities of the country with this end in view. It was urged in support of the bill making that office a permanent bureau that in the course of time a sufficient force of trained experts and clerks would so systemize and perfect the methods of collecting statistics that more reliable and trustworthy information could be obtained.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Could not that work be done now by referring it to the Census Bureau as established at the last session, leaving that Bureau just where it is?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The object of making the Census Office a permanent bureau was principally to create one bureau for the collection of statistics, with the expectation that all statistical work would ultimately be transferred to that office.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Could not this business be all put in that Bureau?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It can all be put in control of that Bureau, provided the amendment to which I have referred shall be adopted. The bill as it now stands transfers the Bureau of Statistics, the Census Office, and several other statistical bureaus into the department of commerce and labor with their functions and organization unimpaired, and it provides that these several bureaus shall continue to perform the duties respectively imposed upon them by existing law. There is no authority in the bill for the elimination of a single one of these statistical bureaus, but, on the other hand, the bill expressly makes them administrative units in the new department and continues them in existence as they are to-day.

The effect of the pending amendment will be to authorize the secretary of the department of commerce and labor to reorganize that branch of the service and to merge and consolidate all of the statistical bureaus into one and thus dispense with a number of unnecessary organizations. A department of the magnitude of the one about to be created will necessarily be very imperfect at the beginning. It will require time and experience to coordinate the several administrative units that are included in it, and to reduce its work to a business basis. It is necessary that the pending amendment be passed in order that the methods of administration may be perfected and cheapened.

But to recur to the question of reduplication, the Geological Survey and the Census Office are engaged at this time in securing statistics in relation to mines and mining of identically the same character. Under the law the Census Office is charged with collecting and distributing these statistics. A like duty is imposed upon the Geological Survey. So each of these bureaus is sending special agents into the country to the same localities for the purpose of securing identically the same information to transmit to their respective offices, which will be classified, tabulated, and published in independent reports by these two bureaus. There is duplication of work between the Census Office and the Commissioner of Navigation and the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the Division of Statistics in the Agricultural Department, the Department of Labor, the Bureau of Education, and the Bureau of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. There is duplication in the work of these several bureaus to such an extent that the same information is collected, published, and disseminated in some instances by four separate offices, each operated independently of the others.

In many respects the methods of collecting and tabulating the information are different, and it leads to confusion and uncertainty. In other instances there are vast discrepancies in the statistics collected by these several agencies, acting independently as they do. The whole situation illustrates the utter want of business methods in this branch of administration.

The Census Office, under the law of 1899, was required to collect and report the crop statistics of the country for the year 1899, which it did. The Statistical Division of the Department of Agriculture is engaged in collecting and distributing crop statistics every year.

For the year 1899 there were vast discrepancies in the reports of those two bureaus. For instance, the Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department showed 588,296,276 bushels of corn less than the quantity shown by the Census Office, 147,211,375 less bushels of oats than were shown by the reports of the Census Office, 111,230,252 bushels of wheat less than the amount shown by the Census Office, 27,355,543 less tons of hay and forage than were shown by the reports of the Census Office. These are a few of the most glaring discrepancies in the reports of the statistical offices. They are such as to discredit in a large degree the result of the whole system. The idea that a difference of nearly 600,000,000 bushels of corn produced in the country in a single year shown by the official reports of two statistical bureaus is certainly not to be reconciled with anything like respectable administration. These discrepancies give rise to controversies and friction among the several statistical offices.

The Census Office, having been made permanent, is naturally the agency by which statistics can best be collected and distributed for the whole Government. It is one of the very best organized bureaus connected with the Government. The work of that office in taking the Twelth Census, in relation to all that goes to make a census valuable, has never been equaled in the history of the country. It was organized by one whose capacity for executive work is acknowledged by all, and it is now composed of trained and skilled statisticians and experts, and with but little, if any, addition to its force, it can easily collect, classify, and distribute all of the statistics that may be required.

The other offices, in my judgment, should be merged into the Census Office. This is the logical thing to do, and it will dispense with a number of bureaus with high-salaried chiefs, avoid a duplication of work and the publication of numerous reports containing the same matter, and thereby save hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government and greatly simplify and facilitate the statistical methods of the Government.

I will append to my remarks tables and documents showing the number of statistical bureaus and offices now engaged in that work, extracts from laws showing in part duplications of the work, the duplication of reports, and a table showing discrepancies between the Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department and the Census Office in relation to their crop reports for the year 1899.

APPENDIX.

Estimate of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

Offices, bureaus, etc.	Officials and employees.	Amount.
Census Office	661	$1,178,660
Bureau of Statistics (Treasury Department)	48	[a] 73,350
Bureau of Navigation (Treasury Department)	21	26,480
Department of Labor	80	184,220
Bureau of Statistics (Agricultural Department)	[b] 36	[b] 46,960
Collecting agricultural statistics	[b] 39	[b] 109,200
Report on Mineral Resources (Geological Survey)	33	50,000
Bureau of Education	43	52,940
Bureau of Foreign Commerce	6	8,000
Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, statistical branch (Treasury Department)	3	4,000
Total	970	1,733,810

[a] Includes $11,000 for the collection of facts relative to internal and foreign commerce of the United States and the collection and compilation of statistics of the foreign commerce and productions of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands prior to 1898.

[b] A total of 75 employees and $156,160 for statistics of the Agricultural Department.

DUPLICATION AS SHOWN BY THE LAWS.

As shown by the following quotations from the laws establishing these bureaus, there is necessarily a duplication in their work if the provisions of the law are complied with.

MINES AND MINING.

Geological Survey.

"Procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining other than gold and silver."

Census Office.

"To collect statistics relating to * * * mines, mining, quarries, and minerals * * * including gold and silver."

Director of the Mint.

"For the collection of statistics relative to the annual production and consumption of the precious metals of the United States."

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

Division of Statistics, Agricultural Department.

"Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics."

Census Office.

"A census of the agricultural products."

"Collect the statistics of the cotton production of the country."

"Any additional special collection of statistics relating to agriculture * * * that may be required by Congress."

MANUFACTURES.

Department of Labor.

"To compile * * * an abstract of the main features of the official statistics of cities of the United States having over 30,000 population."

"To establish a system of reports by which * * * he can report the general condition, so far as production is concerned, of the leading industries of the country."

"And such other facts as may be deemed of value to the industrial interests of the country."

Census Office.

"To collect statistics of manufactures" at five-year periods.

"Social statistics of cities."

Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department.

"And such other statistics relative to the trade and industry of the country."

"And arrange for the use of Congress the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages."

Census Office.

Collects and publishes statistics concerning wages, manufactures, agricultural products, and arranges them in a convenient form for publication.

FREIGHT RATES.

Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Such reports shall also contain information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights."

"Schedules furnished by common carriers shall show rates, fares, and charges."

Division of Statistics, Agricultural Department.

"The freight charges for the chief agricultural products upon the principal lines of railroads."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if there has been an order made for the extension of remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. HEPBURN. There has been such an order made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that a general order has been made to that effect.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I will avail myself of that order to put in shape these various tables which I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be considered together.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 18, page 10, after the word "latter," the following: "The Director of the Census to receive a salary of $4,000 per annum."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. I supposed the gentleman would do so. I desire to be heard on that, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois does not desire to discuss his point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve it.

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I take it that that amendment is not germane to this bill. The only reference in the bill to the Census Office is to transfer the Census Office bodily from the Interior Department to the proposed new department. It is not a bill fixing salaries or regulating salaries in any way whatever in the sense it is offered, and I do not see how a proposition to review the law creating the Census Bureau would be germane to a bill merely proposing to transfer an entire department from one executive branch of the Government to another.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest an additional thought on that question. This bill is for the purpose of creating a department of commerce. As was said by the gentleman from Illinois, it does not go into the subject of revising salaries at all. It became necessary to fix the salaries for the new offices created, and to that extent it deals with the salary question. Beyond that it does not go. The Census Office is incorporated into the department of commerce with its functions and organization unimpaired. The salaries are fixed by an independent law, and it occurs to me that the proposition now to go into the subject of revising salaries in the Census Bureau, or the salary of the Director of the Census or any of the officers included within that Bureau, is not germane. It is an incidental subject. As well might we go into the subject of fixing the salaries of the chiefs and subordinates of all the other bureaus that are transferred to the department of commerce by the force of this bill. The idea of the bill is first to create a department of commerce and to provide what bureaus shall become parts of that department and, second, to define the functions of the department and these respective bureaus included therein and to create salaries simply for the new officers that are made necessary to carry out the purpose of the bill. Therefore the subject of amending the laws and fixing the salaries that are already fixed, it appears to me, is clearly out of order.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must understand that this is not a general appropriation bill. This is a bill creating a new department. This is original legislation.

This bill takes the Census Bureau as it stands now and transfers it to this department and puts it under another head. And they might add other official duties to that Census Bureau by that bill, or they might take them away. They do take them away. In this particular bill they provide for a bureau that shall have charge of manufactures and the gathering of manufacturing statistics, taking it directly away from the Census Bureau, as it stands to-day. They provide for the gathering of statistics in regard to corporations. That is done in part by the Census Bureau to-day. Will the gentleman pretend to say that they will come here with a bill that creates a bureau, regulates it, and may increase it or diminish it, and yet that you can not fix a salary?

This bill fixes salaries. It fixes the salary of the head of nearly every other bureau in that department except this one Bureau of the Census, and it does not fix that salary because the salary is already so high that they know they can not fix it any higher.

Now this is on the point of order, and I say that this House has the right when this bill is up before it, and this proposition for original legislation is up before it, that the majority of this House has the right to change, alter, or amend that salary, or any part of that census law affecting his duties, in any way it pleases.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). This is a bill to establish a department of commerce and labor. It is not a general appropriation bill; it is new legislation. It creates new offices and fixes salaries. It transfers certain departments and certain officials to this new department of commerce. In section 12 it gives the Secretary of State the power to designate a certain person who shall perform certain duties, and in that connection gives him the rank and salary of a chief of a bureau. It is new legislation, creates new officials, creates new salaries, and the Chair is of the opinion that an amendment changing the salary of any official who is transferred to this bureau is in order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard just for a moment on the merits of the amendment. As I have said, this bill creates several bureaus in this department, several different bureaus of statistics. To each of these officials it gives a salary. Here is the head of the great Bureau of Labor transferred to this new department of commerce. That Bureau of Labor has charge of possibly the most important matter, in the number of people affected, in the amount involved as far as money is concerned, if we take into consideration the compensation paid for labor. The head of that great Bureau, with the great responsibility imposed upon him, is given $4,000 per annum. Here is the bureau of manufactures, a bureau of great importance, if it is to amount to anything.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the compensation of the Commissioner of Labor is $4,000?

Mr. COWHERD. Four thousand dollars or $4,500, I do not remember which.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not $6,000?

Mr. COWHERD. In this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; provided for by law and not changed in this bill.

Mr. COWHERD. I understand it is in this bill, if I remember rightly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. COWHERD. I may be mistaken with regard to that. I would not pretend to the familiarity that the gentleman has with the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there is no salary fixed in this bill, excepting for the new officers.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman says that is true, I will accept his statement, because I know he is far more familiar than I am with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The salary of the Commissioner of Labor is fixed by the act creating the Department of Labor at $5,000, and that salary is not interfered with.

Mr. COWHERD. Then that salary will stand at $5,000 for that great officer; and the man who has charge of gathering the census statistics, a large part of which are taken away from him in this bill, is to get $6,000. If gentlemen want to support that kind of discrimination and distinction——

Mr. LITTLE. Against labor.

Mr. COWHERD. A distinction against labor, as suggested by my friend on my left, why, then, they can do it. Here is the bureau of insurance, but that I believe has gone out. Here is the bureau of manufactures, the head of which receives the salary of $4,000. Here is the bureau of corporations with a salary of $4,000. I do not know what others are included, as I have not had opportunity to go over the bill for the purpose of collating these fact. The point I make——

Mr. MANN. There is nothing else.

Mr. COWHERD. The point I make is this: That here are all these great bureaus in this department, and not one of them, so far as I can find, has the salary or anything like the salary given the head of the Census Bureau. Now, what reason can be given that this officer should have so much greater salary than any other head of a bureau?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in section 2 the assistant secretary gets $5,000.

Mr. COWHERD. I was looking for that. I was looking for the assistant's salary created and provided for in this very bill; and he is to receive a salary of $5,000 as provided in section 2, that we have already passed. I submit to the House that the House in creating this department can not afford to make these distinctions in the very department itself. There never was a good reason for giving the head of a bureau $6,000. It is unfair to all the other heads of the great bureaus of this Government, and we can not correct it on an appropriation bill. We know we will never be given a chance to do so in an original bill brought in by the committee in charge of the Census Bureau; and therefore let us take the opportunity when it is here and make the proper correction in this salary. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in the last statement he makes, because it is in the power of Congress at any time, on an appropriation bill, practically to reduce the amount of salary, notwithstanding what the law may provide; and we remember that on appropriation bills constantly there is carried a smaller amount of salary than the law provides shall be paid. So that it is within the power of Congress at any time, and this identical question was raised before this House less than a month ago upon the legislative appropriation bill by the same gentleman who raises it now. We have not proposed in this bill to disturb or rearrange a salary. It is not the province of the committee which reports the bill to do that. It ought not to be the duty of the House to do it upon the consideration of this bill. It is immaterial to me what the salary of the Director of the Census shall be, except so far as may be proper for the public good. This is not the time or place——

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. I understand the gentleman says that I made the motion to reduce the salary before, and it was held good on an appropriation bill. Now, I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the gentleman from Indiana, and, I think, the gentleman from Illinois, made the argument that even if on an appropriation bill you did reduce the salary in making the appropriation, that the party still under the law would be entitled to $6,000 and could go into the Court of Claims and get a judgment for it?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants my recollection, my recollection is that they did not make that argument.

Mr. COWHERD. On the floor of this House.

Mr. MANN. But whether they did or not, it is not a correct statement. There are plenty of cases upon the statute books now where an appropriation is made for less than the amount provided by law on salaries, and on every one of the appropriation bills, and the appropriation bill which we were considering, it is provided that the gentleman who takes the salary should receive it in full, and the chairman of the committee, upon the gentleman's motion, decided that it was in order. So that the gentleman's contention is entirely erroneous.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman does not touch the point. He decided it was in order to vote a less amount of money in an appropriation bill to pay the salary. The point made was that you can not change the existing law, which fixed the salary at that amount, on an appropriation bill; and in that decision he decided that you can not change the law, but it was simply a matter of appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Cincinnati, with his usual high knowledge on great questions of appropriations, applauds the idea of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. Every appropriation bill contains a provision that the person taking the salary shall receive it in full.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. I am always delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. SHATTUC. Some time ago when we were making provision for the Civil Service Commission, it was decided by all the constitutional lawyers on that side of the House that if you cut out the salaries of that Commission they could go to the court and get their salaries. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] proclaimed that as correct, and I have as much confidence in his judgment as I have in the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that he confides in the judgment of the gentleman from Ohio as better than mine. If his judgment on other questions were half as good as is his judgment as to our respective judgments, his judgment in this case would be changed. [Laughter.] It is undoubtedly true that if any salary were stricken out of the appropriation bill the officer could go to the Court of Claims to have the salary allowed as fixed by law; but when he receives the reduced salary it is taken in full. Now, I appeal to the House not to enter upon the question of fixing salaries upon this bill. That is a matter within the control of the House at any time. It is unfair to all gentlemen interested, not only to the most able Director of the Census, but all other gentlemen interested in the salaries of the different departments to enter upon that question upon this bill; and I hope the amendment of the gentleman will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference to me whether the salary of an officer can be changed in an appropriation bill at any time or not. The question before the House is whether or not on this bill the salary of the Director of the Censur shall be reduced from $6,000 to $4,000 per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we organized the permanent Census Bureau that question was fully and fairly and completely discussed in the House. The important duties and responsibilities of that officer were carefully gone over and his salary was fixed, after careful consideration by this House, at the amount at which it now stands. It seems to me to be eminently unfair and eminently improper that when a measure is brought in here dealing with an entirely different subject, and having nothing to do with the salaries of any officers except those created by the bill, you should single out that most efficient officer, whose management of that Bureau is universally recognized as the best it has ever had, the Director of the Census, to be the man whose salary is to be cut down in a bill in which it can be given no proper consideration. I protest that this should not be done.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that I do not see why the Director of the Census should be chosen for the purpose of having his salary reduced in this bill. There are others whose salaries are equally as high. The duties of the Director of the Census are most important. He has under his control a very large number of clerks, and the argument of the gentleman from Missouri that certain statistics are to be taken from him and placed under some other bureau, I do not think, upon examination of this bill, can be maintained. All of the statistics which the Director of the Census now has he will retain, and in all probability a great many more will be placed under his charge.

Now, the Director of the Census is not the only man in the Government bureaus who gets $6,000 a year for presiding over a bureau, some of very much less importance than that which is presided over by him. I do not think it fair in a bill of this character to inject an amendment for the purpose of reducing one man's salary and not others. If you want to make them all uniform, introduce an amendment making them all uniform, and do not pick out one man and undertake to make him suffer for I know not what.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I have a few figures that I want to submit on this amendment. The gentleman from Missouri instituted a comparison between the work of the Census Bureau and the Bureau of Labor, which he said was of vastly more importance than the Census Bureau. I have before me the number of employees in these respective bureaus. To-day the Census Office has 661 employees or clerks and subordinates, over whom the Director has control, and the Commissioner of Labor has charge of 80 employees only. Everybody in the House knows something about the stupendous work of the Census Bureau.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. How many men has the Chief of the Bureau of Pensions under him?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know—fifteen or sixteen hundred, I believe.

Mr. COWHERD. Double as many as the Chief of the Census Bureau, and he does not get as much salary.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is a radical difference between the functions of the Director of the Census and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Pensions. The Pension Office is ministerial from beginning to end, while the Director of the Census in a large degree exercises discretionary functions. His work is of vast and varied character, relating to all of the activities of our civilization, almost, and every member of this committee knows the arduous and responsible work required in organizing the Census Office for the purpose of taking the recent census, when there were for several years in that department over 3,500 clerks.

If I have any correct appreciation of the value of this measure, it will result in combining practically all the statistical work in the Census Office. It is to be essentially a statistical department. The head of the bureau that collects statistics will occupy a more responsible and important and more onerous position than the head of the department or of most any other bureau.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Indiana is a member of the Census Committee. Can he state to the House how the present Census Bureau, under the present Director, compares with the previous Census Bureau, both as to the time in which it did the work and the manner in which it was done?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The judgment of all the interests of the country is that it far surpasses the work of the Eleventh Census, and has never been excelled, if ever equaled, by any census that the Government has taken.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that it has been more expeditious and accurate than any other census we have taken?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were 26 ayes and 73 noes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move now to amend by adding after the word "latter," in line 18, page 10, the words "the Director of the Census shall receive $5,000 per annum."

Mr. HAY. I rise to a point of order. This amendment, I understand, is the same as one already voted on.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no. The other amendment proposed a salary of $4,000; this is for $5,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word upon this proposition. I presume the gentlemen who have reported this bill do not wish to provide for a Director of the Census as a subordinate of this Assistant Secretary and to give him a larger salary.

A MEMBER. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Let me say for the gentleman's information that there are a great many officers connected with the Treasury Department, and under the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who receive a much larger salary than that officer.

Mr. COWHERD. What do the chiefs of bureaus receive generally? What is the general salary?

Mr. MANN. There is no such thing as a general salary. Some receive $3,000, some $4,000, some $5,000, some $6,000.

Mr. COWHERD. Is not the average salary of a chief of bureau $2,500 or $3,000?

Mr. MANN. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue receives $6,000; and even the Librarian of Congress receives $6,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] whether he did not vote for the legislation which fixed the salary as it is now fixed for this officer?

Mr. COWHERD. I really do not remember. I do not know that there was any formal vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. We did not have the yeas and nays upon the question; there was an attempt made to secure the yeas and nays, and only a few gentlemen in the House rose in favor of that demand.

Mr. COWHERD. My remembrance is, as I was against the bill creating the permanent Census Bureau, that I voted in the negative on this question.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman did vote to fix the salary at the present figure, why does he now seek to cut it down, when the labors of the Bureau are being constantly increased?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not believe the gentleman's statement that the labors of this officer are constantly increasing can be borne out by the fact.

Mr. BURLESON. The records of Congress sustain the proposition.

Mr. COWHERD. I believe, if the facts were known, it would appear that the labors of this bureau are at this time exceedingly light.

Mr. BURLESON. They are being constantly increased.

Mr. COWHERD. They are not increased, but decreased by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected, there being, on a division—ayes 42, noes 56.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of manufactures, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau one chief clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law. And all consular officers of the United States, including consuls-general, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile, from time to time, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the subjects enumerated in section 3 of this act in the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports as often as required of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled, such reports to be transmitted through the State Department to the secretary of the department of commerce and labor.

Mr. MANN. I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by striking out in lines 3 and 4, on page 12, the words "one chief clerk and," and in line 4 the word "other."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to offer an amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes to address the committee upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent to address the committee for ten minutes. Is there objection? The chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read. I propose that it come in as section 6.

Mr. CORLISS. I make the point that the sixth section has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that section 6 has not yet been read.

Mr. SULZER. This is designed to follow section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman offers it as a new section.

Mr. SULZER. Yes, sir.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following amendment proposed by Mr. SULZER:

SEC. 6. That there shall be established in the department of commerce and labor a bureau called the bureau of corporations, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau one chief clerk and one auditor and such number of examiners as shall be needed to carry out the purposes of this act. Said auditor and examiners shall be expert accountants, and shall be paid salary and necessary expenses. There shall also be such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau of corporations, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to inspect and examine all corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such corporations, including the manner in which their business is conducted, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the said secretary.

Every corporation governed by this act shall make annual reports in writing to the said auditor of said bureau, and such report shall in all cases include:

(a) Capital authorized and issued; the amount paid up in cash or otherwise, with a statement of the method of paying where it is not in cash.

(b) Debts, including details as to the amount thereof and security given therefor, if any.

(c) Obligations due from officers, which shall be separately stated.

(d) A statement of assets and the method of valuing the same, whether at cost price, by appraisal, or otherwise, and of the allowance made for depreciation. Small items of personal property included in a plant may be described by the term "sundries" or like general term.

(e) Gross earnings for the period covered by the report, all deductions necessary for interest, taxes, and expense of all sorts, the surplus available for dividends, and dividends actually declared.

(f) Increase of assets since the last statement, with a showing in what way such increase has been secured.

(g) The names and addresses of stockholders, with the number of shares held by each at the date of the report.

(h) The amount of stock disposed of and the amount of property taken for stock sold since the last report, with all facts necessary to show the results of the transaction.

(i) A statement showing that the corporation in question has not, during the period covered by the said report, received any rebates, drawbacks, special rates or discriminations, advantages or preferences, by money payments or otherwise, from any railroad, pipe line, water carrier, or other transportation company, or if any such have been received or given, stating when, from whom, on what account, and in what manner they were so received, with all other details necessary to a full understanding of the transaction or transactions.

(j) The names and addresses of all officers; location of transfer or registry offices, wherever located.

(k) A statement that the corporation has not fixed prices, or done any other act with a view to restricting trade or driving any competitor out of business.

(l) A statement that the corporation is or is not a party to any contract, combination, or conspiracy in the form of trust or otherwise in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or Territories or with foreign nations.

(m) A statement of the proportion of goods going into interstate commerce.

That it shall be the duty of the auditor to prescribe the form of the reports before mentioned. He may in his discretion require additional reports at any time when he may see fit, upon reasonable notice; but his determination shall be prima facie proof that the notice is reasonable. He may also require supplemental reports whenever, in his judgment, the report rendered is in any particular or particulars insufficient, evasive, or ambiguous. He may prescribe rules so as to avoid undue detail in making reports, but no detail of the business of the corporation shall be considered private so as to be exempt from the examination of the auditor whenever he may demand report thereon. He shall make public in his reports, which shall be issued annually, all the information contained in the reports so made to him. When a report has been made by a corporation, and, with all supplemental and additional reports required by the auditor, shall have been approved by him, the corporation making such report or reports shall publish the same in a daily newspaper, after the usual custom in such cases, with the auditor's minutes of approval, and shall file with the auditor proof of such publication by the publisher's certificate.

That if any corporation shall fail to make a report when required, either by the terms of this act or when required by the auditor, as herein provided, said corporation shall be fined not less than 1 per cent or not more than 10 per cent of its last annual gross earnings for each offense. Every day of failure after a written demand has been made by the auditor shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. In case of failure, also, each of the directors of the said corporation shall be ineligible, for the year succeeding the next annual meeting, to hold either directorship or any other office in the said corporation. If such report is false in any material respect, the corporation shall be fined not less than 2 per cent and not more than 20 per cent of its last annual gross earnings, and each false statement in any material matter shall constitute a separate offense. All fines and penalties imposed by this act shall be recovered or enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction.

That it shall be the duty of examiners, under the direction of the auditor, to make examinations of any corporation governed by this act. Any of said examiners presenting his official credentials shall be furnished by the officers of the corporation every facility for complete and full examination, not only of the books, but of all property, records, or papers of the corporation which may be necessary, in the judgment of the examiner, for a complete knowledge of the affairs of the concern. Such examinations shall not be at fixed periods, but shall be at such times as the auditor shall fix and without notice. Examiners shall have the power to examine under oath all officers or employees of a corporation, or any other persons having any knowledge of its affairs, and to send for, demand, and inspect books, papers, and any other matter of evidence whatever which is in the possession or control of the said corporation. For the purpose of this act examiners shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses under oath and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpœna the examiner may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring such attendance.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before said examiner and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding. The auditor shall likewise have all the authority of an examiner in any case wherein he chooses himself to act. No examiner shall be assigned to examine any corporation who is himself interested in the business thereof, or any competing concern, or who has relatives who are so interested.

That it shall be unlawful for an examiner to divulge private business, except by his report to the auditor. But such report, or the substance thereof, shall be opened for public inspection. Each examiner shall follow the rules, regulations, and directions which the auditor may from time to time lay down or communicate to him as to the method of examination, the form of report, the matters to be covered by the said examination, and all matters pertaining to his duties. Said examinations and reports shall always cover, among others, the following questions:

(a) Has the said corporation, during the period covered by the examination and report, received any rebates, drawbacks, special rates, or other discriminations, advantages, or preferences, by money payments or otherwise, from any railroad, pipe line, water carrier, or other transportation company?

(b) If there have been such preferences, when were they received, from whom, on what account, and in what manner, giving all details necessary to a full understanding of the transaction?

(c) Is the said corporation a member of any combination having or intending to secure a monopoly of any commodity other than such monopolies as are legally granted by patent or otherwise?

(d) Has the said corporation any such monopoly, or does it use methods tending to secure such monopoly?

(e) Has it made any contracts or agreements tending to secure any such monopoly to itself or any other concern, whether owned by an individual or individuals, a corporation, or some combination of individuals and corporations?

(f) Is such corporation a party to any contract, agreement, or combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations?

(g) Has the corporation purchased or does it hold the stock of any corporation for the purpose of controlling its management?

Said reports of examiners shall be prima facie true and may be introduced in evidence in all courts to prove the facts therein set forth. Copies certified by the auditor shall be admissible with like effect and under the same circumstances as the original. The word "corporation" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include associations existing or authorized either by the law of the United States, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

Mr. MANN (before the reading of the amendment was concluded). I ask the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. I decline to be interrupted during the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will finish the reading of the proposed amendment.

Mr. MANN. I ask the courtesy of the gentleman from New York——

Mr. SULZER. I must decline. An interruption now would simply take up my time.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry that the gentleman has not read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the amendment.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and concluded.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, regarding this amendment I want to say that on the 2d day of May, 1902, I introduced in this House a bill to establish a department of commerce, and the amendment just read is section 5 of that bill. The bill was referred to and considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I appeared before that committee in favor of my bill to establish a department of commerce, and so did a number of distinguished gentlemen representing commercial bodies, labor organizations, the American Anti-Trust League, and other associations which are in favor of publicity in regard to the great trusts of our land.

All of these gentlemen advocated my bill or the incorporation in the department of commerce bill of a provision similar to the amendment just offered by me. The committee did not see fit to do that. They left it out of the bill they reported and now before the House. I simply ask at this time to have that amendment read, so that every member and the country may understand it. I ask now unanimous consent to have it considered as pending, so that the members of the House may have an opportunity to read it in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, that goes into the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. I know it does, but I want it pending for a time to give members a chance to read and study it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asked to have it be considered as pending.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as pending, so that members can read it in the RECORD and vote on it intelligently.

The CHAIRMAN. To be voted upon after the reading of the bill is concluded?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; that is my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the request. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he has offered may be considered as pending, to be voted upon when the reading of the bill is concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, to what portion of the bill is the amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as a separate section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman can offer his amendment at the proper place at any time, if he is in his seat, I object to the request.

Mr. SULZER. I only ask it in order to give every member an opportunity to familiarize himself with it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, one moment; has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state briefly that this amendment brings before the House, as clearly and as positively as any proposition can, the question of whether the members of this House are in favor of publicity regarding the trusts or not. If we are sincerely in favor of publicity regarding the trusts we can not, it seems to me, object to this amendment. If we want publicity we can not object to the establishment of this bureau of corporations in the department of commerce and labor, for it is something which will create publicity and secure the information the Attorney-General says he wants in order to enforce the antitrust laws.

In my opinion it is the best plan for publicity yet devised, and will secure the information that every citizen wants regarding the conduct and the management of the great trusts of our country, and go far, in my judgment, to prevent the trusts from violating or evading the law now on the statute books against trusts and monopolies. It has been stated by those more competent to judge perhaps than myself that if this amendment were a law no trust in this country, no corporation, no monopoly, would or could violate the law.

Besides, it would secure all the information desired, and if the laws were violated the Attorney-General would have officially the facts to proceed forthwith and punish such violations. It would prevent the excuse now offered by the Department of Justice.

I think this amendment ought to be adopted. It will be if those who oppose trusts and monopolies and want publicity regarding them, so that the truth shall be known, vote for it. So I offered this amendment to find out and have the country know the names of the members who are sincerely in favor of publicity and who are not. Let the record tell. Now is the time to stand by your professions and live up to your promises. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the report of the bill from the committee provides for a bureau of corporations for the very purpose of providing an executive agency on publicity. Probably this side of the House would not always feel disposed to accept the language arranged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] in reference to the method of obtaining publicity.

Very likely the other side of the House will accept the leadership of the gentleman from New York on this question. If so, we shall be content, but the committee which reported the bill has been rather inclined to await the report of the gentlemen from the Judiciary Committee, from both sides of the House, who are engaged in endeavoring to find a proper solution of the method of publicity. There is no disposition on the part of the committee which reported the bill, no disposition on the part of this House, to refuse proper legislation to effect publicity, but, with all due respect to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], I trust that we may be forgiven if we do not always adopt his views upon this subject.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The section to which the gentleman refers as creating this bureau of corporations, I take it, is section 7?

Mr. MANN. Section 7.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I would ask the gentleman's construction as to what powers such a bureau would have. I have read the section hastily and it seemed to me that it did not give the bureau very much, if any, power to get the information.

Mr. SULZER. That is quite true.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt whatever, Mr. Chairman, that section 7, as it reads in the bill, will not confer upon the bureau of corporations the power to compel the giving of information, and in that respect it might be said to be defective and clearly would be defective if it were not the purpose to follow it up with additional legislation; but we all know that the members of this House and the members of this Congress are proposing to have additional legislation, and if this bill becomes a law and this bureau of corporations is created, undoubtedly there will be conferred either upon the bureau itself or upon the department the necessary powers to carry out the idea for which the bureau is created.

If it is the preference of the House to take the suggestions—admirable in their nature, but more or less crude in the drawing of the language—of the gentleman from New York, very good; but I should prefer that the House should have the information which comes from the distinguished Judiciary Committee of this House, which intends, as I understand, to report some kind of a bill to the House covering ground like this.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, yes; they will doubtless report a bill some time, some how, some way, and too late in the closing days of this session of Congress ever to pass before we adjourn. You may pass some kind of a bill through the House only to die in the Senate. It is the old, old story.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting in this House for three years to see what action would be taken that would amount to anything to clip the wings of the trusts, and it is immaterial to me whom I am following if the road is clear, whether it be the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I am here to help do something to curtail the increasing power of the trusts, and it is immaterial to me who leads in this, to my mind, good work.

Here is an amendment which proposes some practical legislation to make public the acts and doings of the great trusts and combines of this country, and the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MANN] fails entirely to point out in this amendment anything which he thinks even is obnoxious, or is not in accordance with his views. He simply wishes to put off the matter to a more convenient time. It is the same old plea. We have been told, from the President of the United States down, that something should be done to make public the conduct of the trusts. Publicity is the great question which the public is demanding to-day of these corporations. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can not find any fault with this amendment, if he is simply waiting for something better, why not point out what is wrong in this bill, which is specific, directing, and comprehensive? We are confronted with the proposition now whether we shall do something or continue to do nothing, as we have for the last three years. Let us not dodge or evade our responsibility. The country is looking and waiting to see if we will keep our promises and do something to give publicity to the working of the trusts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me for saying that while it possibly is negligence on my part, I never have read the proposition of the gentleman from New York. It may be heavenly for aught I know. It may be perfect; but I should prefer to have it presented to the House in such a way that it can be properly considered by the committee.

Mr. THAYER. Unless the gentleman from Illinois is deaf, he must have heard the reading of it, line by line and word by word, with the last ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not as smart as the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he can understand it from hearing it read.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the opportunity will be granted for gentlemen of this House to discuss and analyze this amendment. I think it comes nearer to the bull's-eye than anything that has been presented. I had occasion to vote with the majority of this House for a constitutional amendment in the last Congress which it was never intended should be passed by the coordinate branch at the other end of this building and which I had very grave doubts about our right to pass; but I want to do something while I am a member of this House or help others in doing something that will make public the acts of the trusts, a proposition which all parties agree is needed, and something that will in some measure satisfy the public. This amendment provides for the very thing we have been discussing here for the last four years. The opportunity is now here. Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation for those who do not believe in permitting these trusts to go on in the way they have been going.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a few words more. In discussing this amendment after it was offered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said it was crude. That is the word I believe he used. Subsequently, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], the gentleman from Illinois said he never read the amendment, that he had not heard it read, that he knew nothing whatever about it. It seems to me, sir, it comes with very bad grace for the gentleman from Illinois to characterize an amendment as crude that he has never read and never heard read. But it is characteristic of the gentleman, and shows how much reliance should be given his speech.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been pending before his committee ever since the 2d day of last May. And further, sir, he was present in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce when a delegation of the distinguished and representative gentlemen with myself went before his committee and urged a favorable report on my bill, or at least the incorporation of this amendment, being section 5 in my bill, in a bill creating a department of commerce. He heard every word of that discussion. He asked questions of the gentlemen on that occasion. That discussion is printed. Any member can get a copy of it. It is a part of the records of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on this bill.

It is too late for him now to say that he never read, or heard read, the amendment. In my opinion, he knows all about it, or he would not now oppose it so tenaciously. But if he says it is crude, let me say to him that it has been submitted to some of the greatest lawyers in all this land—lawyers not employed by the trusts—and to men who have studied this trust question, not in the interest of the trusts, but in the interests of all the people, and they have all approved it. They say it will absolutely establish publicity, and do it in the only logical and legal way.

Again, sir, this amendment has been favorably passed on by the labor organizations, by the American Anti-Trust League, by leading thinkers and political economists, and by the honest folk of the land who are earnestly and honestly and fearlessly opposed to trusts and monopolies. The independent press of the country ask for publicity. In editorial after editorial they favor this amendment. The President asks for publicity. The Democrats ask for publicity and will vote to a man for this amendment. The people of the land, from one end of it to the other, demand publicity. The Republicans—that is, a few Republicans—say they want publicity; they say it, but they are afraid to vote for publicity. [Applause.]

The Republicans say they are going to give the people publicity as to the trusts some time, some way, somehow; but the days are going on. This Congress will adjourn on the 4th of next March. The time, gentlemen, is short, and I undertake to say that if this amendment is not adopted now, if it is not put in this bill and kept there, that there will be no antitrust legislation, no law for publicity passed during this session of Congress. The President, the Attorney-General, and all of the distinguished Republicans, including my friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], will keep on talking against the trusts, but they will do nothing against them.

The people will not and can not be deceived much longer in this matter. The record here to-day on this amendment will tell the tale. It will show whether the Republicans or the Democrats are sincere. It will tell the world who is for and who is against publicity—who are the friends of the trusts and who are the enemies of monopoly. An ounce of performance is worth a ton of promise. If gentlemen on the other side are sincerely in favor of what the people want, if they favor publicity, you will give the people this ounce of performance to-day, and in my judgment it will truly establish publicity and go far to do away with trust evils.

With publicity—like a searchlight, exposing to public view every violation of law—the trusts and monopolies would hesitate a long time ere they violated the law; and if the Attorney-General promptly enforced the law against them, violations of law would soon cease entirely. But the Attorney-General says substantially in his Pittsburg speech that he can not enforce the law against the trusts because he can not get the evidence of violations of law. Make this amendment a law as a part of this bill and the Attorney-General will have no difficulty in getting the facts—the evidence—to successfully prosecute every trust that is violating the law.

The law now on the statute books against trusts is clear and plain, and the highest court in the land has passed on its validity and sustained the constitutionality of its provisions. The antitrust act of 1890 declares that every contract or combination in the nature of a trust in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign nations is a conspiracy, illegal and void, and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Under this antitrust act it seems to me every trust in the United States can be prosecuted for violation of law, the charter annulled, and the men behind it punished for conspiracy. Every trust by its very nature is in restraint of trade and commerce and in violation of this law.

If you will read the antitrust act of 1890 and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the trans-Missouri freight case and the Addyston Pipe Line case, the conclusion will be irresistible to the logical mind that the fault is not so much with the law as it is with the men who are sworn to enforce the law.

In my opinion—and I say so advisedly—the Department of Justice under the present law can institute and successfully maintain actions against every trust doing business in the United States. The law is clear and plain, and the facts are within the knowledge of all.

Now, adopt this amendment offered by me for publicity regarding the trusts and monopolies, make it a part of this bill, so that it will soon be a law, and the Attorney-General will get all the facts he wants, and official facts that will be evidence sufficient to prosecute and sufficient to win every case against every trust violating the law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 88.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to say one thing. All the Republicans voted against this amendment for publicity and all the Democrats voted for it. That tells the story and the whole story. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of insurance, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or District wherein the same is organized, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 6 from lines 1 to 17, inclusive, on page 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 6, from line 1 to line 17, inclusive.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, when we were considering section 3 the words "insurance business" were stricken out by the committee, it is true, by a close vote, but it seems to me that this section should also go out of the bill. The question has been fully discussed, and the creation of this bureau is an unnecessary and useless expenditure of public money in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, holding that marine, fire, and life insurance, or any other kind of insurance, is not commerce and that a contract embracing such insurance does not embrace any of the elements of commerce.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the remark which was just made by my friend from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] would seem to indicate that there was a larger interest in this subject on the part of those who support this amendment than one would think necessary under the circumstances. However, if the Supreme Court has held that this is not a subject of national legislation, then no harm can be done by the invasion of the State such as alarms so much my friend from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER]. This is a provision for investigating, for compiling all information respecting the subject of insurance. I was surprised that my friends who were so alarmed over here in reference to States rights in this section pertaining to insurance should not have been similarly alarmed when section 5 was under consideration. If it be an outrage upon the rights of the States to "foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, and publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies," surely it is a greater outrage upon the rights of the States that the same department should have power to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States by doing exactly the same thing that section 6 provides may be done respecting the fostering and developing of the insurance business. I take it that the manufacturing business is just as important as the insurance business; and if the Supreme Court has held that we can not invade by national legislation the domain of insurance, we may be sure that we could no further invade the domain of manufacturing. At least the courts have not gone so far in that respect, and we have all through our States manufactures just as much threatened in the method in which they are carried on as insurance business can be affected by the identical provision respecting insurance which we find in this act.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If I had time I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is just a question about what the gentleman has stated. Whereabout in section 5 do you find such words as would give to the secretary of commerce or the bureau of manufactures the right to exercise such control over manufacturers as it does over the insurance business?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I want to ask my friend what authority does section 6 give to the secretary to authorize control? How much?

Mr. BARTLETT. It gives such as it now has or may be given by law.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Why, we can pass a law at any time. It gives it really no authority at all. It merely proceeds to say, in an unlegislative sort of a way, that if we pass a law some time in the future giving the secretary power, he can exercise that power under the law which has given it to him.

Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention and the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that section 5, which provides for fostering and promoting and developing the various manufacturing industries in various ways as may be prescribed by the secretary or as provided by law, is in identically the same language. The point, Mr. Chairman, that I was making was that the provision respecting the insurance department is exactly the same as the provision respecting all other departments, and it is folly, it is an imposition upon the intelligence of this House, to assume that by this act an effort is being made to do something more for the insurance business than is sought to be done respecting the business of manufacturing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The manufactured products enter into commerce, do they not?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I am willing to admit that for the sake of the argument.

Mr. CORLISS. And the courts have held that all kinds of products of the farm and the factory are subject to the control of Congress when in the course of transportation from one State to another. Therefore Congress has control to a certain extent over manufactures, but in this instance—and I ask the gentleman the question in order that he may draw the distinction—in the case of insurance contracts the court has held that the contract is not commerce. You can not make it commerce, and the Federal power of our Government does not extend to that subject. How can you hold that it is anolagous to the power of Congress to control manufactured products that are invariably engaged in commerce?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If the court has so held, this provision is harmless. It can not be useless in that it gathers and gives to the country useful information respecting that subject. But Congress has absolutely no power, although my friend intimates that it has, over the subject of manufactures; absolutely none, for that has a locus within the sovereign State, and Congress can in no wise exercise control over the mere operation of manufacturing, whatever it may do with the product of that manufacture.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Ohio hardly gives sufficient weight to a part of this provision sought to be stricken out. I take it that this provision is in for a purpose, that the words are put into it for office, that they are not merely idle and incidental. Here is what is said in section 6, among other things.

> It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or District wherein the same is organized.

The gentleman makes the point that this does not contain the legislation for carrying into full effect that provision. But it contains the provision, it provides for a bureau to exercise this function, to have control and to adopt rules and regulations for every insurance company or association, life, fire, marine, or of whatever kind, doing business outside of the State or Territory of its organization.

Now, every State in this Union, I presume—certainly nearly all of them—have laws regulating the operation, fixing the responsibilities, protecting the patrons of insurance companies organized beyond their borders and doing business within the several States. That power—however wholesome, constitutional, well organized, exercised with judgment, satisfactory to the people for the protection of patrons—is to be minimized, if not swept away, so far as it may be in the power of Congress to do it, by creating a bureau organized and authorized to provide means and make rules and regulations and to control and direct the operations of these various companies whenever they carry on business outside of the immediate jurisdiction which created them.

What is to become of the State laws in that case? Are the State laws, when in conflict with the regulations and rules prescribed by this bureau, to control, or are they to give way? Is there to be a conflict to be settled by the courts? Evidently and clearly the proposition of the framers of this provision is to give to this bureau, a bureau of this new department, the control of the vast and complex insurance business of the whole United States. Because it is a fact that a large per cent of all the companies not only exist and do business within the States and Territories or districts in which they are incorporated, but in other States and Territories and districts. Here is the provision intended to place all of them under the control, subject to the jurisdiction, of a bureau in this new department of commerce.

It is idle to say that legislation is not lacking to enable the chief of this bureau to accomplish all that in the creation of the bureau it is designed shall be accomplished. If there is reason to provide for this bureau, with authority and power and scope and purpose in it to exercise these functions, then there is reason also for following with legislation furnishing the necessary machinery to do it. How idle it is to talk about creating this bureau of supervision and control of the insurance business of the country and say that you have no purpose to legislate further to carry this out.

The purpose, clear and distinct, is to follow this with legislation which shall subject the entire insurance business of the United States to the dominion of a bureau chief in the city of Washington. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that all debate on the amendment and the section close in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] is right when he assumes that this legislation is not proposed to be passed, and the foundation distinctly here laid for future legislation, without the expectation of making this a bureau in Washington to control the insurance business of the United States. That is its object. Neither the gentleman from Ohio nor other gentlemen ought to be permitted to mislead this House by making disclaimers and talking of limitations of power, about which I much fear my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] is mistaken.

Will the members of this House look at that bill and tell me what reason can be discovered for not incorporating this bureau in the bureau of corporations, except the object be, as shown on its face, to give the Washington bureau more extreme power over insurance corporations than you propose to give any bureau over any other corporation in the United States—trust or not. The declaration of the bill is specific—that this bureau is to exercise such control as may be provided by law. What will be the natural source of law on this subject?

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio is a sincere, earnest, and aggressive man. He has made it known to this House that he believes the insurance business of the United States ought to be controlled by a Washington bureau, and that much of it can constitutionally be so controlled. He has put his belief in form in this proposed legislation. He presides over the committee from which such legislation would naturally come here. Why, sir, here is an able, distinguished, and truthful source of such legislation suggested, and here, in all probability, it will remain a potent factor—in the Committee on Interstate Commerce—until that unhappy day for mortals when he takes his seat amid the everlasting glories of the cherubim. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, of what are gentlemen dreaming if they do not believe that is the object of this provision? The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, in citing instances in which the proposed bureau might be useful, has referred to conditions which might arise in which this bureau would have jurisdiction, not alone in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, but in the Empire of Germany and Austria. That is where the difficulty he instanced was located, and it was the only instance cited in which such a bureau might have been utilized.

The question presented to this House by the proposed legislation is whether you will here lay the foundation, build the machinery, with a power behind it to accomplish the ultimate purpose, to take absolute national control of the insurance business, to supersede and destroy the insurance department of every State. As I said this morning, I know that the belief and the hope is, with this bill as a foundation, to escape State regulation, and that this whole question, the opinion of the gentleman from Michigan to the contrary notwithstanding, can be beaten into such shape as to be clearly matter of interstate commerce.

Look at the peculiar language of this bill. In the section that creates a bureau of corporations the corporations are specifically limited to doing the things recited by the gentleman from Ohio—collecting statistics and disseminating useful information; not one word of power or the suggestion of power, except, perhaps, the last line—"and such other duties as may hereafter be prescribed by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN rose.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I would like to have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] had more of courage and more of hope he would not be so timorous with regard to this bill. He has not been able to discover how harm could possibly result to any individual under the present proposed legislation. His only claim and the only contention that he makes is that in some later day, by usurpation, by unjust legislation, Congress may indulge in an enactment that may harm the State interest and State control over insurance companies.

Mr. Chairman, is not this the trouble: The gentleman is afraid of a control that will bring publicity into the doings of those vile and infamous corporations that are created so lavishly by his State, and from which his State derives an annual revenue of millions of dollars? [Applause.] I do not blame him for looking out for the moneyed interests of his State, while it is creating these bogus corporations to operate and prey upon the people of the other States.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. That is an absolute misstatement, and it has no application to this question. We have not organized an insurance company there.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, well, I did not say "insurance company;" I said "company."

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Then the expression had no application; and it is not true.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do not interrupt me, if you please.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I will not; but if you state as fact what is not so, I must correct you.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to say that these fears of my friend from New Jersey are entirely groundless. What are the limitations of this bill? What can be done under it?

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or District wherein the same is organized.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir. The only control is that which is authorized by law, by the law of Congress, by what this House at some future time may do. Now, then, let me go a little farther—"to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States." How? How? By exempting them from taxation? No! By intefering with the powers of the States? No! But how? Simply by gathering information as to how they are conducting their business, as to what is their solvency, what right they have to appeal to the confidence of the people and to publish it to the world. That is the limitation. That is all that they can do under this statute, and any statement to the contrary is to mislead, to humbug somebody, to aid the gentleman to protect and foster the peculiar methods that his State has of paying its expenses by turning loose a flood of cormorants to prey upon the balance of mankind. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the gentleman before he takes his seat?

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by several members) there were—ayes 88, noes 78.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 81.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction, supervision, and control now possessed and exercised by the Department of the Treasury over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries in Alaska, as well as over Chinese immigration, including the authority conferred by the various acts in relation to the exclusion of Chinese upon collectors of customs, be, and the same hereby are, transferred to and vested in the department of commerce and labor; and the secretary of commerce and labor shall designate officials of his department to perform the duties and exercise the authority now conferred upon collectors of customs or other officials of the Treasury Department (who are not hereby transferred to the department of commerce and labor) in regard to Chinese exclusion and immigration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 8 and inserting in place thereof the following:

"SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction, supervision, and control now possessed and exercised by the Department of the Treasury over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries of Alaska, and over the immigration of aliens into the United States, its waters, territories, and any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are hereby transferred and vested in the department of commerce and labor. That the authority, power, and jurisdiction now possessed and exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of any law in relation to the exclusion from and the residence within the United States, its territories, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, are hereby transferred to and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor, and the authority, power, and jurisdiction in relation thereto now vested by law or treaty in the collectors of customs and the collectors of internal revenue are hereby conferred upon and vested in such officers under the control of the Commissioner-General of Immigration as the secretary of commerce and labor may designate therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Missouri. I may say, however, that this is an amendment which was originally prepared by the gentleman from California [Mr. COOMBS] in connection with the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and it simply safeguards the provisions in reference to the exclusion of Chinese, so that the proper transfer of authority from the Treasury Department to the proposed department of commerce is made and protected. There is no other purpose in making the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if this proposed amendment changes the effect in any way of the law in relation to the fur-seal fisheries?

Mr. MANN. It does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] will now be recognized, if he desires to speak. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 7 in order to supply an evident omission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to section 7 of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For what purpose?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. For the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the amendment?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The appointing power is not inserted. It is an evident omission. The words "who shall be appointed by the President" should be inserted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there should be a provision in the section providing that he shall be appointed by the President. I have no objection to returning to the section for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to section 7 for the purpose of submitting the amendment he has referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have the amendment already prepared. Let it be offered as coming from the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 20, page 13, after the word "bureau," the following: "shall be appointed by the President and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and dispersed by him and his department and describing the work done by the department in fostering, promoting, and developing the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the transportation facilities, and insurance business of the United States, and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary for the effective performance of the duties and purposes of the department. He shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I move to strike out, in line 2, page 15, the words "and insurance business."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 2, after the word "facilities," strike out the words "and insurance business."

Mr. MANN. We are perfectly willing to have that amendment adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend, by inserting in line 1 of the same page, before the word "the," the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the same amendment ought to be inserted in section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose of offering the amendment which he has stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 22, after the word "interests" and before the word "the," insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill in the nature of a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said department shall investigate and report to the Postmaster-General of the United States the name of any corporation, company, person, or persons who are carrying on the business of insurance and have failed to comply with all the laws of the State or States or Territories where such business is carried on, including the State or Territory creating such corporation or licensing such companies, person, or persons, and upon the filing of such information with the Postmaster-General of the United States he is authorized and directed to exclude such corporation, company, person, or persons from the use of the mails in carrying on its or his insurance business, under penalty of $5,000 and imprisonment for each offense, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious to curb "wild-cat insurance" as the gentleman who reported this bill, or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. The gentleman knows that I objected to that section in the bill because "insurance is not commerce." The highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of the United States, said so in the Hooper case (155 U. S. Reports), which I cited in my speech on this subject two days ago.

Now, I invoke another power that knows no State lines, and that is the post-office power of the Federal Government. There are no State lines or powers involved in that exclusive grant of power. All there is in the Constitution on this power is "that the Congress shall have the power to establish post-offices and post-roads." From this flows our mail service.

We have excluded from the use of the mails all obscure literature, etc., whether in letters or papers, and many other things in derogation of public morals and good society. This we all know, and the courts uphold such laws. We excluded the Louisiana lottery from the mails and drove it out of the United States.

Now, my amendment is simply a new section, which says in substance that when the department of commerce shall investigate to find, and if it does find, that any person, insurance company, or corporation has failed to comply with the laws of the State or Territory authorizing them to operate, or the laws of the State or Territory in which they are operating, then this fact is to be reported to the Postmaster-General of the United States, who by this amendment is authorized and directed to exclude such concerns or persons from the use of the mail.

This measure strikes at all lawless insurance concerns, but especially those who have no agents, but procure insurance through the mail. They often do this.

First. They get out a charter, a charter only in one State—say New Jersey. They do nothing more. They fail to comply with the "operating" laws of New Jersey. They say: "We are not going to operate in New Jersey."

Second. They then go to Chicago, say, and get an office and possibly a license. They do not want to insure in Illinois, so they do not comply with the operating laws of Illinois, hurt no one in Illinois, so the State authorities let them off with or without a license.

Third. They then from Chicago, by mail and not by agents, get insurance in Tennessee. The ignorant are their victims. They insure this class, and others, too, sometimes, I know. A loss occurs. Premiums paid through the mail. The insurer is, and was from the start, bankrupt and robber, and nothing can be collected even if the insurer can be found.

Thus using the mails, the State insurance commissioner does not know of the insurer until too late. Why? Because the whole transaction has been done through the mails, over which he has no control. The operators are unseen. The loss occurs because the insurer stealthily avoids complying with all State laws of New Jersey, Illinois, and Tennessee.

This Department can by vigilant action discover such an insurer and report the facts to the Postmaster-General of the United States, and then he will exclude the guilty party from the use of the mail.

The recent insurance commissioners' convention approve of such a law as here proposed, and passed resolutions to that effect, calling on Congress to act.

I may add, further, that the treasurer of the State of Tennessee, Mr. R. E. Folk, who is a distinguished brother of our distinguished prosecuting attorney in St. Louis, Hon. Joseph Folk, late of Tennessee, I may add, urges the passage of such a measure. He explained this evil to me last summer and recently.

I have incorporated in this amendment the judgment of that great insurance body, Mr. Folk's, as well as my own. I have shown to you that the law is with us, the Constitution of the United States is with us, precedents are with us, and we can exclude from the mails such corporations and these people who rob the humble citizens of this country, who know nothing of the lawlessness of the monsters they are dealing with or their irresponsibility.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As you have excluded all jurisdiction over insurance from the bill, how can the department of commerce ascertain anything about it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will say to my friend I did that because the Supreme Court of the United States held that "insurance is not commerce;" hence we had no jurisdiction under the commerce clause, but here I invoke another power of Congress—the right to "establish post-offices and post-roads"—that is under the exclusive control of Congress; and if this department say that these wild-cat insurance companies or persons are carrying on a business unlawfully to the detriment of the public they shall not use the mails.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But you have excluded from the bureau that jurisdiction.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, no; I am giving jurisdiction by a new section of the bill, by which authority is given to the bureau to investigate and find out whether any one of the parties named are conducting a wild-cat insurance business or not, and, if so, the Postmaster-General shall say "you shall not use our mails to rob the people of this country."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have never heard a stronger or a sounder argument made against any question than that made here to-day about this insurance clause on this bill. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is open to the same objection. In the good old State of Missouri we are able to determine for ourselves whether an insurance company shall have our business or not, and I believe it would be unsound to confer upon the secretary of commerce any power to determine whether an insurance company was conducting its business in a lawful or unlawful manner.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us how the people in Tennessee will be able to determine whether a company is a wild-cat enterprise that is not complying with the laws in your State; simply because its agents come into my State with a lot of stock?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In reply to the gentleman, I will tell him how we do that, and how Tennessee can do. The insurance commissioner is clothed with authority and power to compel an insurance company to exhibit everything in connection with it, to make a complete showing to the insurance commissioner, and under the laws of our State our commissioner has the power and authority to go into the State where the insurance company is incorporated to examine the books and securities; and it must exhibit everything that we call for, so that when the commissioner has made his examination our people know precisely whether they want that company to do business in our State or not. I am not willing to do anything that will be an invitation to the Federal Government to take away our power to determine that for ourselves.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have the States any control over the mails?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is foreign to the point I am talking about. The gentleman's amendment proposes that the secretary of commerce shall determine whether insurance companies are lawful or unlawful. I say I do not want the people of my State put in the position where the secretary of commerce will have the power to determine for them whether an insurance company is being lawfully conducted or otherwise. Our people will determine that for themselves. Our State authorities will determine for themselves. We have ample laws authorizing our insurance commission to determine whether the insurance company is conducting a lawful business, and they come into our State to do business only as a matter of grace. We confer that grace upon none that fail to comply with our laws. But if you permit the secretary of commerce to sit in judgment as to whether a certain insurance company is conducting a lawful or unlawful business, you have taken the first step toward the goal of Federalism, to which the insurance companies are attempting to lead us.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that debate is exhausted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the last word is not in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes to reply to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may have two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I want to say to my good friend from Missouri, that I was standing with our State commissioner of insurance, Mr. Folk, a brother of your Mr. Folk, and an insurance agent from your State, and both asked me to urge this amendment.

Now, the gentleman talks about State rights. There is nothing about State rights in this question. The Government controls absolutely the mails, and the gentleman knows that the people in his State have not the money to send out their agents to Ohio, New Hampshire, and New York, to find out whether it is a wild-cat or other insurance company, and it is not until the little cabin is burned down that the people find, when it is too late, that this company is a fraud, stealing the people's money, and their insurance of no value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the President is hereby authorized to transfer, by order in writing, at any time, any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, and not herein transferred to or included in the department of commerce and labor, to said department of commerce and labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred shall be transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, and all power and authority conferred by law upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the secretary thereof, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the department of commerce and labor, or the secretary thereof, as the case may be.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I offer the following amendment:

Amend by striking out section 13 as printed and inserting in place thereof the following:

"SEC. 13. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by order in writing, to transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, to the department of commerce and labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the Secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the department of commerce and labor, or the secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, but in the absence of any printed copy of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois I am unable to state the particular line to which my amendment should be offered. I have my amendment prepared for the present bill as printed. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the word "labor," in line 5 of the written amendment——

Mr. MANN. That would be in line 14 of the printed bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). These words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether his purpose is to permit the transfer by the President of the Interstate Commerce Commission to this department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is precisely the object of it.

Mr. MANN. I think, then, the gentleman has got it in the wrong place.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did not have an opportunity to read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, but prepared my amendment with reference to the printed bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment should apply after the word "service" in the fourth line.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman is in error, because the words "other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work"——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct. It should be after the word "work."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am quite agreeable, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment should be considered at its proper place.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana will be modified to that extent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is clearly to authorize the President, by Executive order, to transfer to the department of commerce the Interstate Commerce Commission. The only purpose of the organization of this department is to extend, as far as possible, complete supervision by the Government over commerce, and to dignify commerce by a position in the Cabinet through a representative. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the organization of the bureau of commerce, or the department of commerce, without covering into that department the Interstate Commerce Commission, would be equal to an attempt to perform the play of Hamlet without that distinguished Shakespearean character. The only branch of the public service to-day that has, by authority of law, any supervision of commerce, is the Interstate Commerce Commission. Leaving it as an independent branch of the service, without the supervision of any officer of the department, would lead, in my judgment, not only to confusion, but result in conflict of authority. It would duplicate important work, and greatly increase expense in both departments.

In the third section of this bill provision is made in the enumeration of the duties of this department that "it shall be the duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, the transportation facilities." And yet there is no provision for the transportation facilities to be gathered through the Interstate Commerce Commission nor from it to that department.

In section 9 of the bill the secretary of commerce and labor is directed to place in his annual report certain information which has been obtained relative to "transportation facilities." The great proportion of the commerce of this country is conducted over and by means of transportation lines. The failure of this House to cover this Commission, which to-day exercises a peculiar and almost complete control, so far as law is permitted by Congress over transportation lines into the new department, would be to omit the most important factor of the department of commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I supplement that, Mr. Chairman, by asking that we have thirty minutes debate on this question.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that we have no objection, at least I have no objection, and I think the committee has no objection to the introduction of this provision into the amendment, if there is any question as to the language of the bill permitting this transfer. Of course the gentleman's amendment is not now in order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not sure of that.

Mr. MANN. I am very sure, because the committee has offered an amendment to the amendment, and the gentleman can not offer an amendment to that amendment. I am willing that the gentleman should ask unanimous consent to put it in and I hope it will be granted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection to the amendment, I do not care for further discussion.

Mr. MANN. As this is a committee amendment, I am not authorized to modify it. The committee thought that the present language would be sufficient. If there is any doubt about it, of course I presume there will be no objection to a suitable modification.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to continue my remarks for not more than three minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest that when the Interstate Commerce Commission was created it was placed in the Interior Department. Later, on account of the doubt of certain officers of that Department as to the propriety of the supervision of the Commission by the head of the Interior Department, it was thought advisable to make this an independent commission, and it was given that independence. This amendment now proposes that in the organization of this new department particularly applicable to commerce, we shall cover this Commission into this new department.

I have certainly no objection to such change of position in the amendment as shall be thought proper to accomplish the object; but certainly members of the House will appreciate the importance of this Commission being a part of the new department.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, this is a first-blush proposition; in other words, it is a thing that I have not anticipated and have not considered. The conclusion I reach about it is one reached hastily—one which, of course, as hasty conclusions often are, may be incorrect. It seems to me, however, that it would not be wise to put the Interstate Commerce Commission into this department under this control. This Commission has peculiar functions to perform. The members are supposed to be selected on account of their large acquaintance with affairs and their fine legal equipment. It is a quasi-judicial body. Now, to make this Commission occupy a small pigeonhole in a large cabinet is practically, it seems to me, to rob it of all the useful functions that it at present has or performs. The Labor Department, by being shoved into this department, although the name is preserved in the title, instead of being increased or exalted in dignity or importance, is lessened, is minimized, is made a comparatively trifling thing.

The Interstate Commerce Commission was created for very important purposes, and while limited in its power and circumscribed perhaps too much in the exercise of such power, and falling far short, possibly, of what it would be desirable to have accomplished and what, perhaps, its members attempt to accomplish, is yet a useful agency of the Government, and its usefulness, in my judgment, can not be increased or enhanced by this change.

Now it is independent; it stands out by itself. Make this change, and it becomes a small part—comparatively an insignificant part—of a very considerable whole. Its prestige, in large part, will vanish. Its powers, instead of being augmented or perfected, will likely be diminished; and the members of that Commission, instead of being regarded, as they are now, as able lawyers, selected on account of their ability, will drop to the level of ordinary bureau employees. By this remark I by no means intend to reflect upon anybody in bureau employment or anybody in any Government employment; but I say that this body will lose in dignity, lose in importance, lose in power, lose in usefulness by transferring it to this department and placing it under this control.

That is my impression at first blush, as I say, not having given the subject consideration, as perhaps the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has done. But it seems to me that my impression is based upon fundamentals, a consideration of which, for whatever length of time, would only tend to confirm and strengthen the impression.

This Commission had better be left standing where it is. Leave it by itself. There is enough already provided in this bill for this minister and this minister's aids and assistants to discharge and perform. Let this Commission stand out to be as useful as it may be; and when you make changes concerning it, increase its scope and power, rather than diminish them, as would be done, I think, by the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know but that in the present parliamentary position the amendment might strictly be out of order. Perhaps it would be proper to ask that it be considered in order by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would rule that an objection at this time would come too late. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 72, noes 74.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. DE ARMOND were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 88.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect and be enforced from and after its passage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 14 by inserting after the word "passage," in line 2, page 18, the following:

"Provided, however, That the provisions of this act in relation to the transfer of any existing office, bureau, division, officer, or other branch of the public service or authority now conferred thereon to the department of commerce and labor shall take effect and be in force on the 1st day of July, 1903, and not before."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the substitute to the House as amended with the recommendation that the bill with the amendment in the nature of a substitute do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. DALZELL] having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, with the recommendation that the substitute be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the word "that" in the first section and insert the following, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read, and upon that question and upon the substitute to its passage I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves to amend the substitute, as reported from the Committee of the Whole, in words as follows, which the Clerk will now report.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I desire to ask if we will be shut out from asking for separate votes upon the various amendments agreed upon in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that there are no amendments upon which separate votes could be had. The report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House was upon an amendment in the nature of a substitute which had been perfected.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then rather than strangle and bottle the Interstate Commerce Commission, we will have to vote against the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I desire to know, as representing the minority on the committee, what would be the proper time, parliamentarily speaking, for me to offer a motion to recommit with certain instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After the third reading of the Senate bill. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CORLISS. The motion, as I understand it, is to substitute the bill or measure proposed by the chairman of the committee in lieu of the one which has been considered and amended in the Committee of the Whole. Is that right?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is to amend the substitute reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in the words that the Clerk will now report.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of saving time, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CORLISS. Yes; I would like to understand.

Mr. HEPBURN. The only change in this amendment that I have made from the substitute as it has been amended is the restoration of the words "insurance," etc., and the restoration of the sixth section.

Mr. CORLISS. I submit that we have a right to a separate vote on that question. It was impossible to ascertain the purpose of the gentleman because the amendment has not been read. Now, we demand a separate vote upon that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course the House will vote on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CORLISS. I submit that under the rules we have a right to a vote on each amendment; but as I understand the proposition, it is to put all these things in and vote on the bill as a whole with them in.

Mr. HEPBURN. You can vote on my motion.

Mr. CORLISS. But your motion includes all these things.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation: The Senate passed a bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce and labor and sent it to the House. The House sent the bill to its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee reported the bill to the House, striking out all after the enacting clause, and offering one single amendment by way of a substitute. The Committee of the Whole, in the consideration of that amendment by way of substitute, perfected it by various amendments, but of those amendments the House knows nothing. The House knows nothing except what it has learned from the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and he reported that the Committee of the Whole had agreed upon an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the Senate bill.

The gentleman from Iowa now moves to amend the substitute reported by the Committee of the Whole by striking out all after a certain word and inserting the following language, and upon that the House will have an opportunity to vote when the amendment has been read.

Mr. CORLISS. One further inquiry. Has not the House the right to vote upon the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole before being forced to vote upon the whole measure as amended? I raise that parliamentary inquiry and object to the substitution of a measure which reincorporates into the bill the very provisions which we have stricken out in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in the power of the House to affirm the action of the Committee of the Whole by voting down the amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN (interrupting the reading). I ask unanimous consent that the reading may be dispensed with. The only change is in section 3 and in the sixth section—the insurance section—which was stricken out.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Pending that request, I should like to understand whether the gentleman has also asked the previous question, so as to cut off all debate on that proposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have tried to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to be recognized for that motion after the amendment has been read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the language proposed to be read includes this provision to transfer the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. HEPBURN. It does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there was no objection to suspending the reading.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, if the time that would be consumed in reading this may be devoted to debate, with other reasonable time added to it, I think there will be no objection. If, however, the object is to cut off all debate, I think we had better have it read.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the request.

Mr. CORLISS. A parliamentary inquiry. When section 6 is reached in this reading, is it not in order to move to strike that out of the proposed amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would be an amendment in the third degree. There is nothing in order now but the reporting of the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the first word, "That," in the substitute amendment proposed by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and insert in lieu thereof the following: "there shall be at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the department of commerce and labor, and a secretary of commerce and labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department. The said secretary shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said department of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of the seal.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant secretary of commerce and labor, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. He shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress; and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive all accounts accruing in or relative to the department of commerce and labor and examine the same, and certify the balances arising thereon to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same manner as the balances on similar accounts are certified under existing law.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, the transportation facilities, and the insurance business of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law. All unexpended appropriations, which shall be available at the time when this act takes effect, in relation to the various offices, bureaus, divisions, and other branches of the public service, which shall, by this act, be transferred to or included in the department of commerce and labor, or which may hereafter, in accordance with the provisions of this act, be so transferred, shall become available, from the time of such transfer, for expenditure in and by the department of commerce and labor, and shall be treated the same as though said branches of the public service had been directly named in the laws making said appropriations as parts of the department of commerce and labor, under the direction of the secretary of said department.

"SEC. 4. That the following-named offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service, now and heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, and all that pertains to the same, known as the Light-House Board, the Light-House Establishment, the National Bureau of Standards, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Commissioner-General of Immigration, the Commissioners of Immigration, the Bureau of Immigration, the immigration service at large, and the Bureau of Statistics, be, and the same hereby are, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the same shall hereafter remain under the jurisdiction and supervision of the last-named department; and that the Census Office, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby is, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of commerce and labor, to remain henceforth under the jurisdiction of the latter; that the Department of Labor, the Fish Commissioner, and the office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby are, placed under the jurisdiction and made a part of the department of commerce and labor; that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and labor and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the bureau of statistics, with a chief of the bureau; and that the secretary of commerce and labor shall have control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and the secretary of commerce and labor is hereby given the power and authority to rearrange the statistical work of the bureaus and offices confided to said department, and to consolidate any of the statistical bureaus and offices transferred to said department; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce and labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

"That the official records and papers now on file in and pertaining exclusively to the business of any bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, together with the furniture now in use in such bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to the department of commerce and labor.

"SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of manufactures, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law. And all consular officers of the United States, including consuls-general, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile, from time to time, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the subjects enumerated in section 3 of this act in the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports as often as required of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled, such reports to be transmitted through the State Department to the secretary of the department of commerce and labor.

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of insurance, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to exercise such control as may be provided by law over every insurance company, society, or association transacting business in the United States outside of the State, Territory, or district wherein the same is organized, and to foster, promote, and develop the various insurance industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such insurance companies and the business of insurance, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.

"SEC. 7. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and the chief of said bureau shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau such clerks and assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning such corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law.

"SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction, supervision, and control now possessed and exercised by the Department of the Treasury over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries of Alaska, and over the immigration of aliens into the United States, its waters, territories, and any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are hereby transferred and vested in the department of commerce and labor. That the authority, power, and jurisdiction now possessed and exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of any law in relation to the exclusion from and the residence within the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent are hereby transferred to and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor, and the authority, power, and jurisdiction in relation thereto now vested by law or treaty in the collectors of customs and the collectors of internal revenue are hereby conferred upon and vested in such officers, under the control of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, as the secretary of commerce and labor may designate therefor.

"SEC. 9. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and his department, and describing the work done by the department in fostering, promoting, and developing the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the transportation facilities, and insurance business of the United States, and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary for the effective performance of the duties and purposes of the department. He shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

"SEC. 10. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall have charge, in the buildings or premises occupied by or appropriated to the department of commerce and labor, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property pertaining to it or hereafter acquired for use in its business; and he shall be allowed to expend for periodicals and the purposes of the library, and for the rental of appropriate quarters for the accommodation of the department of commerce and labor within the District of Columbia, and for all other incidental expenses, such sums as Congress may provide from time to time: Provided, however, That where any office, bureau, or branch of the public service transferred to the department of commerce and labor by this act is occupying rented buildings or premises, it may still continue to do so until other suitable quarters are provided for its use: And provided further, That all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in any of the bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor are each and all hereby transferred to said department at their present grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act: And provided further, That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce and labor shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

"SEC. 11. That all power and authority heretofore possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department over any bureau, office, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as so inconsistent, hereby repealed.

"SEC. 12. A person, to be designated by the Secretary of State, shall be appointed to formulate, under his direction, for the instruction of consular officers, the requests of the secretary of commerce and labor; and to prepare from the dispatches of consular officers, for transmission to the secretary of commerce and labor, such information as pertains to the work of the department of commerce and labor; and such person shall have the rank and salary of a chief of bureau, and be furnished with such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law.

"SEC. 13. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by order in writing, to transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work or the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the department of commerce and labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the Secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the department of commerce and labor, or the secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred.

"SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act in relation to the transfer of any existing office, bureau, division, officer, or other branch of the public service, or authority now conferred thereon, to the department of commerce and labor shall take effect and be in force on the 1st day of July, 1903, and not before."

After the reading of section 8,

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this amendment may be dispensed with.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that will be distasteful to the chairman of the committee, and I think it had better go on.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to make a point of order——

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Upon that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). Against this amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to make a point of order against the substitute offered now by the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The point of order I make, Mr. Speaker, is this: The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union perfected a substitute, a substitute reported by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They reported it as a substitute. Now, Mr. Speaker, that substitute has been perfected, so to speak. It has been considered and amended. Now the gentleman comes and undertakes to offer a substitute for that substitute. I say he can not do it. There can be but one substitute at one time.

Now, Rule XIX provides how substitutes shall be considered. It is not necessary to quote the language of the rule, but there can be but one substitute pending except by unanimous consent. Unanimous consent has not been given for two substitutes, and now the one substitute having been perfected and presented to the House for consideration, for action, it is not in order to move another independent substitute for the substitute already perfected.

I think that is clear, and the gentleman's motion is simply a substitute; it is nothing but a substitute. The gentleman, I believe, used the word "substitute," although I am not sure about that. But whether he did or not, he undertakes to substitute one bill for another bill, so I care not if the sections are identical in language, and I understand he said they were. But that is immaterial. It is an independent proposition. It is an independent substitute, and there can be but one substitute pending. That has been perfected and we are entitled to a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported to the House a Senate bill with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that that committee had had under consideration the amendment in the nature of a substitute and had perfected it, and recommended that the bill as amended do pass. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa now is clearly an amendment to the substitute recommended by the Committee of the Whole House to the House, and is certainly in order. The question of admitting such an amendment to a substitute was settled as long ago as 1836 by Mr. Speaker Polk.

The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CORLISS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CORLISS. Is it in order to offer an amendment striking out section 6 and other provisions with reference to insurance?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry. If in the vote on the demand upon the previous question made by the gentleman from Iowa we vote down the demand, will it not be in order to offer the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can answer that question as well as the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit the question to the Chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to ask such a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will answer if the Chair will not. It will be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, demanding the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CORLISS and Mr. DE ARMOND. Division!

The House divided, and there were—ayes 78; noes 100.

So the demand for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Iowa now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not need to make the point of order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have a vote on the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. CORLISS. And upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Michigan will give his attention. As I understand the situation, the Committee of the Whole perfected one amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the only vote that can be taken in reference to the amendment adopted in the committee is whether the perfected amendment shall be adopted. The vote which is now due to the House, in case there is no discussion, is simply this amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, offering a substitute inserting in the bill as perfected by the committee two provisions in reference to insurance. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that if that substitute is voted for, then that brings it before the House as the amendment; if it is voted down, the amendment perfected by the Committee of the Whole House comes before the House and it does not require the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has correctly stated the parliamentary situation.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I understood the vote was on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa instead of upon ordering the previous question. I therefore moved to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa by striking out section 6 and the language in section 3 embracing the insurance business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's amendment is not in order, because it is an amendment in the third degree and is not admissible under the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary status is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is before the House. That amendment includes, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Michigan——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits that this is a very important matter, and to an intelligent understanding of it we must have order. The House will please be in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The House having voted down the demand for the previous question does not preclude the right to have a vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. His amendment, having been held by the Chair to be in order, is now to be voted upon in the form in which it has been read and submitted by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan made a motion to strike out the sixth section, or so much as relates to the insurance bureau, and the Chair holds that that is not in order because it is an amendment in the third degree; and that ruling is correct, as it seems to me. Therefore the proposition comes to us now to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa as a whole or to vote it down. If we accept it as a whole, we accept it with the provision for the insurance bureau, which the committee has on two or three separate occasions voted out of the bill.

Now, all we need to do, those of us who believe that that ought not to be in the bill—all we need to do is to stand together and vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. It has been demonstrated repeatedly to-day that we have votes enough to vote it out, and when that is voted down, then the gentleman from Michigan would have the right to demand the previous question on the measure as it came from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Now, let us vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee is correct, and under that statement I do not see why, led by the gentleman from Tennessee, the House voted the previous question down.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It does not matter who led; there were votes enough coming from that side of the House to vote it down. We have not votes enough on this side. Patriotic Republicans voted with us.

Mr. PAYNE. I was only illustrating the folly of the gentleman from Tennessee and the folly of members on this side following him. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEPBURN) there were—ayes 66, noes 75.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill as reported to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit the bill with instructions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending bill be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to report a bill or bills to the House to create and establish two separate departments, a department of labor and a department of commerce, each of the same dignity as existing departments and each with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President, and to assign to each of the departments proper and relative bureaus; with instructions also to strike out section 7 of the bill and insert the following as section 7:

SEC. 7. That there shall be established in the department of commerce a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau one chief clerk and one auditor and such number of examiners as shall be needed to carry out the purposes of this act. Said auditor and examiners shall be expert accountants, and shall be paid salary and necessary expenses. There shall also be such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau of corporations, under the direction of the secretary of commerce, to inspect and examine all corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such corporations, including the manner in which their business is conducted, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary.

Every corporation governed by this act shall make annual reports in writing to the said auditor of said bureau, and such report shall in all cases include—

(a) Capital authorized and issued; the amount paid up in cash or otherwise, with a statement of the method of paying where it is not in cash.

(b) Debts, including details as to the amount thereof and security given therefor, if any.

(c) Obligations due from officers, which shall be separately stated.

(d) A statement of assets and the method of valuing the same, whether at cost price, by appraisal, or otherwise, and of the allowance made for depreciation. Small items of personal property included in a plant may be described by the term "sundries" or like general term.

(e) Gross earnings for the period covered by the report, all deductions necessary for interest, taxes, and expense of all sorts, the surplus available for dividends, and dividends actually declared.

(f) Increase of assets since the last statement, with a showing in what way such increase has been secured.

(g) The names and addresses of stockholders, with the number of shares held by each at the date of the report.

(h) The amount of stock disposed of and the amount of property taken for stock sold since the last report, with all facts necessary to show the results of the transaction.

(i) A statement showing that the corporation in question has not, during the period covered by the said report, received any rebates, drawbacks, special rates or discriminations, advantages or preferences, by money payments or otherwise, from any railroad, pipe line, water carrier, or other transportation company, or if any such have been received or given, stating when, from whom, on what account, and in what manner they were so received, with all other details necessary to a full understanding of the transaction or transactions.

(j) The names and addresses of all officers; location of transfer or registry offices, wherever located.

(k) A statement that the corporation has not fixed prices, or done any other act with a view to restricting trade or driving any competitor out of business.

(l) A statement that the corporation is or is not a party to any contract, combination, or conspiracy in the form of trust or otherwise in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or Territories or with foreign nations.

(m) A statement of the proportion of goods going into interstate commerce.

That it shall be the duty of the auditor to prescribe the form of the reports before mentioned. He may in his discretion require additional reports at any time when he may see fit, upon reasonable notice; but his determination shall be prima facie proof that the notice is reasonable. He may also require supplemental reports whenever, in his judgment, the report rendered is in any particular or particulars insufficient, evasive, or ambiguous. He may prescribe rules so as to avoid undue detail in making reports, but no detail of the business of the corporation shall be considered private so as to be exempt from the examination of the auditor whenever he may demand report thereon. He shall make public in his reports, which shall be issued annually, all the information contained in the reports so made to him. When a report has been made by a corporation, and, with all supplemental and additional reports required by the auditor, shall have been approved by him, the corporation making such report or reports shall publish the same in a daily newspaper, after the usual custom in such cases, with the auditor's minutes of approval, and shall file with the auditor proof of such publication by the publisher's certificate.

That if any corporation shall fail to make a report when required, either by the terms of this act or when required by the auditor, as herein provided, said corporation shall be fined not less than 1 per cent or not more than 10 per cent of its last annual gross earnings for each offense. Every day of failure after a written demand has been made by the auditor shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. In case of failure, also, each of the directors of the said corporation shall be ineligible, for the year succeeding the next annual meeting, to hold either directorship or any other office in the said corporation. If such report is false in any material respect, the corporation shall be fined not less than 2 per cent and not more than 20 per cent of its last annual gross earnings, and each false statement in any material matter shall constitute a separate offense. All fines and penalties imposed by this act shall be recovered or enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction.

That it shall be the duty of examiners, under the direction of the auditor, to make examinations of any corporation governed by this act. Any of said examiners presenting his official credentials shall be furnished by the officers of the corporation every facility for complete and full examination, not only of the books, but of all property, records, or papers of the corporation which may be necessary, in the judgment of the examiner, for a complete knowledge of the affairs of the concern. Such examinations shall not be at fixed periods, but shall be at such times as the auditor shall fix and without notice. Examiners shall have the power to examine under oath all officers or employees of a corporation, or any other persons having any knowledge of its affairs, and to send for, demand, and inspect books, papers, and any other matter of evidence whatever which is in the possession or control of the said corporation. For the purpose of this act examiners shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses under oath and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation.

Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpœna the examiner may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring such attendance. And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before said examiner and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding. The auditor shall likewise have all the authority of an examiner in any case wherein he chooses himself to act. No examiner shall be assigned to examine any corporation who is himself interested in the business thereof, or any competing concern, or who has relatives who are so interested.

That it shall be unlawful for an examiner to divulge private business, except by his report to the auditor. But such report, or the substance thereof, shall be opened for public inspection. Each examiner shall follow the rules, regulations, and directions which the auditor may from time to time lay down or communicate to him as to the method of examination, the form of report, the matters to be covered by the said examination, and all matters pertaining to his duties. Said examinations and reports shall always cover, among others, the following questions:

(a) Has the said corporation, during the period covered by the examination and report, received any rebates, drawbacks, special rates, or other discriminations, advantages, or preferences, by money payments or otherwise, from any railroad, pipe line, water carrier, or other transportation company?

(b) If there have been such preferences, when were they received, from whom, on what account, and in what manner, giving all details necessary to a full understanding of the transaction?

(c) Is the said corporation a member of any combination having or intending to secure a monopoly of any commodity other than such monopolies as are legally granted by patent or otherwise?

(d) Has the said corporation any such monopoly, or does it use methods tending to secure such monopoly?

(e) Has it made any contracts or agreements tending to secure any such monopoly to itself or any other concern, whether owned by an individual or individuals, a corporation, or some combination of individuals and corporations?

(f) Is such corporation a party to any contract, agreement, or combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations?

(g) Has the corporation purchased or does it hold the stock of any corporation for the purpose of controlling its management?

Said reports of examiners shall be prima facie true and may be introduced in evidence in all courts to prove the facts therein set forth. Copies certified by the auditor shall be admissible with like effect and under the same circumstances as the original. The word "corporation" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include associations existing or authorized either by the law of the United States, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

Mr. OVERSTREET (before the reading of the amendment was concluded). Mr. Speaker, this amendment has already been read to the House, when offered by the gentleman from New York. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I make this point of order against the motion to recommit, that it directs the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report a bill creating a department of labor, which, under the rules of the House, can not be done by this committee. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has not jurisdiction, and could not have jurisdiction, of a bill to organize a department of labor.

Mr. PAYNE. And besides it is not germane.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he has concluded his statement——

Mr. MANN. I make the further point that a bill to create a department of labor is not germane as an amendment to the bill pending before the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In reply to the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois, I desire only to say that it is competent for the House of Representatives to refer a bill to any committee that it choose. A particular committee might not have jurisdiction in the first place without the direct action of the House. A bill might inadvertently be referred to a committee not having jurisdiction of the subject under the rules, and the House might correct such reference, because under the rules the bill would not go there. But it is competent for the House in its majesty, as the House sits here this evening, to refer this or any other bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is very clearly of opinion that the view expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] as to the power of the House to refer this matter to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce states correctly the situation. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the other proposition—that the motion is not germane.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A provision for the establishment of a department of labor was part of the original bill.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I put an interrogatory to the gentleman from Illinois? I want to ask him this question: If this proposition is not germane, how was it that it was contained originally in this bill? There is nothing embraced in the motion to recommit that is not already contained in some form in the bill as reported.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be beyond the comprehension of some people—it certainly is not beyond the lucid comprehension of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD]—that a certain provision which may be in a bill may come properly before a committee which has jurisdiction of the whole subject-matter of the bill, while it would not have jurisdiction of another proposition, because that other proposition would not be germane.

Here is a proposition to create two departments. On the same theory on which this proposition is defended this motion might be a direction to the committee to provide for the creation of a department of mines and mining, and a department of transportation, and a department of interstate and foreign commerce, and forty other departments of the Government.

Now, it does not seem to me (although I do not care to detain the House upon the question) that the proposition is germane to the bill before the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The original bill was a proposition to establish a department of commerce and labor. The motion to recommit proposes simply to have two separate departments instead of one. The motion is just as germane as anything could be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no question in the mind of the Chair as to the power of the House to authorize the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report a bill creating a department of labor, if the House sees fit to refer that subject to that committee. This is a bill creating a department of commerce and labor. The proposition contained in the motion is to return this bill to that committee with instructions to separate the two branches of the subject, and to report instead of a measure for one department a measure for two departments, covering the same subjects as are now covered in the bill pending before the House. The Chair holds that the motion is germane. The point of order is therefore overruled. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] to recommit the bill with instructions, as read by the Clerk.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. SULZER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 116 answered "present" 13, not voting 138; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SWANSON and he voted "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, does the RECORD show, as a matter of fact, that every Democrat who answered to his name voted "aye," and every Republican voted "no?"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's question is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question now is upon the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MADDOX. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 27.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Who raised the point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri raises the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 42, answered "present" 9, not voting 167; as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. ROBB.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to change my vote from "present" to "yea" on the motion to recommit. I voted "present" under the impression that I was paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to change his vote as recorded on the motion to recommit, and to vote "yea" now.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that would not be a good precedent to establish.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has never been objected to; it does not change the result.

Mr. PAYNE. I know; but it is not the usual practice. I never knew it before, and therefore I shall be constrained to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman will get the benefit of his statement in the RECORD.

Mr. CORLISS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion, the Chair submits the following change of reference:

A bill (S. 1131) granting an increase of pension to Sydda B. Arnold, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CAPRON obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Joseph P. Manton, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GOOCH was given leave to print on the bill under discussion this day (S. 569), relating to the department of commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On request of Mr. CORLISS, Mr. HAMILTON was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of George W. Frith, administrator of estate of Thomas I. Frith, against The United States; to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service submitting an amendment of estimate of appropriation for Life-Saving Service; to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for shooting galleries and ranges at Fort Crook; to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MCCLEARY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3160); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6502) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3161); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14047) for the relief of the clerks of circuit and district courts of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3162); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16599) amending chapter 591 of the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-sixth Congress, approved May 26, 1900, entitled "An act to provide for the holding of a term of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Superior, Wis.," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3163); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PEARRE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13630) to provide for the abatement of nuisances in the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of said District, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3164); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3100) providing for the conveyance of Widows Island, Maine, to the State of Maine, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3165); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

Mr. FRYE. I present resolutions adopted by the legislature of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the ratification of the Hay-Bond treaty. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby certify that the paper to which this is attached is a true copy from the records of this office.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta, this 14th day of January, A. D. 1903, and in the one hundred and twenty-seventh year of the Independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] BYRON BOYD, Secretary of State.

Resolves, protesting against the Hay-Bond treaty.

Whereas the fishing industry is one of the most important interests of this State, giving employment, as it does, to 25,000 men, having an invested capital of $3,000,000, with an annual product valued at $5,000,000; and

Whereas our own market takes by far the greater part of the catch of the New England fishing fleet, which alone makes it possible for that fleet to maintain its existence; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States, with a view to obtaining the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, a convention between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain for the improvement of commercial relations between the United States and His Britannic Majesty's colony of Newfoundland, signed at Washington on the 8th day of November, 1902; and

Whereas Article II of said convention provides that certain produce of the Newfoundland fisheries shall be admitted into the United States, free of duty: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, That the ratification of the aforesaid convention by the Government of the United States will work irreparable injury to this great industry, by opening our home market to a competitor which, by reason of cheaper labor and smaller cost of building and maintaining its fleet, can land its product in the Atlantic ports of the United States at one-third less cost than the New England fleet is able to do; that it will render valueless many millions of capital now profitably employed in the fishing industry; that it will deprive many thousand men of employment in a business in which they are skilled; that it will deprive the naval and merchant vessels of the United States of a great training school for sailors; that the concessions granted by said convention to importations from the United States are trifling in comparison and wholly inadequate to compensate the people of the United State for the practical destruction of a great national industry. And be it further

Resolved, That this legislature, in behalf of the people of this State, tenders its thanks to its Senators and Representatives in Congress for their steadfast and zealous opposition to the ratification of said treaty, and that a copy of this joint resolution be transmitted to the Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States, for presentation to the Senate in such manner as he may determine.

HARRY R. VIRGIN, President.

JANUARY 14, 1903.

Approved.

JOHN F. HILL, Governor.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Carpenters and Joiners' Local Union No. 407, American Federation of Labor, of Lewiston, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the desert-land law and the commutation clause of the homestead act; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction and conspiracy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I present sundry telegrams and resolutions relating to the statehood bill; which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

RATON, N. MEX., January 16, 1903.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

We, business men of Raton, a town of 5,000, the third city in population in New Mexico, and wholly American, earnestly pray that the omnibus statehood bill may pass. The subcommittee on Territories in its flight through New Mexico ignored several of the most progressive towns and sections, among them Raton. Its report does this Territory injustice. We recommend that Senators read the late report of Governor Otero to the Secretary of the Interior and learn true condition of affairs here.

[Telegram.]

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., January 15, 1903.

Senator MATTHEW S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

You hold the unbounded gratitude of Arizona for your efforts supporting the omnibus statehood bill. The Senate committee made no investigation. Their report is misleading in every particular. We sincerely trust the bill will pass.

C. P. HICKS, Probate Judge.

SILVER CITY, N. MEX., January 15, 1903.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

The Silver City Commercial Club, an organization of about 100 members, including the leading business men of the county, desire to extend our hearty thanks to you, as well as our unqualified support in your efforts in behalf of the omnibus statehood bill. We represent the banner county of the Territory from a mining, live stock, and sanitarian standpoint, as well as the metropolis of this southern half of it. We were not visited by the Senatorial committee, although we cordially invited them to our city. We are solid for statehood, and wish you Godspeed in your efforts in our behalf.

Very respectfully, yours,

THE SILVER CITY COMMERCIAL CLUB,

Copy of resolution No. 56.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill designated as "the omnibus statehood bill," which provides for the admission of the Territory of New Mexico into the Union of the States; and

Whereas it is the unanimous sentiment of the city council of the city of Las Vegas, San Miguel County, N. Mex., sitting as a representative body of the citizens of said city, and as such voicing the sentiment of said citizens, that said bill be passed as speedidly as possible and at the present term of said Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the city council of the city of Las Vegas, as such council and as the representative body of the citizens of said city, That it is the sentiment, wish, and desire of said council that said omnibus statehood bill providing for the admission of New Mexico as a State be passed at this term of Congress, and that the Hon. B. S. RODEY, the Delegate in Congress from said Territory, be requested and urged to do all in his power to secure the passage of said bill.

Duly adopted this 4th day of June, A. D. 1902.

K. D. GOODALL, Mayor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. PETTUS. By authority of the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back with an amendment the bill (S. 6719) to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the eastern division of the eastern district of Arkansas, and I ask for its present consideration. The bill has been somewhat delayed in the committee.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary reports in favor of striking out section 2 of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. What is section 2?

The section was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HOAR. From the Committee on the Judiciary I am directed to report an original bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now. It is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri."

Before I submit the report, I ask leave to state that a bill amending that act passed both Houses. It enacted that the original act which it amended should be amended so as to read as follows, and the first three sections were changed in the new reading so as to assign certain counties to one judicial division and others to another. But the bill did not repeal the later sections of the original act which provided for process and where parties should be tried for crime, and where civil cases should be tried. So the President called the attention informally of the committee to the fact that the bill might be construed to repeal those later sections and leave no law upon the subject. Thereupon the Senate requested a return of the bill, and I now report a new bill which merely reenacts the old law with the change which the Senate has already agreed to. I ask that it may be now considered.

The bill (S. 7033) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts reports this bill from the Committee on the Judiciary and asks for its present consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects, and the bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. It only hurts Missouri, and various parties there, and not anybody else.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY.

Mr. BURTON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6968) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, in the Territory of Arizona, to report it without amendment.

I desire to ask for the present consideration of this bill. I will state that a bill like it in every part has already passed at the present session of Congress, but it was vetoed by the President under a misapprehension of the facts, and I introduced it again. I hope that objection will not be made to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the Calendar.

COURTS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6595) fixing the times and places for holding regular terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the western district of Virginia, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if there is to be an abolition of unanimous consent I think it had better be uniform, and I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very sorry that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to visit on me his retaliation against another Senator, but of course he has the power to do it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows very well I have no objection in the world to the bill, but if objections are to be made to all requests for unanimous consent, I do not think that they ought to be confined to one side of the Chamber.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to say very frankly that nobody on this side is responsible for objections against the requests of that side except me. I take the entire responsibility, and I intend to continue the objection.

The reason why I discriminate is that every Democrat on the committee conceded the right of the Texas Senators to settle a question of rivalry between two Texas towns, and it would therefore be the sheerest nonsense to attempt retaliation against those who recognized a rule that has stood as long as the Senate itself has existed.

If it be possible that gentlemen from New York can project themselves into a contest between two rival Texas towns and overrule the Senators from that State, the sooner we know it the better. I am myself as little disposed to interrupt the ordinary and agreeable course of business in the Senate Chamber as any member of it. The rule which recognizes the right of Senators to settle purely local matters is not merely one of courtesy, but it has a better foundation. It rests upon the solid ground that if the Senators from a State make a mistake in matters relating to that State the people of it can punish them. But if Senators from other States undertake to settle questions relating to States which they do not represent, the people affected are powerless ever to punish them.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if in his judgment it promotes the establishment of the doctrine that the Senators from a State are to settle such local matters to object to a bill introduced and promoted by the two Senators from Missouri to settle a local matter there, which has just happened in regard to a measure greatly concerning the convenience of suitors in an important judicial district of Missouri.

Mr. BAILEY. I answer the Senator frankly that it does not promote it; but I intend that the same rule shall be applied to others which has been applied to me. I do it very reluctantly, but very firmly.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, of this matter I think the Senate should be advised. I think my friend the Senator from Texas takes an extreme view of the situation. It is not a partisan question in any sense before the committee, nor will it be when it comes here for the Senate to act upon it.

This is a question relating, it is true, to two places in the State of Texas in an effort to have a port of entry made of one or the other. So far as Texas citizens are concerned, they have done little for either place. Capitalists in New York have spent many million dollars at one place and capitalists from Chicago have spent many million dollars at the other place. This port of entry affects territory partly in Texas and partly in Louisiana, in which there is expected to be——

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, the whole of Louisiana included in the bill was stricken out upon the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana. I said to him frankly that I would not propose to include against his will any of the State which he represents, and as I asked unanimous consent Thursday evening, the whole of the Louisiana part was stricken out. It is purely a Texas matter.

Mr. DEPEW. I understand; but the recommendation of the Treasury Department was that a part of Louisiana should be included in the operations of the bill.

The merits of this bill have been discussed repeatedly before the Committee on Commerce, and it was supposed that at the meeting last Thursday a vote could be had upon the question. The Senator very frankly then as now claimed that it was a matter which belonged exclusively to the Senators from Texas, and that they were the ones upon whom the responsibility would rest for the action in establishing a port to which the navigation and the commerce of the whole country and the whole world would go, and that the committee and the Senate had practically nothing to say on the subject. I do not want to misstate the Senator, but that, I understand, is his position here.

Now, I will state what occurred, and I am not revealing any secrets of the committee. There was a bare quorum present. Precisely how the vote would have been, if one had been taken, I do not know. There was a bare quorum present, and in view of what the Senator from Texas had said and because of the friendly feeling toward the Senator in the committee, it was thought, and in fact asked, that the question should not be decided then, when it might have been decided against him. Therefore it was unanimously agreed that the matter should be put over until the regular meeting on Thursday, when a notice should be sent to each member of the committee, that then and there a vote should be taken upon the report of the bill in which the Senator from Texas displays this interest.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from New York tell the Senate that that was unanimously agreed to?

Mr. DEPEW. It was, so far as I remember, unanimously agreed that the vote should be taken at the next meeting.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from New York permit me just one minute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to state that, as an original proposition, I should not have been in favor of making Port Arthur a general port of entry. Citizens from Georgia were opposed to it and presented their objections to it. But I yielded to the wishes of the Senator from Texas and I was in favor of the Senators from Texas governing their own affairs.

Now, I think the Senator from New York is mistaken in one respect. I am sure that the vote was not unanimous in favor of the continuance of this matter. It is true that there was a bare quorum present, and I am sure that a majority of the Senators thought that we ought to have a full meeting at the time the matter was voted upon. But I know that there were two or three Senators who did not vote in favor of the continuance. I do not wish to go into what transpired in the committee room. In this matter I was governed from the beginning to the end by the wishes of the Senators from Texas. Otherwise, I should have voted in favor of the wishes of those from Georgia, who have great interest in this matter.

I am sure the Senator from New York on reflection will remember that two or three of us were not in favor of the further continuance of the bill before the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York himself furnishes a very forcible illustration of the wisdom of leaving these matters to the Senators from the State affected. He says Chicago capitalists invested at one place and New York capitalists invested at another. Naturally, therefore, the New York Senators are for the New York capitalists and the Illinois Senators are for the Chicago capitalists. That would happen as certain as the matter was to be decided in that way.

As the Senator from Georgia very properly and very naturally says, Georgians being interested with New Yorkers at Sabine Pass, he would vote to establish the port there. Thus he would have Senators not responsible to the State in which these offices are to be located deciding the question merely upon their personal relations with constituents who are interested.

It is true that a firm of New York bankers have large interests at Sabine Pass. They appeal to the Senator from New York to protect them against the Senators from Texas, and the Senator from New York proceeds with his Republican majority on the committee to do so.

Now, Mr. President, in order that the Senate may understand the matter, and still without divulging the proceedings within the committee room, I will state that this was the third meeting at which I have appealed to the committee to report the bill. I would rather have had it reported adversely than to be confronted with a situation where I was powerless to secure from a committee of the Senate a report on a bill creating a port of entry in the State which I in part represent.

The Senator from New York says that a port of entry is not a local matter. I wonder how it would be if a Senator from another State should undertake to control the appointment of the collector of the port of the great State of New York. I remember a time when two Senators from that State resigned their seats in this body because they could not control that appointment, if newspaper reports at that time can be relied on.

If the officer is local, then surely the office must be local, and there is not a Senator on that side of the Chamber who would not, as a matter of self-respect, stoutly protest against the interference of a Senator from any other State in the naming of a customs officer to serve at the port of the State which he represents.

I need only repeat that it is impossible that the officer can be local and the office general.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is nothing before the Senate. The Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, so far as the port of New York is concerned, there are three great revenue officers, the greatest that there are in the service of the Government in its revenue capacity. Ever since I can remember Senators from other States have not only taken an interest in, but they have frequently succeeded in having their choice made one of those three officers. The custom-house of New York has always had a large representation from almost every State in the Union of employees placed there by Senators from other States.

So far as the port of New York is concerned, the appropriations which are made for improvements in that port are subjects of consideration, of advice, and of action, friendly or adverse, by Senators from States who are upon the Committee on Commerce, and the Senators from all the States when it is a matter of controversy here.

In regard to this matter, I do not wish to differ in any way, nor do I think I do, with my friend from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. As always happens in committee—I am not revealing the particular secrets of the committee—there was the informal discussion with a bare quorum, which was about to be lost by the retirement of one Senator; and while my friend from Georgia expressed the same view as he did here upon the floor, when I made the suggestion that, in justice to the Senator from Texas and all the interests represented, we should have a full meeting, with notice to each member that this question was to be decided, it was passed without a vote in that informal way in which things are done in committee.

In regard to this being a purely local matter, as a distinguished candidate for the Presidency on the Democratic side once said of the tariff, it is a great Government matter. The United States has already expended over $3,000,000 at Sabine Pass, and the question is whether Port Arthur shall be made a port of entry instead of Sabine Pass, and whether the Government shall spend three or four or more million dollars, raised by taxation upon the whole country, for Port Arthur. Sabine Pass is on the border and has been regarded a subport of entry for many years. The Government has there established its custom-house, has built its wharves, and made an expenditure of some three and a half millions of dollars.

Now, then, these gentlemen from Chicago—all strong men—in the development of their interests have become established at Port Arthur, where a canal has been built from the present port to a cow pasture 9 miles up, to where a port is to be established and a harbor established at the expense of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from New York tell me if he was ever at Port Arthur?

Mr. DEPEW. Never.

Mr. BAILEY. And yet the Senator makes that statement in reference to it?

Mr. DEPEW. I make it from the testimony before the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. You make that statement to the Senate upon the mere information of people interested. I tell the Senator that Port Arthur is nearly twice as large as Sabine Pass. I tell the Senator instead of the Government having built its custom-house at Sabine Pass and not at Port Arthur, they both to-day enjoy precisely the same privileges as subports of entry, but both of them are 160 miles from the main port of entry at Galveston. It is therefore desirable to make one a port of entry and the other a subport of entry.

I shall not discuss the relative merits of these two towns at this time; but I am a little surprised that the Senator from New York should undertake to describe a Texas town which he has never seen on information furnished him by boomers.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. DEPEW. Just one moment. The information was public testimony submitted before the committee at our last day's session. I make these assertions for the purpose of having the Senate understand that it is not purely a little local matter, which should be reported from the committee at the request of the Senator from the particular State in which it happens to be located, without the consideration and judgment of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order. If there be no further reports, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MARTIN. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. DANIEL], who is unavoidably detained from his seat, I introduce a number of bills, which are introduced "by request."

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment relative to the adjudication by the Court of Claims of any claim the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, or any band thereof, may have against the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12270) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians in the State of New York, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $11,000 for the purchase of 260 acres of land adjoining the Government reservation at Monterey, Cal., to complete military camp and target grounds, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $360,000 to enable the Secretary of War to purchase 24,000 acres of land in the Nacimiento ranch, in Monterey and San Luis Obispo counties, California, for the purpose of establishing a permanent camp ground for the instruction and maneuvering of troops of the Regular Army and National Guard, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 6098) to regulate the retirement of veterans of the civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PRODUCTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, First, that the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any, and if so what, countries discriminate against any article or articles the growth or product of the soil or industry of the United States by levying upon such article or articles duties, imposts, excises, or taxes in excess of those levied upon similar articles imported from other countries, or, further, in any way fail to admit the products of the United States on terms as favorable as those accorded to any other nation.

Second, that if it should appear that any country or countries discriminate against the United States in the manner aforesaid the Committee on Finance shall report to the Senate whether it is not advisable that a suitable law should be enacted by which maximum and minimum rates of duty shall be established in such manner as to give preference and advantage in rates of duty to the products of those countries which do not discriminate against the products of the soil or industry of the United States, but admit them on an exact equality with similar articles the products of other countries and on the terms and at the rates of duty accorded to the most favored nation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance, or that any diposition may be made of it which is agreeable to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to make a brief statement in regard to some of the matters referred to in the resolution, but in view of the notice given by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I shall refrain from doing so this morning, and ask that the resolution may lie on the table, to be called up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

CONCORDAT BETWEEN COLOMBIA AND POPE LEO XIII.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, the concordat between Colombia and Pope Leo XIII, promulgated February 24, 1888, and article 34 of law 30 of 1888 of said Republic of Colombia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the reading of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the concordat between the Republic of Colombia and Pope Leo XIII may also be printed in the RECORD. It is short and very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The concordat referred to is as follows:

Mr. Walker to Mr. Bayard.

No. 95.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Bogota, March 7, 1888. (Received April 6.)

SIR: As a subject which may be of interest to the State Department and important to some of our citizens coming to this country to reside, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy, in Spanish, of the "Concordat" recently celebrated between the Holy See of Rome and the Colombian Government, with a careful translation. In making this translation I regretted that I did not have access to the original Latin text in which it was drawn up and signed, but had to content myself with the Spanish translation, which in some of the articles is vague and ambiguous. The first clause of the seventeenth article is so much so that in my translation I was forced to be paraphrastic rather than literal.

As a part of the same subject I herewith transmit a copy, with translation, of law 30, passed by the legislative council on the 25th of February last, which virtually annuls all civil marriages celebrated at any time in the past, unless the ceremony was also performed canonically. The annulment of the marriage, however, does not illegitimatize the children of such marriage.

I am, sir, etc.,

JNO. G. WALKER.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 95.—Translation.]

CONCORDAT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN POPE LEO XIII AND THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA.

[Concluded December 31, 1887. Ratified by the legislative council of Colombia February 24, 1888.]

In the name of the most holy and indivisible Trinity, the Supreme Pontiff, Leo XIII, and the most excellent Rafael Nuñez, President of the Republic of Colombia, by their respective representatives, to wit, on the part of His Holiness, the most eminent Monsignore Mariana Rampolla del Tindaro, cardinal presbyter of the most holy church of St. Cecelia and papal secretary of state; and on the part of the Republic, His Excellency Joaquin Vélez, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near the Holy See, who, after a mutual exchange of credentials, have concluded the following convention:

ART. 1. The Catholic, Roman, Apostolic is the religion of Colombia, the public authorities of which shall recognize it as an essential element of social order, and they bind themselves to protect it in all its rights and privileges, and to cause it and its ministers to be respected.

ART. 2. The Catholic Church shall be free and independent of the civil authority and shall freely exercise all its spiritual authority and jurisdiction, conforming in its administrative government solely to its own laws.

ART. 3. Canonical legislation shall be free of the civil, and shall form no part of the latter, but will be respected by the latter.

ART. 4. The church, represented by its hierarchical authorities, is recognized by the state as a true and legitimate entity, with capacity to exercise and enjoy all rights pertaining to such.

ART. 5. The church has the right of acquiring, possessing, and administering real and personal property, in accordance to general laws, and its lands and establishments shall be no less inviolable than those of the citizens of the Republic.

ART. 6. Ecclesiastical property may be taxed in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of private individuals, except edifices for public worship, theological seminaries, and the residences of the clergy, which are exempt from all taxation, occupation, or appropriation to other uses.

ART. 7. The secular and regular clergy shall not be required to perform public duties incompatible with their ministry and profession, and at all times shall be exempt from military service.

ART. 8. The government shall enact such laws as will protect the sacerdotal dignity whenever, for any cause, a minister of the church may figure in criminal trials.

ART. 9. Diocesan bishops and parish priests may claim from the faithful the emoluments and ecclesiastical fees canonically and equitably established, either by the immemorial custom of the diocese or by the rules of religious services; and in order that such acts and obligations may produce civil effects, and that the temporal authority may lend its support, the bishops shall proceed in accord with the government.

ART. 10. Competent ecclesiastical authority has the right in Colombia to establish religious orders of both sexes, to be governed by suitable constitutions. But in order to secure the enjoyment of the rights of a lawful corporation and the protection of the laws, they must present to the civil authorities the canonical authorization issued by their ecclesiastical superior.

ART. 11. The Holy See will lend its support and cooperation to the Government for the establishment in Colombia of religious institutions, giving preference to those for charitable purposes, for missions, for the education of youth, and for general education, and to other works of public utility and beneficence.

ART. 12. Public education and instruction in universities, colleges, schools, and in other centers of instruction shall be organized and directed in conformity with the dogmas and moral teachings of the Catholic Church.

ART. 13. Consequently, in such centers of instruction the respective diocesan bishops, either by themselves or by special delegation, shall exercise the right, in whatever concerns religion and morals, to inspect and revise the text-books in use in the same.

The archbishop of Bogotá shall prescribe the text-books relating to religion and morals to be used in the universities; and to insure uniformity of teaching on those subjects, said prelate, in connection with other bishops, shall choose the text-books for the other schools of official instruction.

The Government shall see that no lectures are delivered on literary, scientific, or general subjects in any branch of learning that inculcate ideas contrary to Catholic dogmas or calculated to lessen the respect due to the church.

ART. 14. If, in spite of the orders and precautions of the Government, the moral and religious teaching (in universities, colleges, etc.) shall not conform to Catholic doctrines, the respective diocesans may withdraw from the offending professors and masters the privilege of teaching in such branches.

ART. 15. The Holy See has the right to fill vacancies in the archbishopries and bishoprics, but the Holy Father, as an evidence of special deference and to the end of preserving perfect harmony between the church and the state, agrees that in filling such vacancies the previous consent of the President shall be obtained. To that end, when such vacancies occur, the President may recommend directly to the Holy See such ecclesiastics as in his judgment unite in themselves the gifts and qualifications necessary for the episcopal dignity; and the Holy See, on its part, before making the appointment, shall always communicate the names of the candidates for promotion in order to ascertain whether or not the President considers the candidates civilly or politically disqualified for such positions. Vacancies in the bishoprics to be filled as soon as possible, and in no case to remain unfilled for more than six months.

ART. 16. The Holy See may erect new dioceses, or change the limits of those existing, whenever it is thought opportune and useful for the better care of souls, previously consulting the Government and admitting such suggestions as may be reasonable and just.

ART. 17. All persons professing the Catholic religion, desirous of contracting marriage, should have the ceremony performed according to the rites of the church.

The civil effects of marriage, in respect to the persons and property of the contracting parties and their descendants, can only be secured when the marriage is performed in accordance with the prescriptions of the Council of Trent. This celebration shall be witnessed by the functionary who may be designated by law for the sole purpose of verifying the entry of the marriage in the civil registry. But in cases of marriage in articulo mortis, when this formality might be difficult of observance, it may be dispensed with, and other proof substituted.

It being the business of the contracting parties to secure the intervention of the civil functionary for the registry, the duty of the clergyman is limited to an admonition as to the requirements of the civil law.

ART. 18. In order to give marriages celebrated at whatever period, according to the prescriptions of the Council of Trent, civil effect, suppletory evidence of ecclesiastical origin will be given preference.

ART. 19. Matrimonial causes affecting the married relation, cohabitation, and the validity of espousals pertain exclusively to the ecclesiastical authority, the civil consequences of marriage to the temporal.

ART. 20. The armies of the Republic shall enjoy the indulgences known as castrenses, to be regulated by the Holy Father in a separate act.

ART. 21. Following the divine offices there shall be offered up in all the churches of the Republic the following prayers: Domine salvam fac Rempublicam; Domine salvum fac Præsidem ejus et supremas ejus auctoritates.

ART. 22. The government of the Republic recognizes in perpetuity as a consolidated debt the value of the redeemed annuities (censos) now in the treasury, and of the estates belonging to the church fraternities, charitable foundations, chapels, establishments for instruction and benevolence erected by the church, which at any time may have been inscribed in the public debt of the nation. This recognized debt is to bear interest without diminution at the annual rate of 4½ per cent, payable every six months.

ART. 23. The income arising from sequestrated benefices and tithings pertaining to charitable institutions, chapels, monasteries, and other separate foundations is recognized and shall be paid to those who have the right to receive them, or to their legal representatives. This payment shall be made without diminution, as is provided for in the last preceding article, to commence with year 1888. In case any such bodies have become extinct, the amounts due them by a previous arrangement with the Government shall be applied to pious and charitable objects, without in any case contravening the intention of the founders.

ART. 24. In view of the present condition of the national treasury of Colombia and the benefit derived by the church from the observance of this convention, the Holy See makes the following relinquishments:

(a) The value of the principal of the sequestered property belonging to the aforesaid extinct convents and religious bodies of both sexes, not included in the foregoing articles, and which has not in any manner been recognized. (b) Whatever is due to such extinct organizations for rents or interest already accrued, or in whatever manner resulting, from said sequestration previous to the 31st of December, 1887.

ART. 25. In consideration of the foregoing favor the Government of Colombia agrees to secure, in perpetuity, an annual net sum, hereby fixed at 100,000 Colombian dollars, to be increased when the said treasury is in a better condition, said payments to be applied to the uses of the dioceses, chapters, seminaries, missions, and such other civilizing works of the church, and in such manner as may be agreed upon between the high contracting parties.

ART. 26. The surviving members of the extinct religious communities shall continue in the enjoyment, for their maintenance and other necessities, of such revenues as may have belonged to them by virtue of previous laws and decrees.

ART. 27. In like manner shall be paid the rents and incomes set aside by anterior laws and decrees for the support of public worship in churches, chapels, and other religious places not included in article 22. If concerning this point there should be doubt or difficulty, the Government shall communicate with the competent ecclesiastical authorities, to the end that a good understanding may be arrived at.

ART. 28. The Government shall return to religious bodies such of their sequestrated property as has no distinct destination; but if the owner does not come forward, or if he fills no ecclesiastical office, it may be sold and the proceeds applied to pious and benevolent objects, according to the most pressing needs of each diocese, the proceeding in such cases to be in accord with the ecclesiastical authorities.

ART. 29. The Holy See, in order to secure public tranquillity, declares, for its part, that persons who purchased ecclesiastical property during the past changes in Colombia, or who have redeemed annuities (censos) in the national treasury, according to the provisions of the civil law at the time in force, shall not be disturbed in any manner by the ecclesiastical authorities, a favor extended not only to those who performed the acts, but to those who, in the exercise of whatsoever functions, may have taken part in the same, in such manner that the first purchasers, as well as their legal successors and those who have redeemed annuities (censos), shall enjoy in peace and security such property, its products and emoluments, stipulating, however, that the Republic shall not in future repeat similar acts of seizure.

ART. 30. The Government of the Republic shall arrange with the respective diocesan bishops all that relates to cemeteries, reconciling the exigencies of their civil and sanitary character with the veneration due the sacredness of such places and with ecclesiastical prescriptions. In case of misunderstandings on such subjects they will be arranged between the Holy See and the Government.

ART. 31. Agreements between the Holy See and the Government of Colombia for fostering Catholic missions among the barbarous tribes shall not require the after approval of Congress.

ART. 32. The present convention repeals and renders null and void all laws, orders, and decrees, in whatsoever mode or period they were promulgated, in such parts as may contradict or are inconsistent with this convention, which shall remain the permanent law of the State.

ART. 33. The ratification of this convention shall take place within six months from the date of its signature, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof the said plenipotentiaries sign and seal this convention.

Done at Rome the 31st day of December, 1887.

M. CARDINAL RAMPOLLA.
JOAQUIN F. VÉLEZ.

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,
Bogota, February 24, 1888.

Considering (1) that in the celebration of the foregoing convention the Government has acted within the powers conferred upon it by article 56 of the fundamental law of the Republic;

(2) That by this agreement, which satisfactorily and consistently settles all pending questions between the church and the state in conformity with the new national régime, and at the same time responds to imperious necessity and public well-being, which demanded the definition of the mutual relations between the civil and the ecclesiastical powers: and

(3) That its stipulations conform strictly to the provisions of articles 38, 41, 47, 53, 54, and 55 of the constitution.

It is decreed—

ART. I. That the foregoing convention is hereby approved and incorporated in the present law.

ART. II. The amount to be paid out of the treasury of the Republic to fulfill its obligations thereby created is hereby appropriated, and will be included in the budget of the present fiscal period.

Given at Bogotá this 24th day of February, 1888.

CARLOS CALDERON. R.,
President.
JOSÉ MARIA RUBIO. F.,
Vice-President.
ROBERTO DE NARVAEZ,
MANUEL BRIGARO,
Secretaries.

EXECUTIVE GOVERNMENT,
Bogotá, February 27, 1888.

Let it be published and executed.

RAFAEL NUÑEZ.

[L. S.]
(Countersigned.)
VICENTE RESTREPO,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 95—Translation—Extract from law 30, of 1888.]

ART. 34. A marriage contracted in conformity with the rites of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

ART. 35. For purely civil effects, the law recognizes the legitimacy of the children conceived previously to the annulment of the civil marriage, in accordance with the provisions of the last preceding article.

ART. 36. The man who after having contracted a civil marriage, afterwards marries another woman according to the rites of the Catholic Church is required to provide subsistence to the woman and his children by her until she marries canonically.

ATTORNEYS' FEES BEFORE SPANISH CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission be directed to inform the Senate what contracts appear from the papers on file to have been made with attorneys to pay fees for the prosecution of the claims, and what action, if any, has been taken or recommendations made by the Commissioners, or any of them, on the subject of the fees of attorneys.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I do not know, Mr. President, but as a matter of form the resolution should be directed to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission itself, and not to its subordinate official, the clerk. I think that form is better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce and labor.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representative and ask for a committee of conference with the House, the Chair to appoint the conferees.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment to be printed. We may want to amend the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill may be printed as it has been amended by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And no further action taken to-day?

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will not ask for the appointment of a committee of conference to-day. The Senate may want to amend the House amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it go over.

Mr. NELSON. I think the usual course in such cases is to appoint a committee of conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment of the House of Representatives is a very short one, I suppose, and I suggest that it be read, and then it will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment is in the form of a substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will it take long to read the House substitute?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it will take quite a while.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I withdraw the request.

Mr. SPOONER. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to ask for action on this matter to-day?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. I simply moved to disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference. I do not intend to bring the matter up this morning.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question in regard to a parliamentary matter. If that motion should be agreed to, would the amendment of the House of Representatives be open to amendment afterwards if the conference committee report it?

Mr. ALDRICH. It would be after the report of the conference committee, if——

Mr. BAILEY. The report of a conference committee must be adopted or rejected as a whole, as I understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is, if they come to a final agreement.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. If they come to a partial agreement on the matters in dispute, it would still be amendable.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my understanding. Of course, either House can agree to an amendment of the other House with an amendment, or as long as the matter is open between the conferees, then it is open between the Houses. When it is closed by the conferees, then either House, both Houses indeed, must accept it as a whole or reject it as a whole.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. And it looks to me like it is rather a dangerous proposition for the Senate to put it in a position where we must reject it all or accept it all.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not now ask the Senate to send this matter to a committee of conference. It is a very important bill, and very important amendments have been made by the House. Before it goes to a committee of conference, with the tremendous power that such a committee has, the Senate ought to be able to see it, and if any Senator desires it he should be given an opportunity to vote upon concurring in certain House amendments. Otherwise the whole scope and power of dealing with this important subject is left to the conference committee, and when it reports we are substantially helpless here. As the Senator from Texas has said, if the committee agrees in conference we can only accept or reject the report. Senators know how difficult it is on a conference report to make any change whatever. It is not in the interest of delay, nor of anything unfair, to ask the Senator to let this matter stand over.

I think the bill, with the House amendments, had better be printed, so that Senators can see what is in it, and then, if any Senator desires to move to concur, it can be done. After that, after it has passed through that proper crucible, then, of course, it will go to the conference committee.

I ask that the bill go over and be printed with the House amendments, in order that the Senate may see it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed in the RECORD. That is better still.

Mr. COCKRELL. And also as a bill, so that we may have it before us.

Mr. HALE. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and also as a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the bill may lie on the table——

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it lie on the table and be printed as a bill, and also in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. With the House amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the House amendments? Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. ALLISON. Before this question passes away, I wish to state that I understand that the House has passed a substitute for the Senate bill. Therefore everything that is in either bill or that is projected in either bill will be within the control of the conferees on the part of the two Houses, substantially giving them the power to make a new bill. So I think it very well for us to ascertain what the differences are, and if in some way we can have the bill printed, so that we can see at a glance what the House have agreed to that was in the original bill and what they propose to substitute for the text in other places, I think it would be advantageous. I do not know that it can be done.

Mr. HALE. I fancy the clerks, in their aptitude in all such matters, can present to us to-morrow morning in print what will show the original Senate bill and the changes proposed by the House, so that at a glance every Senator will be informed as to the situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is great demand for this bill, and suggests to the Senator from Maine, if he will allow the Chair to do so, that he ask for the printing of an additional number.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a very good suggestion. We had better have 500 additional copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Five hundred?

Mr. ALLISON. A thousand.

Mr. HALE. A thousand,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that a thousand additional copies of the bill be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. On account of the opposition to the bill going into conference, I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, with the amendments.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that course, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. And be printed, as a matter of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has already been made. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as passed by the Senate and the substitute therefor proposed by the House of Representatives are as follows:

An act (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the department of commerce and labor, and a secretary of commerce and labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant secretary of commerce and labor, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $4,000 a year. He shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress; and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive all accounts accruing in or relative to the department of commerce and labor and examine the same, and thereafter certify the balance and transmit the accounts, with the vouchers and certificate, to the Comptroller of the Treasury for his decision thereon.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 4. That the following-named offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service, now and heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, and all that pertains to the same, known as the Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Board, and the Light-House Service, the Marine-Hospital Service, the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Navigation and the United States Shipping Commissioners, the Bureau of Immigration, and the Bureau of Statistics, be, and the same hereby are, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the same shall hereafter remain under the jurisdiction and supervision of the last-named department; and that the Census Office, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby are, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of commerce and labor, to remain henceforth under the jurisdiction of the latter; that the Department of Labor, and the office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby are, placed under the jurisdiction and made a part of the department of commerce and labor; that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and labor and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the two shall constitute one bureau to be called the bureau of statistics with a chief of the bureau and one assistant; and that the secretary of commerce and labor shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other Departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce and labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

That the official records and papers now on file in and pertaining exclusively to the business of any bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, together with the furniture now in use in such bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to the department of commerce and labor.

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of manufactures, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau one chief clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law. And all consular officers of the United States, including consul-generals, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile, from time to time, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the commerce, industries, and markets of the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports quarterly, or oftener if required, of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled, such reports to be transmitted through the State Department to the secretary of the department of commerce and labor.

SEC. 6. That the jurisdiction, supervision, and control now possessed and exercised by the Department of the Treasury over Chinese immigration, and over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries in Alaska, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to and vested in the department of commerce and labor.

SEC. 7. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and his department, and describing the work done by the department in fostering, promoting, and developing the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, and the transportation facilities of the United States, and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary for the effective performance of the duties and purposes of the department. He shall also, from time to time, make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he, himself, may deem necessary and urgent.

SEC. 8. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall have charge, in the buildings or premises occupied by or appropriated to the department of commerce and labor, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property pertaining to it, or hereafter acquired for use in its business; and he shall be allowed to expend for periodicals and the purposes of the library, and for the rental of appropriate quarters for the accommodation of the department of commerce and labor within the district of Columbia, and for all other incidental expenses, such sums as Congress may provide from time to time: Provided, however, That where any office, bureau, or branch of the public service transferred to the department of commerce and labor by this act is occupying rented buildings or premises, it may still continue to do so until other suitable quarters are provided for its use: And provided further, That all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in any of the bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor are each and all hereby transferred to said department at their present grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act: And provided further, That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce and labor shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 9. That all power and authority heretofore possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department over any bureau, office, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, whether of an appellate or revisory character, or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as so inconsistent, hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. A person, to be designated by the Secretary of State, shall be appointed to formulate, under his direction, for the instruction of consular officers, the requests of the secretary of commerce and labor, and to prepare from the dispatches of consular officers, for transmission to the secretary of commerce and labor, such information as pertains to the work of the department of commerce and labor, and such person shall have the rank and salary of a chief of bureau, and be furnished with such clerical assistance as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 15, 1903.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 569) entitled "An act to establish the department of commerce and labor" do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That there shall be at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the department of commerce and labor, and a secretary of commerce and labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department. The said secretary shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said department of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of the said seal.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant secretary of commerce and labor, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. He shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress; and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive all accounts accruing in or relative to the department of commerce and labor and examine the same, and certify the balances arising thereon to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same manner as the balances on similar accounts are certified under existing law.

"SEC 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law. All unexpended appropriations, which shall be available at the time when this act takes effect, in relation to the various offices, bureaus, divisions, and other branches of the public service, which shall, by this act, be transferred to or included in the department of commerce and labor, or which may hereafter, in accordance with the provisions of this act, be so transferred, shall become available, from the time of such transfer, for expenditure in and by the department of commerce and labor, and shall be treated the same as though said branches of the public service had been directly named in the laws making said appropriations as parts of the department of commerce and labor, under the direction of the secretary of said department.

"SEC. 4. That the following-named offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service, now and heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, and all that pertains to the same, known as the Light-House Board, the Light-House Establishment, the National Bureau of Standards, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Commissioner-General of Immigration, the commissioners of immigration, the Bureau of Immigration, the immigration service at large, and the Bureau of Statistics, be, and the same hereby are, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the same shall hereafter remain under the jurisdiction and supervision of the last-named department; and that the Census Office, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby is, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of commerce and labor, to remain henceforth under the jurisdiction of the latter; that the Department of Labor, the Fish Commissioner, and the Office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and all that pertains to the same, be, and the same hereby are, placed under the jurisdiction and made a part of the department of commerce and labor; that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and labor and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce and labor, and the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the Bureau of Statistics, with a chief of the bureau; and that the secretary of commerce and labor shall have control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and the secretary of commerce and labor is hereby given the power and authority to rearrange the statistical work of the bureaus and offices confided to said department, and to consolidate any of the statistical bureaus and offices transferred to said department; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce and labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

"That the official records and papers now on file in and pertaining exclusively to the business of any bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, together with the furniture now in use in such bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to the department of commerce and labor.

"SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of manufactures, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law. And all consular officers of the United States, including consuls-general, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile, from time to time, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the subject enumerated in section 3 of this act in the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports as often as required of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled, such reports to be transmitted through the State Department to the secretary of the department of commerce and labor.

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and the chief of said bureau shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau such clerks and assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning such corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law.

"SEC. 7. That the jurisdiction, supervision, and control now possessed and exercised by the Department of the Treasury over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries of Alaska and over the immigration of aliens into the United States, its waters, territories and any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are hereby transferred and vested in the department of commerce and labor. That the authority, power, and jurisdiction now possessed and exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of any law in relation to the exclusion from and the residence within the United States, its territories and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, are hereby transferred to and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor, and the authority, power, and jurisdiction in relation thereto now vested by law or treaty in the collectors of customs and the collectors of internal revenue are hereby conferred upon and vested in such officers under the control of the Commissioner-General of Immigration as the secretary of commerce and labor may designate therefor.

"SEC. 8. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and his department, and describing the work done by the department in fostering, promoting, and developing the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, and the transportation facilities of the United States, and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary for the effective performance of the duties and purposes of the department. He shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

"SEC. 9. That the secretary of commerce and labor shall have charge, in the buildings or premises occupied by or appropriated to the department of commerce and labor, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property pertaining to it or hereafter acquired for use in its business; and he shall be allowed to expend for periodicals and the purposes of the library, and for the rental of appropriate quarters for the accommodation of the department of commerce and labor within the District of Columbia, and for all other incidental expenses, such sums as Congress may provide from time to time: Provided, however, That where any office, bureau, or branch of the public service transferred to the department of commerce and labor by this act is occupying rented buildings or premises, it may still continue to do so until other suitable quarters are provided for its use: And provided further, That all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in any of the bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service n this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor are each and all hereby transferred to said department at their present grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act: And provided further, That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce and labor shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

"SEC. 10. That all power and authority heretofore possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department over any bureau, office, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as so inconsistent, hereby repealed.

"SEC. 11. A person, to be designated by the Secretary of State, shall be appointed to formulate, under his direction, for the instruction of consular officers, the requests of the secretary of commerce and labor; and to prepare from the dispatches of consular officers, for transmission to the secretary of commerce and labor, such information as pertains to the work of the department of commerce and labor; and such person shall have the rank and salary of a chief of bureau, and be furnished with such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law.

"SEC. 12. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by order in writing, to transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the department of commerce and labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the department of commerce and labor, or the secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred.

"SEC. 13. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage: Provided, however. That the provisions in this act in relation to the transfer of any existing office, bureau, division, officer, or other branch of the public service or authority now conferred thereon, to the department of commerce and labor shall take effect and be in force on the 1st day of July, 1903, and not before."

SAFETY APPLIANCES UPON RAILROADS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for a reprint of Report No. 1930, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, regarding the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. COCKRELL. That would provide for the usual number, and they would be distributed just as the others were. I suppose the Senator wants them for distribution.

Mr. FORAKER. I was told that the document was exhausted; that there were no more left.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would give a great many more if the Senator would ask to have it reprinted for the use of the Senate and placed in the Senate document room.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I ask that it be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That a thousand copies of it be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. A thousand copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1359) to increase pension for total deafness.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 16th instant approved and signed the act (S. 4616) to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of lands occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 288) for relief of the Christian Church, of Henderson, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 647) for the relief of William P. Marshall;

A bill (H. R. 1147) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of T. A. Woodress;

A bill (H. R. 1937) for the relief of the owner or owners of the barge Charlie;

A bill (H. R. 2490) for the relief of Morris F. Cawley;

A bill (H. R. 5036) for the relief of heirs of Mrs. Tellisse W. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors;

A bill (H. R. 8650) for the relief of the estate of Leander C. McLelland, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 9632) for the allowance of claims of certain citizens of Virginia for damages to their property incident to the encampment at Manassas and march from Camp Alger to Thoroughfare Gap, Virginia, as recommended by a board of officers appointed for the consideration of claims for damages to property by volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain; and

A bill (H. R. 11127) for the relief of the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah.

The bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADAM STUBER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Adam Stuber.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. TURNER were appointed.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the resolution will go over. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the absence of my colleague, let the resolution go over, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the resolution may lie on the table, retaining its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, before the question is taken on the motion, I should like to make a statement. Last Thursday I gave notice that I would this morning move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the immigration bill, but owing to the desire of the Senator from Illinois to have an executive session, I will not now press the motion, but will take early opportunity to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. There is a standing order of the Senate that at a certain time the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of what is known as the omnibus statehood bill. If the motion of the Senator from Illinois should prevail and the Senate determines to go into executive session and should be in executive session at 2 o'clock, would the Senate then resolve itself back into open session and consider the statehood bill without motion, or could the executive session continue and thus destroy the privilege of the statehood bill for the day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The executive session could continue through the entire day without having any effect upon the unfinished business any more than an adjournment over would have. The next day at 2 o'clock the unfinished business would be laid before the Senate as usual.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senate could again go into executive session——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It could——

Mr. BAILEY. And again displace it? That was my understanding——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not displace it.

Mr. BAILEY. And therefore I shall not vote for the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Going into executive session does not displace the unfinished business. It retains its place.

Mr. BAILEY. I mean displace it for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Whenever the Senate resumes legislative business, if it be after 2 o'clock, of course the unfinished business would be the order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate should resume legislative business at 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 o'clock, the Chair would lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. More than that, Mr. President, in executive session a majority at any time can go into legislative session and proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire——

Mr. BATE. Is it not necessary, in executive session, to make a motion to go back into legislative session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not necessary, unless a majority of the Senate desires to resume the consideration of the statehood bill at 2 o'clock. If nothing is done in relation to it and the Senate continues in executive session for the entire day, the statehood bill is not disturbed in the slightest degree. It remains the unfinished business.

Mr. BATE. It is not necessary, then, to make a motion to that effect in executive session?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, a motion must be made.

Mr. BATE. That is what I am asking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion must be made in executive session, providing the Senate wishes to come out from executive session at 2 o'clock and take up the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Or at any other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it is not necessary to come out from executive session in order to save the rights of the statehood bill.

Mr. BATE. The inquiry I make is whether at 2 o'clock that motion must be made, or is it necessary to make it now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It need not be made at all, unless the Senate desires to proceed to consider the statehood bill at that time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I trust I may have recognition. I have some interest in the statehood bill, as the President pro tempore knows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to give notice that at 2 o'clock, in accordance with the unanimous-consent arrangement, I shall move, if the motion of the Senator from Illinois prevails, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business. I trust the Senator from Illinois will not antagonize the motion. I am in favor of his treaty——

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that the understanding between the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself is that when 2 o'clock arrives, in view of the fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is in the middle of a speech, so far as I am concerned I shall be willing to come back into legislative session.

Mr. BAILEY. With that statement, I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. QUAY. So far as I am concerned, in view of the fact that the statehood bill is the regular order under the unanimous-consent agreement at 2 o'clock, even if the Senator from Ohio were not in the midst of a speech, I should make a motion to return to legislative session.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois. It is only thirty minutes now until 2 o'clock. We can hardly get into executive session and get started until we shall have to go back into legislative session, and if there is no objection, I would rather proceed now with my speech. It will not take me long to conclude, and then we can go into executive session and remain as long as we will.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to get an order for the printing of the treaty and to do one or two other things, as well as to have the treaty read. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to go on now?

Mr. FORAKER. I think it would be more convenient for the entire Senate——

Mr. CULLOM. I am entirely willing.

Mr. FORAKER. As it would be for me if I could proceed now.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Ohio is anxious to proceed now, I will yield.

REPORT OF EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the annual report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, which includes a report on the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations in the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, in accordance with the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the said fiscal year.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 5,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1903.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I will insist upon my motion for an executive session.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to withdraw my suggestion, Mr. President, that I proceed at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report, by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry of that Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, in compliance with the requirements of section 11 of the act approved May 29, 1884, for the establishment of that Bureau.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP EASTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relating to the claim of Messrs. Sivewright, Bacon & Co., of Manchester, England, British subjects, for compensation for damages sustained by their vessel, the British steamship Eastry, in consequence of collisions in June, 1901, at Manila, with certain coal hulks belonging to the United States Government.

I recommend that as an act of equity and comity provision be made by the Congress for reimbursement to the firm of the money expended by it in making the repairs to the ship which the collisions rendered necessary.

REPORTS OF CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1902, being the annual and other reports of consular and diplomatic officers upon the industries and commerce of foreign countries. In view of the importance of these reports to our business interests, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of the summary entitled "Review of the World's Commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to be distributed by the Department of State.

LANDING PIER AT PONCE, P. R.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico on December 3, 1902, with the approval of the governor thereof, granting to J. H. D. Luce, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the right to construct and operate a landing pier or wharf on the east side of the harbor of Ponce and on the shores thereof, and for other purposes.

This ordinance was approved by the President of the United States on January 8, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1903.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING ACT.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2296) to amend an act approved March 2, 1895, relating to the public printing, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

T. C. PLATT,
S. B. ELKINS,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
VINCENT BOREING,
F. C. TATE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor for our last adjournment, I had just finished the remarks I desired to make upon the rules as to population in so far as any have been claimed or recognized, at least so far as I am aware, applicable to the question of admitting a Territory to statehood.

Senators will remember that I was making that contention in answer to the claim of the majority of the Senate Committee on Territories, their claim being that a rule as to population had been laid down by the ordinance of 1787, which they desired to have applied to these Territories. Their contention was that the rule of the ordinance of 1787 was in effect a rule of percentage, and that before these Territories or any other Territories at this time could be held to be, as to population, qualified for admission, they must have, each of them, 1,153,000 population.

I undertook to show, and I believe I did show, that the ordinance of 1787 does not announce any such rule, and that there was no warrant for such a contention in anything to be found in the ordinance of 1787, and certainly not in that part of it which was quoted by the Committee on Territories.

I undertook to make it plain that by the ordinance of 1787 it was provided that Territories, the ones there named, should be admitted to the Union as States at the earliest moment possible consistent with the general interest, and that there was no other general rule prescribed. All that was said on that subject in addition was that whenever these Territories should have 60,000 free inhabitants they should be entitled to admission into the Union, and then there was an express provision to the effect that they might be admitted before they had 60,000 if Congress in its wisdom and judgment would see fit so to permit.

I pointed out further that this rule has been claimed and recognized, not only with respect to the territory then a part of the Northwest, but with respect to all the Territories of the United States to which the ordinance of 1787 has been extended as an organic law. I pointed out what was claimed and what was conceded in the case of Tennessee, and in the case of Michigan, in both of which cases, having 60,000 inhabitants, the Territories organized State governments, sent their representatives to Washington, and demanded a recognition of their rights. George Washington in the one case, in his message, practically conceded the right, as did Andrew Jackson in the other case.

The language of George Washington I cite particularly in order that I may answer a deduction made by the Senate Committee on Territories as to his interpretation of the ordinance of 1787 in that regard. He said in his message that it appeared that according to the provisions of the ordinance of 1787, which had been extended to Tennessee, the people of that Territory having 60,000 free inhabitants, had a right to organize a State government and be admitted as a State into the Union. Practically the same thing was said and the same thing done as to Michigan; and later that rule was invoked and recognized as to Oregon, which was admitted before she had a population of 60,000 and before she had a population equal to the unit of representation in the House of Representatives at that time.

Then, Mr. President, I undertook to show that as to all the territory which we have acquired under cessions made to us by treaties with France and Spain a different rule prevailed. The language of those treaties is in that respect that the inhabitants of the territory ceded shall be admitted into the Union. I am not undertaking to give it exactly, but simply to give its legal effect, "according to the principles of the Federal Constitution." I undertook to show that the phrase "admitted into the Union, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution." has always been interpreted to mean that that territory, subdivided as we might see fit to subdivide it into States, should have the right, each and every subdivision of it, when created into a Territory preparatory to statehood, to be admitted to statehood whenever it might have a population equal to the unit of representation.

Mr. SPOONER. And republican in its form of government.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. Mr. President, I am not undertaking to quote that part of the treaty stipulation about which there is no controversy; I am confining myself, if the Senator will pardon me, to only that part about which there may be some difference of opinion, or some room for argument.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator commented upon the language "according to the principles of the Constitution," and said the Territories should have a certain population to entitle them to admission as States. I simply added the requirement that they should have a republican form of government.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is quite right, and if I had been undertaking to quote with accuracy the whole stipulation I should, of course, have quoted that; but I was confining myself to that part of it about which there has been some difference of opinion, and there may be a difference of opinion again, though, according to the precedents, there is not much room for it, as I understand them.

Then I undertook to show that our treaty with Mexico, under which treaty we acquired certain territory, contains that same stipulation, with the modification that expressly invested Congress with the discretion to judge as to the time when it should be admitted to the Union, imposed a moral obligation that has practically ripened into a legal obligation, if we want to carry out the spirit of that treaty at this time.

In that behalf I quoted from the messages of President Polk and President Taylor—men who had the most to do with the ratification and execution of the treaty—to show that it was their understanding that the faithful execution of the treaty required that New Mexico should in a very brief time be admitted to statehood.

Mr. President, the rule is, therefore, as to these Territories, if I am right in these premises and in this conclusion, that the Territory of New Mexico and the Territory of Arizona are entitled, as a matter of right, to statehood, if they are to be treated as other Territories have been, whenever they can show that they have a population equal to the unit of representation; and that Congress has the right, exercising its judgment and discretion, to admit them to statehood before they have such population as will equal the unit of representation. In that behalf I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that repeatedly Territories that come under this last rule have been admitted to statehood before they had a population equal to the unit of representation.

Nebraska, for instance, was admitted March 1, 1867, when she had a population of only 60,000. The ratio of representation at that time was 127,381. Kansas was admitted January 29, 1861, when she had a population of 107,206, just before, by legal enactment, the ratio was changed from 93,423 to 127,381. She was admitted at a time when a census had been taken, and when everybody knew that a new ratio was to be in the immediate future determined upon that would be higher than her population would reach or equal.

Florida was admitted March 3, 1845, when she had a population of 54,477, and when the ratio was 70,680. Oregon was admitted February 14, 1859, with a population of 52,465, when the ratio was 93,423. Nevada was admitted October 31, 1864, with a population of 6,857, when the ratio was 127,381; and Congress, in both Houses, by a large majority, passed a bill in 1866 admitting Colorado to statehood when she had a population of only 30,000, or less than 30,000, and when the ratio was 127,381.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he does not recognize a very important distinction between the cases where States have been admitted with a population less than the unit of representation, but where the then growth and the assured future of such proposed States to a much larger population was certain, and States like Nevada, which gave no promise of ever possessing population enough to entitle them to admission?

I do not think anybody can say anything in the Nevada case nor in any of the cases where not only was the population small, not intrinsically large enough for admission on the unit rule, but where there was no prospect of there ever containing such a population; but it seems to me that does not apply either to the States of which the Senator is speaking or to the older cases of admission of Indiana and Ohio and Illinois, where it was a moral certainty they were speedily to contain population enough to make them great commonwealths. Does not the Senator see any distinction between that class of cases and cases like that of Nevada?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Maine for interrupting me to ask those questions and to make the points which he has made. Presently I shall come to discuss precisely what he has precipitated. I am undertaking at the present moment to show only this, that, in accordance with the rule for which I have been contending, it is at all times within the discretion of Congress to say whether or not a Territory with less than the unit of representation shall be admitted to statehood.

Mr. HALE. No doubt.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator concedes it. That being true, Mr. President, and that being the rule for which I have contended, I was simply undertaking to show that precedents sustain the rule for which I was contending; that Congress has done that thing. Congress did it in the case of Nebraska, in the case of Kansas, in the case of Nevada, in the case of Oregon, and in all the other cases I have recited. Congress in doing it exercised its discretion. Now, what I am going to contend for is that those were, in the opinion of Congress, proper cases in which to admit before the population equaled the unit of representation. So, too, is Arizona a case where it is proper for Congress to admit, in the discretion of Congress, before the population reaches the unit of representation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit a brief interruption?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the point, as I understand it, which was made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], was that the action cited by the Senator from Ohio, where there had been admission before the population was as great as the unit of representation, was in anticipation of an immediate large population, which even then was flowing in. An examination of the figures which I have, in common with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] before me, shows that to be the case, as, for instance, in the case of Nebraska, which was admitted March 1, 1867; the next census, three years later, gave it a population of 122,993; and Colorado, which was admitted in 1867, at the next census had a population of 194,327; and Indiana, which was admitted, as the Senator says, with even a less population than 60,000——

Mr. FORAKER. No; with more than 60,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, with something in the neighborhood of 60,000.

Mr. FORAKER. Indiana had 63,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; and at the next census, four years later, the population was 147,178. So we might run through those States whose then present conditions were such as to guarantee, not as a matter of speculation, but as a matter of absolute certainty, that the population would immediately be above anything the rule required, because of the physical conditions, the fertility of the soil, the nature of the rainfall, the well watering of the Territory, etc.; in other words, conditions which attracted and invited a large population.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not object to these interruptions, but I take it as not at all complimentary to me for Senators to assume that I did not think of all these things, and did not intend to meet these very suggestions. I was coming to them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I mean always, so far as I am able, to compliment the Senator, because I think he always deserves it, except as to his attitude in this particular case.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, as I remarked a moment ago, in reply to the interruption of the Senator from Maine—I had been, up to that point, simply contending for the rule, and I have not heard of anybody conceding the rule that I have been contending for—I had been contending that the precedents and the authorities show that Congress has the right to admit before the unit of representation is reached by the population of a Territory, and that there is an obligation—perhaps it is only moral in this case, but legal in others—to admit when the population does equal the unit of representation. Then, having pointed out the precedents on this point I relied on, I was proceeding to make application of these rules to the Territories now under consideration. The Territory of New Mexico comes under another rule. But let me dispose of New Mexico first. The last census showed the population of New Mexico amounted to 195,301, and the ratio of representation is 193,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One hundred and ninety-four thousand and some odd hundreds.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought it was 193,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. FORAKER. But whatever it may be, the ratio of representation is less than the population of New Mexico according to the last census.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A few hundred.

Mr. FORAKER. So that so far as New Mexico is concerned we are not called upon to exercise such discretion as we might feel bound to exercise if she had a population less than the ratio of representation. I call attention to the case of New Mexico, which is not only now above the ratio of representation, but the ratio of representation will remain fixed for the next ten years; there will be no change in the ratio until 1911. In the meanwhile New Mexico will be growing. Her population is greater than the ratio now, and ten years from now, or previous to ten years, I may say, her population will be far beyond the ratio of representation.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked if I did not draw a distinction between Territories which promise an immediate increase of population and Territories which do not. Certainly I do, Mr. President. I recognize that Nebraska, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota were Territories that everybody knew would fill up rapidly; settlements had been established, the population was increasing, and everyone could foresee that there would be a rapid and very great increase, just as there has been. But who knows, Mr. President, that a like result will not follow in New Mexico?

I want to separate the two Territories for a moment. What has been happening in New Mexico? I pointed out the other day that the Territory is complained of because the population has not rapidly grown, and yet in the speeches that we have heard that complaint of the Territory made we have been told that they have unusual conditions, not only of nature, but of other kinds. They had for years, and until quite recently, savage bands of Indians roaming over their territory. Who was going down into that country where there was no protection by the Army, when he could go with the tide of population into other Territories where the people were protected and where they could be safe from harm of that nature? But a more difficult trouble in New Mexico even than the Indians was in the fact that the best lands of New Mexico were all clouded as to their titles by the Spanish land grants—Spanish land grants involving clouded titles to nearly 30,000,000 acres, as I find by reference to the record since I was speaking here a day or two ago.

Immediately after we acquired New Mexico we ought to have established what we waited until 1891 to establish—and established then only under compulsion, as it were—namely, a Private Land Claims Court, into which these titles could be carried for adjudication and settlement. Until 1891 no homesteader could go and settle on any land and preempt it with any assurance that he could get title; no man could go there with his savings and invest them in lands with any assurance that he would get title. The Spanish land grants overlapped and duplicated each other and had extravagant, exaggerated, and unknowable boundaries, until the whole subject of land grants was in such doubt and in such difficulty that nobody would undertake to get a home there.

In 1891 the pressure had become so great from people who had gone there, notwithstanding the difficulties, and from other people who wanted to go, but were deterred by the conditions there existing, that Congress yielded to the demand that was made and provided the Private Land Claims Court. Their final report shows that they have settled titles to over 20,000,000 acres of the best lands in New Mexico, and have turned that amount of good land back into the public domain, where it is now subject to homestead entry.

What is the consequence? I read to you the other day the report of the various land offices in New Mexico—four of them altogether—and every one of them gave us an account that shows the greatest activity on the part of homestead preemptors who are going into New Mexico and making homestead entries of land. In one office 205 of these entries were made in the month of December last alone. What does that indicate, Mr. President? To my mind it is no surprise that the population of New Mexico has not increased more rapidly, but it is a surprise that her population has increased as it has increased. Let me call your attention to it, Mr. President, and you will see that the population of New Mexico has, according to percentages, about kept pace, notwithstanding all these difficulties, with the general population of the country.

According to the census of 1870, they had in New Mexico a population of 91,874; in 1880 it had increased to 119,565; in 1890 to 153,593; in 1900 to 195,310; and it is claimed—and upon what seems to me very plausible, not to say very good, grounds—that the census shows a much less population than they really had. I want to refer to only one fact in that connection, which seems to me to justify that claim and conclusion.

In the Territory of New Mexico last year the number of registered voters was 63,769. Every man here knows that in our most populous cities, and even in our country districts, we never have a full registration and never have a full casting of the vote which is registered. If they had 63,769 registered voters in New Mexico at the last election, it is perfectly safe to assume, Mr. President, that they had 75,000 voters who had a right to register; but there the discrepancy between those registered and those entitled to be registered would be much larger than it would be here.

The election in New Mexico was not an exciting one, and therefore when we remember the character of the country which has been described to us, the long distances, the kinds of occupation of the men scattered over those vast plains, herding stock, mining, etc., the trouble that it was to them to go these long distances to register, and afterwards to vote, we can safely assume that the percentage would be larger that did not register and did not vote than it would be with us. A fair allowance for all this indicates that there were at least 75,000 voters in New Mexico entitled to register. But if there were 75,000 voters it is safe, I suppose, to assume that there were four people to every voter.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that would apply in a frontier Territory?

Mr. FORAKER. I do; because the census shows that it would in all probability apply there.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator must——

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator forgets, if he will allow me, that a large part of this population—I am coming to that presently—is a Mexican population, and that they have an unusually large number of children in their families.

Mr. HALE. I was going to call the attention of the Senator—because that is one feature of the opposition—to the fact that it is not the kind of population that will assimilate into a State. And is it not undoubtedly true, so far as the white population is concerned in any frontier border, new State, the percentage of men is much larger than it is in the old States; and that having a population of 10,000 in any of those States does not in any way represent such a population as a voting population of 10,000 does in the older States, the reasons for which are, I think, apparent?

Mr. FORAKER. I appreciate what the Senator has suggested, and I want to say in answer to that that in the first place the general rule is five people to every voter. That is the rule by which we estimate population based on the vote here in this part of the country and the part of the country where I live, but to give a margin, for the very reason which the Senator has suggested, my estimate is four for every voter, which would make a population at this time of 300,000.

But the Senator will find, if he will study the statistics of the census returns as I have studied them, that there is no reason why we should give any margin at all. There was a time, when the Indians were running about over the plains of New Mexico, when life was constantly in danger, that men greatly predominated in point of numbers, and a different rule in computing the population based on the vote would have to be observed at that time from what would be observed now.

But, Mr. President, I do not intend to rest this case upon the proposition that there is a greater number of people in New Mexico than the census shows there are. There is a natural increase since the census was taken. That was, now, nearly three years ago. There has been, I suppose, the average rate of growth during these last three years. I presume that will be conceded. But, Mr. President, the growth has been far greater in proporportion during the last three years than it was during any three years of the preceding decade, which has been due to the causes I referred to a moment ago, the land titles being settled, etc. With the natural increase New Mexico now has a population of, perhaps, 225,000 or 230,000. That is not far out of the way, assuming that the census is accurate; and that is sufficient for all purposes.

Having that kind of a population and there being seven or eight years yet to run before the ratio will be changed, the population of New Mexico is abundantly large enough to entitle her to admission, and therefore I say it is a moral right, on her part at least, that she be admitted to statehood.

I shall speak of the character of the people of New Mexico presently. For the present I want to speak of Arizona. There the case is different. Arizona had, according to the last census, only 122,931 population. I want to say again, Mr. President, that I do not believe the census return is accurate there, as I will show presently, but I am willing to accept it as it has been made. I have a right to go further than to say that I do not believe it is accurate. I know that it is inaccurate.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] the other day in his speech demonstrated that fact conclusively as to the Indians. He showed to us conclusively that the enumerator of the census, in undertaking to count 30,000 Indians penned up in the reservations, missed, in round numbers, about 5,000. If the enumerators missed 5,000 in undertaking to count 30,000 under such circumstances, we certainly have a right to assume that they missed somebody when they were counting 100,000 other people scattered over that vast domain of territory, embracing people engaged in herding out on the plains, people engaged in the mills, and people working down in the mines.

I am told, it is not an official fact, and perhaps I should not refer to it, but my informant is a man so situated that he knows from personal knowledge, and he tells me that in one of the mining towns of Arizona the total number of people returned by the census enumerator was less than the number of miners working at that very hour down in the mines in that town, as shown by the pay rolls of the operators. I think it is pretty safe to assume, taking the discrepancy in the count of the Indians as a basis, that the census report ought to have been at least 20,000 more instead of what is recorded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator tell me to what mine he refers?

Mr. FORAKER. I can not now, but I shall take great pleasure in giving it to the Senator later.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thank you.

Mr. FORAKER. Those names are not familiar to me and I did not charge my memory with them, but I think it was Bisbee. [Mr. SMITH, Delegate from Arizona, indicated that he was the authority.] Now, the Senator knows my authority, and I observe that the Senator from Idaho is also coming to my rescue.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator will allow me, and I know he has this information, I will make the suggestion that the population of Wyoming in 1890 was 60,705, and the population of Wyoming in 1900 was 92,531. The Congressional apportionment in 1893 was 173,90f. Wyoming was admitted in 1890.

The population of Idaho in 1890 was 84,385, and in 1900 it was 161,772, the Congressional apportionment being 173,901.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Idaho for giving me that information. My examination of the statistics was necessarily hurried, having so many other things to do, and I had not observed the figures as to those States. I supposed that I had called attention to all the States that had been admitted with a population less than the unit of representation.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand that nine years after admission neither State came near having what the Congressional apportionment required, and Wyoming was very far from it.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. The point of the Senator is that the State grew very rapidly in population after admission to statehood.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not his point. He will make that point, but that is not the point in this instance.

Mr. FORAKER. I will make that point presently, and when I do the answer will be that Congress simply made a mistake about it; that is, that Congress never would have admitted these States if it had not supposed that immediately after admission they would rapidly grow in population and come to be great, powerful commonwealths such as our States ought to be, except for other reasons.

Not only in the cases mentioned by the Senator from Idaho, but in a number of other cases there has been the same kind of disappointment. The truth is that when the admission to statehood was hurried for the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and other States of the Far West, the men who then had a majority in the two Houses of Congress had something more in their minds than the subsequent growth of population. They knew, of course, that population would grow, but those States were admitted during and just after the war. You will remember that there was an attempt to admit Colorado, as I said a while ago, when she had a population of only 30,000, and when the ratio was a hundred thousand and something more.

I have forgotten what it was at that time, but it was beyond that. There was no pretense that it was equal to the unit of representation. The idea was to get States into the Union that would support the policies of the Government which were then being carried out. It was a policy with which I fully sympathized. I believed in the policies of the party then in power, and I believed that they should strengthen themselves by taking into statehood the Territories that were then admitted to statehood.

I believed it and indorsed it, and I thought that Congress had acted within its discretion, because in the judgment of the Congress it was essential to the general public welfare that those Territories should be then admitted to statehood. They were doing just what I propose to insist we have a right to do in our judgment and discretion now. It was a great national emergency that hurried up the admission of those Territories to statehood. There is no such emergency as that upon us at this time, but the rule is not different on that account. It is for the Congress to determine now as then.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think as a matter of political history the Senator from Ohio is wrong in reference to the admission of Kansas and Nebraska. I think it is true with reference to the admission of Nevada.

Mr. FORAKER. And Colorado.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was a war measure, practically.

Mr. HALE. It was a measure never justified, accompanied by what may be called political scandal, and I hold utterly inexcusable. I do not agree with the Senator that there was justification for it, even in conditions. I think it was the intrusion into the great family of States of a Territory that neither then nor afterwards ever justified its admission. I think, also, that the separation of West Virginia from Virginia was a measure not justified; that it was an emergency—an emergency which afterwards came back to trouble us.

I should like to see the Senate now take the conservative attitude and not admit any more States that do not promise in the near future to become real, alive, growing, great Commonwealths. I do not apologize for the admission of the State of Nevada; it was as bad as it could be; it never ought to have been done, and it can not be justified, and the secret history of the transaction is a wrong one. The admission of that State does not redound to the credit of anyone who was engaged in it.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Maine, when he interrupts, always throws light on a discussion, and he is therefore always a welcome interrupter, but at the same time he did not comprehend with exact correctness the remark I made. What I said was that I was in sympathy with the policy the party in power was pursuing when it was undertaking to strengthen itself by the admission of these new States. What I was contending for—that being only a side remark—was that the Congress exercised that discretion because in the judgment of the Congress at that time it was for the public welfare to admit those Territories to organized statehood.

They were simply exercising this power of discretion. They did not admit Nevada, they did not admit Colorado, they did not admit a number of these other States, on the theory that they were going shortly to grow so tremendously in population that they would be substantially equal to the great States of Vermont and New Hampshire and Rhode Island and Delaware. [Laughter.] I do not mean Delaware, but only the other States that are leading in this opposition. Delaware will be represented here after a while I suppose, and when she does come, I expect her to throw up her hands in holy horror against the outrage on the great States of the Union of admitting Arizona and New Mexico to statehood as proposed. She has 184,000 population, less than New Mexico, and probably not any more, on a fair count, than they have in Arizona, in my opinion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How many people does the Senator from Ohio think there are in Arizona?

Mr. FORAKER. If I could be let alone a little while I would tell. I started on a calculation——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator if he does not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. FORAKER, Oh, Mr. President, I do not care how much the Senator interrupts me. Of course, I expect it to be a polite interruption, as it always is, when it comes from the Senator from Indiana, but I was just in the midst of a computation when the Senator from Maine interrupted me, and having answered him, I was just taking it up again when the Senator from Indiana interrupted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I could not possibly, from anything the Senator had said, have foreseen that, because the Senator had just said, before I had interrupted him, that by fair count Arizona had as many people as Delaware has now, which is a hundred and eighty-seven thousand and some.

Mr. FORAKER. A hundred and eighty-four thousand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I asked him what population he thought Arizona has.

Mr. FORAKER. And I answered the Senator by saying that if he would only let me alone a little while I would tell him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will let him alone until he does tell me, and then I shall interrupt him for a moment, provided he makes the estimate which I think he will.

Mr. FORAKER. The census shows that they had 122,931. The Senator from Minnesota has established the fact that there was a discrepancy of nearly 5,000 in the count of Indians. They missed that many in trying to count a lot of Indians penned up on the reservations. If they missed 5,000 in undertaking to count 30,000 under such circumstances, I assume that they would miss quite a number in undertaking to count a hundred thousand scattered all over that vast domain of territory and engaged in all kinds of occupations—men in factories, men in mills, men in mines, who are working hundreds and perhaps more than hundreds of feet under the ground.

I do not believe they got everybody, and if they failed to get all in one place, I think we have a fair right to assume that they did not get everybody in other places. So I would add 20,000 as conservative to the return of the enumerators as my estimate of the number of people there at the time when the enumeration was taken, thus making a hundred and forty-two thousand.

It is now three years since that census was taken. From 1890 to 1900, according to the census, they doubled their population. That is something I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Maine. Has the Senator from Maine examined the census statistics? If so, why does he talk about Arizona being a Territory that is without any promise of future growth?

Mr. President, the Territory of Arizona had, according to the census of 1890, only 59,000 people in round numbers. According to this census she has a population of 122,000; and I do not think all were counted. But all might not have been counted before. Assuming that the census was right in both instances, what is the result? The population has grown more than 100 per cent in ten years. How much would the Senator from Maine expect a population to grow in ten years to give a promise of growth in the ten years to come? Is there that growth in Maine? Is there that growth in Delaware? Is there that growth in Vermont, or New Hampshire, or Rhode Island, or Indiana? There is no such growth anywhere in the United States as there has been in the Territory of Arizona. Yet Senators stand here and tell us, as the Senator from Minnesota did the other day, that he objects to the admission of this Territory to the Union on many grounds, but principally because of the stagnant conditions there.

The 122,000 people, in which number the Indians referred to are regarded as included always, are doing a business in that Territory which, according to the figures given by the Senator from Vermont, show an annual output of products—agricultural, mining, and manufacturing—amounting to $33,000,000 and more. Are there any 100,000 people anywhere in the United States, situated anything like the 100,000 people there are, doing anything like so well?

Can you point to any community where there is such activity, where there is such promise of future growth. For all the official and other reports that come to us from that country are to the effect that the great mining interests are but commencing to be developed. With the new processes for treating ores and the new facilities for mining them, they are rapidly increasing the output of the mines they have, and in the meanwhile they are rapidly multiplying the mines they have heretofore had.

So, Mr. President, while there is no great national emergency which would justify our admitting a Territory with a population less than the unit of representation, as there was thought to be by the Congress that admitted the Territories about which we have been talking, yet there is this promise of future growth to justify it, which was the only justification in the case of Ohio, and the only justification in the case of Illinois, when those two States were admitted with less than 60,000.

This ratio, as I have said, is to continue until 1911. It has seven or eight years yet to run. In Arizona they have, I believe, at this time a population equal, if it had been fairly counted, judging from the election returns and from other sources of information, and from the testimony given before the committee, almost equal to the ratio. But whether it be greater than I have indicated, 140,000 or 150,000, it is increasing at such a rapid rate—at the rate of 100 per cent in ten years, at the rate of 10 per cent annually—that long before there is another ratio fixed by Congress the population of Arizona will be far above and beyond the present unit of representation.

These are not fanciful visions of the future. They are based on the conditions now existing, only recently established as they exist, which are conducive to the inflow of population and to the development of the industry and to the multiplication in every way of that which is important in that Territory.

But, Mr. President, who knows that that Territory will not be teeming with population in a few years to come? This is not the first time we have heard in the Senate Chamber great statesmen proclaim that this and that particular section of the country had no promise of future growth and development.

This is not the first time that great sections of our country have been pronounced valueless. When we acquired the Louisiana Purchase there were some statesmen who did not appreciate the worth of that purchase. When we came to establish the State of Louisiana there was one statesman in particular whose words I want to read. Mr. Josiah Quincy, representing the State of Massachusetts, said on that occasion some things to which I want to call attention. Mr. Quincy was an honest, upright man with a badly mistaken opinion. I quote from a descriptive account of his speech on that occasion:

> Mr. Quincy then went on to prove that not only had no power been given to Congress to admit States out of the original bounds, but that the idea of so doing had not even occurred to the framers of the Constitution. They were not madmen. They had not taken degrees at the hospital of idiocy. "I have heard," said he, "of six States, and some say more, that will surely be formed beyond the Mississippi. It has even been said that the day is coming when the mouth of the Ohio will be far to the east of the center of empire. It is impossible such a power could be granted. It was not for these men that our fathers fought. It was not for them the Constitution was adopted. You have no right," he argued, "to throw the liberties and property of this people into hotchpotch with the wild men on the Missouri, nor with the mixed, though more respectable, race of Anglo-Hispano-Gallo-Americans who bask on the sands at the mouth of the Mississippi."

This reads like an extract from the speech of the Senator from Minnesota:

> "Do you suppose"—

He continued—

> "Do you suppose the people of the Northern and Atlantic States will or ought to look with patience and see Representatives and Senators from the Red River and Missouri pouring themselves on this and the other floor, managing the affairs of a seaboard 1,500 miles at least from their residence?"

Perish the thought! What a calamity it would be to the interests of the State of Massachusetts if there were to come to Washington, representing independent commonwealths, men who would have a right to a voice in legislation regulating the affairs of the seaboard, 1,500 miles away from their homes!

> The bill, he asserted, if it passes, is a deathblow to the Constitution. It is my deliberate opinion that if this bill passes the bonds of this Union are virtually dissolved.

That is how serious it was to him. Yet he was an honest man, he was a sincere man, he was an able man, he was a patriotic man, he was conscientiously performing his duty as he saw his duty. The trouble was with his light. He did not have a good vision. I read this, Mr. President, to show how greatly men may be mistaken. Mr. Quincy was mistaken.

Now I call attention to another case. When it was undertaken to establish a Territorial government for Oregon, a great debate arose in the Congress of the United States. There were men who did not think Oregon was worth enough to the United States of America to warrant us in establishing a Territorial government there. Let me read what was said in that debate by Mr. Bates, from Missouri:

> "Now, what will be the consequences," said a member from Missouri, "supposing we pass this bill and give a social existence to the country? Consider where the region is. From the Atlantic to the Missouri is 1,300 miles."

Just think of it! Thirteen hundred miles!

> "From the mouth of the Missouri to the head of navigation is 2,500 more. Then there is the rugged and almost impassable belt of the Rocky Mountains, while between the Missouri and the Pacific, save a strip of culturable prairie not above two or three hundred miles wide, the region is waste and sterile, no better than the Desert of Sahara and quite as dangerous to cross. Near the mountains the country is composed of rocky and stony ridges, dotted with spots giving life to nothing but the spruce, the hemlock, and trees of that description."

I will omit a part of what is reported here and go to the last sentence or two:

> "But suppose the object of this bill accomplished. Suppose the infant settlement, fostered by the paternal care of Government, has grown into a vigorous maturity. Does any man imagine that a brotherhood of affection, a community of interest, could bind that distant and solitary member of the family in the far West to those held together by the firmest of political ties in the East? The very name of the place is expressive of its poverty and sterility, for it comes from 'oregano,' a word applied by the Spaniards to an herb resembling pennyroyal and growing near the coast."

That was the estimate of that Representative as to the Oregon conntry. He was not alone. I am reading from the fifth volume of McMaster's History of the People of the United States, at pages 480 and 481. Quite a number of the members of the House and Senate are quoted from to the same effect. There were others who took a different view, but so overwhelming in the Congress of the United States was the sentiment that Oregon was not worth enough to justify providing a Territorial government that the bill was not allowed to go to a third reading, but was rejected, which was the equivalent of voting it down. At any rate, no government was established for Oregon at that time.

Mr. President, all Senators are familiar with the fact that when we yielded to the contention of Great Britain and agreed that our Northern boundary line in the Oregon country should be at the forty-ninth degree of north latitude instead of "54.40 or fight," it was done largely because such distinguished statesmen as Daniel Webster were of the opinion that the Oregon country was so valueless that it was not worth having a controversy about, and thus through the entertainment of that kind of an opinion by such representative and strong and capable statesmen of this country British Columbia was lost to us, and as a consequence Great Britain interposes now with a coast line extending from the northwestern corner of Washington to our possessions in Alaska.

That is not all. I have before me a book entitled "The Works of Daniel Webster." I read from volume 5, at page 398. The Senate of the United States had before it a bill to admit California to statehood. California had held a convention. She had adopted a constitution. She had elected Senators and Representatives, and the question was whether or not they should be recognized by the Congress of the United States and her Representatives be given seats.

The constitution as it had been framed was objected to by Senators from the South on the ground—it was before the war time, you will remember—that the constitution provided that there should be no slavery in California. It was pointed out that by the Missouri Compromise of 1820 there was to be slavery, if the people so desired, south of 36° 30′ north latitude. They were being denied the right to have slavery in California when they thought they were entitled to it. Mr. Webster, in answering that argument, undertook to satisfy the people of the South that in yielding and accepting the constitution of California, which prohibited slavery in lower as well as in northern California, they were not yielding anything of value, and here are his reasons. After making a great many points in his argument, he said:

> Then there is another consideration. If you separate south California from north California, what will be the value of south California by itself? Why, look upon the map and the question will be answered. Suppose we run the line to 36° 30′ from the sea across to New Mexico, what have you? You have mountains and you have those vast tracts of land east of the mountains; but from the best information I can obtain—and I have consulted what I suppose everyone concedes is the best authority—there can not be at most within what would constitue the territory of south California more than 5,000 square miles of good land?
> Beyond that all is desert lands and mountains. I speak now of lands that may be tilled and cultivated. We must, as I have said, look at climate as well as the surface of the land. Gentlemen will please to remember that in this part of California eight months in every year roll on without a drop of rain falling, and there is not within the whole of it any land whatever that can be cultivated without irrigation. So small are the streams, when you depart from those two rivers, the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, that they do not supply water for the cultivation of the very small portion of the land that otherwise might be made tillable.

What, then, will be the value of this territory? The gentleman from Louisiana contended for the rights of the South in regard to it. Where is there any value in it? Is it anything more than a mere nominal right, if it be that? Can it be of any use whatever? Could the South make any use of that territory, if it were now a Territory and free from any restraint whatever, which they can not make of it as part of a State? I think, therefore, that it is a dispute where there is no substantial value in the matter contested.

Now, I want to read some quotations from Congressmen as to another acquisition. In the second volume of Mr. Blaine's work entitled Twenty Years of Congress, at page 335, he gives an historical account of the debate which occurred when the acquisition of the district of Alaska was under consideration. I will not stop to read it, but I will ask that what Mr. Cadwalader C. Washburn, General Butler, and Mr. Peters said on that occasion may be inserted in the RECORD as I shall mark the extracts. I ask that privilege in order that I may not unduly take the time of the Senate.

Mr. Cadwalader C. Washburn answered the speech of General Banks on the succeeding day (July 1, 1868). He assumed the leadership of the opposition to the treaty. He proposed to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the House five distinct propositions: "First, that at the time the treaty for Alaska was negotiated not a soul in the whole United States asked for it; second, that it was secretly negotiated, and in a manner to prevent the representatives of the people from being heard; third, that by existing treaties we possess every right that is of any value to us without the responsibility and never-ending expense of governing a nation of savages; fourth, that the country ceded is absolutely without value; fifth, that it is the right and duty of the House to inquire into the treaty, and to vote or not vote the money, according to its best judgment." Mr. Washburn made an able speech in support of his radical propositions.

General Butler sustained Mr. Washburn's position in a characteristic speech, especially answering General Banks's argument that we should pay this amount from a spirit of friendship for Russia. "If," said General Butler, "we are to pay this price as usury on the friendship of Russia, we are paying for it very dear indeed. If we are to pay for her friendship, I desire to give her the $7,200,000 in cash and let her keep Alaska, because I think it may be a small sum to give for the friendship if we could only get rid of the land, or rather, the ice which we are to get by paying for it." He maintained that it was in evidence before the House officially "that for ten years the entire product of the whole country of Alaska did not exceed $3,000,000."

Mr. Peters of Maine pronounced the territory "intrinsically valueless, the conclusive proof of which is found in the fact that Russia is willing to sell it." He criticised the action of the Senate in negotiating the treaty. "If the treaty-making power can buy, they can sell. If they can buy land with money, they can buy money with land. If they can buy a part of a country, they can buy the whole of a country. If they can sell a part of our country, they can sell the whole of it!"

What they contended for was that Alaska was without any value whatever. Not very many years have since passed, but time enough has elapsed to establish of what incalculable value to the people of the United States is the acquisition of Alaska. Nobody would think of surrendering it to-day.

Mr. President, I have gone to the trouble to read these authorities, anticipating somewhat the course of my argument in doing so, in order that I might answer the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], whose contention seems to be that we ought not to exercise our discretion in favor of Arizona, she being below the mark of the unit of representation, because there is no future for Arizona. These citations show how statesmen may be mistaken as to the future development of a country or section. I have already pointed out that the population of Arizona has doubled, and more than doubled, during the last ten years.

If it doubles during the next ten years, and there is no reason that I know of why it should not, she will have a population of 250,000 people, according to the census alone. That looks to me like promise. It is a vast, magnificent domain. They have manufacturing, they have mining, they have stock raising. They are an active, busy, energetic people. They are an important part of this country by reason of that which they contribute to her general welfare, and they are entitled, Mr. President, if we exercise a sound discretion, to our favorable consideration of their claim.

Now, I want to insist why I think they ought to come in as a State. They have been under Territorial government ever since 1863, and New Mexico ever since 1851. It is true that these two Territories are only a part of our acquisition from Mexico as the result of the Mexican war; that out of that acquisition were created first the Territories of Utah and Nevada and afterwards the States of Utah and Nevada. To that extent we have redeemed our obligation to admit the inhabitants of the ceded territory to statehood.

But, Mr. President, we can not excuse ourselves from admitting the rest of that Territory, and the rest of the inhabitants residing there, to statehood on the ground that we have admitted a part; that we have done a part of that which we have agreed to do. It was our promise and stipulation in the treaty with Mexico that we would admit all of the inhabitants of that Territory to statehood. We have admitted a part. We have delayed fifty years and more to act as to New Mexico and Arizona. We created these Territories, we carved them out of that general territory, and we told them to wait a while. They have waited long enough.

In New Mexico and Arizona they have had unnatural conditions to contend with. Both these Territories have now reached a point where they have a splendid population and where they have done things which give promise that they will be a credit as Commonwealths of this Union to the whole country if we admit them to statehood.

I now call attention to their school system. This does not look like a stagnant community. It does not look like an idle and an indifferent community. The school population of New Mexico in 1901, according to the statistics, was 62,864. The enrollment of pupils in all schools was 42,925.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] called attention to the fact that not all the school population is in attendance upon the schools. Not all the school population is in attendance upon the schools in any State of this Union. The testimony discloses that these Mexican young men, as a rule, because of the poor circumstances into which they are born, quit the schools when they are 16 or 17 years of age. They are still a part of the school population, but, just like young men so situated in other communities, they quit school when the necessities of the family to which they belong require that they should, and as soon as they are able to help make a living. They are not all studying to be lawyers, with the hope in their breasts that they will at some time occupy seats in the Senate of the United States, and therefore they cut their education a little bit short.

This table goes on to show that they have 1,046 teachers; that they have 726 schools, and the annual receipts for school purposes—money that they tax themselves for and pay—amounts to $838,018.70, and they expended last year $723,048.32. They have school property, which they have acquired and paid for by taxing themselves, to the value of $2,071,702.25. I ask that this statement may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my speech. I have commented on it sufficiently to call attention to the salient points of it and to show that the people in the Territory of New Mexico are giving a proper attention to the matter of education, and as a result of it, as some one has already quoted in the progress of this debate, the percentage of illiteracy has been steadily declining until it is now only about one-third what it was ten or twelve years ago. That is the kind of promise they are giving.

The statement referred to is as follows:

NEW MEXICO SCHOOL SUMMARY, STATISTICS FOR SCHOOL YEAR 1900-1901.

School population, 62,864; increase over previous year, 9,856, or 18.6 per cent.

Enrollment of pupils in all schools, 42,925; average daily attendance, 29,825.

Number of teachers employed, 1,046; number of schools, 726.

Annual receipts, $838,018.70; annual expenditures, $723,048.32.

Value of all school property in New Mexico, $2,071,702.25.

Enrollment in public schools proper: Year 1899, 21,761; year 1900, 31,510; year 1901, 35,227.

Enrolled in city schools, 7,243; enrolled in rural schools, 27,984; enrolled in Territorial institutions, 907.

Expended in improvements on public school property during year, $242,617.60.

Present value of public school property, $1,239,153.25.

Average annual cost of educating children in the schools, per capita, $4.94.

Average annual cost of educating pupils enrolled in Territorial institutions, per capita, $159.66.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Minnesota told us the other day that all their proceedings in the legislature were conducted in the Spanish language, and the court records, I understood him to say, were also in the Spanish language. I have before me here a statement from which I want to read, and I ask that it may all be incorporated in the RECORD. It is a statement prepared by Hon. B. S. RODEY, the Delegate in the House of Representatives from New Mexico. Mr. RODEY says:

EXPLANATION AS TO THE USE OF INTERPRETERS IN THE COURTS, CONVENTIONS, AND LEGISLATURES OF NEW MEXICO.

Legislature.—There has been little or no need of an interpreter in the legislative assemblies of New Mexico for about ten years last past, as every member of both houses could understand and speak English reasonably well. Such an officer was employed though, because the organic act of the Territory provides for the office, and attaches a good salary to it, and therefore there were always applicants for the place, and sometimes interpretations took place as much for the benefit of the spectators as otherwise, some of the latter not understanding English well.

There will be no need of an interpreter in the coming legislative assembly, the members for which are now elected. The council (senate) is unanimously Republican, all are scholars of a high order, and a short description of the personnel thereof is as follows:

Now, I call the attention of the Senate to the character of the men who constitute the senate in the Territorial legislature of New Mexico. As I read this description of the men, you will see whether or not there is any justification for that which has been said in criticism of the people of that Territory so far as their legislature is concerned.

Col. J. F. Chaves: Present superintendent of education; late colonel New Mexico Volunteers during civil war; member G. A. R.; Delegate several times from New Mexico to Congress of United States; a linguist and scholar of very high attainments, and one of the best parliamentarians in the nation; a native of New Mexico.

Thomas Hughes: A scholar of fine attainments; publisher and editor of the Daily Citizen, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., a newspaper of almost metropolitan proportions, work on it set up with linotype machines; a man of large experience as a legislator; a resident of New Mexico for more than twenty years.

George F. Albright: A scholar of high attainments; publisher and editor of The Daily Journal-Democrat, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., also a newspaper of almost metropolitan proportions, using linotpye in its preparation; formerly of Missouri; has resided in New Mexico more than twenty years.

W. H. Andrews: Miner and railroad builder; formerly of Pennsylvania; one of our most enterprising citizens; a man well versed in statecraft and politics generally; late a State senator of Pennsylvania; resident of New Mexico past eight years.

C. A. Spiess: A lawyer of considerable attainments; present district attorney for fifth district of New Mexico; formerly an educator; a man of large experience as a legislator; has lived in New Mexico about twelve years.

James S. Duncan: A railroad and irrigation contractor and builder; a man of vast experience and high attainments generally; has lived in New Mexico about eighteen years.

Albert B. Fall: Late associate justice of the supreme court of New Mexico; a lawyer of high attainments and large experience; late a captain in the Rough Riders.

W. A. Hawkins: A lawyer of exceptionally high standing; represents some of the largest interests in the Southwest.

M. Martinez: Ranchman and stock raiser; a good scholar and linguist; has had large experience as a legislator; a native of New Mexico.

V. Jaramillo: Ranchman and stock raiser; a young man of education and high social attainments; graduate of Notre Dame College, Indiana; a native of New Mexico.

Amado Chaves: A native of New Mexico; ranchman and stock raiser; late Territorial superintendent of education; late mayor of the city of Santa Fe; a scholar of a very high order and large experience as a legislator.

Saturnino Pinard: A native of New Mexico; linguist and scholar of considerable attainments; a man who has been prominent in his section of the Territory for many years, having held many official positions.

As to the house, it stands 21 Republicans to 3 Democrats, the membership and a description of which is as follows: Every one of them speaks English. An interpreter will probably be entirely dispensed with in the coming legislative assembly, and the money therefor covered back into the National Treasury; at least a movement is on foot now to have that done.

McIvers.
M. B. Stockton.
C. Sanchez: Speaks English and Spanish well.
W. F. McCash.
Antonio Lucero: Teacher in Las Vegas schools; fine English scholar.
Gregorio Gutierres: Fine English scholar.
Pedro Romero: Fine English scholar.
Celso Baca: Fine English scholar.
William Kirkpatrick.
R. L. Baca: Scholar of high order.
Pedro Sanchez: Speaks English moderately.
Granville Pendleton.
David Martinez: Good English scholar.
Antonio D. Vargas: Good English scholar.
Celso Sandoval: Good English scholar.
Nestor Montoya: Linguist, educator, and editor of high attainments.
Alexander Bowie: Civil engineer.
H. H. Howard: Editor.
W. H. H. Llewellyn: District attorney.
A. W. Pollard.
C. A. Dallies.
Martin Sanchez: Speaks English well.
E. C. Holman.
A. A. Sedillo: An accomplished linguist.

I have read that entire, in order that I may call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they have for the legislative senate in New Mexico a body of men in whom every man knows the interests of that Territory will be safe as legislators—safer, Mr. President, than they can possibly be in our hands, for in order that there may be intelligent and satisfactory legislation there must be not only natural ability, but there must be acquaintance with the subject about which we seek to legislate, and it is not possible for us to have the familiarity about the subjects concerning which they must legislate in New Mexico which the men of the character who are now members of the senate of New Mexico have. They not only compare favorably with the senate of any Territory we have ever had when admitted to statehood, but they compare favorably with the senate of any State in this Union, and I think they would compare favorably with some people who get into Congress.

Now, as to the courts, a great deal has been said to the effect that interpreters must be used in all the courts, and it is sought to create the impression that Spanish is spoken everywhere and that everything is transacted in Spanish. Mr. President, the records of the courts throughout the Territory are kept, not in the Spanish language, but in the English language, and they are nowhere kept more neatly and satisfactorily than they are in the courts of New Mexico. The only place where court records are kept in the Spanish is in the courts of the justices of the peace. There they are kept in both Spanish and English accordingly as the parties interested may be Spanish or English.

I have a statement here furnished by Mr. RODEY to which I wish to call attention. Under the head of "courts," he says:

As to our counties, nine of them—

They have 21 counties in New Mexico all told:

Courts.—As to our counties, nine of them, that is, (1) Chaves, (2) Colfax, (3) Eddy, (4) Grant, (5) Luna, (6) McKinley, (7) Otero, (8) San Juan, (9) Sierra, are inhabited by a class of people mostly from the States, so thoroughly American and English speaking as that interpreters are never used at all in the counties, save in rare instances when a witness is called who can not speak English, and then an interpreter is used to interpret his evidence only to the court and jury.

As to six other counties—that is, (10) Bernalillo, (11) Guadalupe, (12) Lincoln, (13) Santa Fe, (14) Socorro, (15) Union—are inhabited about equally by "Americans" and "natives;" although the vast majority of them speak English, still interpreters are used about half the time. This would not be necessary were it not for the decided disinclination of the "Americans" to do jury duty. They make all sorts of efforts to avoid such duty, while the "natives," not being otherwise so extensively engaged as the "Americans," like such duty. The result is that in these six counties interpreters are necessary a portion of the time, when if the "Americans," so called, did not make such efforts to avoid their jury duty the necessity for interpreters could be avoided.

As to the other six counties—that is, (16) Donna Ana, (17) Mora, (18) Rio Arriba, (19) San Miguel, (20) Taos, (21) Valencia—the inhabitants are about three-fourths "natives," although a good three-fifths of them speak English well. Still, because of the reasons last above mentioned, that is "Americans" avoiding jury duty, these counties have interpreters all the time in the courts. The "natives" make very good jurors, and no complaint is ever heard from their verdicts.

I will not weary the Senate to read longer, but I shall ask that the whole statement may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The remainder of the paper is as follows:

It will thus be seen that in nine counties of the Territory interpreters are never used as court officials, and in six other counties they are used only a portion of the time, and are only used continuously in six counties.

There is not a single county in New Mexico where, if the court exercised a little care in the selection of the jurors so as to secure "natives" who speak English, and who are abundant and could easily be procured, it would be necessary to have an interpreter for any purpose other than interpreting evidence of a witness for the court and jurors. The necessity for interpreters is growing less and less every day, and it will be but a few years when the reasons for such an officer will have entirely disappeared.

As above set forth, there is no necessity for one in the legislature at the present time.

Conventions.—The "hearings" of the subcommittee of the United States Senate on Territories with reference to the statehood bill have it that interpreters are necessary in political conventions. That is true, because in such conventions there are often present a number of "natives" who do not understand English very well. The statement of the fact that interpreters are needed in such conventions is misleading, because it conveys the idea that they are necessary in all conventions at all times, which is not true.

Many conventions are held where no interpreters are necessary. Many a time an interpreter is elected and acts because it has been a custom in the country for so many years, when as a matter of fact every delegate and person present can understand English well. The old custom which is prevalent in all political conventions of conferring honors upon people by making them vice-president, assistant secretary, temporary chairman, etc., is enlarged in New Mexico, and very often a politician is given prominence by being elected interpreter when there is no need of his services.

It is subject to proof and can be substantiated that in New Mexico to-day more than three-fourths of the people understand and speak the English language reasonably well. There is hardly anybody to be found anywhere in the Territory, old or young, but what understands more or less English, and in the nature of things it could not be otherwise after fifty-six years of "American" government there.

To make a statement baldly, as is made by the subcommittee of the United States Senate, that a majority of the people of New Mexico understand nothing but the Spanish language refutes itself and needs no contradiction. It would have been an impossibility for New Mexico to have been in contact with this nation and under its flag for fifty-six years, as it has been, without all its inhabitants having learned more or less of the English language. The statement that the majority of the people of New Mexico do not understand English or speak it is absolutely not so.

B. S. RODEY.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, this statement of Mr. RODEY is fully justified by the testimony taken by the majority of the Committee on Territories in the Senate when they made their visit to the Territory. I have read that over very carefully. Every judge who was interrogated on the subject took occasion to say that it was true, just as Mr. RODEY states, that Americans dislike jury duty and always seek to be excused as a rule, and that Mexicans like the duty, and they are as a rule accepted and the Americans excused. But every judge testified also that the Mexicans make good jurors. They said they are carefnl, thoughtful men, and there was seldom occasion to disturb one of their verdicts.

Something else was testified to—speaking now of the character of these people—by these judges and by others, whose words we have a right to accept without any qualification, and that is that there is no more than the ordinary amount of crime in New Mexico or in Arizona—I mean no more than the ordinary amount of crime as compared with the States of the Union. There is no more crime in Arizona, there is no more crime in New Mexico, than you will find in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and other States; and the crimes as a rule are not of an unusual character. Now and then there is a murder, just as there is anywhere.

There is more or less of cattle stealing, stock thieving, and there are other petty offenses not necessary to be enumerated. But one thing which attracted my attention was the statement, made repeatedly in the course of this testimony, that throughout New Mexico and Arizona they are so free from crime, particularly the crime of burglary and larceny, that you rarely find anyone locking and bolting his doors at night. Doors are left open. There is no thought of there being a necessity to take the ordinary precaution which we would not think of dispensing with, of locking and bolting our doors against all comers at nightfall or when we retire for the night.

That is the character of that community. There are, of course, some bad people there. There are some bad people in every other community. I have never known one where they did not have a reasonably fair share. But in Arizona and New Mexico in every community you will find the church, and not only one church, but if it be a community of any size you will find practically all the churches represented—the Catholic church and the Protestant churches, the Methodist, the Presbyterian, and the Baptist. Everybody seems to belong to some church. The churches are well sustained. And throughout New Mexico and Arizona you will find in every community a schoolhouse, and you will find it well attended and well arranged, and you will find good effects resulting from it.

In Arizona they have a system of compulsory education. They do not ask a boy there whether he wants to go to school, but he is compelled to attend. They are far in advance of many communities in the States in that respect. In short, they place a proper estimate on religion, morality, and education, the three great essentials to good government in this country.

That is not all, Mr. President. They are a patriotic people. In the civil war they responded promptly beyond their proportion when the country made its call for defenders. Three regiments were organized in New Mexico who went into the Union Army and rendered conspicuous service. Their record is one of heroism and gallantry not surpassed by the regiments of any of our States, so far at least as the average is concerned.

In the recent war with Spain both Arizona and New Mexico responded promptly at the first call, and from there came the gallant men who as a part of the Rough Riders helped to make history and helped to make a President of the United States. When McKinley fell by the hand of an assassin and it was by somebody suggested that there should be a fund raised by voluntary subscription with which to build a memorial monument and such call was issued, that country responded by contributing more per capita than any other State or Territory in the United States.

These are not wild barbarians, not bummers, schemers, promoters, and politicians hunting places, but civilized Americans, representing our best citizenship. They are a busy people, developing a great country, contending against the difficulties and the obstacles of nature, and contributing at the same time, Mr. President, to build up a commonwealth which will be a credit to the United States.

They are not a people to be rejected because they speak two languages. We heard more than an hour of the time of this body taken the other day in an undertaking to prove that they speak two languages. Well, Mr. President, it is better to be able to speak two languages than not to be able to speak one.

I never heard of it being urged as a disqualification for anything that a man can speak two languages. Especially it should not be heard as an objection on this application now for statehood, that these citizens of the United States can speak also the Spanish language. We have been making some Spanish acquisitions. There is a demand for people who can speak the Spanish language.

There always has been a propriety in understanding and speaking the Spanish language, so great a propriety that at both our governmental academies, the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the Military Academy at West Point, it is a part of the course, and every officer graduated from there is required to be able to speak, write, and understand the Spanish language.

Neither is it a disqualification that they are foreigners. We heard a large part of the Senate's time taken up in urging that these people ought not to come into the Union because they were not all American citizens. We have a number of communities in this country where the foreign element is very largely represented, and I am going to call attention to one. I refer to Minnesota. There is no State now in the Union where they have a more loyal, faithful, capable, creditable population than they have in Minnesota. That is not in spite of the fact that they have foreigners, but because the foreign element is sometimes a very valuable mixture.

Let me call your attention to what the statistics show as to the State of Minnesota. There is no better State in the Union, but what I call attention to shows that a representative of that State is the last one to question the fitness for statehood of a people on the ground that a large percentage of them are foreigners.

It is contended that a large part of the inhabitants of New Mexico are Spaniards and Mexicans. The truth about that is that a majority are of the Spanish-Mexican race, some of them living there before the Territory was ceded to us, some of them coming there from Mexico since, most of them, however, born there. Nearly all of them, while speaking their own language by preference, are able, however, to speak and understand our language, and those people are aiding the Americans who have gone there to develop that country and build it up and make it a great, strong, wealthy, capable Commonwealth, such as it is rapidly becoming.

But listen now about Minnesota. The total population of the State according to the census of 1900 was 1,751,394. Total native born population 1,246,076. Total foreign-born population 505,318. The foreign born population consists of—

Austrians	8,872
Bohemians	11,147
Canadians	47,578
Danes	16,299
English	12,022
French	1,449
Germans	117,007
Dutch	2,717
Hungarians	2,182
Irish	22,428
Italians	2,222
Mexicans	24
Norwegians	104,895
Polanders	11,361
Russians	5,907
Scotch	4,810
Swedes	115,476
Swiss	3,258
Welsh	1,288
Other countries too numerous to be mentioned	14,876

If they should all talk at once the Tower of Babel would not be worthy of mention.

Mr. BATE. How many natives?

Mr. FORAKER. This table shows the native population to be 1,246,076.

Now, Mr. President, with that admixture of foreigners, as I said, they have had enough good sense to have built up a great Commonwealth, to have made a proud record for themselves, and to have sent to this body as their representative the distinguished Senator who has addressed us in opposition to the admission of New Mexico to statehood.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he is reading a statement of the population of Minnesota at the present time or at the time she was admitted.

Mr. FORAKER. I was reading from the population of Minnesota according to the census of 1900.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator what proportion of the population of Minnesota were foreigners at the time Minnesota was admitted to the Union. Is it not true that about 45 per cent of them were foreigners at that time?

Mr. FORAKER. I regret to say that I am unable to answer that question. I did not think to look at that. But what I want to say is that Minnesota is one of the best States in this Union. Her population, as everybody knows, is an intelligent, patriotic, busy, and capable population. They have never made any mistake in selecting Representatives to the Congress of the United States in either House, certainly not beyond the average number made by States as a rule. Their whole record is a creditable one, and I cite the fact that they have this foreign-born population to show that it does not follow because there are foreign-born citizens in the Territory of New Mexico that that Territory is disqualified for admission to statehood.

I want to say something else here. I say it does not follow because a population is small as compared with that of other States in the Union that they are not capable of doing good work as Commonwealths in this Union. In that respect, I call attention to the fact that the smaller States in this Union have almost invariably given us able statesmen as their contribution to the statesmanship of this country.

Look about this Chamber; look at Vermont, at New Hampshire, at Rhode Island, the representatives of which now appear in opposition to this bill. Here they are, the smallest of the States; but as they are among the most ably represented here now, so, too, is it a fact that they have ever been among the most ably represented in this body. That is not all. Not only have Vermont and New Hampshire and Rhode Island and Delaware—although Delaware is not represented here now—and Maryland and these other smaller States always been ably represented but the great States of the Union were as ably represented when they were in their infancy, relatively as to population, as they are now.

Go back to the history of my own State, and no abler, no more distinguished, patriots than were the early Senators from that State have ever represented the State in this body; and as there was that kind of representation at the beginning, so there was that kind of representation through all the early life of our great State. When she had a population of only two or three hundred thousand she never made a mistake in electing a Senator.

In other words, Mr. President, the lesson of this fact is that an intelligent and small electorate can always, as a rule, be depended upon to select able and capable men to represent them in the Congress of the United States. It was so as to Indiana. No greater names are on the roll of statesmen showing membership in this body than those who represented Indiana in the early days of that State; no greater than those that represented the State of Illinois in her early years of statehood.

I will not say they were abler than the men who represent those States now; I would not do that; but I mean to say, and that is sufficient, that they compare favorably with their ablest representatives. We have never suffered on account of small States. Therefore, when Senators stand here and say, "Oh! we can not afford to let any more of these small States into the Union; it is an outrage that 250,000 people in New Mexico or Arizona should be invested with statehood, and be given two Senators on the floor of this Chamber to have the same voting power as New York and Pennsylvania"—when Senators say that, I call their attention to the fact that it has never been required, in determining the qualifications for statehood, that there should be equality of population to the end that there might be equality of representation here in this body, but only that there should be the basis of representation for one Representative in the House of Representatives.

Each one of the American States is provided for by the Constitution as to this Chamber. Here there is an equality of States; and until you can show that the legislation of this country has suffered because small States have been allowed to have two Senators here the argument can not avail as against the provisions of the Constitution and the precedents of this Government from the very beginning.

Mr. President, in this connection I want to call attention to something else in favor of these people. So much has been said to their disparagement that it is pleasant for me to be able to point to the records and statistics to show something that is to their credit.

I called attention to the growth of their post-offices, to the growth of the internal-revenue receipts, to their land entries, and to other things that showed that there was great industrial development going on, that there was a great increase in population, and now I want to call attention to something that reflects upon their morals—something which I take from the finance reports for 1890, 1891, and 1892, which show that in New Mexico for the year 1890 there were 7 tobacco factories, and that there was an increase of the number to 1900, when there were 16. At the same time it is shown that in 1890 there were in New Mexico 5 distilleries, and that there has been a gradual decrease until at this time there are but 2. In 1890 there were 7 breweries, and in 1900 there had been such a decrease that there were but 2.

So, Mr. President, while they have been growing in population, while they have multiplied their industries, while they have been diving down into the mines, bringing up rich mineral, and adding to the wealth of the country, while they have added to the prosperity of the Territory, while they have been on the frontier, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] suggested, yet at the same time, while building their churches and building their schoolhouses, they have been abolishing and dispensing with their distilleries and breweries; and some of the Senators who represent States on this floor can not show as good a record in these respects; and no Senator can show a better as to his State.

Practically the same has been the result in Arizona. In 1890 they had ten breweries; now they have only three. Figures are so tedious that I dislike to stop to deal with them. But, Mr. President, I have said enough and I have detained the Senate much longer than I intended when I commenced. It was my purpose to show why it is that I am making this contention, not in accord, perhaps, with the majority of my party, in regard to this question. I have no election about it.

I supposed it was a settled proposition when we came out of the national Republican convention of 1900 that the Republican party of this country proposed to do what we had promised to do to bring these Territories into statehood. I supposed we had so settled it. I have been in favor of the unqualified admission of these Territories from that time until now. I helped draft that declaration, and I helped to secure its adoption. Without new light I could not repudiate it now, and, Mr. President, I have had no light except only that which has strengthened me in the belief that I was right then and that I am in the right now.

I believe that New Mexico is entitled, according to a fair interpretation of our treaty obligations, to admission without regard to any question, excepting only that of population, she having more than the equal of the unit of representation. I believe that in the exercise of our authority and sound discretion the Congress is justified in admitting Arizona, although at this present moment she does not have a population, perhaps, equal to the unit of representation. I believe we are justified in that, because I do not believe with the Senator from Minnesota that it is no injustice to those people and no hardship to those people to continue them under a Territorial government.

It is an injustice and it is a hardship. "Oh," they tell them, "you have good judges sent to you, and the President selects good governors to rule over you." Let it be conceded that that is all true, Mr. President. I have no disposition to raise a question that will involve personalities; but let it be conceded that that is true, and yet the spirit of every American revolts at the idea that he is not to be allowed to select his own judge and his own governor and his own other representatives, whether high or low. That has been the spirit of Americans from the beginning.

We believe in self-government, Mr. President. Every man who has left his home in the East, where he was living in comfort and peace, and has gone down to this frontier life and taken up his habitation in one of these Territories has gone there with the promise handed out to him by our unbroken precedents that, as soon as they have a population equal to the unit of representation, or substantially so, and it is consistent with the general interests, they shall have the reward of statehood.

That is the promise made to every man who goes there and, Mr. President, this Government has got value received for that promise. It was to the interest of this nation to encourage people to go into the Territories to subdue the forest, to drive out wild beasts, and to drive away the redman, and to make there a habitable home for American citizens; it is to the interest of this people to have men induced to do that, and for that reason we said, having popular representation, in the other House, we will give you equal representation by giving you statehood in the Senate of the United States; we will give you statehood in order that you may elect not only your governors and your judges but your legislatures who are to legislate for you.

Mr. President, what do we know about what the law should be in New Mexico in regard to mining and other industries peculiar to that Territory? We know only as the information is brought to us. Those people are there; they are on the ground; they are intelligent and capable; they know what their interests require; and they know, Mr. President, how to subserve their own interests.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. In a moment.

Moreover, every man and every citizen of this country who has fought in two wars especially desires that he may be allowed to participate in the selection of a President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator to make the point that the people there know better what local laws they need than we do here. Is it not true that the Territorial legislature passes all the local laws the people of the Territory need as much as it is true of a State?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; it is true that they pass laws of a local character, subject to revision and repeal by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But has Congress revised or repealed any of the laws passed by the legislature of New Mexico except——

Mr. FORAKER. No; because their ability as legislators has been so pronounced and acceptable that Congress has not cared to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then is there any complaint from that source?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, of course there is. Who wants the Government of the United States supervising what the legislature does, and does so capably that we do not think of taking exception to it? The very fact that there has never been occasion to interfere with the work of the legislature of New Mexico is conclusive that the people of that Territory are capable of statehood and State government. That is the very point I want to make.

Mr. President, there are very many other reasons I might give why a Territorial government is not acceptable, as compared with statehood, to a people like that. For more than fifty years they have patiently waited our action. They should not be required to wait any longer.

This bill provides that all three of these Territories shall be admitted together. It might be that if I had had the original drafting of the bill or if I had had the initiation of this matter I should have provided differently, but it was thought, according to the judgment of those having it in charge, that this was the best and most acceptable way in which to do it, and I see no objection, certainly no objection that any Republican has a right to make in view of our party's declaration and our party's record upon the subject, and I therefore see no valid reason for the exclusion of these Territories from statehood longer. Consequently I shall vote with the greatest pleasure for the omnibus bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, with the leave of the Senate, I wish to postpone the remarks I intended to make upon this bill until to-morrow.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order if there is nothing more to be said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] to state that he proposes to address the Senate upon the pending measure to-morrow, and I understood him to make the request that he be permitted to do so.

Mr. BURNHAM. That was my intention.

Mr. QUAY. I did not so understand the Senator. Probably he was approaching that point, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BURNHAM. I will state my request again. It is that I may proceed with my remarks to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes to proceed with his remarks on the pending bill to-morrow.

Mr. QUAY. He gives notice that he will proceed to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire gives notice to that effect.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection to that; but in the meantime some one else should proceed this afternoon. It is not proper that the time of the Senate, with so much public business pressing upon us, should be wasted, throwing away a quarter of the afternoon, and that we should defer the discussion of this debate until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is no design to waste any fraction of the time of the Senate; and I so served notice upon the Senate and the Senator from Pennsylvania when the last adjournment occurred.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] is the next Senator who will address the Senate upon this question, and he made this request, because, I suppose, he has been taking notes of what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has said. It was also understood, Mr. President, without any express agreement, as the Senator well knows, of course, and as I know, it was the general understanding that there was to be an executive session this morning——

Mr. QUAY. There was no objection to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And that we should come out of executive session at 2 o'clock, when the Senator from Ohio would conclude his remarks; and then it was generally understood—at least I so understood it, although I am willing to admit I had no authority for it—that after the Senator from Ohio had concluded his remarks the Senate would resume the consideration of executive business. For that reason the Senator from New Hampshire might not be as ready to proceed now as he might be to-morrow morning. However, if it is necessary, we can accommodate the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, if the Senator yields the floor.

Mr. QUAY. I had the floor, I supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want to take the Senator from Indiana off the floor——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. CULLOM. But as he seems to be hesitating about proceeding, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, if we can not have a vote on this bill I have no objection to expediting the public business as far as possible this afternoon.

Mr. BAILEY. The trouble about that is that the omnibus statehood bill has been here a long time before any treaty, and I think it but fair that the omnibus bill should be in due order taken out of the way before the time of the Senate is devoted to a treaty. If the opponents of the statehood bill expect to dispose of the other business properly coming before the Senate, they ought to make up their minds that they must dispose of the statehood bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw the motion for an executive session?

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion temporarily, to enable the Senator from Massachusetts to make some remarks.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say about three or four sentences in reply to one thing said by the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] if he will give me his attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio, in the course of his very earnest and eloquent speech, quoted some language of Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, in regard to the admission of Louisiana. Of course, no man could take any exception to that quotation or to what the Senator said in reference to it. It seems very naturally to be one of the strange things in our history that a man like Josiah Quincy should have occupied that attitude. Mr. Quincy was the president of Harvard when I was a student there. He was the very dear and intimate friend of my kindred of my own name of the previous generation, and I feel in regard to his memory almost as I would in regard to the memory of a father or of a very near kinsman. I think, therefore, what Mr. Quincy said ought not to be quoted without calling attention to the conditions then existing.

Mr. Quincy was, I think, one of the foremost and loftiest examples of noble civic virtue which the Republic, rich in such examples, has had in its history. He was the son of the famous orator, patriot, and martyr of Revolutionary time, whose name, like those of Sam Adams and John Adams, of Massachusetts, the Gadsdens and Pinckneys, of South Carolina, and those of the great Virginia constellation, is on every man's lips.

Mr. Quincy spoke at a time when the telegraph and steam were unknown, and the declaration of the statesmen of that day that it was impossible to keep and maintain the Union with States upon the Pacific coast, or even in the heart of the continent, was simply the result of the fact that they could not foresee those two great marvels. I think it was in Mr. Jefferson's Administration, when Lewis and Clark came back, they reported having stopped at a trading post named St. Louis, on the Mississippi River, and, if I mistake not, it was a journey of several months from there to the Eastern seaboard. I have forgotten whether it was three months or six months, but I dare say there are Senators in abundance who will remember. At any rate, the method of communication was very slow.

In regard to Mr. Quincy's earnestness upon the subject, it must be remembered that Mr. Jefferson himself declared that this measure was unconstitutional; and that was the opinion of the statesmen of that time generally. Mr. Quincy, who was a man of honor, had taken an oath, had held up his hand before God and sworn by the most sacred obligation that humanity can take upon itself, that he would not violate that Constitution. With him it was a little matter of an oath. That is all. Whatever anybody else may have done, or whatever anybody else may be pardoned for doing, I do not think the time has yet come when any man's memory is to be held in dishonor because alone and by himself he kept the honor and sacredness of his oath.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. The Republic has many honored and illustrious names of men who thought they could or fancied they could, with real public advantage, break the great obligation which is in the end the security of the Republic against tyranny and against anarchy. For one I mean to stand by Josiah Quincy.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I only rise to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and of the Senate to the fact that in quoting what Josiah Quincy said on the occasion referred to, I took occasion to say that he was a man of ability, that he was a patriotic man, that he was a conscientious man, and that he was speaking in accordance with his sense of public duty. The point I was making in quoting from him and from others was that as good men as Josiah Quincy and Daniel Webster might be mistaken as to the future of a section that we were proposing to admit into the Union.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand the Senator to have said anything in disparagement of Mr. Quincy. I only said that I thought that in referring to what seemed extraordinary language on his part—for it was extraordinary language the Senator was quoting—it should be remembered that it was before the time of steam when it seemed impossible to anybody that we could hold together an empire extending across the continent, and also that what he said was inspired by his reverence for his oath of office.

LAND TITLES IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, there was reported unanimously this morning, from the Committee on Public Lands, without amendment, a short bill, entirely local in character, for which I ask unanimous consent that it may now be considered. It is the bill (S. 6779) to quiet certain land titles in the State of Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read to the Senate for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases in which lands in the State of Mississippi have heretofore been sold by authority of the State of Mississippi, or by claim of authority of the State of Mississippi, and the right to make such sales was claimed to be by virtue of an act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the 'swamp lands' within their limits," the said lands so sold as aforesaid shall be held to be of the class and kind mentioned in said act of Congress, and said sales are hereby ratified and confirmed, and the titles to said lands are hereby validated and vested in the purchasers, respectively, thereof as if the date of said sales in all respects as if title of the United States had passed by such sales.

SEC. 2. That where any of said purchasers has conveyed any of the land as purchased by him or her, his or her vendee or subvendee shall be vested with title as if the title of such purchaser had been perfect by such original purchase.

SEC. 3. That this act take effect and be in force from and after the date of its approval.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 20, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 19, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

RAILWAY THROUGH FORT SILL RESERVATION.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (H. R. 9503) to authorize the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and for other purposes, and to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 9503 with the amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Oklahoma City and Western Railroad Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through Fort Sill Military Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma, upon such a line as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Fort Sill Military Reservation, and a right to take and use a strip of land in said reservation 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, with the right to use such additional ground when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to the United States, from which the same shall be taken: Provided further, That the said right of way shall be parallel with and contiguous to the right of way granted to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad by the act of Congress approved January 31, 1900; that no more space on the military reservation be given to the said Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company than was given to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad under the terms of the act of January 31, 1900; that the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company will fence its right of way and lay and maintain sufficient fence equal to that built by the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad and will provide and maintain suitable crossings opposite those already provided by the said Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad; that the said Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company will build and maintain a suitable station house near the station of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, and distant not more than half a mile from the flagstaff at Fort Sill; that the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company will provide suitable and sufficient side track at their station and will construct and maintain a side track from their station to the quartermaster and commissary storehouses at Fort Sill; that the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company will construct and maintain sufficient stock pens and provide sufficient facilities for loading and unloading cattle and horses on the ground set apart for their station: Provided further, That the said Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company shall comply with such other regulations or conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That this act shall not be considered to grant any title to the lands selected for such right of way, but that the right to take and use such lands for said purpose shall be revocable at will by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of having some explanation, I demand a second, and I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second, and asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma, who introduced the bill, will explain it.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the confirmation of a right of way already granted by the Secretary of War to this railroad across the Fort Sill Military Reservation. The road is already built and in operation under this temporary permit. It is merely confirming the right of way permitted by the Secretary of War to this company.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will allow me, I will say that I understand this is the same grant that has been given to other roads.

Mr. FLYNN. It is the customary right of way across this reservation.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether, in the Rock Island right-of-way grant it was provided that it was revocable at the pleasure of the Secretary of War?

Mr. FLYNN. No.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it a mistake to put in such a clause that it might be revoked by a hostile Secretary of War?

Mr. FLYNN. I am glad the gentleman asks that question, because it was never put in any other bill. The committee referred the bill to the Secretary of War and his report was received, and the committee reported on the bill before I had an opportunity to examine into it. After conference with the Secretary of War he suggested certain other changes, but it was deemed advisable by the chairman of the committee to pass the bill as it now is and have the changes made in the other branch.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand, the suggestion I make was raised as an objection before the committee, and their idea is to take care of that somewhere else?

Mr. HULL. That is hardly a fair statement. The Rock Island bill had in it the provision that it might be revoked by the power of Congress to take possession of it whenever the Government might need it.

Mr. LACEY. Why not make this bill the same way?

Mr. HULL. The danger, Mr. Speaker, of the Secretary of War acting from pique, or anything of that kind, is so remote that I can see no earthly objection to leaving it where it is. In fact, in many ways I would rather leave it, as all of these revocable permits are left, where the law places it, with the Secretary of War, who is certainly too large a man to act from pique or any petty reasons.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that we have the same question pending in this House in another form. The Committee on Public Lands reported in favor of granting a right of way through the San Francisco Forest Reservation, and the bill was vetoed because of a general law that previously existed. In this general law the Secretary of the Interior was authorized, at his will, to revoke the permit, and the parties furnishing the money to buy the right refused to furnish it. Now, that being so, it resulted in a failure to build the road——

Mr. FLYNN. But this road is already built.

Mr. LACEY. So much the worse to put such a clause in after they have put their money into the road.

Mr. HULL. I do not think there is any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken, and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill was passed.

USE OF COURT-HOUSES AT SCRANTON AND WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

Mr. DEEMER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to move a suspension of the rules for the passage of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) extending the provision granting to the State of Pennsylvania the use of the court-house at Scranton and Williamsport, Pa.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the "Joint resolution granting the State of Pennsylvania permission to use the United States court-house at Scranton, Pa., and at Williamsport, Pa.," approved December 23, 1895, are hereby continued with respect to the United States court-house at Williamsport, Pa., for the further period of five years from the date of the expiration of the permission therein referred to, upon the same terms and conditions as stated in said joint resolution, and that concurrent jurisdiction, so far as is necessary, over said property be, and the same is hereby, ceded to the State of Pennsylvania, so that the sessions of the superior court of said State in said Federal building and rooms thereof may be, during said period, fully legalized.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. DEEMER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] desire to discuss this question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As the bill was read at the desk I could not understand its effect. I should like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to tell us what it does.

Mr. DEEMER. The object of this resolution is simply to continue an existing agreement between the State of Pennsylvania and the Federal Government for the use of the United States court room at the city of Williamsport for the term of five years from the date of expiration of the previous resolution at the same price and upon the same terms as has been in operation heretofore, the rental being $100 a year without any expense whatever on the part of the Government. The resolution provides that these arrangements shall be so made that the holding of court by the State in this building shall not interfere or conflict with the business of the United States court.

This is an arrangement which has been in force for more than five years, and the effect of the resolution is simply to renew the agreement which has existed heretofore.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. DEEMER. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. DEEMER. Yes, sir; and the Treasury Department has assented to it and is perfectly satisfied to have it continued.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the United States Government has a court-house at Williamsport and a court-house at Scranton. Some years ago a new court was created in Pennsylvania known as the superior court, and an arrangement was made whereby the superior court, which meets only once a year, should be allowed to hold its meetings in the Federal court-houses at Scranton and Williamsport, paying to the Government a rent therefor.

The term of the original agreement expired some time ago. That fact, however, was overlooked, and the superior court of Pennsylvania has continued to occupy those buildings at its yearly meetings. The present proposition is to continue that agreement for five years upon the same terms as were embodied in the original agreement. The measure has the approval of the Treasury Department.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

LIEUT. FRANCIS S. DAVIDSON.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1115) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke General Court-Martial Orders No. 93, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, November 15, 1875, approving and confirming the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial which convened at Fort Brown, Tex., September 18, 1875, dismissing First Lieut. Francis S. Davidson, Ninth Cavalry, and to issue to him a certificate of discharge of that date, and to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint said Francis S. Davidson, a first lieutenant, mounted, in the United States Army, and to place him upon the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant: Provided, That no pay, compensation, or allowance shall be paid him from the date of his dismissal to the date of the passage of this act, and the retired list is hereby increased by one for said purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rule and pass the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. MOON. I object.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers upon seconding the motion Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. MOON.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 5.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to control the time for and against this motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant of the Ninth United States Cavalry. It proposes to place him on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant. The bill was introduced in the Senate by the senior Senator from Massachusetts; it was recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and passed by that body. It then came to the House and was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and favorably reported.

Lieutenant Davidson is a graduate of West Point, and in 1875 was in command of Company 9, United States Cavalry. He was ordered to proceed with his company to a place called "El Louz ranch," Texas. Upon his arrival there he was arrested upon charges relative to the inspection of his company, upon which charges he was acquitted, they being very easily disproved.

The officer who had been sent to relieve him then preferred further charges against him of breach of arrest and gambling. He was tried by court-martial and convicted. That conviction, in the opinion of officers and members of committees who have investigated the subject, was unwarranted by the facts. The report of the committee states:

He did not leave the ranch of El Louz or his company and did not violate the order of arrest, and the court erred in its finding as to fact and law. The only assertion as to gaming was that he threw a twenty-dollar bill on a monte table that a Mexican had in front of one of the huts of this ranch. Even that assertion was disproved by the evidence.

Judge-Advocate-General Dunn, in his report dated May 13, 1878, says that the new evidence submitted may be deemed to cast a doubt upon the guilt of the accused of the charge of gambling with enlisted men. He closes his report by saying that his reappointment to the Army would not, it is believed, be prejudicial to the interests of military justice. A careful investigation leads, is seems to me, irresistibly to the conclusion that he was not guilty of such a breach of arrest, as he did not at any time leave the ranch where he was told to remain with his company, and that the evidence as to gambling has been disproved.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can not hear the gentleman's statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say that the accused was acquitted of the charge of gambling?

Mr. LAWRENCE. He was not acquitted, but was found guilty of gambling in the presence of enlisted men.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Was he acquitted of the charge of violating the order of arrest?

Mr. LAWRENCE. He was found guilty on both charges and discharged the service of the United States; but subsequently additional testimony was presented which has convinced impartial judges that he was wrongly convicted, and a bill for his relief was reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs as far back as the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have not the report before me. Did the accused appeal to the President? Was the judgment of the court-martial affirmed or approved by the President?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will permit——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Without any appeal, the bill will naturally go to the President, and he will have to approve it before it could be executed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There are several testimonials here from officers with whom he was associated and from officers who knew of him and his military record, testifying to his character as an officer and a gentleman. Among these testimonials are letters from General Lawton, General Hatch, General Bacon, General Hamilton, and others, which are attached to and printed as part of the report. It seems to me that a grave act of injustice was done a brave officer. He has been deprived of his commission upon charges shown to be without foundation. That has been the opinion of every committee that has considered the bill, and I therefore ask the House, as an act of justice long deferred, to suspend the rules and pass the bill to place Lieutenant Davidson upon the retired list. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the balance of his time, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to speak to the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I think it is due to the House to state that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and myself have made a minority report on this case. The report is very short, and simply says that we think the charge of breach of arrest to be more than technical and that we do not agree with the conclusion that the offenses were not proved. The papers are not with the report—are not printed with them—but I have sent for them from the files, and I think I can state from memory, subject to correction by the gentleman who introduces this bill——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can not hear what the gentleman says. Inasmuch as he signed a minority report I would ask him if he now concurs in the motion?

Mr. PARKER. No. I am speaking to give the House information.

My recollection of the case, subject to correction by the gentleman who brought in this bill, is this: Lieutenant Davidson served as an Army officer from 1867 to 1878. He was then charged with gambling, I believe. He was put under arrest, which meant confinement to the camp. The camp was a Western camp, with rather loose boundaries, and while under arrest he went one night a short distance away from it to a ranch in the neighborhood, where they had a dance the greater part of one night. He was then charged with breach of arrest.

The papers, which have now been brought in, you see are somewhat too voluminous to refer to. I can not speak further than that, but I think it is due to the House to say that while the majority of the committee, all but two, were convinced by the very voluminous and numerous testimonials in his favor from such officers as General Lawton and men of the very highest rank, who expressed the thought that he had been punished too much and ought to be allowed to come back in 1878, 1879, and 1880, the minority of the committee was convinced of two things: First, we thought that the charges were proved. We are only two, and we may be wrong about that. But, second, we were likewise convinced that if anything ought to be done for the officer now it should be by way of simply giving him an honorable discharge, and that after a man has been for twenty-four years out of the Army he has not rendered the service which entitles him to a place upon the retired list.

Mr. LACEY. How long did he serve?

Mr. PARKER. He served, I think, eleven years.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] who reported the bill.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House had most careful consideration in the Committee on Military Affairs. The applicant had served his county for something like twelve or more years, and it will be observed that he was most of the time on the frontier and serving against hostile Indians. He was ordered with his company on a scout, to make camp at a water hole called El Louz Ranch. The officer who inspected his company preferred charges against him because of the condition of his wagons. An officer was sent to relieve him, and he was placed under arrest. It was not close arrest.

Any man who has been in the military service knows that the mere placing under arrest does not deprive the officer so placed of the privileges of going about the camp. This was out at a water hole in the far western desert district of this country, and it was charged that while so under arrest he was guilty of gambling. Now observe just what the Judge-Advocate-General who tried the case says in regard to it. Judge-Advocate-General Dunn, in his report of the case, dated May 13, 1878, says:

> The new evidence submitted may be deemed to cast a doubt, if not a reasonable doubt, upon the guilt of the accused of the principal offense of which he was convicted, viz, gambling with enlisted men in public. In view of this doubt and of the testimony produced by Mr. Davidson, this Bureau is now inclined to the opinion that the sentence of the accused was probably too severe a one. He has suffered under this sentence two and a half years, and his reappointment to the Army would not, it is believed, be prejudicial to the interests of military justice.

This officer was a graduate of West Point. His service was as honorable as that of any man in the Army. The technical offense charged against him was not proven, and the charge of gambling was the only serious offense, as the judge-advocate says, against him. It was afterwards proved that he did not gamble with enlisted men, but that there was some little irregularity in the matter, and that is all there is against this man. It seemed to the committee as though it was a punishment altogether disproportionate to the offense, considering that the officer had served honorably and faithfully for so many years.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. CAPRON. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. Was this officer restored to his rank after this evidence came in?

Mr. CAPRON. He was not restored to his rank.

Mr. TALBERT. He never made any effort to get back into the Army?

Mr. CAPRON. He has been making a continuous effort to get back into the Army, and the only method by which he could get back was by Congressional action.

Mr. TALBERT. Why did he not appeal his case? Why did he not take the regular course of appeal?

Mr. CAPRON. He took the regular course of appeal, so far as there was any, and the appeal was not favorably granted, for a reason which is not shown.

Mr. TALBERT. The appeal was refused, then?

Mr. CAPRON. I do not know that it was refused or granted. At any rate, he was told that his recourse was to come to Congress for his restoration, and he has the recommendation of many officers—General Lawton and other inspectors-general in the Army—stating that he had been unjustly condemned, and that it would be an honor to the country if he should be restored.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. I was going to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will wait until the gentleman from Iowa has asked his question.

Mr. HULL. I have no time under my own control, but you control twenty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There will be no trouble about the time. I do not take the floor to antagonize the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island yields to the gentleman from Iowa, in order that he may answer a question.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Tennessee controls the time on that side, and he says he will grant time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We will do something about that. I want to ask this question. I am not as familiar as I ought to be, probably, with bills of this character. I know the gentleman who is chairman of the Military Committee is familiar with them. The proviso reads:

> That no pay, compensation, or allowance shall be paid him from the date of his dismissal to the date of the passage of this act; and the retired list is hereby increased by one for said purpose.

Now, is it the object and purpose to increase the retired list by one in order that no pay, compensation, or allowance shall be given?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, I want to say that there was really no use for that language in the bill. The House will understand, or should understand, that if the bill pass and the President nominates him to the Senate, and the Senate confirms him, he will receive from that time the full pay of retired officer of that grade. It simply cuts off any claim for pay from the date of his discharge from the service until the date of his reentering the service, and that was not necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I probably did not make myself understood. The language is: "That no pay, compensation, or allowance shall be paid him from the date of his dismissal to the date of the passage of this act, and the retired list is increased by one for said purpose." For what purpose? In order that he may receive no pay, compensation, or allowance?

Mr. HULL. If Congress passes the bill it increases the retired list, which is limited in this class of cases, and these words are put in the bill so that it may be increased by one.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the language is, "the retired list is hereby increased by one for said purpose." Does that mean that it is to be increased by one so that he may receive no pay, compensation, or allowance?

Mr. HULL. I understand the gentleman's contention is that the way the bill reads is that the retired list is increased by one in order that by that arrangement he should have no pay or allowance.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It says so.

Mr. HULL. My idea is that he will get no pay from the date of his discharge until he is reinstated and put on the retired list, which by the bill is simply increased by one. It may not be fortunately expressed.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just one word, if the gentleman will permit me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must advise the gentleman from Iowa that he is using time of the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. HULL. I beg my friend's pardon.

Mr. CAPRON. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the committee, who is more familiar with these cases than I.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LAWRENCE. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York such time as he may desire.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words regarding this case. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I rise for the purpose of saying that the committee has had under advisement this bill, has carefully considered it, and we believe it is one of the most meritorious bills of this character ever reported from that committee. Mr. Davidson, in my opinion, was unjustly treated. The facts in the case demonstrate that he never should have been court-martialed; that he never should have been dismissed from the Army, and that he should be restored. The bill, sir, ought to go further than it does. This brave and gallant soldier ought to receive all his pay for the time he has been out of the Army, and while he was trying to get back—that is, reinstated. I think we ought to grant this tardy relief. It is an act of simple justice. I think every man here who favors fair play, who loves justice, who wants to right the wrongs of a brave soldier who has been illtreated, ought to vote for this bill. I shall, and in all my life I never cast a more conscientious vote. The bill should pass without a dissenting vote, and I hope it will.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am ready for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PROPERTY DESTROYED IN SUPPRESSING THE BUBONIC PLAGUE IN HAWAII.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill No. 6216.

The SPEAKER. Is this by authority of the committee?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. By authority of the committee, unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6216) to pay in part judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii for property destroyed in suppressing the bubonic plague in said Territory in 1899 and 1900, and authorizing the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for the payment of the remaining claims.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay in part the judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii by the fire claims commission of that Territory for property destroyed in the suppression of the bubonic plague in said Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

SEC. 2. That the governor and secretary of said Territory are hereby authorized to issue the bonds of that Territory in such sum, not exceeding $500,000, as, together with the money hereby appropriated, may be sufficient to pay all of said judgments. Said bonds shall be payable in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard weight and fineness, shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and be redeemable in not less than five years, and payable in not more than fifteen years from the date of issuance. The principal and interest of all bonds shall be exempt from any and all taxes, and the payment thereof shall constitute a charge on the revenues of the Territory of Hawaii. Said bonds shall be sold at not less than their face value, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the judgments aforesaid, and to no other purpose, and they shall be of such form and denominations and be issued and sold under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

SEC. 3. That under no circumstances shall any such judgment claimant, or anyone claiming through him, be required to pay, nor shall any attorney or agent be entitled to charge, demand, or receive, directly or indirectly, more than 10 per cent upon the amount recovered as compensation for services or labor of any kind or character in the prosecution or establishment of the claim, and in cases of contracts or agreements providing for payment of less than 10 per cent the payment shall not be increased above the percentage so agreed upon. Before any such judgment shall be paid hereunder the governor of said Territory must certify that the same is genuine and was duly rendered in pursuance of the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory; and the payment of said judgments shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of any and all claims or demands against said Territory or the United States on account of any property destroyed in the said suppression of the bubonic plague.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to control the time.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill of considerable importance; important to the more than 6,000 claimants, many of whom had the last dollar's worth of property destroyed; important also in the sum that it takes from the United States Treasury. If the House will give me its attention, I will endeavor very briefly to explain the situation and some of the facts within the time allowed me which have induced a unanimous report on the part of the subcommittee the Senate sent over to investigate these fire claims and the unanimous report of the Senate Committee on Insular Affairs, and also a unanimous report on the part of the Committee on Territories of the House.

The Sandwich Islands, by virtue of a treaty, became a part of the United States July 7, 1898. The wisdom of this acquisition is no longer a subject of discussion. One of the provisions of the resolution passed by Congress making them a part of the United States is as follows. I wish gentlemen to give their attention while I read it:

Until Congress shall provide for the government of said islands, all the civil, judicial, and military powers exercised by the officers of the Government of said islands shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, and the President shall have the power to remove said officers and fill the vacancies so occasioned.

While the islands were thus governed, before any Territorial government was established, in December 12, 1899, bubonic plague in a virulent and epidemic form broke out in those islands and continued until the 1st of April. It was very fatal. Of 71 cases, 61 died. Consternation and fear seized upon all the white inhabitants of the islands. Especially was this true of those living in the city of Honolulu, where most of the cases were located. The only method known to effectually stamp ou tthe plague is to burn everything, including dwellings, in the infected section. This was done, and all of that part of the city known as Chinatown was burned.

It had never been there before. At the time it broke out the transport Warren was in the harbor with over 800 United States troops on their way to the Philippines. It was a place where three-quarters of the commerce from New York, Seattle, and San Francisco to the far East stopped. Nearly all transports carrying troops to and from the Philippines call there for coal, water, and provisions. It was very necessary, indeed, that the plague should be eradicated and thoroughly stamped out, and, as I have stated, the only method known for doing it effectually is to burn and destroy by fire. This burning was resorted to by the board of health, with the approval, advice, and assistance of the consul-general of the United States, under instructions received from Washington. I will read you one of the instructions from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 23, 1900.

Hon. SANFORD B. DOLE, Honolulu:

In view of the importance of thorough and immediate measures for the sanitary protection of Honolulu and of any other spot in the Hawaiian Islands threatened with contagion, the President directs me to say to you that all proper expenditures authorized by the council of state of Hawaii, under the provisions of section 6 of article 81 of the Hawaiian constitution, for the purpose of eradicating the bubonic plague, will meet with the President's full approval.

JOHN HAY.

The plague continued until April. All business was suspended. The citizens formed themselves into committees and spent their time, for which nothing is asked. They built detention camps, placed in them some 5,000 people, fed them there, and surrounded them with a fence and a cordon of United States soldiers and guards, and finally eradicated the plague after some four months.

In the course of the burning, at one time the fire got beyond the control of the fire department and burned more buildings than was intended; but I think, and the committee thinks, that it was really a good move, as it succeeded more quickly in stamping out the plague. Just after the plague had been eradicated, and before it was known how much damage had been done, and before the fire commission authorized by the President to report had investigated and determined the amount of damage, Congress, in June, 1900, passed an organic act organizing the islands as a Territory, and in that act, they transferred all the revenues of the islands resulting from customs duties and internal-revenue assessments from the treasury of the island to the Treasury of the United States.

In paying the large expense arising in the suppression of this plague, up to June, 1900, the island had the benefit of the revenues, customs, etc., and they paid from their treasury for food, for maintenance, and concentration camps over $800,000. After that time, as the revenues had been transferred to the United States, it became impossible for them to pay, as they were prohibited from borrowing, and it would impoverish them to raise so large a sum by taxation. This property was not only burned, as I have stated, but when the plague broke out on adjacent islands the United States war vessel Iroquois was sent down by the consul, and they burned the whole place. In short, this eradication of the plague was done under the direction of the United States Government, when the President, under instructions from Congress, representing the dignity, authority, and power of the United States, was the sole authority.

Before transferring these revenues, the Government authorized the establishment of a commission of five persons. I might read, but I have not the time, the instructions sent by Secretary Hay to these people appointed as a fire commission. That commission passed upon these claims. It was composed of honorable men. One was a banker, one was a leading merchant, one was a leading attorney, whom we had before our committee, and all were gentlemen of character; and opposition to the claims was represented by counsel for the islands. After a careful hearing, claims to the amount of 43 per cent of the amount claimed were allowed, but they have not been paid.

There are over $1,400,000 of these claims allowed. Now, they ask that under these circumstances, when it would produce such great hardship and when in fact they can not pay them themselves, that the United States will assume $1,000,000 of the claims passed upon, and that they will permit the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for whatever amount not exceeding $500,000 that is necessary to pay the rest, which is all the islands can afford to pay.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that at the time the fire claims commission was formed, and at the time of their deliberations in passing on these claims, it was understood and expected that the Territory of Hawaii would be able to pay these claims, and subsequently found themselves unable to do so?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. That is true. When this commission was acting, they supposed they would have the revenues and have to pay them out of their own treasury. I have no question, and neither has the committee, from the examination of one gentleman who sat upon that commission and from other evidence that these claims have been cut down, that they are honest and that they are not larger than they ought to be and in many cases smaller than they ought to be.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman spoke of some gentleman appearing to oppose the claim.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I do not know about that. This is a claim for a large amount, and it was up here as an amendment put on by the Senate to an appropriation bill a year ago.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand that, but I understood the gentleman to say that these claims were opposed before the committee. I should like to know who opposed them.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. No. When the claims were brought before the fire commission, there was an attorney who opposed every one of the claims, or rather he scrutinized them before this commission of five, so as to understand them and see that nothing was allowed but what was right.

Mr. MADDOX. That was on the island?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. That was on the island. He simply scrutinized them and saw that nothing was allowed that should not be.

Mr. MADDOX. The islands were not then annexed to the United States?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. The islands were annexed the summer before, but this property was burned during the transition period between the time that the islands were annexed under a treaty, or by resolution of Congress, and the time that the organic act was passed by Congress organizing them into a Territory.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, it is proposed for the United States Goverment to assume $1,000,000 of this debt?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Yes; and among the equities why they should assume it, let me state one or two. In the first place, we assumed $4,000,000 of their bonded debt, and at the time of annexation we obtained as a consideration for so doing property amounting to $4,685,000, according to an appraisal which, as I am informed and as our committee was informed, would sell for some $6,000,000 to-day to private parties if the Government would part with it.

Again, of the net revenues up to the 1st day of last January, after deducting the expenses of collection, after deducting everything that has been paid to judges, governor, and other official persons there, we have received and now have in the Treasury the sum of $2,585,099, since they were organized as a Territory and the revenues were collected by the United States.

Mr. MADDOX. As I understand, our Government having assumed possession of all the income of that island, which now goes into our Treasury, the government there has now no method or means for paying this indebtedness.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. No method but by taxation; and to pay the whole of that sum by taxation would be, considering the number of people and the amount of property in the island, almost confiscation.

This was a matter of great national importance. With the transports carrying our troops, going backward and forward and calling at Hawaii for water on their way to the Philippine Islands, it deeply concerned all the people of the United States.

Mr. MADDOX. Could the authorities there tax the people for the payment of this debt without the authority of Congress?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They could not issue bonds and raise the money; but they ask the authority of Congress to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding $500,000. As has been already stated, the existing law does not permit them to create this charge upon the people. The organic law prohibits the issuing of bonds unless under special authority of Congress.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. SNOOK. In the letter which you have read, from some officer of the United States to some officer in the Sandwich Islands——

Mr. POWERS of Maine. It is from Secretary of State Hay to Governor Dole.

Mr. SNOOK. In that letter the officer refers to some act or regulation of the islands under which this shall be done. What act or regulation?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. It was an act of the islands asking the creation of a commission to act on these fire claims.

Now, in addition to the great equity of this claim and the necessity of providing for paying it, in addition to the fact that it has been unanimously approved by every committee that has investigated it, it seems to me that every principle of equity and justice demands that it shall be paid. If gentlemen will look at the last message of the President of the United States they will find him calling attention to this matter in the following language:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the Hawaiian fire claims, which were the subject of careful investigation in the last session.

When interrupted a moment ago I was about to say that this matter came to us from the Senate one year ago tacked on to an appropriation bill, and the House refused concurrence in the amendment, the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], saying, and saying rightly, that whatever merit there might be in the claims they had never been investigated and passed upon by a committee of this House. Since that time they have been carefully investigated and passed upon by the Committee on the Territories, and that committee is unanimous in the belief that it is a measure of equity and justice, and that these claims should be paid, and has authorized me to so state.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Six minutes.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] has very clearly stated, this bill has met the approbation of the special committee that went out to Hawaii. It has also met the approval of the Senate committee and of the Senate and has received the unanimous vote of the House Committee on the Territories. I think that for us to fail to pass this bill would be a breach of good faith on the part of our Government. By reason of the terrible plague which raged in the Hawaiian Islands in 1899 property to the value, in round numbers, of $1,500,000 was destroyed. The President of the United States was notified of the conditions which prevailed there, and through Mr. Hay, Secretary of State, sent a telegram to Mr. Dole, saying:

In view of the importance of thorough and immediate measures for the sanitary protection of Honolulu and of any other spot in the Hawaiian Islands threatened with contagion, the President directs me to say to you that all proper expenditures authorized by the council of state of Hawaii, under the provisions of section 6 of article 81 of the Hawaiian constitution, for the purpose of eradicating the bubonic plague will meet with the President's full approval.

I undertake to say that this, if not in terms, was in essence an assurance to the people there that when the exact amount of the loss shold be determined, or determined as nearly as possible, the Government here would make reimbursement. A commission consisting of five impartial men was appointed to appraise the property destroyed and ascertain as nearly as possible its value. The value of the property amounted, as I have said, to a million and a half of dollars. The Hawaiian people expended, in round numbers, $800,000 for putting a stop to this terrible plague. They now ask that the Government pay to them $1,000,000 out of the $2,500,000 of revenue which we have received from the islands, and that then they may be authorized to issue bonds to pay the remaining half million themselves, we to pay two-thirds of the loss and they one-third.

I feel that it is not only a matter of justice to the people three, but it is also a matter of justice to ourselves, that this bill should pass. I have failed yet to find any person, before our committee or elsewhere, who has been opposed to the bill. It is preeminently a matter of justice to those unfortunate islanders and a duty we owe them, which duty we assumed when the President sent the telegram heretofore referred to. I earnestly hope the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, having made the motion demanding a second, the control of the time in opposition to the bill passed to me. I desire to ask gentlemen on this side and on the other side of the House if any of them desire to speak in opposition to the bill. If anyone does, I think it proper for me to yield the gentleman time. I do not desire now to oppose the bill, and if no gentleman desires to speak in opposition we are ready for a vote.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like just a second.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], a member of this committee, was called away last week on account of a death in his family. Before he left he asked me to state to the House when this bill came up for consideration that as a member of the committee he voted to report this bill, that he was absolutely in favor of it, and that he thought it was a very just and meritorious measure and ought to pass. In addition, I know the facts in this case and shall vote for the bill. I say, too, it is meritorious and a matter of justice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ELASTIC CURRENCY.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw report No. 3148 for the purpose of correcting some figures in two of the paragraphs and for a reprint of the report, adding to the report in the reprint the bill itself for the convenience of the members of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to withdraw, for the purpose of correction, report No. 3148, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, for the purpose of having a reprint, and that the bill may be printed with the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the minority were allowed time in which to file their report. That time, I believe, would expire to-day. I ask unanimous consent that that time may be extended two days, unless the bill should be called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the leave granted to the minority of the committee to file its report be extended two days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15345) to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. DICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendments be concurred in by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of information, I would ask from what Calendar this bill came?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a House bill with Senate amendment and comes from the Speaker's table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was it originally from the Union Calendar? In other words, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill is not one of those bills which can be properly laid before the House until it has first been referred to the committee having it in charge, unless unanimous consent is given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Alabama indicate any amendment which involves discussion in the Committee of the Whole, because the amendments are the test, of course, of the rule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The entire bill comes from the Union Calendar. It creates changes of office and, as I understood it, some of the amendments affect those sections of the bill which provide for the creation of offices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not under consideration, the Chair will say to the gentleman, only the amendments of the Senate to the House bill, and unless those amendments involve charges upon the Treasury——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Or the creation of an office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Or the creation of an office, it does not require consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, I gathered from the reading of the amendments that some of them affect sections of the bill which create offices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will send the bill to the gentleman for his inspection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Whether they strike them out or create them, it is the same thing. In other words, the House passes a bill creating certain offices. The Senate strikes that out and it comes back here with that stricken out. I do not mean to say that I am opposed to the striking of it out, but it can not be properly considered, as the sections that are now before the House affect——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Alabama will examine the amendments and specify which particular amendment he has reference to, the Chair will then be able to pass upon the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill is just before me for the first time since it came back, but my understanding was that the Senate amendments have stricken out certain provisions in this bill creating offices and affecting the section creating offices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A diminishing of the officers provided for in the House bill would not carry the bill to the Committee of the Whole, because instead of being an additional charge upon the Treasury, it would be a relief to the Treasury.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With all due respect to the opinion of the Speaker pro tempore on that question, I must beg to differ, because when the House takes up a section that carries a bill to the Union Calendar, or that should properly be considered on the Union Calendar, the fact that the Senate strikes that provision out does not relieve it from the effect of the rule, because the House may want to return that section to the bill; and if they do want to return it, it should first be considered in Committee of the Whole, and it may be that the amendments in themselves do not create an office. As a matter of fact, they strike out some offices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the Clerk read section 3 of Rule XXIII, and then Rule XX.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read Rule XX.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, will the gentleman from Alabama indicate what particular amendment here necessarily carries this bill to the Committee of the Whole under Rule XX?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, the eighth amendment strikes out this provision:

SEC. 24. That for the purpose of providing a reserve force of trained men which shall be ready for immediate service whenever called for and organized under authority of Congress, the Secretary of War is authorized to apportion among the several States and Territories and to enroll not exceeding 100,000 men, who shall have served in the Regular or Volunteer armies of the United States or in the organized militia. Such reserve force shall be designated as the National Volunteer Reserve, and when called forth by the President shall serve wherever ordered, within or without the territory of the United States. Such enrollment shall in each case continue for a period of five years, but in the event they shall be called into the service of the United States, other than for the purpose of drill, inspection, and instruction, they shall be entitled to be discharged at the close of the war or after nine months' service. The persons so enrolled shall report for drill, inspection, and instruction at such times and places to be specified and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and each person so reporting shall, during the time of such service, be subject, as far as practicable, to the regulations and discipline governing the military establishment and shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by law for the Army of the United States, to be paid out of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, but in time of peace, except in case of threatened invasion, said National Volunteer Reserve shall not be required to perform military duty to exceed ten days in any one year.

Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, and the members of any companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments of the organized militia shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in bodies, such companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments shall be received as the first organizations of such volunteer force. Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress exceeding in number the companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regiments of the organized militia which shall enlist in bodies pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, the persons so enrolled as a reserve force of trained men, or so many thereof as shall be required, shall be organized in the manner provided for the organization of the volunteer force by section 12 of the act entitled "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1899: Provided, That the President of the United States, in time of peace, may by order fix the minimum number of enlisted men in each company, troop, battery, signal corps, engineer corps, and hospital corps: Provided further, That no person shall belong to both organizations at the same time.

In other words, the original bill goes on to provide for the creation not only of offices, but of an army. Well, now, my only objection to it is that I say it is in conflict with the rule invoked to lay this bill before the House as a privileged matter. All I desired to do was to see that the bill should come properly before the House, so that the minority could be protected; but since I have been on my feet I have been informed that the minority of the committee have considered the question and are willing that this section should go out. Therefore I am not opposed to it, but I think it ought to be submitted by unanimous consent, and not as a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the language that the gentleman from Alabama has read stricken out by the Senate amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that it has been ruled, times without number, and it would be tedious to restate the number of times it has been ruled, that a Senate amendment which is a modification merely of a House proposition, like the increase or decrease of an amount, and so forth, and that does not involve new and distinct expenditures, is not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICK] moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills, with a view of calling up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 16604, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PARKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16604) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the next year. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16604) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection to that, if I can have five minutes.

Mr. HITT. We will come to general debate a moment later.

Mr. McCLELLAN. With that understanding I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes the provision that is usual, and which we pass annually in support of our ministers, consuls, and other officers in foreign parts. It appropriates $1,929,000 and upward—not as much as the bill of last year of the same title; but there was a subsequent bill for our service in the Republic of Cuba, and also in a deficiency bill there were certain appropriations made, which I will call attention to and bring before the committee when we come to those points.

The whole body of appropriations last year amounted to a little above $2,000,000. The estimates that have been sent to the House by the Department this year recommend the expenditures of $2,145,000. That is $216,000 more than we appropriate in the bill. Now, if the additions are made that I have just indicated as necessary to support the service in Cuba and provide for those officials who were in a separate bill last year, it will add $16,500, making this bill $1,945,000 and upward. There is a considerable reduction in this appropriation bill below what we appropriated last year. It is because in that bill we provided $60,000 for the erection of a legation building in Pekin, China. It is not necessary to repeat that appropriation this year. There was $5,000 then appropriated for costs in extradition cases, now provided for in other legislation, and $3,000 last year for the Red Cross convention at St. Petersburg, now over, which in all is $69,000 not in this bill.

There is a considerable number of increases in this bill, and, to be frank about it, nearly all are subject to the point of order, so that any gentleman who chooses to can have any such particular item thrown out.

The increases to which I refer can all be very briefly stated. The committee, on the repeated recommendation of the Department of State, has provided for a secretary of legation at Switzerland, where heretofore the minister has been the only officer representing the United States.

For a considerable part of each year he had to be absent, or was absent under the rules, and there ought to be an officer there all the time. The secretary is necessary to help him at other times and is our chargé d'affaires when the minister is absent. There has been an addition to the compensation given to our consul-general at Cape Town, in South Africa. The case was urgent. It was not only a complaint, such as we are accustomed to hear, that prices were high, and the man wanted more, or did not get as much as somebody else. The fact is, no one was willing to stay there at the compensation allowed. The last one resigned, and no one fit for it would take his place with the same pay, so we have raised it $2,000.

There is a $500 increase in the salary of the consuls-general at Canton, $500 at Marseilles, $500 at Auckland, and $500 at Singapore. These are exceptionally meritorious cases, increasing commercial business requiring large expenditures. There is an addition of $500 to the salary of the consuls at Pretoria, a post which the Department has not been able to fill at all times because of the low pay; at Bombay, where the compensation is not enough for the service; and at Sydney, New South Wales, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS], who is present, explained very fully to the House last year as a post inadequately paid; at Hull; at Tamsui, in the island of Formosa, where a man can not live on the pay; at Yarmouth, Ceiba, Gaspé Basin, and Stanbridge.

These last are posts where the consul is now being paid a thousand dollars a year. By the rules of the State Department an officer who is paid only $1,000 is allowed to do business. That may lead to very undesirable results. The consul, if he is a member of a firm, and he generally becomes a member very soon, may spy on the business of the other firms, seeing all their invoices, and it is not a fair or just thing to business to have one trader in a place officially clothed with power to look into the business of all the other firms. So we have raised Ceiba, Gaspé Basin, and Stanbridge from $1,000 to $1,500.

That bars them from doing other business, and they are required to devote all their time to their duties as consuls. We have increased the allowances to various posts for clerk hire by small sums, $200 and upward, amounting in all to $2,300. There were a great number of recommendations made by the Department for increase of compensation of various officers, but the committee have not adopted them. They have only selected a few posts where the cases seemed so clear that it was not likely any member of the House would raise a point of order against them.

The items that are not subject to a point of order I will move as we reach them, being those provided for last year in the supplemental bill. I do not wish to consume further time in general debate, and I would ask my friend from Arkansas if he desires to make any arrangement about general debate?

Mr. DINSMORE. I do not desire to say anything myself, but there are two gentlemen on this side who want to use a little time, and I suggest that we let the matter run along a little, when debate will soon exhaust itself.

Mr. HITT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, in approaching any matter that is reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it behooves one to tread circumspectly, with hat in hand. For a tradition has grown up in this House—that almost amounts to a fetich—that the Committee on Foreign Affairs can do no wrong; and in speaking of this committee I use the word in the sense in which it is usually employed on the other side, to include only the members of the majority of the committee, for, thanks to the oppressive rules under which we operate, the distinguished and able gentlemen in the minority are in the same position as are the members of the minority of most of the great committees—they are more ornamental than useful. And so I realize that it requires some temerity to criticise anything that comes from that committee. Probably what I say will be entirely ignored.

It may be that if I interrupt the chairman of the committee for a sufficient length of time from the reception of the admiration of his followers, he will cast a contemplative glance over the edge of the pedestal upon which his committee sits enthroned, and in so doing see me buzzing around the base of the pedestal. [Laughter.] He will then brush me aside in his invariably courteous way—for the gentleman from Illinois can not be any thing but courteous—in the invariable courteous manner that he employs, saying that I know nothing whatever about the bill before the House, and then he will crush me with the statement that the bill has been unanimously reported.

In both of these statements the gentleman from Illinois will be absolutely correct. The bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as every bill is reported from that committee, for the very good reason that the majority members of the committee must be of one mind, having but one, and that is the mind of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] It will be equally true that I know nothing whatever about the bill before the House. I flatter myself that I possess an ordinary average intelligence and a certain amount of industry. I have tried to fathom the depths and to explore the width and length of this bill, without success. Having thrown it aside discouraged, I turned to the report of the committee, and I found the report as unsatisfactory as the bill. It is less than a page long, although the bill carries $2,000,000 of appropriation. It is the only appropriation bill that is ever reported to the House of which the House is not permitted to know anything.

The great Committee on Appropriations is so fair and kind to us that it takes the House into its confidence long enough at least to make a comparative statement of each item appropriated for the current year, each item carried on the bill, and the items recommended by the Department. The report accompanying this bill simply states the total carried on the bill, and the total carried for last year, and the total recommended by the Department, with a list, or what purports to be a list, of what are the increased salaries recommended and the new position created, and furnishes a conclusive argument in favor of the new position and the increase of salaries by saying that the committee is unanimously in favor of them. However difficult it may be at times to locate the position of our beloved Committee on Foreign Affairs on any subject, there is one question upon which we always know where to find it. Whenever a recommendation or a proposition is made to create a new office or to increase a salary, the Committee on Foreign Affairs is always unanimously in favor of such increase. [Laughter.]

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that in this matter-of-fact age of dollars and cents the chief purpose of the diplomatic service, as well as of the consular service, is the fostering of commerce. If the diplomatic and consular services are economically managed—if the total cost is low in proportion to the total amount of commerce—then it is a fair conclusion that we have an efficient diplomatic and consular service, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has done its duty. If, on the other hand, the diplomatic and consular services are extravagantly managed—if they are overmanned and underpaid—then it is a fair conclusion that our diplomatic and consular services are not well organized or well managed, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has failed to do its duty.

The diplomatic officials of the United States—I speak of the heads of embassies and legations—are worse paid than the similar officers of any other country. If we are to be represented at all, we must place our diplomatic officers in a position to accept and return courtesies and to assume and discharge social obligations; but we expect them to do this with very small salaries. The result of this is that, in so far as our embassies are concerned, a poor man or a man of moderate wealth can not afford to represent the United States. In Great Britain, when a faithful patriot has loyally replenished the exchequer of his party by contributing large campaign funds, he is sooner or later rewarded with a seat in the House of Lords, where he does comparatively little harm. In the United States we have no House of Lords, and accordingly faithful financial service to party is rewarded with an embassy, if one is vacant, or if not, with a large mission.

The result is that in this country, where we are in the habit of saying that every newsboy in the street may some day aspire to the Presidency, all of the people, with the exception of the very rich, are excluded entirely from one branch of the public service. We have, in fact, one important branch of the public service that is reserved entirely for one small class in the community. I do not mean to suggest that our diplomatic officers are not efficient, for many of them are, nor that all of them have made large campaign contributions, for many of them have not. What I mean is that both parties frequently reward financial services with embassies, and that an American, to be an ambassador and properly maintain the dignity of the office, must be rich.

The United States has 7 ambassadors, against Great Britain's 8, Germany's 8, and France's 10. We have 26 envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, against 26 for France, 15 for Germany, and 16 for Great Britain. We have 2 ministers resident, against 10 in Great Britain and 9 in Germany; a total of heads of legations and embassies of 37, against 48 for Great Britain, 36 for France, and 31 for Germany. We have 39 secretaries of all grades, against 72 for Great Britain, 45 for Germany, and 61 for France; or a total of diplomatic officers of all grades of 76 for the United States, 120 for Great Britain, 76 for Germany, and 97 for France.

The consular service is equally poorly paid in salaries, but there is also a system of fee compensation which is so complicated, so involved, and so mysterious that I have never been able to understand it. That system permits our consuls to at least eke out a decent living.

While our consular service is underpaid, it is overmanned. We have more consular officials of all grades than any other nation on earth, and our budget is almost as large as that of any other on earth. We have to-day 45 consuls-general, against 43 for France, 27 for Germany, and 39 for Great Britain. We have 239 consuls, against 257 for France, 88 for Germany, and 226 for Great Britain; or a total of salaried consular officers of 284, against 261 for Great Britain, 257 for France, and 115 for Germany. In other words, we have more salaried consular officers than any nation on earth.

In feed officers we again lead the list, France and Germany having none, Great Britain 413, and the United States 757, or a total in the consular service of 1,041 officials paid salaries and fees against 678 for Great Britain, 257 for France, and 115 for Germany. In other words, it takes nearly two Americans to do the work of one Englishman; nearly four Americans to do the work of one Frenchman; and nearly ten Americans to do the work of one German.

There is nothing contained in the report of the committee to show that the budget includes all the expenditures for our diplomatic and consular services. For all we know, there may be items on other appropriation bills, that do not appear and are not referred to here. The budget of the United States as now before us amounts to $1,929,025. The budget of France amounts to only $1,856,480, which includes not only salaries for diplomatists and consuls, but rent and entertaining allowances as well. The budget of Germany amounts to $2,126,925, and that of Great Britain to $2,450,260.

The proportion of expenditures on the consular and diplomatic services compared with the total commerce of the four great commercial nations is equally instructive. Our total commerce amounts to $2,310,937,156. The cost of our diplomatic and consular services in proportion to the total commerce of the United States is eighty-three one-thousandths of 1 per cent. That of Great Britain is the least. With a commerce of $4,349,272,330, her diplomatic and consular budget is fifty-six one-thousands of 1 per cent; that of Germany is seventy-eight one-thousandths of 1 per cent of her commerce of $2,681,606,000; that of France the highest, one-tenth of 1 per cent of her commerce of $1,776,142,600. It is a fair estimate of the relative cost of the services to compare the cost of maintaining the commerce between any two countries—that is, the cost of the diplomatic and consular services, for example, of Germany and the United States, or of France and the United States.

It would be unfair to compare Great Britain with the United States, for there are so many more posts in Great Britain that we must fill than Great Britain must fill in the United States. Thus with the same commerce, of course, between the two countries, the United States has in France a total of 20 salaried consular officers and 56 feed, amounting to 76 in all, with salaries of $47,100 and fees of $15,766, or $62,866 in all, as against a total of 10 paid officials on the part of France, drawing salaries of $50,400, or $12,000 less. The same result appears with Germany. We have in Germany 35 salaried consuls and 61 feed, or a total of 96, at a cost of $78,700 in salaries and $31,270 in fees, or $109,970 in all, as against a total for Germany in the United States of 12 consular officers, with salaries amounting to $63,250. So much for generalities.

This bill carries amendments numbering, I think, 16, against which points of order will lie. The proposed increases of consular salaries are not as excessive as they appear upon the surface, for the reason that living is high in all the ports for which increases are recommended, and salaries paid by us are much less than the consuls of other great powers receive. The provision for a new secretary of legation in Switzerland, however, stands on an entirely different basis. It is said that without this new official there is no one to act in case our minister to Switzerland goes away, the suggestion being that the United States minister in Switzerland is so devoted to his duty that he never leaves his post.

Until lately there was no secretary of legation in Belgium or in Holland or in Norway and Sweden, and we have none to-day in Denmark or Portugal or Persia, or in several of the South American countries; yet, Mr. Chairman, there is no case of an American minister who has not with patriotic regularity taken advantage of the departmental rules and taken at the same time his annual leave of absence. It is also a fact that until 1891, I think it was, in Switzerland we had only a minister resident, at a salary of $5,000 a year, who performed also the functions of a consul-general at Berne. The salary was then raised to $7,500 and the consular functions were conferred on the consul at Berne, who was a new official, and the consul at St. Gall was made consul-general.

Great Britain, which is famous for the large salaries which she pays to her diplomatic representatives, and who always uphold the dignity of the country as far as the externals are concerned, has an envoy at Berne who receives the lowest salary of any envoy in the British service—$7,250. He has no secretary of legation nor unpaid attaché, and yet he succeeds in performing his duties with apparent satisfaction to Great Britain. It can not be that the commerce with Switzerland involves so many diplomatic questions that a secretary is essential, for, while the United States is only fifth in its commerce with Switzerland, it has to-day six salaried consuls and ten feed vice-consuls and agents, while Germany, who heads the list of countries trading with Switzerland, does her whole consular work with one consul-general and one consul.

France, which is No. 2, does the work with two consuls-general and one consul, while Great Britain, which is No. 3, requires four feed consuls and one feed vice-consul. So that that can not be the reason for this increase. The only possible purpose for the creation of this new office is that it is intended to increase the importance and the dignity of the individual who is to fill the mission. Now, I have absolutely no doubt that the gentleman who has lately been nominated as minister to Switzerland will fill the important functions of his position with great satisfaction to the United States, but it scarcely seems to me that it is wise legislation, that it is patriotic legislation, to add one office, even an insignificant secretary of legation, and to still further swell the burdens of the people, though it be but by $1,500 a year, for the purpose of adding importance and dignity to the gentleman lately sent to the Republic of Switzerland.

I realize that if we should not agree to this amendment the Senate will doubtless restore it, but such is my admiration and respect for the Committee on Foreign Affairs that I should prefer to see the Senate assume the responsibility, and I shall at the proper time relieve our committee of assuming it. So, Mr. Chairman, in what little I have had to say I have tried to treat the great Committee on Foreign Affairs with all due respect. If I have seemed disrespectful I can only fall back upon the time-honored doctrine that the man in the street is entitled to his opinions of his betters, and that even a cat may look at a king. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have listened with some surprise to the statements of the gentleman from New York, and before he sits down I should simply like to ask him whether he is really in favor of decreasing the salaries of the consuls of the United States, or whether he is in favor of raising the salaries and reducing the force?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am sorry that I have not made myself understood by the gentleman. I certainly intended to say, and I think I did say, that I considered our consular service underpaid and overmanned. The salaries that we pay, as I explained at the beginning of my remarks, are lower than any paid by any of our great trade rivals, while it requires double, treble, and five times as many men to do the work as are required to do the work for other countries. In other words, I would reduce the number and increase the salaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5561. An act for the relief of S. R. Green.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2296) to amend an act approved March 2, 1895, relating to public printing.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Adam Stuber, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I want to thank my good friend from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] for the valuable information which he has furnished for the RECORD in connection with the consular service. My friend from New York never addresses the House upon any subject that he does not add to the information of the House, and that which ought to be useful and profitable to us at all times. And I want to say to my friend that as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I shall study the statistics which he has furnished with much care. But I can not consent to have the gentleman from New York make some of the statements which he did make with reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs without a challenge as to the correctness of those statements.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he does not want to do me an injustice. I expressly excepted from my statement the distinguished members of the minority of the committee.

Mr. DINSMORE. Nevertheless—I would not do my friend an injustice at any time—his statement was that there always came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimous reports; that the members of the minority, however respectable and ornamental they might be to the committee, were not supposed to have any other function or duty to perform there except to assent to the reports made by the majority.

Mr. Chairman, my friend who is usually so accurate and correct is not accurate in this respect, because, if he will reflect, that committee has among its membership my robust friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and my very vigilant and active friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], and a number of other gentlemen who succeed in making themselves at least heard in that committee, and who are charged with and who feel the responsibility imposed upon them as members of the committee and would convey at least a message to this House if there lurked in the bill anything which was dangerous to the welfare of the country.

I want to call your attention, furthermore, to what appears to me to be another error on the part of my friend and very industrious legislator. He knows all the avenues that lead to information. He said he had not been able to inform himself with reference to the items of this bill or the facts connected with it. Indeed, I believe he said it was the only appropriation bill which comes to this House upon which members of the House could not be informed.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that there is so little of change in this bill from the bills which have been passed hitherto, and therefore so little to explain, that my friend has from this very fact suspected that there might be something dangerous behind it.

The report from the committee gives every item in detail. Every increase is mentioned specifically except the clerk hire, a little over $2,000, in the whole consular service of the United States, where the particular clerkships are not mentioned. And if this is not sufficient, my friend could have had access at any time to the estimates furnished by the Department for increases.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] has said that if at any time there comes to the Committee on Foreign Affairs a proposal to increase a salary or create a new office that there is universally a unanimous report to the House. I will take very great delight in furnishing my friend the estimates of the State Department to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that he may see the suggestions made by the Department of State as to increases and things which that Department wants to have done, and nearly all of which the committee has denied. Why, my friend, if he is agitated with the small increases made in the bill, would have paralysis if he could read the estimates of the State Department, which he could have read at any time.

Now, let me say a word in conclusion, when I have not expected to say any word at all, that all the items of increase mentioned here and which are stated in the report have been considered carefully by the whole Committee on Foreign Affairs and all agreed to by every member of the minority as proper and right. They are insignificant, because the foreign service grows, the business of the different consulates grows, and in some of the legations the business grows. We did give to the legation at Switzerland a secretary. I think it was right. I think he ought to have one. If I did not think so I would not have consented to it. I am not one of those who desire to dwarf the foreign service. My friend suggests it ought to be reformed. I know it needs reform, but not such as is contained in a bill which ere long will be reported to this House providing that the foreign service shall be put under the civil service. There is not one item to which the gentleman has referred in this matter of reform.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DINSMORE. Certainly.

Mr. VANDIVER. In view of the experience and well-known acquaintance with the subject which the gentleman possesses, I would like him to give us his opinion of the general proposition announced by the gentleman from New York, as to the advisability of increasing the salaries and decreasing the number of people connected with the consular service?

Mr. DINSMORE. I will say, in answer to that, I was about to make a brief observation upon that subject. I am not sure that there are consulates that ought to be dispensed with. I think not. There may be some, but I am decidedly in favor of substituting a system of salaries for that of fees, permitting them to be paid by notarial fees. I think it ought to be done, and I think it would improve the service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I only arose to say a word in defense of the minority members of the committee who were embraced in the criticism of my distinguished friend from New York, and to make the explanation which I have made with reference to this bill and its provisions. The changes are infinitesimal, but each year there are some slight changes made in the appropriation bill for the foreign service. Every year brings a slight increase, and the demands of the service seem to require that they shall be made in this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I am free to admit that, like the gentleman on the left [Mr. DOUGLAS of New York], at the conclusion of the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] I was left in doubt as to whether he was in favor of a reduction of the salaries of the consular and diplomatic officers or an increase. This appropriation bill now pending before you for consideration carries no substantial increase. In fact, every single increase embodied in this bill was recommended by the State Department, and substantial reasons were given why the increase should be made.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] would inferentially have you believe that the consular and diplomatic service of the United States needs reform. It may be that the remarks interjected by the gentleman from New York are not for the purpose of affecting this bill, but for the purpose of influencing you on a bill to be introduced here within a few days for the purpose of reforming the consular service of the United States and placing it under civil-service regulations, as it were, notwithstanding the fact, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that every publicist of a foreign conntry that has investigated the consular service of the United States has uttered only words of praise concerning the same; notwithstanding the fact that the Yankee consular officer has developed the trade of the United States more rapidly than consular officers of any other country have the trade of their country within the past two or three decades. With one notable exception, notwithstanding that I am a partisan Democrat, I unhesitatingly assert that the diplomatic service of the State Department of the United States for the past four years has reflected distinguished credit upon itself and the people of the United States.

I can not understand the purpose of the insinuation made by the gentleman from New York; his insinuations go beyond his assertions, but he asserts that the minority membership of the Committee on Foreign Affairs at all times assents or consents to increases of salary. I assert, and challenge his contradiction of the proposition, that no increases of salaries or allowances have been made without substantial reasons having been given for the increase. I defy him to dispute this assertion. With reference to the salary of the secretary of the legation to Switzerland, I will state to the gentleman that that has been recommended by the State Department. The minister being sometimes called away, and the necessity being apparent that some representative of the United States should be there to take his place during his absence, the creation of the position of secretary was recommended. In reference to the additional consular officers and the increases of salaries of other consuls and for clerks, if the gentleman had taken the trouble and time to investigate he would have found that substantial reasons have been given for every increase that has been made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In the matter of the increases of salaries for clerks, to which he refers, the report simply gives the names of the places and the amount as $2,300, and that is all.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman permit me to answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I simply ask for information.

Mr. BURLESON. I will ask if you desire that they should not be paid and want to strike them out?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I take it that the committee knew what they were doing when they put them there.

Mr. BURLESON. If there is any objection the gentleman can raise the point of order and strike them out.

Mr. HITT. I will answer the gentleman from New York if he desires it. The committee authorized one of the members to prepare that report, and in preparing the report he set out in detail every change made in the existing law where it involved a sum above what was paid, except where it was a very small amount, as in cases of little increases of allowance. The committee very carefully and sparingly made increases of $200 or $250 and similar small amounts in consulates where investigation showed that there was work done to warrant it. This bill was gone over by the committee without recognizing or knowing—I say it to the honor of my colleagues—there were Democrats or Republicans on that committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman will permit me. As to the items that are spoken of, with the exception of Cape Town, no explanation is made of the increased importance of the business at the place. The committee merely says with reference to the other items "they are believed to be meritorious."

Mr. HITT. "The items of increase," the report reads, "made because of enlarged business, higher rate of living, or increased duties," and these increased duties and higher rates of living and other reasons are set out at great length in a volume I hold in my hand, which has just been printed, giving reports from all our consuls, and was before the committee; and if the gentleman from New York will refer to it, he will find in great detail the business of every consulate we have in the world.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have concluded what I desired to say. As far as cutting down the number of consular officers is concerned, I am not in favor of it. As far as the increase of pay beyond the amount set forth in the bill is concerned, I am opposed to that. If the gentleman from New York is in favor of cutting down their number and increasing their pay, he may have an opportunity to give reasons for the faith that is in him when the bill for reforming the consular service is presented to this House for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, coming from the city of New York, which is the greatest shipping port from which American goods go abroad, I am very much surprised to have heard the statements of another gentleman who also represents our city on the floor of this House. I might say I listened with much regret and great dissatisfaction to his remarks, because I believe the merchants of New York doing an enormous export trade are decidedly in favor of a different position on the consular question, and their Representatives should take a firm stand in their interest.

There is no doubt whatever but that the consular service of America has been justly criticized for many years, and that we need greater efficiency. I do not care to throw any blame on men who have often ably while in the Government's service aided this country to increase our export trade in foreign lands, but I do say, and do not believe anybody can question it, that in many cases men have gone abroad who are not fitted to represent us as consuls; not because some of them were not men of intelligence and education, but their commercial training was unfortunately frequently absolutely nil. They had had no ability whatever to properly understand the requirements and the necessities of a country growing as fast as we are and gradually assuming the commercial supremacy of the world.

I have talked with many consuls myself, my firm having for many years done an export trade running into millions of dollars per annum, and these gentlemen have often asked for information, statistics, and details as to the handling of their positions, which no man leaving this country to represent us in so important a capacity should have to ask, but rather should be thoroughly posted regarding.

Last year when I made a few remarks on this point some gentlemen questioned, and stood up nobly for the consuls, but they misinterpreted the intention of my statements. I believe men should be trained for the consular service and be sent well equipped to their duties. The ministers can do largely the social duties, and the consuls should work intelligently to aid our commerce.

Mr. DINSMORE. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he believes that men should be trained in the consular service. I would like to ask where he would have them trained?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will answer the question by saying that the gentleman from Texas who spoke said he understood that there was shortly to be introduced in the House a bill leading up to the betterment of consular conditions. Now, personally, I will say to the gentleman who has spoken that I am in favor of having a college to educate young men for the consular service of this country just the same as we educate them to-day for the Army or the Navy.

I regard the commercial supremacy of this land as of far more importance than the supremacy of the Army or the Navy. I believe as a peacemaking power we will accomplish more for the world's good by increasing our trade intercourse with others, through the instrumentality of the consular and diplomatic service, backed up by our merchants, than we will by building up armies and a navy to destroy. I favor having young men carefully trained who will be sent abroad and take their place in minor positions, either under ministers or general consuls, and who can work their way up by study and merit. I do not care whether they are protected by the civil service or not. The gentleman from Texas seemed to have a horror that they might be put under the civil service. That point I have never considered.

Mr. DINSMORE. I wanted the gentleman to express his opinion as to how they should be educated, because no such suggestion is made in the bill to which the gentleman refers and which will come into the House later. The establishment of a school has not been suggested to us, and I wanted to see to what extent the gentleman might be desirous of going.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am disposed to go to the extreme on that subject.

Mr. DINSMORE. I have observed that, since the gentleman said it was more important to build up the consular service than it is to build up an army and navy. I have understood there was quite a value attached to the action of Congress on the other side of this House; but I did not before know that gentlemen there put it above everything else.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I certainly put peace above war always.

The statement is often made that the consuls of the United States have been largely instrumental in building up the enormous trade that this country enjoys to-day. I wish to say, from an observation of twenty-five years in the export trade, that that is not a statement that can be borne out by facts. The merchants of this country, the men who have taken an interest in the export trade, have built up that trade mostly by their own efforts, sending their emissaries throughout the world at an enormous expense. In that way they have largely created the business.

I do not want to take away from any consul his fair share of deserved gratitude, but make plain that our consuls do not deserve all of the credit by any means. The men who have gone into the export business of this country have shown just as much energy and just as much determination in advancing that trade as the manufacturer in this country has shown in building up our magnificent home business.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman allow me one more question? I do not wish to disturb him at all, but I would like him to state to the House whether he knows of any other country in the world which he thinks has a more efficient corps of consular officers than the United States.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to say that I think there are several. I think that the Germans and the English have a much more efficient service.

Mr. DINSMORE. More capable consular officers?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did not say more capable personally, but as a branch of the service for the promotion and the advancement of trade I consider that they are much more efficient as a class and more energetic than the average American consul. I do not wish to be forced on the floor of the House to-day into stating anything that may be considered really detrimental to the consuls from this country, but when a leading question of this kind is put to me I must come out fairly and say that I do think other countries in this respect have decidedly the advantage over us.

In regard to salaries, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] appeared to think that some of these officers are well paid, but I consider there is hardly a salary paid to-day to a United States consul in a tropical country in any part of this world which is not inadequate and absolutely niggardly. These salaries ought to be doubled; and when you criticise a small appropriation of a little over $2,000,000 for the trade protection of 80,000,000 of people, I contend that instead of having a $2,000,000 appropriation we ought to have a consular appropriation of at least $5,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Make it ten.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would with pleasure "make it ten" if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would allow me and the amount was necessary, because I believe that on the floor of this House in many cases we throw away $10,000,000 and more when it would be far better spent in improving the consular service; and I think the business men handling the grand industries of the State of Pennsylvania and the manufacturing enterprises of the entire country would stand with me rather than with the gentleman from Pennsylvania on that statement,

But, gentlemen, I did not intend to take up the time of the House to the extent that I have done. I had prepared no remarks and did not propose to speak on this bill, but I was stirred up by my colleague from New York; and I hope, therefore, he will excuse me for the reply I have made. I certainly have not intended to say anything to his personal detriment.

I will conclude by saying a word in reference to two places where salaries have been advanced—Cape Town, South Africa, and Sydney, New South Wales. These salaries I spoke about last year when the diplomatic and consular bill was discussed, but was not successful in obtaining adequate increases at the time. I have since interviewed the State Department and the chairman of this committee, to whom my thanks are due for his courtesy, and who, with great judgment and consideration, has considered that the arguments which were advanced by me last year were justifiable; and Cape Town has now been placed in a higher rank in the consular service and the salary at Sydney advanced, and the increase is just, proper, and wise. To-day this country is doing yearly from twenty-five to thirty million dollars' worth of trade with South Africa, and the business is increasing faster than our trade with any other country in the world.

Sydney is a city of nearly 350,000 people. Seven to eight million dollars' worth of American merchandise is exported there every year. Surely the consul of the United States at that place ought to have a salary of at least $2,500; and I will say that I propose to go further and fight for our representative there—I do not even remember his name—until I get his salary still further raised, if possible, to at least $4,000 or $5,000. He can not live there decently, go into society to the extent necessary, and deport himself among other consuls in a proper way without this fair and reasonable amount.

The upbuilding of our consular service, the placing of men of business experience and expert training in all the important places abroad, and especially South America, South Africa, Federated Australia, China, Japan, India, New Zealand, etc., with payments sufficient to enable them to live like gentlemen, should be agreeable to all in this House, and will undoubtedly meet with the warm approval of the entire country. It should not be a political issue between the two parties, but treated in a broad-minded, liberal manner for the good of our country and the further building up of our industries, and we can well afford a couple of millions more each year to place this department on the high level of usefulness and efficiency so necessary for our benefit.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 15, 1903:

H. R. 15480. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. Barker.

On January 19, 1903:

H. R. 1733. An act for the relief of John A. Mason.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is now under consideration by a committee of this House a bill, the purpose of which is to work a much-needed reform in the consular service of the country. I do not anticipate that it will become a law, and I greatly fear that during this Congress it will not even reach the stage for discussion. For that reason, and because they are more or less pertinent to the bill now before the House, I shall submit a few observations on the character of service our business interests get from American representatives abroad.

I do not cavil at politicians. In honor, in honesty, in character, and in ability I believe politicians usually rank as high as their critics. I do not object to having consular and diplomatic posts filled by politicians, but I do believe that the best and most capable politicians available should be chosen when appointments are to be made. But it has not always been done. Such appointments have been made matters of patronage for this or that Senator or Representative, and broken down and worthless politicians have thus too often been chosen to fill them.

Having watched with interest the career of Police Commissioner and Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt, I thought surely when he came to the Presidency that the reign of purity in politics had begun. But in spite of his great ability and good intentions the President has been, in such matters, a distinct disappointment to many of his friends, some of whom are in the Democratic party. His appointments have not all been up to the standard. There are glaring exceptions, of course, but, Mr. Chairman, if those of his appointees that have come within the range of my observation are samples of the best men in the Republican party, the limit of righteous men needed to save Sodom has been amended and reduced.

I realize how impossible it is for the President to know the character of all the men to whom he issues commissions, and for that reason I shall favor a law which will partly relieve him of the responsibility of appointment, and the result of which will be, I hope, an improvement of the service.

I know that the President is beset with importunities and hedged about with lies, and perhaps that is the reason so many appointments have been made, both at home and abroad, which reflect no credit either upon him or the country.

But I shall refer more particularly to some of the foreign appointments. The chief work of our consuls is to keep an eye open to the commercial situation in the countries to which they are sent and to report what they see and learn for the benefit of our merchants, manufacturers, and farmers. To do this work well one would naturally think that they should be familiar with the language of the country in which they are to reside, but that qualification never seems to be insisted upon nor considered.

I believe it is the exception to send out consuls who speak the language of the people whose business affairs they are to report. And, indeed, Mr. Chairman, the diplomatic appointments are frequently no better in that respect. Men high in diplomatic rank have been known to spend years in foreign countries without acquiring even a speaking acquaintance with the language of the people among whom they have lived for so long.

Whether that is due to stupidity or indifference I do not know, but either way it is a fact that reflects discreditably upon our country and causes us to be laughed at by other nations.

Certain consular places appear to have been attached to particular States, Representatives, or Senators for purposes of patronage. Time and again the same consulate has been filled from the same State and, beyond all doubt, upon the recommendation of the same men. There is no reason to believe that these States and statesmen have a monopoly of the sort of talent required to fill such offices, yet they seem always able to control them. If it is not conspicuous talent it must be resistless influence which secures these appointments.

The system of appointment by favor works so very badly that I sincerely hope that when the bill to reform the consular service does come before the House it will, in some shape or other, receive the support of every member who believes that merit, not influence, should control in the selection of such officers.

I have often had occasion to visit Mexico. I go to enjoy the beauty of the climate and to prosecute business ventures. These visits have been made annually for several years, and I have come to know Mexico fairly well from the Pacific to the Gulf, and from Arizona to the southern boundary. I have found her people uniformly courteous and anxious to cultivate friendly relations and to do business with the United States. Mexico is sending her sons and daughters to the United States to study our language and our business methods. At home the young Mexicans are trying to learn the language of this country. This has gratified me because I have wanted to see our trade with Mexico developed. There is certainly more for us in the trade of Mexico and Central and South America than in far-off Asia, and yet we seem to have scorned it, and sometimes through the incivility and incapacity of our officers to have repelled the Mexican overtures for friendship and for trade.

Our consular officers ought to be our first and most active agents in the development of this trade, and, to do justice to worthy men, some of them are, notably our present consul-general in the City of Mexico, Mr. Barlow, whose work has come under my observation. But I regret to say there are some of the other sort.

Last summer, when I was in Saltillo, the American colony was, just as it happened to strike them, interested in, amused at, or disgusted by recent happenings at the consulate of the United States in that city.

That consulate for years appears to have been made an asylum for invalids and drunkards. If the same sort of appointments are to be made hereafter, the regulations of the State Department should demand a certificate of graduation from the Keeley cure before issuing a commission.

It makes an American blush to hear the stories that are told about the antics of some of our official representatives. According to these stories, those that were respectable were too far gone with consumption to attend to business, and the others were unfit for it because they were generally bordering on or recovering from a case of delirium tremens.

I was told of this condition of affairs by men of character and substance, by men who stand as high there and at home as anybody, and I believe that every word they told me was the truth.

A few days before I arrived in Saltillo the acting American consul was the central figure in a most disgraceful affair. The local papers were making him a feature in each issue. He was a yellow-journal prize of the first rank.

There is a newspaper published in Saltillo called "El Siglo XX" (The Twentieth Century). In its issue of the 21st of August, 1902, it directed the attention of the police to the fact that the proprietor of a certain American hotel was in the habit of hanging soiled bedclothes on the front balcony, and in language that was not at all impolite suggested that the exhibition was unsightly; that it was on the principal street of the city, directly in front of the normal school for girls, and that it should not be permitted to continue. I read the article, and so far as I could see there was nothing in it to cause serious offense.

But the acting consul of our Government did not take that view of it. Although he did not own the hotel, he decided to resent the affront to his country and to his countryman who did own it.

In El Siglo XX issued on the 24th of August the story of how he sought to protect the dignity of his country was told. Conspicuously displayed on the front page was an article with this heading: "Our editor on the point of being assassinated by the consul of the United States—Assault at the office of the Twentieth Century." Then followed a card by the publishers of the paper. I have translated it, and will read to the House what this Mexican publisher had to say about our representative:

At every step the North Americans refer to their assumed superiority over our race, and express their contempt for our penal laws, but their presumption and incivility each day illustrate the character of our people who know the value of our laws and the energy and rectitude of our authorities.

A very sensational assault was committed the day before yesterday at the place of publication of our newspaper by the consul of the United States, who with arms in his hands and accompanied by two more North Americans entered the office of El Siglo XX, approached our editor, and placing a pistol at his breast uttered obscene words.

This treacherous assault had for its origin the publication of an item in which, as our readers will remember, we denounced to the police the habit of a certain American hotel of having bed clothes exposed on the outside balcony on one of the principal streets of the city.

Notwithstanding its criminal character, this ferocious lawlessness had a curious and amusing side, and that is this: Mr. Fuentes Fragoso, when he saw himself committed to an altercation, by raising his hand to his belt where the pistol is usually carried, pretended to have arms, at which rapid gesture the two companions of the consul of the United States took to flight, while the latter apologized for carrying weapons. Seeing the timidity of his assailants, our editor had them sent to the police station. They were punished by the authorities with a fine, reserving to Mr. Fragoso the right to prosecute criminally. This act, as can be well understood, is in itself a grave offense, because it is a lawless and criminal deed, premeditated and treacherous, and was done by an individual who is invested by his nation with a mission, noble and elevated, who has misconceived his duties in doing these things. We will give our readers the benefit of any further incidents that may occur.

I hope it has not often happened that editors in foreign countries have been called upon to comment upon the representatives of our Government in such a manner. Mr. Chairman, I have sometimes criticised our authorities, and particularly those who serve us through the State Department, for their failure to protect American interests abroad. We have had, and I will venture to say, still have men representing us in Mexico who utterly fail to do their duty in the way of protecting American citizens residing and doing business in that country. But in my indignation at their failure to do a plain duty I have never ventured to suggest that American consuls and diplomatic agents should play the part of bully.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Just for a question.

Mr. ADAMS. Have any charges been preferred against this man at the State Department?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not mentioned any man. If the gentleman will wait until I get through, perhaps we will develop his man. Charges have been made repeatedly against the diplomatic representative of our Government in Mexico, and I will say in that connection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have a large personal acquaintance among the Americans residing in the Republic of Mexico, thousands of them, Republicans and Democrats, and I have yet to find one of either party who has confidence in or respect for that representative of this Government. Yet the charges against him have been disregarded.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman has not yet answered my question. I asked if there had been any charges made against him in respect to the matter referred to—any charges laid before the State Department?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did misunderstand the gentleman, I am sorry to say. I will state that that particular man left one evening after sundown and before sunrise the next morning while I was in the city.

Mr. ADAMS. Were any charges against him presented to the State Department?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I really do not know. He did not wait for them to be made. He left.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman was criticising the State Department, saying that they took no notice of the conduct of the officers and servants, and I simply wish to ask the gentleman if any charges have been preferred.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I made no such statement that the State Department took no notice of charges made against officers. The State Department always does take some notice of it, but rarely, I regret to say, acts on it in the way I think it should.

Already the Spanish-American people look upon us with suspicion. Not only are they annoyed by the uncivil assertion of superiority referred to by the editor of the Twentieth Century, but they think that we are seeking occasion to seize their territory and sovereignty. They think that we are most dangerous when we undertake the rôle of peacemaker, and protestations of philanthropic designs do not calm them.

So it is easy to be seen, Mr. Chairman, that a consul who acts as our representative in Saltillo did can do more harm to our trade in one day than 50 commercial travelers can undo in a month.

We seem to have been specially unfortunate on more than one occasion in having as our representatives in Mexico men with an uncontrollable thirst. The country still remembers the special envoy sent down by a Democratic President some years ago. He got drunk at El Paso, on the northern frontier, and painted a broad red streak down to the City of Mexico, more than a thousand miles to the south.

I will state, further, Mr. Chairman, that they do say in the City of Mexico, where that spree is still held up as the standard of excellence which it is possible to attain in that particular line of work, that the atmosphere was lurid about the capital for a week after his arrival. [Laughter.] Now, I have told you about a Democratic spree and I have something to tell you about another.

I was told by an American commercial traveler in Mexico of another of our consular representatives whose thirst, unfortunately, was altogether disproportioned to his income. His money was sometimes exhausted, but his desire for drink never. One day he felt that he must have a cocktail, but the price of the beverage was not at hand. However, to a resourceful American that was a trifling obstacle. He took his country's flag, "Old Glory," as some of our friends love to call it, and pawned it for 40 cents. I have been told that for 40 cents judiciously handled one can keep very drunk in Mexico for a couple of days.

When Cecil Rhodes was released from the besiegers of Ladysmith he went to Cape Town, where, after the custom of all English-speaking people, his restoration to liberty was celebrated by a banquet. He made a speech in which he said that the greatest commercial asset in the world was the British flag. Yet, I daresay that in the whole history of that banner there can be found no instance where its actual commercial value has been so convincingly demonstrated as was done by our consul in Mexico. I congratulate the country that he has been out of the service for many years.

Mr. Chairman, since I have committed these remarks to type I have received some further information from Mexico. A few days ago there occurred in the city of Saltillo a robbery of a carload of coal. This occurred so short a time ago, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], that I fancy time enough has hardly elapsed in which to transmit charges, if anyone desires to make charges, from that city to the Secretary of State here. A carload of coal was stolen. And in passing I will say, Mr. Chairman, in consideration of the peculiar difficulties which surround us in the city of Washington at this time, and in view of the fact that my own coal bunkers are very low, I might ordinarily find it in my heart to forgive this man at least a part of that offense, but, being a high official and representative of the United States Government, the offense with which, as you see, he is charged is too serious to be overlooked or treated with levity.

Here is a paper called "Las Noticias," printed also in the city of Saltillo, in which there is a reference to the theft of a carload of coal from the railway station of the Mexican National Railway Company. Here is an English paper printed in the city of Monterey, called "The Monterey News," which alludes to the matter and which has this humiliating headline:

Theft of coal in Saltillo—Four prominent Americans are implicated.

Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that this paper says that one of the four Americans implicated in the theft of that coal is what it is pleased to call the "high diplomatic functionary" of the United States, now vice-consul in the city of Saltillo. The Spanish paper contained an article which I this morning translated.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the name of that vice-consul.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will give it to the gentleman in a moment. I will read the translation:

THE COAL ROBBERY AT THE NATIONAL.

The legal proceedings in the minor court No. 2 relative to the robbery of coal from the National Railroad has been followed eagerly. The author of the robbery has not yet been caught. The declarations of the carters who hauled the coal away and of various employees of the company have been taken. Some of these declarations point to a certain high diplomatic functionary of this city.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a communication which reached me yesterday, advising me of the fact that there had been sent by registered mail a package of affidavits and court documents, taken from the court records, which I regret to say have not yet turned up; but in that communication I find a reference to the man who ran away last summer between darkness and daylight, and to the present acting consul down there. Speaking of the previous unfortunate incidents in connection with the consulate and the untimely death of two or three men sent down there, this gentleman says:

Consul Williams's place was filled by Mr. Hanna appointing Dr. Samuel Bennett, a dentist living and practicing in Saltillo, acting vice-consul, pending the arrival of Mr. Williams's successor.

Whether the statement as to the method of appointment is technically correct I am not prepared to say. It possibly means that the man was appointed on the recommendation of the consul-general. I am not familiar with the procedure and do not know. Anyway, he was appointed and was acting when I arrived in the city last year. The letter of my correspondent continues:

Dr. Bennett was an unlettered, an untutored, idiot, the object of contempt of the resident Americans and the subject of ridicule by the natives. See Exhibits B, C, and D—

Those, unluckily, are in the batch of documents which have been sent by registered mail and have not yet arrived—which will give an idea of his ignorance. He left Saltillo between two suns to escape prosecution for defamation of character, to which purpose he prostituted the consular office.

Now I will give you the name of the present acting consul—

Dr. T. N. Jeffries was appointed acting vice-consul by Mr. Hanna, vice Dr. Bennett, who resigned after his episode with the editor of The Twentieth Century. See that paper, date August 24, 1902, inclosed.

Dr. Jeffries is reputed—

And this refers to his reputation anterior to his coming to Mexico. My correspondent goes further into details, but as they are only suspicions I will not repeat them, but I will get down to what are alleged to be facts and susceptible of proof in the city of Saltillo.

He is now mixed up in a public scandal, growing out of the robbery of a carload of coal from the Mexican National Railroad, in which he figures as "particeps criminis" in the robbery, being of the "four well-known Americans" alluded to in the Monterey News of January 1, 1903, and is the "functionario diplomatico" of which The Twentieth Century of December 20, 1902, writes.

Dr. Jeffries is a scandalmonger of the first water, and as a fomenter of enmity and discord among the Americans residing at Saltillo his equal can not be found anywhere on earth. He is a low-down gambler, is respected by no one, and is despised by natives and by foreigners of every nationality as a shameless disgrace to the office he holds and the Government he represents.

He is now owing (and will be sued for it within the next few days) $300, money loaned him to pay his losings at "craps," and which loan he repudiates as a gambling debt.

Think of it, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House! We had a distinguished ambassador once who introduced the real American game, that of poker, to the effete monarchies of the Old World, but think of having gone from poker down to "craps." And he is not even our representative in Haiti or Santo Domingo.

His nightly diversion is to play at "craps" until 2 or 3 o'clock.

Mr. Chairman, in this morning's Washington Post there is a little paragraph on the editorial page, which part of that publication I read with pleasure every day, and, meaning no disparagement to the distinguished gentleman who writes the leaders, which I also read with interest, I must confess that I get particular pleasure from these paragraphs. It says:

This thing of sitting behind a cinch Speakership hand must be becoming rather monotonous to the Hon. JOE CANNON.

While the metaphor may not appeal to the understanding of everybody here, I dare say that most of us are more or less familiar with what is called in this paper a "cinch hand," and would like to be even more familiar with it. But imagine that paragraph writer having to go to the game of craps to get his metaphor!

Mr. MANN. Some of us think as much of one game as we do of the other.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, de gustibus non est disputandum.

Mr. MANN. I never play either, and you would be better off if you never had.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am going to ask permission to print with my remarks one or two of these documents, and before closing I want to say that very recently, while reading a book published by the late Mr. Matias Romero, who was for many years the distinguished and able representative of his Government in this country, I ran across this paragraph in the conclusion to his introduction. In that paragraph he said:

I shall be well satisfied if I succeed in my purpose of placing in the reach of the people of the United States a knowledge of Mexican affairs, which is the result of many years of experience and of an intimate acquaintance with the condition of things in my own country, and will feel still more pleased if I succeed in accomplishing my object of contributing to establish a lasting friendship between the two sister Republics.

Mr. Romero was a great statesman and a good man. His aspirations were for the legitimate development of his country, and he thoroughly recognized the fact that that could best be done by friendly commercial intercourse between his country and ours.

Neither friendship nor trade can be promoted by sending incompetent and uncivil representatives to Mexico. It is high time that we recognized the fact that the presence of so much of our capital and so many of our people in Mexico is likely to produce many controversies and business complications which will have to be handled in a diplomatic way, and in that work we ought to employ men who will not only command the respect of the Mexican Government, but the confidence of our people who are engaged in business in Mexico, which, I regret to say, is not the case now. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas with infinite satisfaction, as it shows that interest is gradually growing in a subject which I and others have been presenting to the attention of our colleagues for many years, namely, the importance of reorganizing our consular service. I regret to say that criticisms have been made of those of us who favor that measure. I am somewhat worried about the health of the gentleman from New York; for, laboring as he does under the heavy weight of the Committee on Ways and Means, with the fatherly care that he assumes over the Committee on Military Affairs, on which he served with such distinction, I must admit, now he has gathered under his wing the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I am worried, Mr. Chairman, at the great stress that the gentleman labors under. In fact, so great is that stress that he does not take the time to look into the subject discussed with that care he usually does, and that is the reason I am worried at his far reaching out. He began his remarks with the statement that the diplomatic and consular service had all to do with the expansion of our commerce. I would call his attention to the fact that the diplomatic service has nothing whatever to do in its functions with reference to the expansion of our commerce. The consular service has. He then finds fault with the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He thinks that this report of 30 pages in extent, which is nothing but routine in character, gives no information to the House, and that he can not understand it; that no items were set forth, and no information, such as is proper, was submitted to the House in explanation of our report. That, coming from a younger member of the House, might be inquired about, but coming from a gentleman who has served so long as has the gentleman from New York is a most astonishing utterance. In reporting the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill to the House every item is given. The salary of every minister, secretary, and consul is set forth. There is probably no appropriation bill that comes before this House that gives so much of the details as the one now under consideration.

The gentleman then criticised the committee and undertook to find fault with the increases of salaries, and before concluding his remarks stated that every increase in salaries submitted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs received his approbation. Our distinguished chairman has already called his attention to the Book of Estimates, that covers hundreds of pages, which is submitted to us by the State Department, and very few of the increases recommended are granted. And yet the gentleman complains of the shortness of our report. And then scarcely had this criticism passed away from the lips of the gentleman until he announced that our service was underpaid and favored an increase of the salaries. That is the difficulty of the proposition that he submits to the committee. In the first part of his remarks he criticises the raising of salaries and then announced that they should be raised.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I would like to be informed if any of our representatives are able to live on the compensation received by them?

Mr. ADAMS. Some of them are able to do so. Others are most inadequately paid.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Is it not generally the fact that the men who go to foreign posts must be men of considerable wealth and large means in order to entertain and fill the position in the diplomatic service?

Mr. ADAMS. There is scarcely a post in our service, I will say to the gentleman, in my judgment, where the salary is adequate and the compensation sufficient to enable our representatives to live in such a way as is becoming to our Republic.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does the gentleman believe that that is a fair proposition? Does not the gentleman believe that there ought to be sufficient compensation to enable a man of character, a man of merit, and not only of money, to occupy these places?

Mr. ADAMS. I most certainly do; and there is nothing in my remarks from which to draw any other conclusion on the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Another charge of the most extraordinary character made by the gentleman from New York is that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has never taken cognizance of the want of reorganization and improvement in our consular service, notwithstanding the fact that in the last three Congresses our committee has reported a bill for the reorganization of the consular service. We have never been able to get consideration of it, and very largely because the sentiment of the House seems not to favor that proposition sufficiently forcefully to bring it up, and not because the Committee on Foreign Affairs has not reported thereon. But I will state for the information of the gentleman from New York that to-day or to-morrow there will be filed another bill from that Committee, which has received its careful consideration, but which, I regret to say, the representatives of his party in the committee have seen fit to line themselves up against and propose to file a minorty report. So there is a splended chance for the gentleman from New York to do missionary work on his side of the Chamber.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman assure the House that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon his bill?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; if I can get it. If the gentleman will join with those interested in the movement and bring pressure upon those upon his side and show that it is the desire of the House to pass such a bill, he knows that in time it will take place, as the desires of the majority in this House are always acceded to.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, he has furnished perhaps one of the strongest illustrations of the great need of some reorganization of the consular service. The man who advocates this stands somewhat in an embarrassing position, because he is at once turned upon and asked, Do you mean to say that we have no good consuls in our service?

Not at all, Mr. Chairman; there are as able and efficient consuls in the service of our country as there are in those of any nation in the world, and to them all honor and all credit. But stop one moment and think of the difference between our service and that of other countries. Is there any assurance that these efficient consuls whom these gentlemen hold up to the credit of our service will be retained? Not at all. On the contrary, the chances are that the political changes that control our Government, or even with a continuance of the same party in power, these efficient consuls may be removed. What inducements to-day, under the present conditions, are there for a man to endeavor to become an efficient consul? Will his study bring him the required retention in office? Will his acquirement of the language of the country to which he is sent, in order that he may gain additional information and collect statistics and the requirements of the people in relation to commerce—will he be rewarded for it by retention in office? Probably not. At least he has no such assurance.

The trouble with the consular service of our country is not limited to the personnel of the service—it is in the very system itself. When I tell the House there has been no legislation on this, perhaps the most important, branch of the service, under our Government for developing the trade and commerce of the country, which, after all, means the wealth and happiness and well doing of our people—when I tell the House that there has been no legislation scarcely worth speaking about since its inception at the beginning of our Government, the time is come when it is necessary to do something, for in the great struggle that is going on in the cheapening of commodities, in the cheapness of transportation, and the competition that is going on in all lines of steamships, the time is coming when it is absolutely essential that we have every information, every facility, placed at the hands of our manufacturers and merchants in order that they may hold their own against the competition of countries represented efficiently elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the great lack in our service is this: While we have these good consuls, to whom we can point with pride, they are unfortunately where we do not need them. They are in the leading cities of Europe, where the boards of trade, and chambers of commerce, and branch houses of business firms will develop trade of its own volition. Where we need competent consuls is at the positions where trade has not developed, where there are no chambers of commerce, where there are no boards of trade, but where these men are sent to gather statistics, to be able to read the reports of the country, the daily press and all periodicals and reports that relate to the development of trade, and do so, and forward them to the State Department.

The gentleman from Texas gave us a fearful example of the lack of such men. It is in South America, it is in the East where we have not the good consuls that we need, it is there that the defect of the system is most apparent. We should have an organization in the consular service that means a tenure of office, that when a man enters it he knows he will be rewarded for his service and promoted to a higher place and higher salary. There should be an inducement for young men to prepare themselves to enter this service. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] asked if there was any school in this country where such young men could fit themselves. I will state for his information that last year, when there was a prospect of the consular-service bill coming before the House, two of the great universities wrote asking for the probability of its becoming a law, as they wished to institute special courses fitting men for this service. There are such schools already that would help prepare men, but they have no actual specific course. But if you establish the service there will follow this special course, just as young men fit themselves if they see a chance to earn a competence during their entire life.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. My friend from Pennsylvania says there are schools in which these young men may be educated. I ask him if he would have a law enacted so as to require the applicant to have a diploma from one of these schools before he would admit him to the foreign service?

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all. The examination which will be held in the State Department will be the sole test of the efficiency of the applicant.

Mr. DINSMORE. That is what I wanted to arrive at. We all know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been very much interested in this subject, and has several times prepared a bill with great labor and investigation. I wanted to get from him the statement where he would have these young men educated, and whether he would require any other certification of their ability than that of the board of examiners to be appointed by the authority of the State Department.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the requirement prescribed in the bill of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has been placed in my charge. The only requirement is that they shall successfully pass the examination as laid down by the board of examiners under the direction of the State Department.

But it certainly would be an advantage if our young men would prepare themselves at some school which would fit them in a peculiar and special degree for the duties which they are to assume; because they, like every other man who expects to succeed in his profession, should not rest simply on a diploma, but should take special courses of study and fit themselves to succeed and make a mark in their profession.

When interrupted by the gentleman from Arkansas I was saying something in regard to the sad case which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Texas. Let me say that I made inquiry at the State Department about this matter. It appears that when the consul at Saltillo went away the consul-general appointed a temporary man by the name of Thomas N. Jefferis, who is still acting as vice-consul. So far as the State Department knows he has performed his duties properly. No charges have been preferred against him. The appointment is only temporary. This case, as I have said, emphasizes to an extraordinary degree the necessity for a trained service, so as to fit men to hold these places as life positions. We could not have had these three changes, one after another, that have taken place in that Mexican town if we had had there men who stood high and had entered the service as a life position. As such the office would have been deemed so valuable that they would not dare to participate in frauds or to do other dishonest acts such as have been mentioned here. The very value of the office would put it beyond the possibility that such things could occur.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had no idea of speaking on this subject. I rose only for the purpose of expressing my great gratification at the evidence which seems to be cropping out in the House each year that there is required only a little more pressure and a little more evidence as to the importance of some measure of this kind before it shall receive the deliberation and favorable consideration of the House. We can already begin to see that public sentiment and investigation are giving to this matter an interest which foreshadows that the commercial countries that certainly know the needs and requisite characteristics of consuls better than any other class of our people, will make their influence felt, so that a reorganization and improvement in this respect shall take place in the consular service of our country.

Mr. HITT. I now ask that the Clerk proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further general debate the bill will be taken up under the five-minute rule. [A pause.] The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill, read the following:

Secretaries of legations to Argentine Republic, Venezuela, and Peru, at $1,800 each; Liberia and Korea (who shall be consul-general to Seoul), and Switzerland, at $1,500 each, $9,900.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words "and Switzerland" in the paragraph just read, because those words propose to create a secretary of legation at Switzerland, which is new legislation, and contravenes the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HITT. I submit the question to the Chair without argument.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to rule that the words "and Switzerland" must go out of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Then, I call attention to a slight change in the phraseology which is necessary in view of the fact that the point of order has been sustained.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. HITT, as follows:

On page 5, in line 5, insert "and" after the word "each;" and at the end of the paragraph strike out "$9,900" and insert "$8,400."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $80,150.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that sum of $80,150 will have to be changed. I move to amend by inserting in line 6, page 6, instead of "eighty thousand one hundred and fifty dollars," the words "seventy-eight thousand six hundred and fifty dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made in accordance with the proposed amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk hire, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomen, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $175,000.

Mr. HITT. I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, page, 8, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert the word "eighty;" so that it will read: "One hundred and eighty thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

Commercial Bureau of American Republics, $36,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the Bureau, or from the sale of the Bureau publications, from rents, or other sources shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Bureau: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin, not to exceed 5,000 copies, for distribution by the Bureau every month during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the year 1902 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague, July 29, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $1,250.

PUBLICATION OF DIPLOMATIC, CONSULAR, AND OTHER COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Preparation, printing, publication, and distribution by the Department of State of the diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports, $40,000; and of this sum the Secretary of State is authorized to expend not exceeding $5,500 for services of employees in the Bureau of Foreign Commerce (formerly the Bureau of Statistics), Department of State, in the work of compiling and distributing such reports; the sum of $2,000 for the cost of cablegrams in instructing consular officers to report upon matters of immediate importance to commerce and industry, and of cablegrams of consuls on such subjects; also to defray the extra expense imposed upon consular officers in collecting certain data where it seems to be warranted; and not exceeding $250 in the purchase of such books, maps, and periodicals as may be necessary to the editing of diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports: Provided, That all terms of measure, weight, and money shall be reduced to and expressed in terms of measure, weight, and coin of the United States, as well as in the foreign terms; that each issue of diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports shall not exceed 10,000 copies.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have not a copy of the bill before me, but, as I understand, that concludes the reading of the section.

Mr. HITT. It does.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if it is not new legislation, and if so, I reserve the point of order against it, which provides for annual printing in the diplomatic bill?

Mr. HITT. I will state to the gentleman that the bill is reprinted exactly in accordance with existing law in that respect.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All printing is provided for regularly by law, and it occurs to me that it would be a very bad practice to get into the habit or custom of providing in a general appropriation bill for such an amount of printing as is contemplated in that section.

Mr. HITT. That language is the language which has been standing in the bill for years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I thought it was new language.

Mr. HITT. It is not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I say, it seems to me that it is not a good practice for annual appropriation bills to provide for printing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT] to the fact that if the department of commerce is created in accordance with the bill which passed the House the other day, the Bureau of Foreign Commerce which does most of this printing will be transferred to the department of commerce, although I suppose that makes no difference with reference to the appropriation. It may make a difference, however, when it comes from the Senate, and therefore I speak of it in order that it may be called to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] present, but there is a provision in this section which it seems to me ought not to be made. I refer to the following:

Provided, That any moneys received from the other American republics for the support of the bureau, or from the sale of the bureau publications, from rents, or other sources shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit in addition to the appropriation and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the bureau.

In my judgment, that is bad legislation. I do not think that there ought to be this kind of an appropriation to be used in the discretion of any executive officer. It is what the able chairman of the Appropriations Committee calls a "slush fund." I believe it is denominated as a "slush fund" in most all of the bureaus and departments, and inasmuch as the law provides that all moneys shall be regularly appropriated, it seems to me that we ought to insist that that rule should apply here, that for every purpose where money is to be used it shall be regularly appropriated from the Treasury.

Now, this provision is that money may be drawn from the Treasury after it is paid in, that it may be drawn out by the Secretary of State and used again. We see it very often illustrated. It used to be, I may say, in the Government Printing Office, where they were authorized to sell certain things, refuse of different kinds, leather scraps, waste paper, etc. The money realized therefrom was put into the Treasury and drawn out again and used for the purpose of the Government Printing Office. That was abolished upon the very idea that I have advanced, that it makes a slush fund and may be used two or three times or a half dozen times during the year, and you can not keep up with appropriations where the money is thus duplicated. After it is put into the Treasury it ought to stay there, and then if it is necessary to use it again it ought to be reappropriated by Congress. I am not inclined to make any motion to change this by amendment, but I call attention to it and comment upon it because in my judgment it is a very unwise way of making appropriations.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The fund the gentleman speaks of can hardly be called a "slush fund," which means a fund not controlled or audited, if nothing worse. This is a composite fund raised from many nations, and the expenditure is controlled in all its details from month to month by an executive committee which is composed of representatives of the United States and the foreign countries, a committee selected by all the representatives of the United States and all the republics of this continent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is not my friend mistaken in that? It says money arising from the sale of Bureau publications, from rents, or other sources.

Mr. HITT. All those are turned in and reported by the officer who is in charge of this Bureau to that executive committee, which is composed of these ministers and ambassadors. The ambassador to Mexico has been on that committee for many years. That is an executive committee which has control of the details and it must approve everything all the way through, and we have not thought it was giving them a "slush fund" to allow them to have control of the money contributed by the United States in the same way as is contributed by the other countries.

This fund is supplemental to and completing a fund which is raised by contributions from all the republics on the continent in proportion to their population. It is a joint stock bureau; and while undoubtedly if the details of expenditure were prescribed particularly in the law, they would be followed, we have thought heretofore that this was enough, and this language has stood for years in the bill, under both parties. Mr. Forbush, I remember, was a gentleman who gave his views very fully on this whole subject in the committee when he was in charge of that bureau.

I withdraw the formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLASS IV.

At $2,500 per annum.
Aix la Chapelle, Germany.
Annaberg, Germany.
Athens, Greece.
Bahia, Brazil.
Barbados, West Indies.
Birmingham, England.
Bombay, India.
Bremen, Germany.
Brussels, Belgium.
Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic.
Chemnitz, Germany.
Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.
Cologne, Germany.
Dundee, Scotland.
Edinburgh, Scotland.
Huddersfield, England.
Jerusalem, Syria.
Lourenço Marquez, Africa.
Mainz, Germany.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by inserting on page 18, after "Mainz, Germany," the words "Odessa, Russia."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, in line 21, after the words "Mainz, Germany," insert the words "Odessa, Russia."

Mr. HITT. That is an error in existing law, which was reprinted in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the spelling of Lourenço, in the previous line, correct?

Mr. HITT. I will say that the act furnished by the State Department gives the name in that curious spelling, which, I believe, is taken from that of the country, and so it should stand as it is.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, on page 21, in line 13, the words "Odessa, Russia," should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, in line 13, strike out "Odessa, Russia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Total, salaries of consuls, $469,500.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that total should be corrected so as to read $470,000. I move to strike out "sixty-nine thousand five hundred" and insert "seventy thousand."

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, page 26, strike out "sixty-nine thousand five hundred" and insert "seventy thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the fourth line, on page 26. I do it for the purpose of stating to the committee that should it be the misfortune of the House of Representatives to be confronted with a bill based upon the attacks that have been made upon the consular and diplomatic service of the United States here to-day, seeking a reformation which has for its importance and significance the slanders that have been uttered against the efficiency of the United States consular and diplomatic forces abroad, I shall take occasion to try and convince the House of Representatives, first, that these assaults are unjustifiable in whole and in part, so far as they affect unfavorably the standing of the consular force of the United States; and I shall attempt further to show, by evidence of practical men, and men who have practical knowledge of the standing of our consular service abroad, that not only are these criticisms unjust and derogatory to the high character of the American people, but that they are absolutely without foundation in fact.

I will try to show a fact which exists, that the consular service of the United States to-day is by far the best consular service in the world; so much so that it has been recognized over and over again by the leading publicists of foreign countries, whose words I will bring here, that the most reliable and valuable service rendered in this behalf by any nation of the earth is rendered to-day by the consular service of the United States.

I make these remarks now simply to let it be understood that I repel and condemn these assaults, made for the purpose of carrying forward to establishment in another branch of the Government that so-called beneficial system which to-day is costing this Government more than $200,000,000 per annum, money thrown away, catering to a fad that has benefited nobody except the exponents of the misinformed theorists.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his amendment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barmen, Berlin, Bordeaux, Bremen, Brussels, Chemnitz, Crefeld, Frankfort, Hamburg, Havre, Kobe, Lyons, Marseille, Montreal, Ottawa, Rotterdam, Vienna, and Yokohama, at $1,200 each, $21,600.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in line 9 by inserting the letter "s," so as to make the word read "Marseilles."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 insert the letter "s" after "Marseille," making it "Marseilles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Kehl, $500.

Mr. HITT. On page 28, line 8, I wish to insert the following amendment: "Cienfuegos, Kehl, and Santiago de Cuba, at $500 each, $1,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, line 8, amend so that it will read Cienfuegos, Kehl, and Santiago de Cuba, at $500 each, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total clerk hire, $92,950.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend, on line 12, the footing, so that instead of $92,000 it shall read $93,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend line 12, page 31, by striking out "five" and inserting the word "fifteen."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 31, strike out "five" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. HITT. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment, and all the others that I have just been presenting in succession, are provisions that are in the existing law, but were not in the last appropriation bill. They were embraced in the Cuban supplemental bill and in the deficiency bill, and are not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN, The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PARKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16604) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them to the House in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1902, being the annual and other reports of consular and diplomatic officers upon the industries and commerce of foreign countries. In view of the importance of these reports to our business interests, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of the summary entitled "Review of the World's Commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to be distributed by the Department of State.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 19, 1903.

LANDING PIER IN THE HARBOR OF PONCE, P. R.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico on December 3, 1902, with the approval of the governor thereof, granting to J. H. D. Luce, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the right to construct and operate a landing pier or wharf on the east side of the harbor of Ponce, and on the shores thereof, and for other purposes.

This ordinance was approved by the President of the United States on January 8, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1903.

DAMAGE TO BRITISH SHIP EASTRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relating to the claim of Messrs. Sivewright, Bacon & Co., of Manchester, England, British subjects, for compensation for damages sustained by their vessel, the British steamship Eastry, in consequence of collisions in June, 1901, at Manila, with certain coal hulks belonging to the United States Government.

I recommend that, as an act of equity and comity, provision be made by the Congress for reimbursement to the firm of the money expended by it in making the repairs to the ship which the collisions rendered necessary.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 19, 1903.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, ordered to be printed, and so much as refers to experiment stations referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and so much as refers to printing to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the annual report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, which includes a report on the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations in the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, in accordance with the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the said fiscal year.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 5,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1903.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report, by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry of that Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, in compliance with the requirements of section 11 of the act, approved May 29, 1884, for the establishment of that Bureau.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1903.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904. And, pending that motion, I would like to ask my colleague on the committee, Mr. BENTON of Missouri, if it will be agreeable to him to fix a time for the close of general debate.

Mr. BENTON. My impression is that we can close it about 2 o'clock to-morrow, and then open up under the five-minute rule. I believe that will be time enough. I think two hours on this side will be ample.

Mr. BARTLETT. But that will only give one hour for the other side.

Mr. BENTON. Then let us say 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Could not the gentleman get through by 2 o'clock as he first suggested?

Mr. BENTON. We can if there is no desire for general debate on that side. My suggestion is, however, to let it run along with the idea that we will close as soon as we can, and certainly I think we will close by 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I am content to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri that we let the debate run along without fixing any time for the present.

The motion of Mr. MCCLEARY was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, this is the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the coming fiscal year. This is the seat of the National Government. The problem of making a bill for its expenditures has all the difficulties attending the making of such a bill or schedule for any city, with the additional complication of its being the seat of government.

Under the act of 1878, known as the organic act, one-half of the appropriations in the District are payable out of the general Treasury, and one-half out of the revenues of the District.

Every member of the committee desires to treat this District well, as the capital of the country, and in treating it well we had two thoughts in mind. In the first place, we desired to make the appropriations as generous as they could be made under the circumstances of the case, to go as far as possible to make this indeed a worthy capital of a great nation. In treating it well we had also in mind that we should not, if possible, exceed the current income, believing that it is not well for individuals or corporations or communities to run into debt, if debt be avoidable.

We had this situation before us: Last year a change was made in the taxing laws of the District of Columbia by which the income of the District was largely increased. The revenues of the District for the coming fiscal year from the taxation within the District is, according to careful estimates, $5,419,000. We find fixed charges as follows:

Advances have been made from the general Treasury amounting to $1,901,726.15, payable in three years, in equal installments of the principal, beginning with this coming year, the one for which we are appropriating. One-third of that sum, with interest at 2 per cent, amounts to $671,943.33.

A highway bridge was by law provided for to cross the Potomac near the old "Long Bridge," and the limit of cost was $998,000, of which sum $568,000 is to be appropriated the coming year. Of this sum the District is to pay one-half, or $284,000.

A bill now in conference provides for a union railway station, to cost $3,770,000, the share of the District being $1,855,000. This is to be paid in five years, one-fifth the coming year, making a charge of $371,000 against the revenues of the District for the coming year.

A municipal building was provided for in the act of last year, and $300,000 was estimated as the sum that should be expended upon the building the coming year. One-half of this, or $150,000, is payable out of the revenues of the District.

In other bills that have passed the House, or are pending and likely to pass, there is appropriated $90,043.

So that we found in approaching this matter that there were, for these purposes, what may be called "fixed charges" amounting to $1,566,986.23, leaving for other purposes a balance of $3,852,013.77. This bill makes an appropriation which will take from the District revenues $3,810,470.50, being $42,000 within the income of the District; and we believe the amounts appropriated will cover the needs of the District without sacrificing any material interest in the District.

How was this economy effected? Gentlemen will note on page 3 of the report of the committee that $410,000 in round numbers in the bill for the current year does not appear in this bill. This is because the several projects are completed or provided for and need no further appropriations.

Reductions made in appropriations for this year amount to $554,678. Observe the items. For books for the public library, a reduction from $40,000 to $5,000. That would seem to be an unkind and unnecessary reduction in appropriation were it not for the fact that of the $40,000 appropriated for last year a large sum remains unexpended, and it is deemed that this $5,000 appropriated this year will give practically all the new books which the library can get into place to be made use of.

For paving city streets we have made a reduction from $150,000 to $50,000. That reduction is based upon this idea: We found by personal examination that many of the estimates were for changing the character of the pavements from Belgian blocks or granite blocks to asphalt. Under all the circumstances we concluded that such changes were not imperative and could be dispensed with, and that $50,000 would meet the real demands of the District for the paving of new streets.

On county roads and streets the reduction is from $151,000, the amount appropriated last year, to $54,500 this year. This will furnish such improvements as we deem imperative. We went over the schedule carefully and provided for all the improvements that we deemed imperatively necessary for the coming year.

The appropriation for new school buildings is reduced from $234,000 in round numbers to $155,000 in round numbers. This is due to the fact that we made such large appropriations for new school buildings in last year's bill and the bill of the preceding year that this sum of $155,000 will, in our judgment, be ample to meet the growing needs of the District. In fact, it gives, in general, all that is estimated for, namely, two eight-room buildings, at a cost of $60,000; one four-room addition to an existing building, at a cost of $20,000, and $75,000 toward the erection of the Business High School.

Another item on which a great reduction was made was for interest and sinking fund, the reduction being in round numbers $238,000. This is due to the fact that the outstanding indebtedness of the District in 6 per cent and 7 per cent bonds has been extinguished, or will be at the end of this year, so that there will remain out only the 3.65 bonds. Hence the reduction stated.

As I have already indicated, we believe that we have fully met the real needs of the District. We have provided for the extension of streets; we have provided an increase of 40 men in the number of policemen to guard the city, being the total increase estimated for; we have provided an increase of 45 in the teaching force of the District, this being also the total increase estimated for; we have provided the increase called for, amounting to $400,000, for extending the sewage-disposal system.

We have provided the increase called for for the purification of the water; that is, for the continuance of the construction of the filtration plant, the increase being $600,000, the full amount asked for. And for the care of the streets we have provided the full $200,000 asked for by the Commissioners. In other words, we believe that by exercising prudence we have in this bill furnished the city all the things that are imperatively needed, and withheld nothing except what is not essential. We believe that with the financial condition of the District as it is, we have gone to the limit in furnishing it the things needed, and have been cautious only in relation to those things which could be got along without.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill, when presented by the Commissioners of the District, carried almost $11,000,000 in recommendations. The statement made by the chairman of the committee will, I believe, be borne out when the bill is examined; that all the requirements or necessities of the case have been met, while the frills have been cut off.

There are two very important matters in which Congress, no less than the people of the District of Columbia, is interested; I refer to the sewage system and good water. It was recommended to us that we appropriate $1,400,000 for the completion of the filtration plant. Colonel Miller, of the United States Army, in charge of the work, has reported to us how much he thought would be needed, and we have put into this bill every dollar that he indicated would be necessary or could be used during the coming fiscal year.

So far as the sewage system is concerned, we have appropriated every dollar that was recommended to be appropriated. It was suggested and indeed earnestly recommended by the Commissioners that we report to this House in favor of the advancement of $10,000,000 to the District of Columbia, the indebtedness to run until 1923, bearing a small rate of interest. We were of the opinion that the revenues of the District of Columbia, together with the equal amount contributed by the General Government, would meet the ordinary requirements of the District and leave enough of margin to meet the extraordinary expenses which will be incurred in carrying on the affairs of the District, so that we cut all those things out, and refused to authorize an advancement by the Government to the District in the sum of $10,000,000.

To be brief, gentlemen, I am of the opinion that we propose to appropriate in this bill about all the money necessary to carry on the government of the District of Columbia fairly and liberally. We have appropriated money for everything that is needed, and enough of it. I need not add anything further than to say that in my opinion this is the best bill that the committee has reported to the House in several years.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] desire to reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir. I want to say that I told my colleague from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] that this bill would probably not come up this evening, and he has left the House. I promised to give him three-quarters of an hour. So far as our side of the House is concerned, there is nobody now present who wants to occupy any time.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a suggestion, that by unanimous consent we take up the bill under the five-minute rule and proceed for the rest of the evening, and then to-morrow continue with the general debate. It is too early to adjourn. We ought to get along with this bill and make some progress.

Mr. BENTON. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What does the chairman of the committee say?

Mr. McCLEARY. I think that is hardly the usual procedure.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I know it is not, but it is practical and will save time. I do not see any reason for not doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that by unanimous consent there can be no objection to proceeding in that manner.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is my suggestion.

Mr. McCLEARY. Then, Mr. Chairman, would it not be advisable to limit the time of general debate to-morrow?

Mr. BENTON. Yes; I think it would. I have had requests from two gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, one of whom wants to occupy forty-five minutes' time and the other said not more than thirty minutes. Those are all the requests for time that I have had. I would like to accommodate those gentlemen. Beyond that I have no desire to occupy further time, and we might be able to get through by 3 o'clock all right. If there is no demand for time on the other side, I think probably we can.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague on the committee, that we agree upon two hours of general debate to-morrow.

Mr. BENTON. I will agree to that.

Mr. McCLEARY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for unanimous consent that the time for general debate to-morrow be limited to two hours and that we now proceed to the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate be now suspended and that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule; that when the committee shall resume its session to-morrow, general debate shall be limited to two hours. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCLEARY. I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 4, line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 4, line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 10, before the word "in," insert "messenger, six hundred dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLEARY. This was merely an oversight in printing. It was intended to be there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 10 for the purpose of making an inquiry from the gentleman in charge of this bill. I notice there are appropriations here aggregating $35,000 for free public library, all apparently except $5,000 being for the care of a free public library. I desire to ask what library that is?

Mr. McCLEARY. It is the library known as the Carnegie Library, over on Seventh street.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it expected that that library will be a permanent tax upon the people of this District at the rate of about $30,000 a year, without any reference to additions of books? That seems to be the sum here.

Mr. BURKETT. It is only $18,400.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is $18,440, and then another item for purchase of books, $5,000; printing, $3,000, and so on, aggregating in all $17,000, $5,000 of which is for the purchase of books; so that there will be $12,000 and $18,000 apparently for the care of the library.

Mr. McCLEARY. And the replenishment and rebinding of books and the magazines that are donated.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is an item of $3,000, leaving $27,000 then for the care of that library.

Mr. BURKETT. The second item that the gentleman refers to includes the fitting up of this building. Probably hereafter that item will be very much less. That includes the fuel, lighting, fitting up of building, and other contingent expenses.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. Then there would be $18,440, besides the expense of the building hereafter?

Mr. BURKETT. The $18,440 refers to the salaries of the persons necessarily employed in the building.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then the cost of fuel and lighting, and so on, and repairs, and all expenses of that kind, will be in addition to the $18,400?

Mr. BURKETT. That amounts to $17,000, making about $35,400; but that will be decreased hereafter, as I understand, because the fund for fitting up the building this year is necessarily larger than it will be hereafter.

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the evidence before the committee as to the probable cost of fuel, lighting, and so on, eliminating that other item of fitting up the building? I want to know how much of a blessing the people of this District are to credit to Mr. Carnegie.

Mr. McCLEARY. In the hearings, on page 135, is a statement as follows:

Approximate items of public library contingent fund estimate.

Miscellaneous supplies, building (Mr. Greene's estimate last year)	$1,000
Electric lighting (Mr. Greene's estimate last year)	2,500
Heating, on basis of present consumption (5 months' coal, $5 per ton). (Impossible to make close estimate on account of uncertainty as to price.)	2,250
Furniture, library equipment, fitting up	$3,000 to 2,000
Stationery, library cards, etc (In 1902, $647.47.)	$250 to 500
Printing	$500 to 250
Repairs, fitting up, etc	500
Miscellaneous library items, ice, stamps, etc (Last year, $630.)	600
Total	9,600

(The estimate is $9,000.)

Mr. HEPBURN. Then there is something in excess of $7,000 that will probably be an annual charge, in addition to the eighteen thousand four hundred and forty.

Mr. McCLEARY. I have not made the computation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did it hastily, as you read, and I made it something over $7,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. I think the gentleman is probably nearly correct.

In that connection I simply desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the usual condition upon which Mr. Carnegie makes these donations to other places, and a very proper condition it is, is that the community availing itself of his liberality shall furnish a suitable site and a maintenance fund equal to 10 per cent of the amount he gives for the building. He did not make that condition with the District, but simply made the condition that it should be suitably supported.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has the gentleman any idea of the value of that site contributed by Congress in order to get the donation?

Mr. McCLEARY. It was not estimated. It was public property.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is worth at least a million dollars, is it not?

Mr. McCLEARY. I do not know. It was simply, Mr. Chairman, used as a public park. It would never have been used for producing revenue. It was not utilized except for the pleasure of the people of the District. It is now used for both their pleasure and their profit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of the Bennings (white), Bennings (colored), Bunker Hill, Chevy Chase, Good Hope, Grant Road, Hamilton, High Street, Langdon, Kenilworth, Orr, Petworth, Potomac, Reservoir, Takoma Park, and Threlkeld buildings, 16 in all, at $240 each.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. McCLEARY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia which section he referred to?

Mr. MADDOX. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 9 to 13 on page 32.

Mr. McCLEARY. What is the objection to it?

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Georgia that it is not a section. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 9, page 32, and ending with line 13.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, my object in making the motion was simply to demonstrate the fact that there is no quorum in this House, and under the Constitution it requires a quorum to do business. It is now 5 o'clock, and there are not to exceed 25 members in the Chamber at this time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that I will join with him in an adjournment of the House in case there is any debate or any amendments that are necessary to be considered. But time is valuable now, and in an hour the gentleman from Minnesota can finish his bill. I think it is especially desirable at this time that he be permitted to do so. I am here for the purpose of watching the reading of this bill, and am certainly as much interested as the gentleman to see that there is no improper legislation in connection with it.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say in reply to that that we may just as well let our people understand what the situation is here. It is just as much their duty as it is our duty to be in the House, as you and I are. We are here, probably about 25 of us, and I think that we would be here until morning if necessary, but other gentlemen do not see proper to stay here, and if we are going to do business you ought to require a quorum, and let them understand that if we are to do business.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. MADDOX. I certainly do.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will count and ascertain.

Pending the count,

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16842, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5561. An act for the relief of S. R. Green—to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CAPRON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Joseph P. Manton, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. RUMPLE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John Albright, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN JUDGES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to file the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill of the Senate (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Industry, J. Lambert, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John B. Howard, administrator of estate of Joseph H. Howard, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of

J. P. Newkirk, administrator of estate of James H. Newkirk, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Olive Branch, Jonathan Moulton, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for survey of boundary line between Idaho and Montana—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Christian Smith against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for Government Hospital for the Insane—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for addition to the post-office building at Detroit—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16724) to provide for an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3166); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state on the Union.

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. NELSON. I present a petition of the business committee of the Western Miami tribe of Indians of the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., praying for the passage of House bill 12543 in such form as to provide for the creation of the Territories of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into a single State and to admit them into the Union at once. I ask that the petition may be read and referred to the Committee on Territories.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, business committee of the Western Miami tribe of Indians, of the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., now assembled in council, do most respectfully petition your honorable assembly to pass the H. R. 12543, as reported to the Senate by Senator NELSON on the 3d day of December, A. D. 1902, providing for the creation of the Territories of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into a single State and admitting them into the Union at once. We and our people are bitterly opposed to any legislation providing for the admission of the Territory of Oklahoma as a State and the gradual absorption by it of the Indian Territory by piecemeal. We desire to have a voice in the adoption of a constitution and the enactment of laws which will govern us, perhaps, for generations to come. If it be the ultimate intention of your honorable assembly to merge the Indian Territory and Oklahoma into one sovereign State we earnestly petition you that it be done at one and the same time; or, if it be deemed most expedient to postpone the admission of the lands occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes into a State, we very earnestly petition you that the lands comprised within the limits of the Quapaw Indian Agency be formed into a county and be admitted as such into statehood with the Territory of Oklahoma.

Our people are for advancement in civilization, industry, and education, etc., and our Territory needs some laws relating to a public-school system, public roads, bridges, and laws regulating the running at large of live stock, and in a general way we need laws to better protect us in the enjoyment of our lives and property. We are anxious to make final settlement with the Government of the United States and become citizens, with all of the rights, privileges, and benefits incident thereto. We feel sure that it will be better for every person concerned, and for any data or particulars concerning our tribal affairs or the existing condition of our country we very heartily refer you to our faithful friend and adviser, Thomas F. Richardville, late principal chief of our tribe, and at present chairman of the business committee, the office of chief having been abolished by act of our council held on the 19th day of September, A. D. 1901, at the solicitation and upon the recommendation of said Thomas F. Richardville, late chief of our said tribe, and who has been so faithful and diligent and untiring in his efforts for the uplifting, advancement, and enlightenment of his people.

Trusting that the foregoing petition will receive your most careful and considerate attention, the same is very repectfully submitted.

G. W. LEONARD,
C. W. RICHARDVILLE,
HENRY LAFALIER,
W. THEODORE DOLLAR,
Business Committee.

GEN. WILLIAM F. SMITH.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present resolutions of the general assembly of the State of Vermont, praying that Gen. William F. Smith be commissioned a major-general in the Regular Army. I ask that the resolutions be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas there has recently been placed in our capitol at Montpelier a tablet with portrait medallion commemorative of the military fame and services of William Farrar Smith, brevet major-general, United States Army, which was presented to Vermont by soldiers from other States who admire so much her great soldier son.

This tablet bears, as a part of its inscription, the following extracts from a letter addressed to General Grant under date of December 31, 1863, by the Assistant Secretary of War, Charles A. Dana:

* * * "The surest means of getting the rebels altogether out of East Tennessee is to be found in the Army of the Potomac. * * * This naturally led to your second proposition, namely, that either Sherman or W. F. Smith be put in command of that army. * * * Both the Secretary of War and General Halleck said: 'Gen. W. F. Smith would be the best person to try.' * * * The President, the Secretary of War, and General Halleck agree with you in thinking that it would be on the whole much better to select him." * * *

The verdict here recorded shows not only the opinion entertained by Lincoln, Grant, and Stanton in respect to General Smith's conspicuous soldierly abilities, but also serves most forcibly to direct attention to the neglect and indifference which of late years have been suffered to obscure the memory of his brilliant and patriotic services.

General Smith, now 78 years of age, is one of three or four corps commanders of the Union Army who still survive, and yet this brave old veteran, concerning whom General Grant in recommending his promotion to be a major-general, wrote: "He is possessed of the clearest military head in the Army; is very practical and industrious; no man in the service is better qualified than he is for our highest commands," is to-day on the retired list with no higher rank than that of a major of engineers: Therefore

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That it is the profound belief of the general assembly of the State of Vermont that the country owes it to its own reputation for justice and gratitude to make such reparation for past neglect as is now within its power, and to this end we respectfully urge that General Smith be commissioned a major-general in the Regular Army with the emoluments of a retired officer of that rank.

It is further resolved that a copy of this memorial and resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each House of Congress, and to each member of the Vermont delegation therein, and they are earnestly requested to use every honorable effort to secure the favorable action of Congress in respect thereto.

JOHN H. MERRIFIELD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ZED S. STANTON.
President of the Senate.

STATE OF VERMONT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the joint resolution memoralizing Congress in respect to the rank of Maj. Gen. William Farrar Smith, as appears by the files and records of this office.

Witness my signature and the seal of this office at Montpelier, this 18th day of November, 1902.

[SEAL.] FREDERICK G. FLEETWOOD,
Secretary of State.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted two amendments, one proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Odessa, Russia, and the other proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Amsterdam, Netherlands, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE subsequently said: I wish to correct the reference just made, by which certain amendments touching consular offices and increasing salaries were referred to the Committee on Commerce. The amendments ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to be by them reported as amendments to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill if they receive favorable action.

Mr. NELSON. The amendments relate to consuls only and should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. NELSON. The Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction over consular appointments.

Mr. HALE. But not over their salaries.

Mr. NELSON. But not over their salaries.

Mr. CULLOM. All such bills come from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON. Let the amendments go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. Let them go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that they may report them as amendments to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

POWER OF PRESIDENT TO NEGOTIATE TREATIES.

Mr. CLAY. In the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, Mr. Tucker, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, made a very valuable report on the power of the President to negotiate treaties with foreign governments. The copies of that report have been practically exhausted. It is of importance, and on a subject which is now before the Senate to be discussed, and I ask that the report be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks that a certain paper be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN MAINE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the amounts of salaries of all postmasters in the State of Maine, for the terms of service specified, whose names and terms of service appear on the schedule of such cases in said State hereto attached, adjusted under the act of 1854, and the amount of the salary of each such postmaster adjusted and paid under the act of 1884, so that the difference between the salary paid and the amount of salary ordered paid by the act of 1883 shall appear in each case specified on the said schedule.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9503) to authorize the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) extending the provision granting to the State of Pennsylvania the use of the court-house at Scranton and Williamsport, Pa., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is not in his seat. I hope that the resolution may be laid aside without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table, holding its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PRODUCTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. LODGE, as follows:

Resolved, First, that the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any, and if so what, countries discriminate against any article or articles the growth or product of the soil or industry of the United States by levying upon such article or articles duties, imposts, excises, or taxes in excess of those levied upon similar articles imported from other countries, or, further, in any way fail to admit the products of the United States on terms as favorable as those accorded to any other nation.

Second, that if it should appear that any country or countries discriminate against the United States in the manner aforesaid the Committee on Finance shall report to the Senate whether it is not advisable that a suitable law should be enacted by which maximum and minimum rates of duty shall be established in such manner as to give preference and advantage in rates of duty to the products of those countries which do not discriminate against the products of the soil or industry of the United States, but admit them on an exact equality with similar articles the products of other countries and on the terms and at the rates of duty accorded to the most favored nation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table. I do not ask that it be given any particular place, but I ask that it may lie on the table until I can have an opportunity to call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the resolution may lie on the table, subject to his call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read, and that the amendments proposed by the committee may be considered as the reading progresses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 148, line 14, before the word "incapacitated," to strike out "incompetent or" and insert "permanently;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote on the amendments be taken in the Senate in gross? The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY M. HOLMES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1193) to correct the military record of Henry M. Holmes.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "organization," to insert "as of the date of July 31, 1862;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in the case of Henry M. Homes, late of Company A, First New Mexico Cavalry Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge from said organization as of the date of July 31, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898. I merely desire to have the bill read. I do not propose to ask action upon it now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I now ask for the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I gave notice that I would not ask for the passage of the bill to-day, and I certainly shall not if there be any objection now, or if any Senator wishes to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. If no Senator desires to have it delayed, I will ask that it be put on its passage. If any Senator desires to be heard, of course I do not press it.

Mr. QUAY. I feel it to be my duty to object to it at present.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let it go over.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist upon a vote on the bill this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it has been read for information and is now in the Committee of the Whole, and goes over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I believe the unfinished business is now up.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator want a vote before the Senators who desire to address the Senate upon this measure have an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. QUAY. I should like to have a vote, whether there is another word spoken on the bill or not. I believe a majority of the Senate are in favor of the bill and ready to vote now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the Senator said at the end of the last session. He further said on the floor of the Senate at the end of the last session that he and those with him did not care for further information. So I am not surprised at the attitude of the Senator to-day, which is but a repetition of the attitude taken here at the close of the last session.

I thought then, Mr. President, and I think now, that in a matter of such large consequence as the admission of new States into the Union—an act which will endure through the ages this Government endures—it was a remarkable position that Senators should assume, that they would care to state upon the floor of the Senate that they desired no investigation of a question so important and did not care for any further information on so vital a business.

Therefore the remark of the Senator that he wants a vote, whether anybody wants to speak or not, whether any person has any argument to adduce or not, is but a repetition of what was said here in the warm days of last June, just before the adjournment. At any time the Senator desires to discuss that peculiar feature of the situation I am sure that the Senator can be accommodated.

I will remark further, Mr. President, before I proceed, that it is a peculiar situation which confronted us then and which confronts us now; that repeatedly we had it stated in this the last forum of free speech in this world that there is no desire that Senators sent here to discuss great measures—discuss them as nearly as they can as statesmen should discuss them—shall not proceed with such debate, but that, counting votes as votes are counted in combinations in conventions, we shall proceed to pass measures of the gravest consequence to the nation not only for the present, but for all the future, without doing that very thing for which the Senate was first established and ordained; without doing that very thing, Mr. President, which gives the Senate of the United States to-day the great respect in which the Senate is held by the American people.

Mr. QUAY arose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, what is it——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Do I understand the Senator from Indiana to be taking the floor to discuss the bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. QUAY. The reason for making the inquiry is that on yesterday the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] gave notice that at 2 o'clock to-day he would proceed to discuss the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am aware of that, and if the Senator had not suggested that—despite any Senator desiring to proceed, despite the fact that any Senator might want to discharge what he considers his duty upon this floor, the Senator desired a vote—I should have gone ahead and asked the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to me for a few brief minutes while I make some observations that it seems pertinent to me that I should make at this particular juncture, and that, too, with the express desire, as I should have stated, not to infringe upon the valuable time of the Senator from New Hampshire longer than was necessary.

When I rose to speak, Mr. President, while I was on my feet and had addressed the Chair, and even before my first word asking the Senator from New Hampshire to yield, had been uttered, the Senator from Pennsylvania announced that he desired a vote, and when I asked, "What! even before a Senator who is on his feet desiring to address the Senate on the pending measure has spoken?" "Yes," said the Senator, "we have the votes, and we want to vote anyhow."

Mr. QUAY. That is true; we have the votes to pass the bill. The majority of the Senate are in favor of it, and it is being willfully—I was about to use the adjective——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead; I hope the Senator will use the adjective.

Mr. QUAY. Willfully obstructed by discussion, as no one knows better than the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, let us put that question to the test of the facts. Since the Senator raises that question at this particular juncture, nothing can be more useful to the Senate and to the country than to find out who really is obstructing.

Mr. QUAY. You can discover that by a vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. I say you can discover that by a vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah, I am very familiar, everybody is very familiar, even a young and inexperienced man in politics like myself, is familiar with that old and familiar trick of campaign and convention tactics—the trick of declaring "we have the votes and we are going to win." It was of some force when first uttered, perhaps, upon the minds of men, because it contained the psychic suggestion of victory and the consequent suggestion that people should get on the band wagon. Everybody fully understands the philosophy of that kind of tactics. The Senator, however, has worn out the force of it by constant repetition. He has assured us and the country, and he referred to rumors going through the corridors, and we have heard those rumors going through the corridors until we could not escape them, that the Senator from Pennsylvania had the votes whether or no, and that the Senator from Pennsylvania was invincible, and a whole lot of those things, until nobody pays much attention to them any more.

Mr. President, no person has a greater admiration for the political skill and management of the Senator from Pennsylvania than I have. I recognize my inefficiency even to express my appreciation of his surpassing cleverness as a political tactician. But since the Senator (and that is a subject upon which I had not intended to speak) has said that there is being willful obstruction here, I think there can be no more useful or opportune time, since the Senator himself gives the cue for it, than to discuss just what that means.

Here, Mr. President, we have before us an extraordinary measure, a measure which I believe (and I hope if I am wrong some Senator will correct me) is without precedent except once in the history of the United States, where three States of varying conditions, varying populations, not akin in any circumstance of nature, not related in resources, population, production, or development, with dissimilar merits and demerits, heterogeneous unlike, full of contrasts and all but antagonistic in their elements, are, nevertheless, all bunched together in a bill called an "omnibus" bill, a bill which might more properly be named from the point of view of political science or from the point of view of legal construction as a "mongrel" bill. We have that bill, backed, as the Senator himself says, by a combination formed at least many months ago, the core of which is impervious to argument and indifferent to investigation, disdainful of information; we have that bill pressed upon the Senate with uncommon persistence and impetuosity, and this, Mr. President, in spite of the fact that the consequences of this act, if passed, will remain as long as the Republic itself shall endure. Now, upon that measure——

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I desire merely to ask the Senator if the Senator objects to my asking for a vote and to the daily recurrence of that suggestion? I have a request to make now to which I should like to have his assent. I ask unanimous consent that a vote upon this bill be taken on Saturday, the 24th instant.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. While I yield to the Senator and every Senator——

Mr. QUAY. I am not sure——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For all interruptions and questions when I am debating a measure here, and I not only yield, but I welcome such interruptions, I submit——

Mr. QUAY. Then do you object?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That the interruption of the Senator now, and the question he propounds to me while I am discussing the subject he himself has suggested is hardly pertinent, and therefore I do not have to answer it, and that, too, within all possible courtesy to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I am not asking of the Senator anything to which he shall assent especially. I am asking the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am rather inclined to think that if there was unanimous consent it probably would have to include even the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. QUAY. Well, does the Senator from Indiana object?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I answer that that question at this point of the discussion precipitated by the Senator from Pennsylvania himself is not pertinent, and therefore I may be within the limits of all possible courtesy in declining——

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the request be put to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield except for a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or for any interruption which may throw light upon this controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Therefore the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is not in order at this time.

Mr. QUAY. I will renew it when the Senator from Indiana has concluded his remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not any doubt that the Senator will renew it. There is one quality among many others which for years I have admired, and never so much as now, in the Senator from Pennsylvania, and that is an unfailing persistence. I have no doubt we may fairly look for a renewal of the request, and no doubt, Mr. President, when it comes we shall know how to take care of it, having due regard, to use the language of the Republican platform of 1896, to the interests of the people of the Territories and the interests of the people of the Republic, whose agents we are.

Now, Mr. President, let me pursue the question as to who is obstructing, and willfully obstructing. Let us find out whether or not debate of this most important matter (for it has wrapped up in it, in a measure, the determination of all questions of national policy, now and for all time to come) has been unduly prolonged.

By far the most serious measure of the session is before the Senate in this bill, and yet upon it we have had only two speeches on each side. My service in the Senate has been brief, only three or four years, and yet during that time measures of considerable consequence have been determined, but each of them measures of less moment than this. And yet debate has gone on freely, without any attempt on the part of the majority, who admittedly had the votes to pass any measure, to coerce the other side to a vote. Discussion has gone on uninterruptedly until Senators standing here and representing their States and doing their constitutional duty had presented to the Senate their opinions upon the subject.

I recall the Philippine tariff bill at the beginning of the last session. That bill was not profoundly vital. It did not contain a fraction of the importance which this measure contains. And yet the Senate discussed that bill for three or four weeks, or perhaps longer, and nobody heard anything about a suggestion that we were willfully obstructing legislation.

Does the Senator propose to change that which exalts and even sanctifies the Senate of the United States in the eyes of the nation and the world as nothing else does, to wit, the freedom of its rules of speech? I call the Senator's attention to the fact which I stated a moment ago, that on all this round globe to-day the only absolute forum of free discussion and debate, without cloture, without rules of limitation, where Senators may speak their minds and give to the country and to their associates their opinions without reserve, is the Senate of the United States.

Is it a fortunate or hopeful note to free institutions or the dignity of this body that is sounded by the Senator from Pennsylvania when he wants that ancient rule abolished, because he has a measure here which with precipitous haste he desires to have passed? Have I been immoderate in the use of the phrase "precipitous haste?" No one who will recall the history of the strategy adopted during the last session will say so. The Senator returned when the chairman of the Committee on Territories was away for a day or two and moved, without consultation with the chairman even, or his Republican associates upon the Territories Committee, that the committee be discharged, in order that this bill might be rushed through. I recall now, since the Senator has assumed the position of a prophet and says he has the votes to pass the bill and will pass the bill, that the Senator stated with a gravity which amounted to emphasis on the floor last session in discussing his motion to discharge the committee that, in his judgment, unless he could pass his omnibus bill at the last session it never would be passed. Is that still the opinion of the Senator?

Now, Mr. President, let us see who is obstructing legislation. The remark I quoted from the Senator from Pennsylvania a moment ago calls to the mind of all of us on both sides who were here at that time the attitude of the Senator, which was that he had a combination formed before debate was had, formed before men knew the facts in the case except as they were then known, formed before that investigation had taken place, and that with that combination he proposed to stop the consideration of all business——

Mr. SPOONER. And before the committee had reported.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And before the committee had reported at the end of last session. That attitude upon the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania I distinctly remember called forth from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] an indignant protest that while he agreed to the arrangement that the committee should report on the 3d of December, he did not do it under duress of the threat of the Senator from Pennsylvania. That, Mr. President, was the beginning of the obstruction in this case.

Now, what is the exact situation? If I make any misstatement, I will stop in the course of it that the Senator may refute it. It is this, Mr. President: I do not know how long ago—there are manifestations that the heart of the organization existed a long time ago—but it became apparent in this Chamber some eight months ago, and I think was not denied, but even asserted with some pride by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that he had a combination of votes formed here whose heart and center was impervious to the assaults of reason; that he proposed to put through this measure, regardless of argument or fresh information; and that, unless the Senate of the United States submitted to the wishes of his combination in support of a bill which, with one exception, is without precedent in this body or in the Congress of the United States, no measure would be permitted to be passed.

Mr. QUAY. That statement of the Senator from Indiana is entirely false. I withdraw the word "false," and I will say untrue.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. QUAY. I make that correction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I may ask the Senator whether it is true that he secured, before he made the motion to discharge the committee, before the committee had reported, before it had time to make an investigation of this question—is it true that he had (I will wipe out the word "combination," if that is distasteful to the Senator, although I should imagine it would not be).

Mr. QUAY. The entire statement is untrue. The word "combination" is no more offensive than the remainder of the statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. Mr. President, let us see. Then the Senator's statement was that there were a sufficient number of Senators pledged to vote for his measure to pass it, that he proposed to pass it, and that, unless it was passed, no business up to the time we finally agreed was to be transacted. Was that the case?

Mr. QUAY. That is not true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator did not have the pledges?

Mr. QUAY. I am not talking about pledges, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Indiana was as busy as any Senator on this floor——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was. The Senator made me busy.

Mr. QUAY. In getting pledges.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, Mr. President, I was busy as soon as I returned, having heard—I was about to quote what the Senator quoted from the conspiracy of Catiline at the beginning of this session, familiarity with which upon his part does not surprise me at all—the Senator had a sufficient number of votes, as he said—if he does not like the word "pledges" I will say votes. Anyway, he says he got them. I returned and found that out, and immediately I will say that the Senator did make me very busy indeed, seeing Senators in order to see that his votes did not remain with him; and I think, Mr. President, with some considerable measure of success.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I do not see, then, why the Senator from Indiana should complain of my doing exactly that which he states he himself did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not get pledges from Senators to block legislation, or the consequence of which pledges meant that legislation should be blocked.

The Senator calls attention to the fact that I was busy at the same business. The Senator made me busy at the same business, Mr. President. The Senator asserted that he had certain votes. Well, it was my business as the chairman of the committee which he was attempting to discharge from the consideration of this matter to see that he did not have those votes if I could help it. I think, Mr. President, we helped it. So we reached an agreement—a pretty hard agreement it was, to be sure—an agreement fixing such an early date for the report as compelled this committee to work in this investigation immediately after the campaign, as few committees of either the Senate or the House of Representatives have ever worked, with conscientiousness and devotion, and, I trust, results.

Mr. President, I am glad to see the Senator weaken in his faith in the number of pledges of votes that he may have. That, however, was the first step in this business of obstruction. I have only to appeal to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon that question; I have only to appeal to the recollection of every Senator upon this floor on either side upon that question; I have only to appeal to the common understanding of the country upon that question—the question of the Senator's attitude at the end of the last session. And, Mr. President, if I did not carefully and conscientiously desire that no personalities should be introduced into this debate, but that it should be carried on in the high and statesmanlike manner in which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] carried it on, I would demonstrate to the Senator from Pennsylvania, by editorial utterances of the press of this country upon both sides of this question, what they think now and thought then as to who were obstructing legislation.

Mr. President, we understand the inception of this business; we understand how this thing—not how, but when, it was born. And we have beheld that strange creature before us ever since, not growing as most children grow, but rather diminishing, I am very glad to say. So that I am not so sure whether the Senator has his votes, of which he so earnestly and vigorously—and I could use another adjective—boasted at the end of the last session and has boasted ever since; and upon which votes has rested the Senator's chief argument.

That was the situation at the end of the last session. Now, what is the situation to-day? The Senator day after day--I had hoped he would not do it any more, but he did it again just as I was beginning to discuss this bill—has referred to the willful obstruction of legislation—and by us. That is not offensive to me, though sometimes I think perhaps those statements that the Senator's colleagues are willfully obstructing legislation, in view of the facts, is a little audacious. It reminds me of what Danton said to his followers: "Pour les vaincres il nous faut de l'audace, encore de l'audace, toujours de l'audace, et la France est sauvée"—"To overcome them we need only audacity, and again audacity, and always audacity, and France is saved." Mr. President, I have thought many times that I could imagine the Senator from Pennsylvania in the midst of the councils of his allies rising and saying to them, "Let us say we demand a vote; we care not for argument; we care not for investigation; we care not for information; all we need to overcome them is audacity, and again audacity, and always audacity, and the omnibus bill is saved!"

Mr. President, I do not think that that tactics, however potent it may be in convention halls, will work in the Senate of the United States.

I have been a reverent student, though I have no doubt not a profound one, of the discussions which gave rise to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States with respect to the establishment of the Senate in our scheme of government. I know what those great men, who saw further, perhaps, into the future than any statesman ever saw, thought and meant when they established the Senate of the United States and fixed its term of service and the manner of selecting Senators. Every precaution possible was thrown around this body in order to prevent just such tactics as that from prevailing.

Now, then, here is the situation: The Senator says, "I have the votes; I want a vote;" and even when a Senator is on his feet he says "I want a vote." With this array of votes—I trust and believe many of them have yielded to argument and new information—the Senator from Pennsylvania comes before the Senate of the United States and says, "Give us what we demand, or no legislation shall pass this body."

Obstructors of legislation! Mr. President, we are willing at any moment to take up any legislation; we are willing to pass appropriation bills; we are willing to take up the treaty; we are willing to take up trust legislation, Philippine legislation, pure-food legislation, labor legislation; in short, we are willing to take up anything which immediately affects the country's welfare, and which, if done now and unwisely done, we can undo at the next Congress. If the Senator is anxious to pass legislation which is blocked here by the situation which the Senator from Pennsylvania himself has created, let us agree to take up these other questions and pass them. But the burden is not upon us, Mr. President, nor shall it be permitted to rest upon our shoulders, that we obstruct because we debate a needful measure needfully.

"Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung."

Let the Senate and the country understand what they do understand now, that the real obstructors of this legislation, if obstruction occurs, as it has not yet, are not those Senators who stand here in good faith and debate this measure, and who have debated it thus far much more briefly than any measure of like or even of half the importance has even been debated, but the Senator who, day by day, announces that he has got the votes and will pass this bill, or the country will not be permitted to have any other needful legislation at present.

Why is it, Mr. President, that we are willing to take up other measures, and that we are willing only to debate this subject until debate shall be exhausted, until every Senator upon both sides of this Chamber shall have been heard by his associates and by the country? This is the reason: Because, Mr. President, if any other measure is passed which we find harmful to the country, that measure can be repealed by the next Congress; but if this measure should prove unwise—and at least there is a question of it since there is such a sharp and profound difference of opinion regarding it—and the Senator should succeed in passing it, it is a thing which is done forever, and even the Senator himself with all his votes could not undo it if he so willed. He would find it a Frankenstein, which would constantly grow and grow, and if it was in the end a mistake it would finally devour him. Therefore, is it unreasonable that men whose minds and consciences and all the elements that inspire public men to action compel them to be against this bill should do the very thing for which our States sent us here; that we should do the very thing for which this Senate was established in the first instance—discuss a measure until discussion has discovered its merits or demerits, until debate had sifted the dross from the gold, and until we were finally able to give by our votes an informed and intelligent opinion?

These reasons might appeal even to the Senator from Pennsylvania. And, if this is true, Mr. President, who is it that is obstructive—those who wish to do their duty or those who say "Give us a vote or you can not have any legislation?"

Since the Senator has raised the issue—and I did not expect to utter a word upon this question, because I knew how the country and the Senate felt about it—I knew how the country felt about it from those who have talked to me; I knew how the country felt about it from the editorials which have appeared in Republican papers, in Democratic papers, and in independent papers upon this very question which, if the Senator had any doubt about it, I would introduce if I had them here at this time were it not for the fact that, so far as I am concerned, personalities shall not enter into this debate—since, I say, the Senator has raised the question of obstruction, let the blame rest where it belongs.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say upon this question, which is an immediate question of great importance, I will admit. As to who is obstructing legislation and as to who will be responsible for the defeat of the country's much-needed laws, I think the country will understand; and if a brand is to be placed, I think the country will place the brand accurately where it belongs, nor do I think they will permit the Senator from Pennsylvania to divert that burning iron from its proper object.

Mr. President, in all I had intended to say in my very brief answer to some of the points made by the Senator from Ohio, I should not have occupied the time which the Senator from Pennsylvania has compelled me to occupy on this question of obstruction. And in view of the fact that I do not desire to trespass upon the time of my friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] longer than is necessary, I will proceed immediately, and as briefly as possible, to an examination of two or three statements which I think are proper to lay before the Senate in connection with the remarkably able and uncommonly high-of-tone argument of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] yesterday. I was very greatly impressed with it. I listened to it with admiration, because I admire the Senator as much as I deplore his position upon this question.

Mr. President, let us put the touchstone of the comparative facts to the vigorous argument of the Senator from Ohio, the second argument which has been made in behalf of the omnibus bill championed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I do not intend to go into a full discussion of the excellent speech of the Senator from Ohio, but I do intend at this particular time, because what he said so well is fresh upon the minds of all of us, to call attention to what seems to me to be an unintentional extravagance of expression. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the vigor of brilliant advocacy in which the Senator from Ohio found himself as he made his argument robbed his speech somewhat of its judicial nature.

The first thing to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 951, where I find this statement by the Senator from Ohio:

> Mr. President, the Territory of Arizona had, according to the census of 1890, only 59,000 people in round numbers. According to this census she has a population of 122,000; and I do not think all were counted. But all might not have been counted before. Assuming that the census was right in both instances, what is the result? The population has grown—

And I beg attention of Senators to this—

> The population has grown more than 100 per cent in ten years. How much would the Senator from Maine expect a population to grow in ten years to give a promise of growth in the ten years to come? Is there that growth in Maine? Is there that growth in Delaware? Is there that growth in Vermont, or New Hampshire, or Rhode Island, or Indiana? There is no such growth anywhere in the United States as there has been in the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. President, if that is true, it is a powerful argument to sustain the proposition that in Arizona, as was the case in Indiana and Ohio and Iowa and Illinois and Missouri and other like States, there is an immediate natural assurance of an immense increase of population. But what are the facts? These are the facts: There is shown by the census of 1900 an increase of 100 per cent in the population of Arizona over the census of ten years before, because nearly 30,000 Indians were included in the last census that were not included in the previous census. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] nods his head. Does the Senator think that that is a fair method to compute an increase of population?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not nod my head.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he did.

Mr. FORAKER. Not in assent to the Senator's suggestion. I was nodding my head in assent to the information he was giving.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, in any event, here it is stated, and an argument of weight and eloquence built upon the statement, that there has been an astounding increase of population in Arizona; and when we come to apply to it the test of the comparative figures, we find that increase is accounted for in large part by the fact that some twenty-eight or thirty thousand Indians were not counted in the census ten years ago who were counted in the last census. Does that show a tide of immigration into Arizona from which the Senator draws his well-drawn inference upon the facts he states? I have no doubt perhaps that the Senator did not know that fact. Of course he did not know that fact. He goes on to state from that:

> There is no such growth anywhere in the United States as there has been in the Territory of Arizona.

Well, let us see about that, Mr. President. The Senator was arguing at considerable length—and, of course, I do not want to take up very much time in calling attention to other statements, but that is the very heart and gist of them—that there was as great growth in the increased population of Arizona as there had ever been in any Territory of this country, certainly as there is now. Well, here is the statement from the census, not given in figures only, but in the language of the census report itself:

> The population of the Territory of Arizona is 122,212 (final report 122,931), as compared with a population in 1890 of 59,620. This shows an increase during the decade of 62,592, or 104.9 per cent. This large increase is due in part to the fact that there were 28,469 Indians and 154 other persons, or a total of 28,623 persons, on Indian reservations, etc., in Arizona who were specially enumerated in 1890 under the provisions of the census act, but were not included in the general population of the Territory at that census. (Census of 1900, Bulletin No. 6, p. 1.)

Let us see, Mr. President, whether or not there has been as great growth anywhere else in the United States. At several places in his speech the Senator called my particular and personal attention to his statements, though that is never necessary in order that I shall give all my attention to the Senator whenever he speaks. He says:

> There is no such growth anywhere in the United States as there has been in the Territory of Arizona.

I say that that was a statement made in the heat of advocacy, because here is the statement of the 1900 Census Population Report, volume 1, page xxvi:

> Among the several States and Territories Oklahoma shows the largest per centage of increase since 1890. Oklahoma was organized as a Territory in May, 1890, and at the census taken one month later had a population of 78,475, including 16,641 Indians and other persons specially enumerated but not included in the general report on population at that census. At the census of 1900 it had a population of 398,331, or an increase since 1890 of 407.6 per cent; in other words, its population in 1900 is more than five times as large as the entire population returned in 1890.

And yet the Senator says that the increase in the population of Arizona, even counting Indians who had not been included before, is not equaled anywhere else in the United States, whereas Oklahoma, lying right next to it, within a stone's throw of it, geographically speaking, has an increase of over 407.6 per cent. Does that show that, with all our respect for the Senator, we must give very much consideration to any argument built upon that statement?

The latter part of the Senator's argument was based——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator does not object to my interrupting him——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I yield to the Senator gladly, for I do not want to misrepresent him.

Mr. FORAKER. The statement made by me in a broad way should be modified. I did not think for the moment of the great and rapid growth of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. I had in mind, when I was using the expression, the United States otherwise than in the Territories. Is there any State where there has been any such increase or any such percentage of increase as the census indicated, as I quoted the census, namely, 100 per cent?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course the Senator will modify his statement as to the 100 per cent now?

Mr. FORAKER. Of course I will have to modify it in view of what the Senator says, if the Senator is correct, as no doubt he is from what he says; but still the percentage would be——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thirty-nine per cent.

Mr. FORAKER. How much?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thirty-nine per cent.

Mr. FORAKER. No; it is an increase of over 57 per cent as the Senator gave the figures just now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; perhaps it is.

Mr. FORAKER. Which shows that the increase of population in Arizona during the last decade was, according to the corrected figures as given by the Senator, more than 57 per cent. I doubt if there is any State in the Union that can show a like increase of population by percentage.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, then, Mr. President, that is a fair and frank modification. Let us put that to the touchstone. Is it not a better, because a more comparative and juster comparison of information elicited, to ask the question whether or not we can point to any Territory which for ten years before its admission showed a like increase. Because that comparison between a State and a Territory eliminates the very essential difference that the Senator argues about? I will give the Senator some figures upon that.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator must know that for the moment when I made that statement I did not have Oklahoma in mind. I had been discussing Oklahoma and calling attention to its tremendous growth. I was speaking of the United States for the moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, let us go ahead to some other States and see what their percentage of increase was before their admission. Let us take the Indian Territory, which shows an increase in the same time of 117 per cent—no; it is more than that. Let us take Washington, admitted November 2, 1899, with a population of 349,390 by the census of 1890. Ten years before, Washington had a population of 75,116, the percentage of increase being more than 450.

Let us take Nebraska——

Mr. FORAKER. Is that for the last decade?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; for the decade immediately before its admission.

Mr. FORAKER. From 1880 to 1890?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I was speaking of the last decade. I say, including the last decade there had not been in the United States—there may have been; I may have been in error in making the statement, and I should like to have the Senator tell me of some State in which there was an increase of more than 100 per cent in population.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not inform the Senator now, because I do not know. I did not intend to go into an extended argument upon the Senator's speech, or I would have had that. But I thought it would be a juster comparison in the Senator's argument to find out what was the percentage of increase in the other Territories that had been admitted as States during the decade immediately preceding their admission; because that is the situation in which Arizona is.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course, the Senator speaks advisedly——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know about the other States.

Mr. FORAKER. But the statement I made was as to the last decade, for you can find numerous cases where a Territory being admitted to statehood had a rapid rush of population to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before admission?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; in some cases before, and in many cases immediately afterwards. I was simply speaking of the general growth of the country. Of course, I will correct the figures if the Senator thinks I am wrong.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that is a fair interpretation of what I read of what the Senator says. Nevertheless, I think that the argument of comparison is better for Territories that were admitted as States, the increase for the decade immediately preceding, because that is what you are proceeding on in Arizona. I think the Senator will agree it is a fair interpretation to put upon it. As to the growth in the States, I do not know.

Nebraska was admitted March 1, 1867. By the nearest census, that of 1870, she had a population of 122,993. By the previous census, that of 1860, she had a population of 28,841. The percentage of increase was 450.

Montana was admitted November 2, 1889. By the nearest census, that of 1890, she had a population of 132,159. By the census of 1880 she had a population of 39,159. The percentage of gain was more than 350.

Minnesota was admitted May 11, 1858. The population by the nearest census, that of 1860, was 172,023. The population by the previous census, that of 1850, was 6,077. The percentage of gain was 2,800; and so on.

I am not pretending to speak accurately about the figures I am now going to quote, but I think, Mr. President, in even the little and overcrowded State of Delaware there was an increase of population, notwithstanding immigration from it of perhaps 10 per cent. The point is that there was no rush into this Territory, such as occurred in these other States, and such as was justly anticipated in the case of the Territories which were afterwards formed into the States of the Mississippi Valley—such as was the case in Nebraska, and Minnesota, and the Dakotas.

While I am on the question of Indians, I wish to call the Senator's attention to one fact. The Senator says that there was in the speech of the Senator from Minnesota a discrepancy; that the census showed so many Indians and that the Indian Department's enumeration showed so many more, and he said:

> They missed that many (nearly 5,000) in trying to count a lot of Indians penned up on the reservations.

From that we are to infer, of course, that here are a large number of Indians penned up in a very small area. How small an area, Mr. President? These Indian reservations are only 26,397 square miles in area; and I ask the Senator whether he does not think it is a little bit harder to get Indians, most of whom do not even wear any civilized clothes or dress, in an area of 26,397 square miles, in the neighborhood of a third of the area of the whole Territory, than it is to get civilized people who are in towns, cities, and mining camps? So we see as to the accuracy of that.

While I am on this subject, I may quote from the census as to the population of Arizona. The total population of Arizona was 122,931. I call the attention of the Senate to these figures. Of this number there were whites 92,903, divided as follows: Native whites—native parents, 44,830; native whites—foreign parents, 25,678; foreign white, 22,395. So we have a total of foreign born and of foreign immigrants of nearly 48,000 out of this population of 122,000, of which, according to the Senator's own figures, nearly 30,000 were Indians untaxed. If you take out those two elements how much does it leave? There remains a colored population of 30,028, of which 1,848 are negroes, 1,419 Chinese, 281 Japanese, and 24,644 Indians untaxed, and Indians taxed, 1,836, making the total of the census figures.

One other point in the Senator's address. He speaks of the marvelous growth in the business activity of these two Territories, and again issues a challenge for us to show any portion of the United States with an equal number of people that surpasses the business activity of Arizona and New Mexico. He gives the post-office receipts here——

Mr. FORAKER. I said "similarly situated."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Similarly situated." That introduces an element into this discussion which is very——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator does not want to misrepresent what I said?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not.

Mr. FORAKER. I was very careful in making that statement. I did not mean to compare the people in those Territories with an equal number of people in New York City or in some other city or situated as we are in this part of the country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Similarly situated."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator did say "similarly situated," but the question of the similarity of the situation is the crux of this whole business. "Similarly situated." I do not know whether or not the words "similarly situated" bear out the Senator's other statements concerning the natural advantages of New Mexico, because the Senator went much further than Governor Ross did some years ago in his remarkable report. The Senator stated in the course of his address that he doubted if there was hardly an acre of the Territory of New Mexico unfit for the uses of man. He made statements similar to the statements made in the report brought into the Senate by Mr. Faulkner some four or five years ago concerning Arizona, in which he said something to this effect: That no State in the Union had resources that equaled, or anything like equaled, those of the Territory of Arizona.

Now, Mr. President, I have prepared and will put in without reading, because I want to hurry on, a statement of the internal-revenue receipts and post-office receipts and their increase (because that is what the Senator from Ohio gave) as to New Mexico and Arizona on the one hand and some little towns throughout the country on the other hand. I will read one or two, in order that the Senator may see the comparisons. In 1890 New Mexico's post-office receipts were over $45,000. In 1902 they were $93,684.17. Now, let us see whether any other portion of the country can show equal results. The post-office receipts for the city of Fort Wayne, Ind., were, in 1890, $48,912.53 and in 1902 they were $145,030.97. That is a little city of perhaps one-fourth the population of New Mexico whose increase, Mr. President, is immensely above that of the entire Territory of New Mexico, with its vastly larger population.

Here are Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Guthrie, in Oklahoma Territory; Scranton, Pa. In 1890—I turn to the Senator from Pennsylvania—the Scranton post-office receipts were sixty-one thousand and some hundred dollars. In 1902 they were $232,879; and perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania can tell me what the population of Scranton is. I ask that the rest of this paper be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the paper will be inserted in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

Internal-revenue receipts in some States and Territories.

	1890.	1901.
New Mexico	$37,671.19	$58,609.31
Vermont	23,819.02	166,786.10
Washington	137,364.81	802,387.31
Montana	105,034.44	486,173.03
Utah	55,592.40	227,543.71
District of Columbia	169,957.33	790,986.96
Maryland	2,896,944.75	8,562,771.72
Rhode Island	273,858.11	1,287,035.61

	1892.	1901.
Arizona	$17,965.90	$61,698.96
Maine	39,955.48	286,581.33
Mississippi	31,014.21	94,991.48
Oklahoma	8,864.10	95,598.27
Indian Territory	5,728.41	26,789.17

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On post-office receipts the Senator said:

In 1890 New Mexico's post-office receipts were $45,639.62, and in 1902 they were $93,684.17.

Now, consider a few comparisons.

The post-office receipts for the city of Fort Wayne, Ind., were in 1890 $48,912.53, and in 1902 were $145,030.97.

The post-office receipts for the city of Elkhart, Ind., were in 1890 $21,996.04, and in 1902 were $74,856.58.

The post-office receipts for the Indian Territory were in 1890 $3,348.85, and in 1902 were $136,406.44.

The gross post-office receipts for Arizona in 1890 were $28,416.06, and in 1902 were $129,267.95.

Or take some Ohio towns and compare the increase of their post-office receipts with New Mexico's.

	1890.	1902.
Akron, Ohio	$50,394.84	$136,946.07
Springfield, Ohio	73,695.04	142,453.26

or consider the post-office receipts in the following places:

Oklahoma		$267,417.45
Oklahoma City		54,546.04
Guthrie		26,801.05
Scranton, Pa	$61,324.03	232,879.43
Allegheny, Pa	68,467.86	213,022.19
Schenectady, N. Y	19,284.33	112,000.67

I had marked in the Senator's instructive speech several other points to which I intended to call attention, but the time is going on, and I do not wish to consume more than I must, and so I will pass them over to some future time when I will try to give them further and more extended attention.

But there is one more thing to which I desire to call the Senate's attention before I conclude this afternoon, and that is as to the Senator's argument concerning the rule deduced by the committee from the ordinance of 1787. I think the Senator is right in his construction of that. I have examined it, and I make no quarrel on that. But in order to understand that we must understand some further facts to which no reference was made; and when these further facts are understood the Senate will see that after all the rule deduced by the committee is accurate for the purposes for which it was deduced.

Why did the committee refer to the fact that the fathers of the ordinance of 1787 fixed 60,000 as the number of people when, as the Senator says, a State might demand admission? Why did the committee refer to the unit rule of representation? Why did we refer to anything which went to show the opinion of any statesman in the past concerning how many people a State must have? It was because we wanted to show that a Territory claiming admission as a State must show some fair proportion of population to the population of the rest of the country.

We do not contend arbitrarily for the rule of 60,000 as applied to the population of the country to-day. We do not contend for the rule of the unit of representation arbitrarily. We contend for no arbitrary rule, but these things are used as illustrations to show that you can not rightfully admit a Territory which seeks admission as a State with a population of ten or fifteen or twenty or a hundred or five hundred, but it must bear some just and reasonable proportion to the rest of the Republic.

Mr. President, what were the circumstances which led to the proviso which the Senator read in the ordinance of 1787, to wit, that if at any time with a fewer number a Territory could be admitted consistently with the welfare of the country, it might be admitted? It was the fact that the first ordinance which Virginia presented to the Congress of the United States for the cession of the Northwest territory provided that instead of being five States, as was finally determined by the Congress of the United States, there should be ten, and that instead of 60,000 there should be 20,000. One of the reasons—and I will come to the other presently—why that proviso was put in was because the Congress of the United States rejected the first draft of the ordinance of Virginia, ceding the Territory to the United States, and providing for its government in 1787, which ordinance had in it a provision that 20,000 should be sufficient to admit a State into the Union. The Congress thought that was not enough. They thought that number was absurd, and so they fixed it at 60,000. But in view of 20,000 being fixed in the ordinance, they said "provided," and then follows the proviso referred to by the Senator from Ohio.

What was the other reason? It is a historical reason. It was the fact that those Territories were then being settled, and in Ohio at that time, or very soon thereafter, there were a large number of soldiers of the Revolution. Washington refers to them in one of his letters. He says in substance and effect:

"I know these men well. They were the men who helped establish the Constitution of the United States. They were the men who in the various colonies helped to ratify it by their votes."

Aye, Mr. President, those men who were going into those new States, and many of whom were there when the ordinance was passed, were the men who had first helped to unfurl our banner to the breeze and who had kept it there by baring their breasts in the front of battle. They were swarming over the mountains, they were filling the plains and the savannas of Ohio and Indiana and Illinois; and Washington, in speaking of them, said that in his opinion no colony had ever been established on earth under such favorable auspices or with such excellent material.

And so the two reasons for the proviso to which the Senator refers are that the ordinance of 1787, as presented by Virginia, contained a provision for 20,000, and the Congress of the United States thought it was absurd and fixed 60,000. Even Thomas Jefferson, with all his enormous power over Congress—a very proper power it was, too—could not force that ordinance through. The Congress returned it. The ordinance first presented to Congress provided for ten States out of the Northwest territory instead of five, as finally adopted. The Congress of the United States thought that even coming from that great statesman it was absurd, and they reduced it. First the proposition was to reduce to two States all of the territory now constituting Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and finally it was not less than three nor more than five.

The first draft of the ordinance of Virginia contained ten States and their names were as follows: Sylvania, Michigania, Cherronesus, Assenisipia, Metropotamia, Illinoia, Saratoga, Washington, Polypotamia, Pelisipia. Those were the States Virginia first proposed. That was the ordinance as presented. The Senator might have stated those facts. They were fair facts as showing the reason why they put in that proviso.

Now, the purpose of the committee, as stated in our report, in referring to the rule established in the ordinance of 1787 and in referring to the other rules was to show that it is submitted to the good sense of Congress that there must be some fair proportion of population in a Territory seeking admission to the Union compared to the rest of the population of the nation.

Mr. President, just one other point, and I am through. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] several times, in language as harsh as the language of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], in referring to the same point yesterday, was respectful and considerate to his associates, has referred to the Republican platform, and time and again we who are honored by belonging to that great party have been belabored with the Territorial plank in the platform of 1900. It has been wielded by a masterful hand, but the whip was not very effective. We were in the position of a man being thrashed with a straw in the hands of a giant as I shall show in a moment.

Mr. President, to what extent do party platforms bind the mind and conscience of United States Senators? I think we all agree—I do not think there will be any disagreement upon this side of the Chamber nor upon my own side of the Chamber with this statement—that a party platform is binding as to laws upon which we as Senators are called on to vote when they involve an issue of which the convention that adopted it knew, of which the people were informed by discussion, and upon which they voted at the polls. You can not by implication say, as you would in a lawsuit, that because it is in a platform therefore the delegates must be held to know it was there. The rule of legal implication does not rest upon the voters of the United States if they never had it in mind at all. We are not bound here, in voting upon questions, by the narrow rules of legal interpretation that are invoked in court. These are great questions of public policy.

Now, I think everybody will agree, as a matter of common sense, that a party platform ought to be binding upon us in the votes we shall give upon a great measure before us when the utterances of that platform states an issue which was debated before the people and which was voted upon by the people and which was deciced by the people. As, for example, could any Republican Senator, with any possible self-respect, have voted against the principles of the protective tariff or the gold standard or any other question which constituted an issue in this campaign or in any campaign? No. I say that, Mr. President, notwithstanding that I have in mind the fact that when the Constitution was adopted the political party, as we understand it to-day, did not exist; and that a party convention in this country was not called for nearly a half century after the Constitution was adopted, and that party platforms did not lay down the law to the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States for nearly a half century after the Constitution was adopted and this Congress had been in operation.

I state that by party platforms we, as honorable men, are bound, when acting as Senators of the United States upon great issues that the people understand, notwithstanding the fact that one of the chief reasons, argued and argued again by those who had to do with the establishment of the Senate, was that it should be so constituted as to put a modifying and a moderating check upon temporary expressions of popular will. But if there is an issue here, then we are bound by it.

Was there then any issue on statehood? Was there a speech made upon the subject? In the address of the permanent or of the temporary chairman of the convention was the question mentioned? Was it talked about even in the lobbies of hotels where delegates gathered?

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator, as I understand him, says there was no issue between the two parties, and that this question was not discussed——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. In either the Republican or the Democratic convention in fixing the platforms.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not say it, but I do say it now.

Mr. CLAY. Then I call the Senator's attention to the platforms of the two political parties in 1888.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was myself going to do that.

Mr. CLAY. Just one minute. I want to call the Senator's attention to the resolution that was passed on June 6, 1888, at the time Mr. Cleveland was nominated for President and Allen G. Thurman for Vice-President. The national Democratic convention was the first in that year to make nominations.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What year was that?

Mr. CLAY. Eighteen hundred and eighty-eight. The resolution provides:

> That a just and liberal policy should be pursued in reference to the Territories; that right of self-government is inherent in the people and guaranteed under the Constitution; that the Territories of Washington, Dakota, Montana, and New Mexico are by virtue of population and development entitled to admission into the Union as States, and we unqualifiedly condemn the course of the Republican party in refusing statehood and self-government to their people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. Now, one minute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, well; you denounced us in 1900.

Mr. CLAY. The Republican convention met seven or eight days after this platform was adopted by the Democratic convention; and the Republican convention, in enunciating its platform in 1888, provided:

> The Republican party pledges itself to do all in its power to facilitate the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Idaho, and Arizona to the enjoyment of self-government as States.

Now, I want to ask the Senator, is it not true that the Democratic convention convened on the 5th day of June, in 1888, and provided in their platform for the admission of these Territories and condemned the Republican party for failing to carry out its pledges, and that the Republican convention convened seven or eight or ten days afterwards and unanimously indorsed a platform which provided for the admission of those Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator say we are bound by the platform of 1888? Why does the Senator resort to ancient history? We have had later conventions.

Mr. CLAY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the planks of the platforms of the conventions which convened in 1892 and 1896 and 1900, having reference to these Territories, provide for their admission as States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In practically the same language?

Mr. CLAY. Not exactly in the same language, but practically in the same language.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will put the question to the test, and I will ask the Senator from Georgia this question. He is a prominent Senator and one of the leaders of his party, as everybody admits, and an honorable gentleman. I want to ask the Senator this question: Did the Senator know the language of the Democratic platform itself, adopted at the last national convention, before he looked it up in the book at this session?

Mr. CLAY. I desire to say to the Senator from Indiana——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What was it? Can the Senator quote it?

Mr. CLAY. Not exactly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. But I know the substance of it. I desire to say to the Senator that I read every word and line in the platforms of 1888, of 1892, of 1896, and of 1900.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator state what was the substance of the last platform?

Mr. CLAY. I can give——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; do not look at the book. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. Do you mean in the platform of the late Democratic convention?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir. What was its substance?

Mr. CLAY. In substance, the platform of the last Democratic convention provided for the early admission of these Territories to statehood. I want to say this to the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Hold on! The Senator does not state it nearly so strong as it was. Your platform provided for the immediate, not the early, admission of the Territories, and you further denounced our perfidy in not admitting them. I will ask the Senator if he made one single speech upon that subject or uttered one word on that subject in any of his speeches?

Mr. CLAY. I did not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. I did not believe it was an issue between the two political parties. When the Republican convention assembled, representing at that time probably a majority of the people of the United States, and announced that that convention, representing the Republicans, was in favor of the admission of those Territories as States, and when a Democratic convention did likewise, I believed there was no issue between the two parties, and we turned our attention to the discussion of questions as to which there were issues. We believed that platforms meant what they said.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I know——

Mr. CLAY. And there was no difference between the two parties on this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then why did the Senator's platform denounce us for bad faith? If you did not mean to denounce us, why did you put it in? And if you did put it in, why did you not speak about it?

Mr. CLAY. Because you had not kept your promise.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why did you not speak about it to the people as an issue?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he feels bound by all the provisions of all the Democratic platforms since 1888?

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the Republican party has carried out any portion of the platform that it provided in 1900?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is a counterclaim. It is a plea of confession and avoidance.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator this——

Mr. ALDRICH. I answer that I have to confess that I have never read the Republican platform of 1900.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that the Republican platform of 1900 provided for the admission of these Territories as States. It provided that there should be a remedy for the evils existing by reason of the trusts now in this country, and the Senator knows there has been no effort upon the part of Congress to carry out either of those provisions in the platform of 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have had more or less experience and knowledge as to how platforms are constructed both by Democratic conventions and Republican conventions, and I must confess that that knowledge and that experience rather lessens my loyalty to their provisions.

Mr. CLAY. I did not catch that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I will proceed. I am always glad to yield, and I am very much obliged for his interruption, because he always illuminates any subject to which he addresses himself.

He says he did not denounce us, although the platform did, because he thought there was no issue, although the platform denounced us because it thought there was an issue. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests to me that they had become so accustomed to denouncing us that they had to pen a denunciation anyhow.

I ask the Senator's attention to this particular point. Let us agree, then, that there was in the campaign of 1900 no issue between the two parties (although the platform of one convention denounced the other party) because both substantially agreed upon the same thing. Very well. One session of Congress was held after 1900. This was in 1902. This bill was up, as it was claimed, in accordance with the provisions of both platforms. A very stubborn committee, even under the lashing of the party whip by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], failed to make its report. We were denounced upon this floor as having gone back upon the expressions of our platform. Between the time that Congress adjourned and the time when it reconvened there was a campaign through all this country. There was the opportunity for an outraged people to rise and denounce in their wrath the party which had deceived them. There was an opportunity for the Senator from Georgia to unloose the flood gates of his eloquence in denunciation of that act of political perfidy.

Now, did the Senator from Georgia do it? Did the Senator from Georgia, during the campaign of 1902, make a remark before any of his audiences upon the question of the admission of the Territories?

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that the Senator's party in its previous platform had promised that it would admit these Territories to statehood. They did not do it. They came back and made another promise.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When?

Mr. CLAY. You made a promise. You promised——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When?

Mr. CLAY. In 1888.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, 1888.

Mr. CLAY. You made a promise in 1892.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where did we make a promise in 1892?

Mr. CLAY. In the convention which named the candidates for President and Vice-President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In 1902?

Mr. CLAY. In 1892.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am stating the Senator's position logically and frankly. The Senator says there was substantially no issue between the parties in 1900 because their two platforms, after all, substantially agreed. I point out to the Senator, then, that notwithstanding our platform, we did not admit those States in the last session, immediately after the campaign of 1900, and after that and before the present session there intervened a political campaign in which the Senator from Georgia took a part. We had then, according to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Pennsylvania and other Senators who take that position, violated our platform prior to the campaign of 1902. Now, then, did the Senator from Georgia make a single speech or give utterance to a single sentence in any speech with respect to that neglect of duty on our part? There was an issue according to your position in the last campaign after we had not fulfilled, as you say, our platform pledges of 1900. Why did you not avail yourself of it?

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Indiana a fact with which he is probably familiar. It is not proper to refer to what has occurred in the House, but I will state that my understanding is that the House of Representatives went so far as to pass this bill providing for statehood——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAY. Just one moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly—two minutes.

Mr. CLAY. Carrying out the platform of the Republican party. I understand that a bill for the admission of New Mexico has passed six different times in the House. It has been reported three different times in the Senate. A political party may meet in convention and promulgate a platform and be unable to get its measures through Congress by reason of the pressure of other business, notwithstanding the fact that the platform provides for such legislation. I understand, I will say to the Senator, that there have been four different reports made by the Committee on Territories in the Senate in favor of the admission of New Mexico to statehood.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, and some day I intend to examine the statements in those reports, too, because it was probably those reports that the committees on resolutions of the two parties had before them when they enunciated these planks. But the Senator does not answer my question. It is no answer to say that the House passed this measure. Does the Senator consider himself bound to vote for a bill because the House passes it? If so, we had better have only one House. Mr. Conkling made the observation in debate on the floor of the Senate, and Mr. Thurman seconded his remark, that if we were to consider ourselves bound to pass a bill because the House had passed it, we might as well have only one House.

Is there any weight to the argument of the Senator from Georgia? I put the question again to the Senator from Georgia. It takes the two Houses to pass a measure in this Government. Having violated the platform pledges of 1900, as the Senator says, by not passing this measure at the last session of Congress (because the Senator from Pennsylvania said they had the votes to pass it and therefore our failure to pass it must have been a violation of our platform, according to the Senator from Georgia) having done that, having failed to keep that platform pledge, the campaign came on in which the Senator from Georgia took part. Did he mention in any one of his speeches that failure on the part of the Republican party? I pause for a reply. The Senator does not answer.

I thought perhaps the Senator from Tennessee, whom I see there, my good friend, and able and brilliant Senator, might have done so. I happen to know——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator repeat what he said?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do not interrupt me until I conclude what I am going to say about the Senator, which I assure him will always be agreeable.

Mr. CARMACK. Is the Senator speaking of me or of my colleague?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I include both; but I was particularly speaking of the handsome, young, and brilliant Senator who just arose to address me, and whose consciousness of the fact that he was addressed led him to arise and make the inquiry.

I happen to know that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] had a great deal to do with the management of the last Democratic campaign of 1902, and in that good humor which always distinguishes his contests he baited us a good deal in private conversation about violating this platform. So he went into the preparation of the campaign book, which I have here on my desk, with full knowledge that here was this party simply filled with perfidy upon this question in not having done it. He was making an issue, in helping to make this campaign book, for his party before the people. The Senator can tell us, and I pause for a reply, whether he put one word in the campaign book of 1902, or whether any of his associates did, concerning this violation of the platform pledge by the Republican party.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, it was impossible to insert in that campaign book the various infidelities of the Republican party. We found that they were as numberless as the sands of the sea.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, there is a moderate statement for you.

Mr. CARMACK. It was impossible for us to include them in any one book of reasonable size. We had to omit a great many.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the Senator omitted this one, and the Senator confined his opportunity——

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am always delighted to hear the Senator.

Mr. BATE. For this very statehood bill the Republicans of the House had voted before the election.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania got up here and claimed with a good deal of vigor that we were not carrying out our platform pledges. He read the whole proceedings of that convention. He read the names of those of us who had been there, and he held us up to public scorn, if we did not pass this omnibus measure right then and there.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute. Yet, Mr. President, in spite of that fact, in spite of that appeal by the able and influential Senator from Pennsylvania to his party colleagues, coupled with the suggestion to them that they were not carrying out their party platform, in spite of giving that ammunition to the enemy during the campaign, there was not a word said about it even in the Democratic campaign book prepared by the vigilant and handsome and able young Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that the bill we are now considering, this bill providing for the admission of these three Territories to statehood, passed the House previous to the last campaign in the United States between the parties——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Practically without any opposition; and it came to the Senate, and had been referred to the Committee on Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And is it not true that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania had moved to discharge the committee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He had, much to my regret.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that. I am not surprised that you regret it. I have seen every evidence of that that I possibly could for the last two or three months.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; not so much as you did at the time.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to say to the Senator that the Senate, both sides of the Chamber, agreed, and the motion to discharge the committee was not pressed to a vote. The Senator from Indiana resisting it, and the Senator from Pennsylvania insisting upon it, both sides agreed that this measure should be taken up early in the present session, I believe the third or fourth day of the session. I am not certain as to the date. Is it not true?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is not true. The agreement was that the report should be made.

Mr. CLAY. On the tenth. Is it not true that the bill was to be taken up then and passed upon——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. And did not the Senator from Indiana and those associated with him——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How many questions is the Senator going to ask?

Mr. CLAY. I am going to ask some that the Senator can not answer, I think.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's questions are like the shot from a mitrailleuse or a Gatling gun—they come so thick and fast. I have to pick out his questions and——

Mr. CLAY. The trouble is that the Senator says no without even waiting to know what I am going to ask him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know what you have asked. Nobody can tell what the Senator is going to ask.

Mr. CLAY. There was no issue between the two parties so far as the action of Congress was concerned at the last session. Is it not true that both parties agreed to take this matter up on the 10th of December and discuss it, and that the bill came here late in the session, and it was not really an issue between the two parties at the last session?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will read the RECORD to-morrow, and he will find that he has put to me ten or fifteen questions without giving me a chance to answer any one of them.

Mr. President, I direct the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the question put to me by the Senator from Georgia. As near as I can remember the last section of it—it goes like trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad when it has heavy traffic, in sections—it was that both parties agreed to take the bill up and dispose of it. I had hoped that we might take it up and dispose of it, but the Senator at the beginning of my remarks this afternoon indicated that he wanted a vote without any discussion. Does the Senator from Georgia agree that we shall discuss it now?

Mr. CLAY. As I said to the Senator, every Senator in this Chamber is entitled to discuss a question under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course.

Mr. CLAY. I believe the Senator from Minnesota has discussed the bill for a week.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And very ably.

Mr. CLAY. And any other Senator may discuss it for a week who wants to do it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Minnesota discussed it very ably, and I am very glad to receive, as I was sure I should, the adherence of the Senator from Georgia to the ancient and venerable rule of the Senate which keeps it to-day the only arena of free speech left on this earth.

Now, Mr. President, as a matter of fact, in answer to the Senator's other questions, so far as I can gather them all together (because they came like a flight of arrows, and a man must put up his shield and get their general force, he can not get their specific intent, and purport) I must say no, it was not agreed; on the contrary, it was stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania that we were not carrying out our party pledge; and that statement by the Senator from Pennsylvania was highly enjoyed by his allies upon this side of the Chamber, although not all on this side are his allies now I hope, and consternation was thrown into the midst of those of us who are always inspired by great fear when anything comes from any one of those two sources about our party policies.

Now, that denunciation was made. It was stated in private conversation, perhaps in jest, upon this side of the Chamber that we were going back upon our party platform. It was stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania that if the bill did not pass then, in his judgment it never would pass; and I think his judgment was most excellent upon that question at that time.

So there was an issue presented to the parties. Now, Mr. President, we come to the campaign that immediately followed and we find that not a speech was made upon it, not even by the eloquent Senator from Georgia. I myself took some part in that campaign, and for a long period. I met a very large number of speakers belonging to our party, both old and young, and talked with them about the subjects which should be discussed before the people. Not one word was said on either side, so far as I ever heard or read—and I was an attentive reader of the daily literature during that campaign—upon this outrage which we were perpetrating in violating our own pledges. Not one word was uttered by the eloquent Senator from Georgia. Not one word was uttered or written by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], whose alertness and vigilance for the interests of his party are almost abnormal, and he deserves credit for that. He went to New England and all but prevented a unanimous Republican majority up there by speeches devoted to the subject of imperialism, but not one word did he utter upon our bad faith toward the Territories.

Here, Mr. President, are the campaign books. Here is the national Democratic campaign book for 1900, in which you denounce us for not having kept our pledges; and yet, notwithstanding the fact that we were denounced, notwithstanding the book is, as you see, a volume of considerable size, notwithstanding the fact that every issue before the people was exhaustively discussed, in this campaign book which went to the party speakers in order to give them information and in order to guide them upon what they should speak upon before the people, not one word is uttered in this about what you in your platform say is our perfidy in not admitting these States.

I say, "not one word," Mr. President. I will take that back. In reading it over I found there was one man who was sufficiently awake to the enormity of our position. I see that there was one master of vigilance who did detect us, and that was the only thing of the kind in this book of several hundred pages closely printed. That was Mr. RICHARDSON, the present leader of the Democratic side of the House, who, as I understand, is in some straits on account of his leadership now. He said in making his speech on this subject that we declared in our platform in favor of doing this and we had not done it; and then the imaginative mind of the Democratic leader in the House foresaw that we were actually going to erect a tariff wall between this country and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

That fantastic speculation, Mr. President, is the only thing which the Democratic campaign book of 1900 indulges itself in upon this question of the Republicans not having lived up to their platform. Here is all there is on the subject—four short lines. Mr. RICHARDSON says:

> Under the wicker rule of law as now applied by the Republican party in some of our Territories they may at an early date find erected between themselves and the balance of the Union a tariff wall which will serve to pauperize them while it enriches others.

And that was the extent of the Democratic statesmanship before the people concerning the nonadmission of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma. Was an issue then discussed before the people in 1900 and voted upon by them?

Here is the Republican campaign book for 1900. There is not a word in it upon the subject. Here is the Republican campaign book for 1902, after we had failed to pass this bill, and there is not one word in it upon the subject. Here is the Democratic campaign book for 1902, which my friend, the junior Senator from Tennessee, helped prepare, and there is not one word in it upon this subject.

Mr. President, I defy any Senator upon the other side of this question to find a single newspaper in the United States outside of the Territories themselves or neighboring States which discussed this measure before the people either in the campaigns of 1900 or 1902. I defy him to find a single speaker who addressed himself to this subject. If it was not argued before the people, if it was not discussed in the press, if it was not mentioned even in the Democratic and Republican campaign text-books, was there an issue presented? Did the people vote upon the question at either of those elections?

They had the opportunity, Mr. President. Most of the Republican platforms of the States were adopted after we adjourned, after we had committed this repeated perfidy in not living up to our platform. There was certainly an opportunity—nay, more, there was an occasion—for the Republican party throughout the United States at least to call attention to the fact that we had not done what we had promised and they wanted us to give it attention. Well, here is the list of them. I will not read them over again, because not one single platform, with one exception, to which I will call attention, and I wish the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] was here to hear me, had a word in it about the admission of the Territories, and that, too, in spite of the fact that this was the only one of our campaign pledges that we had not attempted to carry out, but, on the contrary, had stood in the way of.

Now, all the rest of them were silent upon the subject. Not one of the States of the Union in Republican convention assembled in 1902 had a word to say upon the subject. Does that look as though it was upon the minds of the people? Does that look as though it was a larger committee, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said at the last session, "the electorate of the American people" who had passed upon this question? Does it look as though it was in the minds of the people? And if it was not, was it an issue? And if it was not an issue is it binding upon us here, especially when since then an investigation has been held?

Now, Mr. President, the only exception to this that I have been able to find (and if hereafter anybody finds I have made an error about it I hope they will call my attention to it) was the State of Washington, whose Republican platform was adopted September 10, 1902. It says:

We favor the admission of those Territories now seeking admission into the Union when they shall have become as populous as was the State of Washington when admitted.

I wonder if the Senator from Pennsylvania is willing to have the Senator from Washington controlled by his platform pledge, the writing of which I think the Senator from Washington knew something about? If so, we will have to wait until New Mexico and Arizona each have nearly 349,000 people.

Now, Mr. President, if it was an issue in the last campaign, surely the Republican Congressional campaign secretary would know it. I thought perhaps I had overlooked some fact. If it was a question upon which people were electing Congressmen, and to which their attention had been specifically called, because the fight involved by the attempt to discharge the Committee on Territories had gone broadcast throughout the country and was before those conventions, the secretary of the Republican campaign committee would know it. So I asked him for a written statement upon that subject, and here it is:

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1903.

Hon. A. J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In answer to your communication of this date I am pleased to advise you that during the campaigns of 1898, 1900, and 1902, Hon. J. W. BABCOCK was chairman and I was secretary of the national Republican Congressional committee. Together with our associates, we conducted the Congressional campaigns of those years. In such conduct we had correspondence and conferences with the various Congressional organizations throughout the country and with gentlemen who accepted assignments for speaking under our management. In neither one of these campaigns was the question of statehood of the Territories considered in any such correspondence or conference with either officers of organizations or speakers, nor was such subject regarded by any of us as an issue in either one of said campaigns.

During the campaign of 1902 I began the compilation of the platforms of the different parties adopted by the various State conventions, primarily with the view of publishing the same in pamphlet form. I abandoned the plan before I had secured a great many copies of such platforms. My recollection is that I secured and read platforms adopted by both parties in fifteen or twenty of the States. There was no allusion to the statehood question in either one of the platforms in the fifteen or twenty States which I examined.

Believing that this letter contains the information you have requested, I remain,

Yours, respectfully, JESSE OVERSTREET.

So we find, Mr. President, that in the campaign of 1900 and in the campaign of 1902——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. The reason, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana, why there was no debate upon the statehood question during the last campaign or in other previous campaigns was that the position of the two great parties was identical upon the subject. There was no necessity for going to the people about it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I said that was undoubtedly an excuse for 1900, but the Senator himself called attention to the fact that, unless we passed his bill at the end of the last session, we were violating the platform of our party, and, therefore, the conventions held after that had had their attention called specifically to that fact. Yet they did not put a word in their platforms concerning it. So there was the issue presented. We were standing here at that time, as the Senator said, opposing it. As a matter of fact we had not made up our minds to oppose it until after the investigation. If we violated our pledge, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said last June, why did not a single Republican State convention say a word about it? Why did no speaker or newspaper discuss it?

Now, Mr. President, I think it very useful that this question has come up, because it shows that in adopting political platforms, as in all other business, public and private, greater care should be used. We should devote our political efforts to practical matters, but to ideals as well, Mr. President. The party which is not practical is ineffective; but the party whose purposes are not inspired by ideals is dead. Let us take a lesson from this, and in our conventions of both parties quit accommodating delightful gentlemen on side issues, and with the accuracy of conservatism pronounce for the welfare of the nation according to the facts, or, if we are in doubt of the facts, let us be silent upon them. Whatever others may do we can not afford to play politics. It is a game at which we have never won, and can not win, and never will win. Our strength and our glory and our victory heretofore have been in adherence to and the maintenance of principle and right.

Now, then, how was it that the platform of 1900 differed from the platform of 1896? The platform of 1896 was singularly statesmanlike, and it was as follows:

We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States.

Is there anything objectionable to any open mind in those two limitations, "having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States?" That was the first McKinley platform, and I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as I would call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] if he were here, to the fact that that language was evidently used by a man who was a lawyer, because it is substantially taken from one of the great writers upon our Constitution, who says that "the government of Territories and all things concerning them, in so far as Congress has anything to do with them, shall be done having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States."

Now, that was the platform of 1896 upon which William McKinley became President the first time. Is it not a sane, wise, and conservative utterance? Why should any person object to those two provisions? And yet in the convention of 1900 we find the following. I can not explain it; perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania can explain it.

We favor the home rule for, and the early admission to statehood of, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

Leaving out the two statesmanlike provisions, whose presence certainly could not injure any just cause, but whose presence might prove an obstruction to any bill that anybody might attempt to rush through Congress.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I think, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was the chairman of the subcommittee of the committee on resolutions who drafted that, and he can probably furnish the Senator from Indiana the information he requires.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should be glad to have it from any source, Mr. President. I want to know the reason for omitting that. Did they have as full information as we have now? Did they have different information from that which was had by the platform committee of 1896? If they had different information, what was it? The only information that was had in 1896 and in 1900 were the reports from the governors of Territories and the statements made in the various Senate committee reports that had heretofore been presented to the Senate.

At some future time, when I come to examine that subject, I will demonstrate to the Senator's own satisfaction how grotesque, inaccurate, and absurd many of the fundamental statements of those Senate reports to this body were. Did you have any additional information? Was there any difference in the information before the committee in 1896 and the committee in 1900? I merely call attention to this because I think that both parties on side issues, the party of my friends over here as well as our own, and every other party should, upon minor details of a platform be as careful as they are upon great fundamental questions of the platform.

There is too much of a disposition, and has been in the past (now happily growing less as the accuracy of method in all matters all over the world increases) to oblige gentlemen whom you like—and many of us like very much, indeed, the gentlemen who are urging the passage of this bill—upon matters upon which we are uninformed and upon which we think it does not make very much difference anyhow. There has been too much of a disposition to say to friends, "Oh, well, we will put it in. It don't amount to anything." And the public does not pay any attention to it and then it turns out that it does amount to something after all.

Now, the question is whether, that being the case, when new information has come before this body, when earnest and vigorous investigation has been had, when a volume of testimony for the first time in the history of the discussion of this question has been laid before the Senate of the United States, we are to be bound by that incidental utterance, which leaves out the two wise and statesmanlike provisions of preceding platforms, which even then did not become an issue either in the campaign of 1900 or the campaign of 1902.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to ask the Senator whether he does not think those words are necessarily implied?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, that is a new and most illuminative thought. I do think so. I never thought of it before, but that only illustrates the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin thinks of many things that many of us never thought of before; but I think so.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not ask the Senator for compliments. I wanted information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am bound to give the Senator a compliment whenever I answer him, if I tell the truth.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate any longer. I am perfectly amazed that I have detained it so long. I simply wish to say on this question, let us be true to the traditions of this Senate, and, instead of attempting to throttle, let us encourage free discussion. It is that upon which the usefulness of the Senate depends. It was for that, among other things, and principally for that, that this Senate was constituted as a part of our system of government.

I beg that the Senatar from Pennsylvania, who is a very great reader, as everybody knows, will read the entertaining and instructive utterances of the great constructive statesman who placed the Senate of the United States in our scheme of government. He will find, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, that in terms of office, in the methods of selection, in the times of going out, keeping a continuous body here all the time, the very purpose of the ordination of this great and exalted body was that we should have free and untrammeled discussion of every issue, great and small, to the end that even the temporary passions of the people, as some of the greatest of our statesmen—Madison and Hamilton and others—stated, should be checked, until their sober second thought should clarify the situation, and that upon all questions nothing should be rushed through until it had been given the best thought, under his oath, of every Senator who stands here representing not only his State, but representing the United States. For the Senator here is not the Senator of Pennsylvania or the Senator of Indiana; he is the Senator of the United States from Pennsylvania or Indiana, and the welfare of the nation is as dear to us, and we speak as much for it as we do for that of our own States. But for whomever we speak, it was the purpose of the establishment of this great body that we should do the very thing the Senator from Pennsylvania now objects that we shall do.

Mr. President, let it be understood that utterances unwise and uninformed even of party platforms shall not suppress the mind and conscience of the American Senate; let it be understood that convention methods shall not prevail in this historic and exalted body; let the confidence of the American people in their Senate, the greatest legislative body in the world, as we have so proudly said, be renewed and reestablished and revitalized by our action upon this measure—the action of a Senate untrammeled by private pledges made to some other Senator before investigation, the action of a Senate unawed by combinations or by threats—the action of a Senate brave and true and free and worthy of the great purposes of its great founders.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. QUAY. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to address the Senate?

Mr. CLAY. I do not; I simply desired to ask the Senator from Indiana a question before he took his seat.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I believe the Senator from Indiana is perfectly familiar with this legislation, and I desire to ask the Senator this question: The bill providing for the admission of these three Territories to statehood passed the House at the last session and came to the Senate a few weeks before it adjourned?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And went to the Committee on Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And there had been no report made by the Committee on Territories at the time we adjourned?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. And there never had been any adverse report on the bill providing for the admission of these three Territories at the time we adjourned?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. So there was no issue between the two parties at that time?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the way the Senator construes it. As I have pointed out, I fear with the monotony of iteration, notice was served most conspicuously upon the Republican party and the Democratic party throughout the nation by the Senator from Pennsylvania in his very forceful remarks, in which he arraigned all of us who were members of that convention, that it was necessary that we should pass this bill; and he stated if it did not pass then, in his judgment, it would never pass. I say notice was thus served, because it went out in all the papers of the United States that something of this kind was going on here, and there was an opportunity for both parties to express themselves in their platforms in last fall's campaign.

Mr. RAWLINS. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that his party had already violated its promise to admit these Territories before the adjournment of Congress, and that the Democrats were derelict during the last campaign in failing to charge the Republicans with that violation?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know what the Senator understands; but if he understands that to be my statement, the Senator does not display great understanding at all, because, of course, I never said anything of the kind. The Senator, as a matter of fact, is trying to do one of those pleasant things he indulges in and put his conclusions in my mouth. Of course I decline to permit him to do so.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I now recur to the proposition I was about to submit to the Senate during the absence of the present occupant of the chair, for the fixing of a day upon which a final vote upon this question may be taken. I have one or two propositions to make that will occupy the time of the Senate but a moment or two, and then the discussion may proceed.

I first ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a final vote may be taken on the pending bill on Saturday, the 24th instant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what hour?

Mr. QUAY. I have not fixed the hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the final vote on this bill, on the then pending amendments, and amendments then offered shall take place on Saturday——

Mr. QUAY. The 24th instant, I will say, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the 24th of January, at 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. QUAY. Then I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the final vote be taken on Friday, the 30th instant, a week later, at the same hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the final vote on this bill, on the then pending amendments, and amendments then offered, may be taken on Friday, the 30th instant, at 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will state in reference to that series, and any similar series of requests, that, of course, at this stage——

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator from Indiana says that, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania has not observed that for that day a special order has been assigned.

Mr. QUAY. What is the order?

Mr. LODGE. Eulogies on the late Senator McMillan.

Mr. QUAY. That is on February 4, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator named January the 30th.

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Well, that is the date fixed for eulogies on the late Senator McMillan.

Mr. QUAY. Then I will say on Saturday, the 31st of January.

Mr. LODGE. We have a special order also for that day. Special orders have been fixed for both days named by the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. Then, Mr. President, I will say on Thursday, the 29th instant.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say with reference to the entire series——

Mr. QUAY. I will deliver the series first, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did you not propose a date?

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did you expect me to say anything on it or not?

Mr. QUAY. No, but I expect the Senate probably to give unanimous consent to vote on that day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then your expectations will be, like some other great expectations, unfulfilled.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Indiana will allow the Senator from Pennsylvania to read his schedule without interruption.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right. That is correct. I am willing to listen to the Senator's schedule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the last request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator to complete his schedule, but it must not be taken for granted that any part of his schedule is agreed to until he gets through with the whole thing, and then I will express my assent or dissent.

Mr. QUAY. I desire the question put to the Senate on each of the propositions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Senator's last request?

Mr. QUAY. That the vote be taken on Thursday, the 29th of January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the final vote on the pending bill, on the then pending amendments, and the amendments then offered shall take place on the 29th of January.

Mr. QUAY. At 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I object; and on that objection I wish to say a word.

Mr. QUAY. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through with the series of propositions I wish to present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But what is the use?

Mr. QUAY. There will be probably something else——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the Senator——

Mr. QUAY. I decline to yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator wants to finish the schedule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. QUAY. I then ask that the final vote be taken on Wednesday, February 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the final vote on the pending bill, on the then pending amendments, and amendments then offered shall be taken on Wednesday, February 4, at 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I deeply regret, Mr. President, that I can not possibly agree to this, for the reason that the debate is just now in progress and it is quite beyond my power, or the power of any Senator, to say when we can reach a time when all Senators shall have spoken who desire to speak upon this measure. Of course I should be happy to accommodate the Senator if I could, but that is the situation at the present time.

Mr. QUAY. Then I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the vote be taken on Tuesday, February 10, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the vote on the pending bill, the amendments then pending, and the amendments then offered be taken on February 10 at 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I make the same suggestion in reference to that; and I state right now that it is impossible for me, as chairman of the Committee on Territories, to agree to fix a date at this time for the future. That impossibility is just as apparent to the Senator from Pennsylvania as it is to anybody else. The Senator can go on and read his schedule clear down to the last, but no such proposition was ever made that I have ever heard of before in this body, and I can not now foretell on just what date the vote can be taken, and it is impossible for me now to agree upon a date.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me that I may ask a question of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I would prefer that the Senator from North Dakota should wait.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a question pertaining to this same matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. QUAY. I will yield the floor in a moment.

I believe the last item in the schedule was February 10, was it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the last.

Mr. QUAY. That was objected to. Now I propose that the vote be taken on Monday, February 16; that is, within ten days or two weeks of final adjournment. If the vote is not taken then the bill must fail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the final vote on the pending bill, on the then pending amendments, and on the amendments then offered shall be taken on Monday, February 16.

Mr. QUAY. At 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, as I stated before, it is perfectly impossible for me at this time to agree to a specific date, as the Senator from Pennsylvania no doubt knows, and in my position he would do the same as I am doing.

We have many other matters before us now, and there are many other Senators who have expressed to me a desire to speak on the pending bill. I can not say when they will get through, and so it is impossible for me at this time to fix a date or to agree upon any time for voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. QUAY. I then feel it my duty——

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to say a word?

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say, as one of the minority of the Committee on Territories—and I think I voice the wishes of the minority of that committee, as well as I do of my party on this side of the Chamber—that they will agree now to any one of the propositions to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has made as to the final vote on this bill. I am authorized to say that.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to give notice that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move to take up the pending statehood bill, and I may ask the Senate to continue in session until it is disposed of or until an agreement is arrived at fixing some day for a vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will accept service of the notice, but I do not think the Senator will gain anything by that.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, by the courtesy of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM], I want to say a few words upon this question, not that I have any desire to enter into the merits of the case before the Senate, but because an element has been brought into this discussion of rather a political nature, and we have drifted into a somewhat political discussion. I did not expect that an issue of that character would be brought into the Senate on a question which I consider so important that it should be discussed entirely upon its merits. I refer to the question about the platform of the Republican national convention in 1896. I shall not go back beyond that convention, with whose proceedings I was familiar.

The text of that plank in the platform has been repeatedly read; so it is unnecessary for me to read it again. I will only say that I happen to know that, so far as any discussion went upon that occasion affecting Territorial affairs, growing out of the importunities of those who were interested in the question—I will not say from selfish motives, but from a desire, from their standpoint, to advance the interests of their communities that it appealed only to those in the councils of the party; that it was a question nonpolitical, that if adopted as a resolution, even although it might invite party discussion and party differences, any such expression from any party should be safeguarded with due respect to the interests of the whole country; and that was what the platform of 1896 sought to do, and did do so far as the responsibility of the Republican party was concerned.

I believe that in the following campaign the platform of 1900 had scarcely a thought, to say nothing about serious consideration, upon that question, outside of those who seemed to have been interested in the subject. Certainly, whatever may be the language of that resolution, there is nothing contained in it that breaks down the barrier of the safeguards of the resolution of 1896, reaffirming that declaration without regard to anyone's material interest, but expressing simply a public policy.

I do not understand, Mr. President, that there is enough politics in this situation to invite partisan discussion. I do not think from the standpoint of American citizenship that there is a member of this body but who is willing to undertake to defend the proposition that these infant Territories, ambitious to become States, anxious to enjoy all the privileges of statehood and the good that comes from it, should be permitted to do so when their condition justifies it. There should be no division of sentiment or opinion upon that proposition; but they should be admitted only with due regard to the interests of the United States and of the States upon whom rests the responsibility of ascertaining the facts as to whether these Territories are in a condition which makes them fit to become States.

It is not the most important matter in this question as to how many people there are in either of these Territories. To be sure, that is a factor, and it is of necessity to be taken into consideration; but to my mind there are other and more important factors that go to make up fitness for statehood, to entitle a people to be represented and to take part in the councils of the nation, no matter how fit may be the representatives sent here. But the great principle of cooperative legislation, the good of the whole country, depends upon the responsibilities of the representation that is behind the delegate. Therefore, I say, I will not undertake to go into a discussion of the merits of this question.

I was perfectly willing to wait and hear the discussion from members of the committee who, in the ordinary routine of business affairs in the Senate, take upon themselves the responsibility of that sort of work, and, owing to that which went before in these discussions, went so far as to go personally into these Territories, to study the conditions and all the things which should go to make up the qualifications for statehood. When special committees, who, feeling the responsibility not only as to their colleagues in the Senate, but as to the country everywhere, conscientiously and thoroughly do their work of investigation and bring here a report from witnesses under oath and otherwise, and when as a result of that knowledge, obtained from that effort, they rise in their seats and give to the Senate and to the country the result by forcible and convincing argument, such as the speeches of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that is the sort of information the country wants, and if this discussion should be protracted for weeks to come, the responsibility attached to our duty and oath of office does not make it less binding upon us that we hear it.

I disclaim, Mr. President, that the Republican party, either in 1896 or 1900, and, so far as my information goes, in both of the Congressional campaigns intervening, regarded this question as an issue. It was never made an issue even to the slightest degree from a national standpoint. I was somewhat familiar with those two national campaigns, and certainly in 1900 this subject was not mentioned upon the rostrum within the limits of any Territory from which I heard. Whether it was or not, whether the people of this country wanted to hear about the Territories or not, it seemed to be necessary that they might obtain the information wanted which should be satisfying as to the future, because the responsibility of never being able to undo such legislation as is now proposed made it necessary that the people should be satisfied as to the future. In all that campaign, whether because other issues overshadowed this question or not, it was a fact that it was not made a political question.

In that connection, as to the feeling and sentiment which dominates this country to-day, I want to say that the discussions upon this floor have not only been necessary and effective, but they have filled a demand which is increasing every day the discussion goes on, and so far as I am able to understand and diagnose the sentiment of this country the feeling of confidence is growing stronger every day in the judgment and intelligence of the members of this body who are acting from a conservative standpoint. Feeling and appreciating the importance of this question, they do not propose to hurry it or to be hurried in its conclusion.

It makes no difference to the Democratic party or to the Republican party as to the sentiments of a political character which may be injected into this discussion. If I were in a position to argue upon the merits of this question, I would feel justified in appealing to every member upon the other side of this Chamber upon that question of merit alone. The dignity of this country and its future greatness and prosperity are just as dear to the hearts of one class as to another. There can be no political issue injected into a question which so nearly affects the principles upon which we are supposed to build our future.

The Republican party in that resolution at St. Louis voiced a sentiment which was brought there by the elements that are behind this measure. They heard and gave consideration to the men coming from the Territories, members of that party, and who, whatever their motive, were entitled to consideration; but in giving consideration to those who are knocking at the door of the Union we have said that we must safeguard that so that this matter can go before the proper tribunal; and when the question comes to be considered, it must be decided upon its merits. This matter was not intended, by being placed as a plank in the platform, to be made a party issue, and it can not or ought not to be such to-day.

I am absolutely opposed to the omnibus bill, Mr. President, because it seems to me to be in the nature of a compact between those who are behind this measure to avail themselves of the opportunity of uniting in its support influence and power. There must be a weak spot somewhere; there must be some feature of this bill that needs the support of a stronger element to win for it votes enough to make States out of these three Territories. In order that this body and the people of this country may have the opportunity to judge for themselves, we want this discussion to proceed along the lines it has, coming, as it does, from the men whom this body delegated to gather that information, who realize the responsibilities of that task and the obligations of their oaths to obtain that information. We want this discussion to go on until the whole question is laid bare, not only before the United States Senate, but before the country, and, so far as my opportunities enable me to judge of the results, I feel perfectly safe in saying that, in my judgment, public opinion, the highest and best arbiter of all public questions, is to-day forming a sentiment which justifies the report of the committee and justifies the statements that have been made by every member of that committee who has spoken upon the subject.

I do not want to see this legislation hurried at an unseemly rate, or to occupy a position in this body where it shall in any way retard the business of importance which is coming before us. I do not believe there is any disposition to delay among those who, from a full realization of their responsibility and duty, want to have this debate go on so long as it develops new information, so long as it brings to the surface new thoughts and facts which will enable us to vote rightly upon the question. I do not believe it is the intention, and I will not believe it is the feeling in this body on the part of anybody on either side of the Chamber to filibuster, as I understand the term, or unnecessarily to delay action when the time arrives at which a man, fully advised, can vote as his conscience dictates.

Therefore, Mr. President, as the debate goes on, I hope the sentiment which seems to have been manifest to-day with reference to the arbitrary position of one side or the other, or the drastic measures which may be imposed by one side or the other, will not again appear in any shape or form or result in an effort that will in the slightest degree interfere with the important business which we have before us, no matter what may be the individual ambition of any man or set of men living in those Territories or desiring to represent them in the halls of Congress. While that ambition and desire may be perfectly laudable and can not be charged as entirely selfish, still it sinks into insignificance on an occasion like this. Therefore what I have to say is not so much in the line of argument as of an appeal to the Senators of this body to let this important discussion proceed, developing any new matter and facts and arguments that may change the opinion of any man who has the right to vote, and then let the majority decide, not influenced by passion or prejudice or selfish motives, but acting on our calm and deliberate judgment, formed as the result of those arguments and facts which should influence the minds of men in our position.

Mr. BURTON. May I interrupt the Senator from Ohio for a moment?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. In order hatt there may be full opportunity for discussion, do you not think it would be wise to agree upon a day, far in the future, at which the vote should be taken? Then it will not interfere with any other business, if there is to be a vote.

Mr. HANNA. I do not propose to take any responsibility out of the hands of the gentlemen who have charge of this measure. I do not think they need any defense as to the attitude they have taken and the course they are pursuing in this matter. The fact that an insinuation may have been thrown out as to their motives with respect to dilatory tactics does not justify the inquiry, neither does it justify the method pursued by the other side to call upon a Senator to answer a question which ought not to be answered under present conditions and until the members of the committee are satisfied as to the discussion itself.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will allow me, I did not ask the question in order to cast reflection upon anybody.

Mr. HANNA. No; I did not so understand it.

Mr. BURTON. I simply asked the opinion of the Senator as to whether that is not the easiest way to get a determination of this question.

Mr. HANNA. Yes, the easiest way, I may say in reply to the Senator, to accommodate an opposition is to surrender. That is the easiest way.

Mr. BURTON. Then I understand the Senator is not in favor of ever coming to a vote.

Mr. HANNA. No; you do not understand anything of the kind, because I do not propose to have you understand it in that way. But whether I be on the affirmative or the negative side of this proposition, in view of the importance of this measure and of the policy involved, I would consider it unfair to agree upon a time to vote before the members of the committee who have charge of the measure, who have investigated the subject, who came here to make reports for the information of the Senate and the country, have exercised the right and privilege of giving, in their own way and at their own time, those facts to the Senate and to the country.

I am not seeking to excite anyone. I would rather produce a feeling which would lead to the condition suggested by the Senator from Kansas. I claim that this subject is of enough importance to demand deliberation and calm judgment. In my short service in this body I have seen time wasted day after day and week after week upon measures far less important. So I do not have any qualms of conscience in urging that this discussion shall go on legitimately and fairly, because I believe, so far as the evidence has been given and so far as statements have been made, which are uncontroverted, that public opinion in this country, which is crystallizing around the subject, and which must be made manifest sooner or later, will convince the majority of this body that there is danger in hasty action; that there is danger of doing an act which can not be undone, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has so ably said, no matter how much the regret and no matter how much harm may result to the country.

I have heard it argued that the Republican party should be held up to its responsibility for having committed an unwise act in the Spanish war. Two wrongs never made a right. If, as charged by the advocates of that proposition at the time, we were wrong, and it shall be found from experience that we acted hastily, it is no reason why those who are not implicated in past actions with reference to the admission of other Territories and who are not responsible either to their party or their country for that act, should not investigate to the utmost every fact and condition which can properly and legitimately be brought to bear in forming their judgment upon this question.

I simply rose, Mr. President, to protest against the assumption that this question should be considered absolutely from a political standpoint or that, because there may have been a difference in the wording of the platforms of 1896 and 1900, any representative in this body connected with the Republican party should be charged with and held accountable for the wording of the platform, before there had been any public discussion, before it had ever been made an issue which called for public discussion for the enlightenment and intelligence of the people. I am not willing that the Republican party shall rest under such a charge, nor am I prepared to charge the party on the other side of the Chamber with any other intent than to protect the interests of the United States and of the States, for when you consider a proposition to confer equal power upon a Territory yet in its infancy, no matter by what standard you measure its virtues and its material interests, it involves a community of interest as to which in the last analysis we must determine what is right, and do it.

Mr. BURNHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. It is getting late, and the Senator from New Hampshire would hardly be able to proceed very far with his speech this evening. I suggest to him that he take the floor and yield to me; and if he does so, I will move an executive session.

Mr. BURNHAM. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 21, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 20, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order on the bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of the House 16842. By unanimous consent, general debate is to begin at this time and continue for two hours.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, by unanimous consent, as the Chair has stated, we deferred general debate until this morning, owing to the fact that the gentlemen who were to take part in the general debate, understanding that the bill would not come up until this morning, were absent from the room. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] advises me that they will require about an hour and a quarter on that side, and I desire to reserve the remaining part of the two hours for myself.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, with hesitation that may be pardoned and with embarrassment that may be condoned, I rise for the first time to address this historic body. I would not dare to break the silence in which a new member is supposed to be entombed were I not prompted by a sense of duty to my constituents which my diffidence can not conquer nor my timidity repress. I can not witness the passing of another session of Congress without protest against Republican inaction on the question of the trust.

The Republican party is writing the most shameful and humiliating chapter in American history. Six years of Republican supremacy have marked the establishment of an industrial tyranny more powerful than all the thrones and empires of the past. Within this period the wealth of the country has been concentered in the hands and coffers of the few to such an extent that the people are threatened with economic vassalage. Republican enactments and policies have facilitated the creation of monopolistic organizations in almost every important industry—monopolies which are crushing labor, corrupting legislation, destroying competition, controlling production, confiscating the fruitage of the people's toil, and stifling the ambitions of youth. [Applause.]

The latest and most dangerous form which monopoly has assumed in America is popularly known as the trust. In a sense strictly technical a trust is a combination of corporations acting through a representative board. But in the political lexicon of the hour the term "trust" includes every organization of individuals or of companies which through combination, merger, purchase, destruction of rival enterprises, or other means obtains, or attempts with varying degrees of success to obtain, exclusive control of a given industry or commodity whereby prices are arbitrarily fixed, production limited, competition abolished, natural causes interrupted, and the consumer pillaged. In some instances the organization extends no further than a mere agreement or pool by which these results are secured. This modern trust is the fortress of greed in the twentieth century. It is the most powerful agency for the concentration of wealth in the economic annals of the world. It is the most menacing feature of the time. It represents the barbarism of wealth, the anarchy of avarice. [Applause.]

Since the beginning of Republican ascendency in 1897 the trusts have grown enormously in numbers and in power. More trusts have been formed since March 4, 1897, the date of McKinley's accession to the Presidency, than in all the previous history of the country. There are more than 300 industrial trusts in the United States with a total capitalization of over seven billions—an amount which stupefies the imagination, an amount which exceeds the entire stock of money in the United States both in circulation and out of circulation by more than four and one-half billions. They control almost every article and commodity which the people use in the maintenance of civilized life. [Applause.]

Before the first inauguration of McKinley an organization with a capital of ten millions was regarded as unusual. But since January 1, 1899, 82 trusts have been established, not one of which has less than ten millions of capital, many of which possess from three to ten and twenty times ten millions, while towering like a helmeted Colossus above them all is the monarch of combinations, the steel trust, with a startling capitalization of over one billion three hundred and fifty millions. The trusts exist in utter defiance of all justice and all law. Secure in the knowledge of the fact that the Republican party will not enforce the laws which sleep ingloriously on the statutes, and that this party of monopoly and empire dares not enact more stringent legislation, they continue with an insolence which cries to God for punishment to oppress the land and to consume the substance of the people.

In no way have the Republicans, including the President himself, attempted more shrewdly to shield the capitalistic freebooters and to confuse the people than in the endeavor to establish the impression that the present clamor against the trusts is a hasty and ill-considered attack on corporations because they are unprecedentedly large; that "the big corporations," to use an elusive expression of our once strenuous Chief Executive, are alleged to be the main offenders regardless of monopolistic attributes. We say that it matters not how large or how small an enterprise may be. If it has the character of monopoly in any effective degree it is a trust. It is the principle involved which concerns the Democratic party as the stay and refuge of the people and not the size or extent of the organization.

The Democratic party is not opposed to honest wealth. It condemns neither individuals nor companies whose business affairs may be conducted on a large, or even a gigantic scale, on account of the mere size of their holdings and transactions. Individuals and companies may engage in extensive enterprises with tremendous capital and achieve marked success without the aid or design of monopoly and without special privilege from the Government. The Democratic party stands upon the demand that the entire business of the country shall be conducted in a pure and legitimate way It is against the injustice and piracy in modern establishments that it would direct the popular wrath. It is monopoly, an evil which threatens the extinction of American liberty, that it would fling from the Tarpeian Rock of public indignation. Let me quote the words of Mr. Russell Sage concerning the steel trust, the most notable type of the modern industrial combination.

In an article in the North American Review which appeared when the steel trust was in process of formation and when its capital was reputed to be $1,000,000,000, Mr. Sage said:

> The steel combination now forming, we are told, is to start off with a capital of $1,000,000,000. It will be seen, therefore, that this company's issue of securities will represent practically one-half the entire volume of money in America. In a year or two, if precedents count for anything, this capital will be very largely increased, and that in spite of the fact that the stockholders in the steel company, which was the basis of the new combination, got three shares of stock in the new company for one in the old, scores of millions being thus added to the interest-bearing securities of the United States by merely the stroke of a pen. When wealth is created in that way what security is there for the whole scheme? Not another furnace added to the plant, simply a lifting process, and what was one million before is three millions now.

When we know that Mr. Sage underestimated the capital of the steel trust by more than three hundred and fifty millions; when we know that the properties of this company in actual value do not exceed five hundred millions, but little more than one-third of its capitalization, we may begin to grasp the appalling fraud which permeates the entire system. We may reasonably infer from this instance that practically one-half the seven billions of capital represented by the dividend-bearing securities of the industrial trusts is purely fictitious. It is certain, at any rate, that the amount of imaginary capital on which the American people must pay exorbitant interest in the shape of arbitrary prices is so enormous as to constitute the most flagrant example of public plunder by private monopoly in human history. [Applause.]

It is not, therefore, a matter of surprise that the owners and beneficiaries of the trusts are rapidly absorbing the entire wealth of the people; that an aristocracy has arisen which dominates the industrial and social world. This aristocracy may be perpetuated by the transmission of trust stock from father to son. The power which the trusts have centered in the gilded few is astounding. Mr. Sage, in speaking of the oil trust, said:

> The chief owners of the Standard Oil business have become so enormously wealthy that in their individual as well as their corporate capacity they dominate wherever they choose to go. They can make or unmake almost any property, no matter how vast. They can compel any man to sell them anything at any price.

These are the words of a man whose authority on this and kindred subjects is universally respected. It is difficult to conceive a more alarming condition. The income of Mr. John Davis Rockefeller, the principal owner of the oil trust, was in 1901 about $100,000,000. He is soon to become the first billionaire in the history of the world. This inconceivable wealth has been acquired within fewer than thirty years. The story of his triumphs over all competitors, of their submission or their ruin, of his successful evasion and defiance of all law, until he had established the most invincible monopoly earth ever saw, will, if ever written, form a gloomy commentary upon the age.

There were 9,000 civil suits pending against this economic despot at one time—a suit in almost every county of every State in the American Union. But the people and the people's laws were helpless, and to-day he towers above Congress, above the President, above the legislatures and the courts, above the people, a silent symbol of industrial tyranny. [Applause.] Associated with him is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. These two men are the most commanding figures of contemporary history. Mr. Morgan controls over three billions of railroad securities and nearly two billions of corporation securities. An illustration of his power may be found in the recent coal strke. It was within his will to stop that terrible conflict at any time; a conflict which resulted in suffering so universal and intense that the poor have been compelled to burn the pictures of their dead for fuel, and in some instances to steal. A petition was addressed to President Roosevelt from the citizens of Wilkesbarre, the storm center of the strike, which concluded as follows:

Mr. Morgan has placed a ban upon us which means universal ruin, destitution, and bloodshed. Is J. P. Morgan greater than the people? Is he mightier than the Government? Will he be permitted to retain this menacing power? We appeal to you, Mr. President, to stay the juggernaut which crushes us. We appeal from the king of the trusts to the President of the people.

This appeal is the saddest and most significant occurrence since Republican rule began. It shows the overshadowing power of organized wealth. Connected with Rockefeller and Morgan are an increasing number of multi-millionaires, and together they constitute an omnipotent oligarchy of gold. They are the Vandals, Goths, and Visigoths of our modern time. They are the economic tyrants of the United States and their increasing strength is a menace to every principle and every institution of popular government. [Applause.]

Republicans, have I overdrawn the picture? Let me direct your attention to a speech delivered by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt at Minneapolis on Labor Day of 1901, shortly before he became the official head of the nation. In reference to the trusts he said:

We shall find it necessary in the future to shackle cunning as in the past we have shackled force. The vast individual and corporate fortunes, the vast combinations of capital which have marked the development of our industrial system, create new conditions and necessitate a change from the old attitude of the State and nation toward property.

The glory of San Juan Hill is in these sentences.

If a Democrat had made a statement half so sweeping he would have been denounced as an anarchist, an agitator, and a demagogue. Let us analyze these utterances of the most prominent Republican in the country. He says that it will become necessary in the future to shackle cunning as in the past we have shackled force. Now, the entire history of the world is the story of the long struggle of the common people to put shackles on force. Think of all the oppressions of the past! Think of the conquerors who have ravaged the world! Think of the thrones that have been built upon the necks of serfs! Think of the woes of the people in the shadowy centuries of the crown and sword! Think how they passed like chattels with the soil! Think how they cowered in the shelter of mediæval castles to do obeisance for their lives! Think how hunger and despair aroused them to revolt! Think of the blood, the sorrow, and the tears they paid for freedom—for the shackling of force! Think how we are told by Mr. Roosevelt that as in the past it was necessary to shackle force, so in the future it will become necessary to shackle cunning.

Then tell me how a Democrat can overdraw the picture. But this is not all. Mr. Roosevelt evidently believed that the hour for the shackling of the trusts had struck, because he further said that the vast individual and corporate fortunes and the vast combinations of wealth had created new conditions and that they necessitated a change from the old attitude of the State and nation toward property. If human greed through the industrial trust is oppressing, or is about to oppress, the people as in the past they have been oppressed by force—if these modern aggregations have become so dangerous as to necessitate a revolution in established relations between the state and property—then the situation must be black with peril.

The echoes of this courageous declaration of Mr. Roosevelt had hardly died, the applause of the people who believed a new David had arisen was still ringing from the mountains to the seas, when a hush fell upon the world. A pistol's lips spoke death to McKinley and pronounced Theodore Roosevelt President of the United States. Was it destiny? The preacher whom Mr. Roosevelt invited to deliver at Oyster Bay a sermon on the anniversary of McKinley's death thought that it was. The preacher practically said on that occasion that God raised up an assassin to take the life of the revered McKinley in order to give Theodore Roosevelt an opportunity to forge the Minneapolis philippic into the avenging thunderbolts of the law. So, I ask again, was it destiny?

If it was, destiny for once made a gigantic mistake. When Theodore Roosevelt assumed the Presidency, a marvelous transformation seems to have occurred. He seems to have put the people out of his heart. In the light of his record as Chief Executive with regard to trusts, his Minneapolis speech is a disheartening mockery. Has he shackled the trusts? For more than a year he has been charged by solemn oath with the execution of his country's laws, and yet the trusts have multiplied and prospered. [Applause.]. He chose for Attorney-General, the nation's right arm in the enforcement of the nation's laws, Mr. Philander Knox, of the steel company, the most prominent trust attorney in the United States. Thus the Republican President has paralyzed the law.

While pretending to seek new remedies, he has neglected to enforce existing ones. His messages and speeches on the subject of the trusts have been models of apology and evasion. And yet the New York Herald calls him the people's antitrust candidate for the Presidency in 1904. It is the most colossal jest of the time. His course in this matter is typically Republican, for the Republican party is equally chargeable with failure to restrain the trusts. Bills have been introduced, but never passed. A favorite trick is to pass an antitrust bill through the House, and send it to a quick death in the catacombs of the Senate.

It is a laughable fact that not one of the measures proposed by Republicans is as vigorous as the remedies already provided by the national statutes. The criminal clause of the present Federal law has been absolutely ignored. Its enforcement would do much to shackle cunning. But it is a neglected law, and it will so remain as long as the Republican party controls the Government. If a poor man takes that which is not his he is pronounced a thief and promptly punished. But if a great industrial combination monopolizes an article and robs the people in plain defiance of the law, the directors are applauded and called the kings and captains of our industries. In his message at the beginning of the present session of Congress the President speaks of the "big aggregations" as "inevitable developments of modern industrialism," and adds that their destruction "would work the utmost mischief to the entire body politic."

In a recent speech in the United States Senate the senior Senator from Massachusetts spoke tenderly of the "great private virtues" of the modern plunderers, of their "public spirit, sagacity, patriotism, and large civic wisdom." For what relief can the people hope when Republicans indulge in utterances of this character? In another part of his speech the senior Senator from Massachusetts summarizes the efforts of the Republican Administration to control the trusts. Coming from so high and so Republican a source, this summary may be taken as a complete presentation of the record of the Administration on this subject. The venerable and eloquent Senator states that the Administration has destroyed the Addystone pipe combination, the beef trust, and a pooling arrangement among Southern railroads.

He states that the Attorney-General has brought fourteen suits in equity against another railroad combination, obtaining injunctions which are still in force, and that he has also brought a suit in equity against a proposed merger of transcontinental railroads. This is the Republican record as presented by a Republican. When we think of the hundreds of monopolies that have arisen under Republican domination, when we know that these vultures are fattening to-day as never before, these efforts appea rso feeble as to excite the profoundest ridicule and contempt.

In the attempt to divert the attention of the people of the North from the record of the Republican party on the question of the trust, the President and his advisers have reopened and aggravated the unhappy race issue in the South. It means that Republicans regard the situation as desperate when for political advantage they deem it advisable deliberately to humiliate the proud and loyal people of the South and to awaken passions born in the flaming hours of fratricidal conflict, passions which should be permitted to die in an era of reconciliation and peace. The people of the North are too intelligent and too generous to be influenced by such deplorable tactics. On the essential phases of the race problem the great common people of the North are in sympathy with the people of the South.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin.

Sectional divisions in America are no more. Every problem which confronts any portion of the people or any part of the country is an American problem. We are brothers of a common country. Not as a Texan, although I worship that imperial State; not as a Southerner, although I adore that chivalrous land; but as an American who loves every star on the flag I pronounce such action unnecessary and unjust. [Applause.]

It is useless to hope that the Republican party will destroy or curb the trusts. For six years it has controlled every branch of the American Government. It has failed to resist the incursions of marauding capital. It has made the American Republic a spectacle for the pity of the historian and the compassion of the philosopher. In the endeavor to conceal its real attitude with regard to trusts it presents the supremest illustration of human insincerity since Metternich preserved a throne with intrigue and Talleyrand taught that lips were made to lie. It has polluted the temples and desecrated the altars of authority. The trusts are flourishing in contempt of law. They prosecute their merciless schemes of spoliation undisturbed. There is but one conclusion—the Republican party is the shield and ally of the trust. If the trust is to be abolished, if industrial Cæsarism is to be destroyed, the Republican party must be whipped from power by the scorn and anger of a plundered people. [Applause.] A vote for the Republican party is a vote for economic slavery, a vote for stupendous wrong, a vote for criminal capital, a vote for the inhumanity and communism of lawless wealth. [Loud and prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the time of Mr. SHEPPARD expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have time to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the time on that side can be yielded by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. By unanimous consent it can be granted.

Mr. BENTON. I would be very glad to yield the gentleman further time, but the time at my disposal has already been apportioned.

The CHAIRMAN. It changes the hour of closing general debate.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I then ask unanimous consent that the hour at which debate is to be closed be changed to a different time, fifteen minutes later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time for closing general debate be extended until fifteen minutes after 2, the time to be awarded to the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank my colleague for his kindness.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he desires to use any of his time now?

Mr. McCLEARY. I would prefer that the gentleman from Missouri use up his time first.

Mr. BENTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the gentleman from Missouri at present, but I understood him that he yielded the balance of his time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] who has just closed. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN].

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last this House passed a bill for the purpose of creating a department of commerce, and by a vote of this House the Interstate Commerce Commission was placed under this department. Recently there was held in St. Louis a convention in which there were represented over 100 commercial organizations, and an executive committee was appointed by this convention for the purpose of securing legislation increasing the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This executive committee believes that the placing of the Interstate Commerce Commission under any department would be unwise, and I ask to have read the telegram which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., January 19, 1903.

HON. THEO. OTJEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I am instructed by the executive committee of interstate commerce law convention, representing over 100 commercial organizations in movement to secure legislation strengthening Interstate Commerce Commission, to petition Congress against converting that Commission into bureau of any department.

E. P. BACON.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OTJEN. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. This paper or telegram is signed by whom?

Mr. OTJEN. The chairman of the executive committee appointed at a convention held at St. Louis.

Mr. HEPBURN. When did the convention assemble?

Mr. OTJEN. Some time during the year past.

Mr. HEPBURN. How large is the executive committee?

Mr. OTJEN. I think there are five members.

Mr. HEPBURN. How many of them reside in Milwaukee?

Mr. OTJEN. I do not know, but I do not think all of them.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do any of them reside there, except one?

Mr. OTJEN. I think, probably, he is the only one that resides there.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that this legislation that is protested against was had here on the 17th day of the month?

Mr. OTJEN. Last Saturday; yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. And Sunday intervened between that day and the date of this telegram. Is it probable that there has been any meeting of that committee since Saturday?

Mr. OTJEN. It may be that there may have been telegraphic communication between them.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman for this purpose: I received a telegram from some gentleman who places himself at the head of the Hay Dealers' Association, I think it is, of the United States, and he speaks in the name of his association. I have no objection to any gentleman speaking for himself, but multiplying himself in this way is perhaps a work of supererogation.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the gentleman from Minnesota would yield five minutes to me.

Mr. McCLEARY. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have sought these five minutes for the purpose of replying to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. He has characterized what he claims to be an unauthorized surrender of a very meager strip of territory away up to the northward by the present Administration as one of the crimes of the century. That, perhaps, is not his language, but he has intended to characterize that action as a crime of the greatest enormity. He says there is a surrender. I say not. He says there is a surrender of that undisputed territory. I say the territory is in dispute.

But I want to call his attention to another act of an Administration in the United States in connection with our Northwestern Territory that he has said nothing about. And yet it was the surrender of a vast scope of territory about which, perhaps, the Democratic party could not claim there was a dispute, that was equal to and is equal to very many of the larger States of the Federal Union. It was a surrender of all that territory lying between the forty-ninth parallel and 54° 40′, and between the Lake of the Woods and the Pacific Ocean, a territory sufficient in subdivision to make 12 of the largest States of the Federal Union.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says I made no reference to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. As a crime.

Mr. COCHRAN. I said that no American citizen had ever justified it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered by all readers of history of this country that the Democratic party made a campaign in 1844, using this as their shibboleth, "fifty-four forty or fight;" that is, we would have all of the Northwestern Territory that we claimed up to 54° 40′ or we would fight the power of Great Britain. No dispute then about our ownership! Let us see what the Democratic party said:

Resolved, That our title to the whole of the territory of Oregon is clear and unquestionable; that no portion of the claim ought to be ceded to England or any power, but that the reoccupation of Oregon and the reannexation of Texas at the earliest practicable period are great American measures which this convention recommends to the cordial support of the Democracy of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is good doctrine yet.

Mr. HEPBURN. I read from the first message of President Polk:

Though entertaining the settled conviction that the British pretensions of title could not be maintained to any portion of the Oregon territory upon any principle of public law recognized by nations, yet in deference—and so on. He was content that another course should be pursued. But here is the explicit declaration that the pretensions of title on the part of Great Britain could not be maintained to any portion of the Oregon territory. And again he says:

With this conviction, the proposition of compromise which had been made and rejected was by my direction subsequently withdrawn, and our title to the whole of the Oregon territory asserted, and, as is believed, maintained by irrefragible facts and arguments.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY. I yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. HEPBURN. I shall not want that much time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether at the time the contention of the United States for 54° 40′ was surrendered, Daniel Webster was not Secretary of State?

Mr. HEPBURN. Do not make a speech; I understood the gentleman wanted to ask a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. It was the action of a Whig Administration which had succeeded on the death of the President.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah, yes! "A Whig administration," was it? Who were the envoys that negotiated the treaty of surrender? James Buchanan was one. Was he a Whig?

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was Secretary of State at the time?

Mr. HEPBURN. Who approved of that treaty? James K. Polk. Who ratified it? A Democratic Senate, surrendering 12 States of this country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was Secretary of State?

Mr. HEPBURN. But that is not all. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to the language of this resolution of the Democratic party that I have read, which demanded the "reannexation" of Texas. The gentleman knows what this language means.

Mr. COCHRAN. Who was the Secretary of State?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman knows that we owned Texas, that it was a part of the Louisiana purchase, but that James Monroe, a Democrat, in 1819, when he purchased the Floridas for $19,000,000, surrendered Texas—gave it back to Spain. And so the gentleman will find that the legislation for the recognition of Texas as one of the States of the Union was entitled "A bill for the reannexation of Texas." It had been annexed; it had been surrendered; it was now reannexed. Who surrendered it? A Democratic Administration. They surrendered it as they surrendered Oregon; they surrendered what would make four or five average States in Texas, and what would have made twelve great States in the Northwestern Territory. And now the gentleman comes forward and says that this possible surrender of a narrow strip of this territory away up near the sixtieth parallel of latitude is one of the crimes of the century, unparalleled, and calls for the condemnation of the whole Republican party.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman has taken his seat without answering my question, although he had ten minutes additional time in which to do it.

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Whether Daniel Webster was not Secretary of State during the negotiations that culminated in settling the boundary dispute in the Northwest.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Polk was President of the United States. He appointed James Buchanan, then his Secretary of State, our negotiator, who did negotiate the treaty. Mr. Polk approved it; Mr. Polk sent it to a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic Senate ratified it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I will take occasion to call this matter up a little later and to correct some of the gentleman's statements of historical fact.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the time for general debate allotted to the other side having expired, and there being no further request for time on this side, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be now considered closed and that we proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time for general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture for new school buildings and additions to buildings, as follows: For 4 eight-room buildings, at $1,750 each; addition to Cranch Building, $875; and 5 four-room buildings, at $875 each; in all, $12,250.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want the floor for a few moments. I was very much interested, Mr. Chairman, in listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] a little while ago regarding the Alaskan boundary. The gentleman from Missouri substantially charged that the Administration was surrendering, or intended to surrender, American territory in Alaska to the Canadian government. He submitted facts to prove this that seem to me to be conclusive; but it needed no proof from him and no eloquent words to demonstrate that to me.

I have been to Alaska several times. I have been over this boundary line. I have talked to people there who know, and I say without fear of successful contradiction that since gold was discovered in the Klondyke the Northwest mounted police, acting, we must assume, for the Canadian government, have moved the boundary monuments that the Russians set up years ago, marking the boundary line of the territory that Russia ceded to the United States under the treaty, miles and miles nearer the Pacific Ocean and more and more on American territory. If anyone here doubts it, let me say that there are several people in Washington at this time from Alaska who can give unimpeachable testimony to the fact.

There is no doubt the original boundary line between Canada and southeastern Alaska has been changed by the Canadians during the past few years. What does the gentleman from Iowa say in regard to the allegations made by the gentleman from Missouri? He says, as I understand it, that some time ago, some way, somehow, away back in 1844, an Administration gave up 54° 40′. That was wrong; but two wrongs do not make a right. That surrender is no reason why we should surrender now. No man in this country has ever deprecated the surrender of "fifty-four forty or fight" more than myself. We should have stood by the verdict of the people then. I have traveled some in the great Northwest. I know to some degree what we lost there.

It is one of the grandest countries in all the world—rich beyond the dreams of avarice—a country that can support a population of 50,000,000 people; a country rich in agricultural resources, rich in timber and rich in untold mineral wealth. I am sorry short-sighted statesmanship lost it to us years ago. It was a crime against us and against generations yet unborn. But those in authority did not know then what we know now. One of the greatest Secretaries of State we ever had—a myriad-minded man, a patriot—Daniel Webster, made the surrender of all the territory from the forty-ninth parallel to the fifty-fourth parallel of latitude westward from the Lake of the Woods because he did not know. He knew all about Massachusetts, but very little about the great Northwest, and when I say that I mean the great Northwest of Canada; but because he then surrendered this territory to Great Britain, because he thought it more or less valueless, that is no reason why the present Secretary of State should surrender an inch of Alaskan territory to Great Britain now. We must maintain our rights in Alaska. We must not give up or let go a rod of American soil there.

Let me say that one of the schemes involved in this alleged boundary dispute is simply this: The Canadian government—and by that I mean, of course, Great Britain—has no port of entry on the Pacific Ocean to the Klondike and to the great Yukon territory. The Canadians want a port of entry on the Lynn Canal, near Skagway or near Dyea, so they can take their goods, wares, and merchandise through without duty. That is what they want. And to accomplish it they have moved the boundary line at Telegraph Creek on the Stickine River several miles westward on American territory, and they have moved the boundary line at Skagway and at Dyea several miles westward on American territory. There is no doubt about this. Witnesses living can testify to it. The Canadian maps will show it. Everybody in Alaska knows it. The boundary line must be put back where it belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended. I desire to make this matter plain to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. I thank the House. Now, sir, if it had not been for patriotic American citizens at Skagway a few years ago the Northwest mounted police, acting under instructions, no doubt, from the Canadian government, would have taken Skagway and raised the British flag over our custom-house there. They moved their line within a few miles of Skagway, destroyed the Russian monuments, and raised the British flag. Then it was that our loyal American citizens in Skagway, at Dyea, and in Sitka began to arm, and notified the Northwest mounted police that if they moved one foot farther on American soil there would be war in the great Northwest, and such a war as brave American citizens would fight who know their rights and dare maintain them.

The Northwest mounted police stopped, and fortunately for them they did, and the customs flag of the Canadian government has remained there, but it must go back to the original line. The feeling at that time in Alaska was so intense regarding this matter that the Secretary of State and the ambassador of the United States to Great Britain entered into an agreement with the British foreign office, or, more particularly speaking, into what is known as the "modus vivendi." The Secretary of State agreed to that, and from that day to this, under the modus vivendi, everything is supposed to be in statu quo—supposed to be suspended—suspended like Mahomet's coffin, somewhere between heaven and earth. Where it is and what it is nobody who is somebody seems to know, but it appears to be enough to put us all to sleep. We must not sleep, however. If the Americans are not alert, if they are not vigilant, if we do not maintain our rights, I say it is only a question of time when the Canadian government will creep on a little more and more until it will get a port of entry on the Lynn Canal.

The Canadian government is willing, and nobody knows it better than the gentlemen on the Joint High Commission between the United States and Canada, to concede to the United States practically everything in dispute regarding our fisheries, commercial matters, and all other things in dispute, provided the Government of the United States will give the Canadian government a port of entry in Alaska. They are willing to take Dyea, an abandoned town on the Lynn Canal, where all the houses stand empty to-day, mute witnesses of its desertion, as a port of entry—anything in fact so long as they can get a port on the Pacific in Alaska. When the Yukon and White Pass Railroad was built, Skagway became the western terminal and the port of entry to the Yukon, and Dyea, just across the canal, was abandoned and deserted.

The Canadian scheme of pushing through United States territory to an outlet on the Pacific Ocean may lead some day to serious results. "Fifty-four forty or fight" is not yet dead. It may be the shibboleth of another great political campaign, and no back down.

The Alaskan boundary question is brought up again and again by reports that Canadian officers have removed established monuments. There should be no Alaskan boundary question at all. The boundary line was settled absolutely in the treaties between Great Britain and Russia, and Russia and the United States; and it was not disputed for nearly seventy-five years. We bought certain territory which it was conceded that Russia owned and we paid for it; and no United States official should ever have dared to treat the matter as open to doubt or discussion.

The claim set up by Canada, through Great Britain, is a barefaced fraud; the controversy on the matter was a piece of unspeakable folly on our part; and the adoption of the modus vivendi was the first step in some mysterious scheme which may mean the loss of a strip of our Pacific coast line. Great Britain never had any title to the Pacific coast, but she succeeded in bullying us out of that part of it known as British Columbia. I say again we should have stood by the declaration, "Fifty-four forty or fight;" but we lacked the foresight. Seward did something, all that was possible, to retrieve that weakness when he bought the whole Pacific coast northward, and day by day our diplomatists have been preparing the way for another surrender of our plain rights. President Roosevelt, we are told, means to look into this matter himself and act.

Let us hope so. Unless all estimates of his character are astray his course will be to say politely that there is no Alaska boundary question; that it was settled by treaties long ago; and that there is nothing to do but lay down the line described in the treaties.

Thomas W. Balch, in the Journal of the Franklin Institute for March, has made an exhaustive historical study of the Alaskan boundary, and has shown that the recent Canadian claim is entirely manufactured and without the support of any treaty or any map, except those made recently in Canada as a basis for a claim to an outlet to the sea through United States territory, and for a demand for arbitration. On this demand Mr. Balch says:

> There is no more reason for the United States to allow its right to the possession of this unbroken Alaskan territory to be referred to the decision of foreign judges than would be the case if the British Empire advanced a claim to sovereignty over the coast of Georgia, or the port of Baltimore, and proposed that this demand should be referred to the judgment of subjects of third powers.
> Whether the Alaskan frontier should pass over a certain mountain top or through a given gorge is a proper subject for settlement by a mutual survey. But by no possibility has Canada any right to territory touching tide water above 54 degrees and 40 minutes. The United States should never consent to refer such a proposition to arbitration.

And I say we never shall while we have an American in the White House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, those familiar with this subject are aware that the Canadians are willing to take Dyea as a port of entry on the Alaskan Pacific and, in substance, give us everything in dispute between the two countries. But the American people will never consent to it. The sooner Canada understands this the better. The only question in dispute to-day, I believe, that the Canadian Commissioners and the United States Commissioners can not agree on is this Alaskan boundary question. And on that we stand on our rights. We will not arbitrate, and will never back down.

The Lynn Canal is a great body of water—a magnificent arm of the Pacific Ocean—almost as large, and for strategical and commercial purposes, as important as Long Island Sound. If the Canadians could once get a port of entry there, they could take in all their goods and merchandise into the vast Yukon territory without let or hindrance. They could fortify it and bid us defiance at some critical time when we least expected it. They would then have a port on the Pacific Ocean in the great Northwest, a port that would bring them hundreds and hundreds of miles nearer the Orient than they are to-day. That is what they want, that is what they are after, and that is about the whole question involved in this boundary dispute.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly. I always yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not entirely practicable now for a Canadian importer to take his merchandise through any port of the United States, in bond, to any port in Canada?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; to a certain extent.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then they can avoid paying duty now.

Mr. SULZER. They can and they do, and that is another thing that ought not to be permitted in Alaska. That is another thing that the Alaskans are kicking about, and if you will talk to some of the Alaskans who are here in Washington——

Mr. HEPBURN. Do they not do it in Portland, do they not do it in New York, your own city, and are the New Yorkers kicking as you say the Alaskans are?

Mr. SULZER. Let me tell you that every American citizen in the Klondike who comes out with gold dust he has worked hard to get must pay to the Canadians a duty on it and he has got to pay a tax besides. If you went up there you would soon find out these things. The Alaskans believe in fair play. They believe that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. They believe that if the Canadians get all these rights from the United States, the citizens of the United States in the Yukon territory ought to get some rights from the Canadians. I have looked into this matter carefully and knowing the facts as I do, I say here and now that I am opposed to a surrender of 1 inch of American territory in Alaska. I want to see the Secretary of State dissolve the modus vivendi and the Administration speedily compel Great Britain to recognize the title and the boundary in Alaska as it came to us from Russia. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STEELE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6719. An act to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the eastern division of the eastern district of Arkansas; and

S. 6779. An act to quiet certain land titles in the State of Mississippi.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extension of police-patrol system, including purchase of new boxes, purchase and erection of the necessary poles, cross arms, insulators, pins, braces, wire, cable, conduit connections, extra labor, and other necessary items, $5,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear the concluding statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. I am glad to find that there is at least one Democrat, a very eminent Democrat, one who speaks, I think, by authority, who certainly ought to be permitted to speak by authority, saying that he is opposed to pulling down the American flag from an inch of our territory. I am glad to know that the Democratic party is changing its attitude with regard to the Philippine Islands. I am glad to know that he approves now of the course of the Administration. I am glad that he gives his adhesion, late as it is, to the policy of holding on, of civilizing, of doing something for those people in the great uplift of mankind. I am glad he is on that tenable ground. But I was sorry to hear the disparaging remarks that he made about Daniel Webster.

I knew that he would not make similar disparaging remarks about Henry Clay, because everybody recognizes the great resemblance between the gentleman from New York and the distinguished savant from Kentucky. [Laughter and applause.] But I confess I do not know exactly what he means when he speaks of Daniel Webster in the belittling way that he does, when he says that Daniel Webster did not know much out of the State of Massachusetts. I do not know whether he meant to say that Daniel Webster knew nothing or but little except those things that were intimately connected with Massachusetts, or whether he meant to say that when Daniel Webster passed the boundary line of Massachusetts his great intellect at once shrunk, and that vast reservoir of information that he had been filling for so many years became of inconsiderable value.

I wish the gentleman would be a little more explicit when he has five minutes in his own time to discuss this—to discuss this subject, and tell us just how he does regard Daniel Webster, and just how his opinion as to Daniel Webster is to be affected;

whether it is territorially or personally; whether it inheres in Daniel himself or in Daniel's travels. The American people would be glad to hear the gentleman re-form this opinion that he has expressed, so that they would know exactly what he did mean. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will apologize to the committee for sitting by and consenting by silence to a plain violation of the rules of the House. This general debate has been extended into the five-minute time, and both sides have been about equally guilty, and the Chair will enforce the rule of the House until the close of the reading of this bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], regarding Daniel Webster——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that general debate must not continue.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. PAYNE. For general debate?

Mr. HULL. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may continue general debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire, briefly, to reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. In the first place, I want to say that I made no reflection on the great ability and intellectuality of Daniel Webster. No man in this country respects his great name more than I do. But what I did say, and what I meant to say, and what I want everybody to distinctly understand I did say, was this: That Daniel Webster knew nothing about the vast domain in the great Northwest. Neither did others of his day, and even later—much later. Read Benjamin F. Butler's speech against the purchase of Alaska when the bill was passing this House for its purchase for $7,200,000. Benjamin F. Butler voted against the bill, denounced it, and said, "We were buying an iceberg," whereas the climate of southeastern Alaska is milder and more genial than the climate of Washington.

At Sitka, supposed by some to be a frozen iceberg, the records kept by the Russians and Americans down to the present day show that the thermometer never reaches zero; and farther south in the great archipelago the climate in winter is much warmer, and delightfully cool and invigorating in summer. Alaska is a great land, a vast empire, and no one can tell to-day how rich it is in mineral, timber, and agricultural wealth. We are only on the threshold of knowledge concerning it, and I reiterate that we ought to be very careful about surrendering any part of it. Now is the time to be careful. It is better to be sure than be sorry. The experience of the past should be the light to guide us now and in the future. I want to see the American people hold fast to every inch of Alaskan domain, just as it came to us from Russia.

Now, one other thing, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Iowa has said that he is glad to know I am opposed to pulling down the flag. It is kind of him to say that. I am opposed to hauling down the flag when the flag is right. I have never advocated hauling down the flag on American territory, and I never will. [Applause.] I favored taking down the flag in Cuba, because we were pledged to do it, because we said to all the world that just so soon as we established peace and a stable government in Cuba we would get out and leave Cuba to the Cubans. I was in favor of keeping our word. I was in favor of taking down the flag in the Philippines and bringing it home with honor, because I sincerely and patriotically believed to keep it there with shot and shell and force would dishonor it and all that it stands for.

I was in favor then, and am now, of treating the Filipinos just the same as we treated the Cubans, and some day history will say I was right. I still believe in the principles of the Declaration of Independence. I still love the memories of our better days, and I believe the Filipinos are just as capable of self-government as the Cubans. Be that, however, as it may, I will not discuss it further now. I have not the time. I am talking about Alaska, and I will not be diverted by the gentleman from Iowa.

There is no question, I maintain, about our title to Alaska or about the loyalty and the patriotism of the Americans there. There is no question either, in my judgment, about the boundary, the original boundary which was agreed to by England and Russia almost a century ago, and which never was disputed in any way by anybody or any country until gold was discovered in the Klondike.

I tell you, and you know it, and the history of the world proves it, that wherever gold is found England is always on hand trying to secure all or some of the territory. In Alaska the land in dispute in the boundary question is rich in gold and other precious metals, and England is trying to get all of it she can. If we are foolish enough to let her do it, we should not unjustly blame England; we should blame ourselves. I want to call a halt now and insist once and for all on our rights in Alaska. Is that too much? Should I be blamed for that? Let my friend answer. While we supinely sleep under the narcotic influence of Mr. Choate's modus vivendi, Canada is awake and creeps on apace, and in time it will be too late. This is a live, a momentous question, and we should be up and doing, not wait, not delay.

The Secretary of State must stand by our rights in Alaska. The modus vivendi must end, and the land we got from Russia, and the boundary marks she put there must forever be our land, and the Russian monuments on the mountain ranges 10 marine leagues from the mainland must be as it used to be—the true boundary line. Alaska belongs to us; we bought it; our people are there; they want to stay there; our flag is there; it must stay there, and we must stand by the patriots, those noble, brave, and gallant men who went there from our States. That is what we should do; that is the way I feel on this subject.

If we do not do it—if we sacrifice an inch of our domain in Alaska, the Alaskans will denounce us now, and future generations will execrate our memory as we to-day criticise, to use no stronger term, the men who surrendered the great Northwest after the people had determined by an election that it must be ours, that it must be fifty-four forty or fight. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For major and superintendent, $4,000; captain and assistant superintendent, $1,800; 4 captains, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $900; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $540 each; additional compensation for 14 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $3,360, or so much thereof as may be necessary; 10 lieutenants, at $1,320 each; 35 sergeants, at $1,140 each; 350 privates, class 1, at $900 each; 240 privates, class 2, at $1,080 each; 40 privates, class 3, at $720 each; 3 telephone operators, at $600 each; 24 station keepers, at $840 each; janitor for police headquarters, $720; 13 laborers, at $600 each; laborer in charge of the morgue, $680; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; captain, mounted, $240; 51 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 64 sergeants and privates, mounted, on bicycles, at $40 each; 24 drivers, at $600 each; and 3 police matrons, at $600 each; in all, $743,100.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language in line 4, page 37, "for major and superintendent, $4,000," on the ground that it changes existing law; and also against line 20, commencing, "40 privates, class 3, at $720 each," on the same ground.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York raises two points of order, and we will take them one at a time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to have it understood that they are pending, so that I may not surrender any rights.

Mr. McCLEARY. In relation to the first point of order, fixing the salary of the major and superintendent, the act of June 20, 1878, paragraph 2, contains the following language:

Said Commissioners are hereby authorized to fix the salaries to be paid to the officers and privates of the Metropolitan police until otherwise provided by law.

The appropriation heretofore has been $3,300, but that does not necessarily fix the salary by law. The provision under consideration places a sum at the disposal of the Commissioners for the purpose of fixing the salary. Therefore it would seem not to be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the act of June 20, 1878, authorized the Commissioners to fix the salary of the privates and officers of the department, unless otherwise fixed by law. I understand the Commissioners have not fixed the salary, and in the hearings before the committee considering this bill one of the Commissioners said that the Commissioners did not ask for any increase of salary for the chief of police. The salary provided for the superintendent of police for some years has been thirty-three hundred dollars, carried in the appropriation act. I call attention of the Chair to the case in Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents, page 322, where the present distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] made the point of order that where salaries were not fixed by law the salary fixed in the previous appropriation act was the salary under the law, and any attempt to increase that amount was subject to a point of order.

The point raised by the gentleman at that time, in the Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, was sustained by the Chair. There is no doubt but that is the rule in the House at present. I have here the appropriation acts for four years past, showing that they carried for this officer a salary of $3,300, and this is an increase of $700, and subject to the objection that it changes existing law.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the burden rests upon the gentleman from New York to show affirmatively that the salary has been fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the salary heretofore fixed by the District Commissioners is $3,300.

Mr. McCLEARY. The amount carried in the appropriation bill, Mr. Chairman, has been for several years $3,300. There is no other legislative provision concerning it.

The CHAIRMAN. The practice of the Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has been against, I may say, the opinion quite often expressed by the present occupant of the chair, that when an appropriation bill of the preceding year fixed a salary that that was the salary provided by law and that an addition to that salary was a change of existing law.

It seems to the Chair that the citation by the gentleman from New York is pertinent. This was in 1898. The preceding appropriation bill had provided a salary of $1,400 for the assistant professor at the Naval Academy, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] moved to increase that to $1,800, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] made the point of order that if there was no statute providing for the salary of this office, then the salary appropriated for from year to year in appropriation bills was to be regarded as the legal salary, and the Chair sustained the point of order. Following the precedent, the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations realized that this might be subject to a point of order. The great excellence of the services of him for whom the additional salary was provided and the feeling that no one failed to recognize that excellence, and that therefore no one would raise the point of order, is our justification for inserting it in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a further point of order against the provision in lines 20 and 21.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the provision in lines 20 and 21—"40 privates, class 3, $720 each." Under the law organizing the department there are but two classes, a first class and a second class, and this provides a new class and fixes the salary at $720 each. It is clearly new legislation and subject to a point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the law to which the gentleman refers is chapter 623 of the statutes of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and reads as follows:

The Metropolitan police force shall consist of 1 major and superintendent, 1 captain and assistant superintendent, and such number of captains, lieutenants, sergeants, privates of class 2, privates of class 1, desk sergeants, and others as Congress may from time to time provide.

We claim that this class 3, the need of which is easy to establish, comes under the expression "and others," and therefore is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The statute, as it appears, has undertaken to settle how many classes of policemen there shall be—class 1 and class 2—and then there is a designation of lieutenants, sergeants, etc. It seems to the Chair that it would be a stretch of the words "and others" to say that those words authorize the creation of a third class. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in in line 19 of page 3, to strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighty." The effect of this will be to provide 280 policemen of the class named instead of 240, thus providing for the 40 that have been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. An amendment is being prepared which will cover this point, and I believe be clearly within the rule. It will be ready in a moment. [A pause.] Mr. Chairman, for the language which has gone out on a point of order I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] offer his amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand this is offered as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It will accomplish the same result.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 20, after the word "each," the following:
"For 40 additional privates of class 1, who shall receive $720 per annum each."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It changes existing law. The salary of privates of class 1 is at present, I believe, $900. This amendment proposes to change the salary to $720.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention to the fact that this is a reduction of salary, not an increase.

Mr. BABCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] is a change of existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has made that point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule on it. The Chair overrules the point of order. Now, the Chair desires to know what becomes of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is offered as a substitute for my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; the question then is on the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. McCLEARY].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call attention to what is proposed by this amendment. There are at present two classes of policemen in this District, known as classes 1 and 2. This amendment provides for 40 additional privates of a class now receiving $900 a year, but who under this amendment will receive $720 a year. Is that the amendment?

Mr. McCLEARY. The amendment enlarges the number in this class and reduces the salary for the added number. It is clearly within the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit to the Chair that this is practically creating a new class, and is subject to the same objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has overruled that point of order. The question is now on the merits of the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. McCLEARY was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. The substitute proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota being now agreed to, as I understand, I withdraw my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to page 6 to consider the clause between lines 14 and 20. My purpose is to ask some information from the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] asks unanimous consent to return to lines 14 to 20, on page 6, for the purpose of asking information of the chairman of the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is understood that this consent is granted for the single purpose of enabling the gentleman to ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. PEARRE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what the receipts of the office of sealer of weights and measures are?

Mr. McCLEARY. I have not the figures at hand; I simply remember that the office is self-supporting.

Mr. PEARRE. As I recall the figures, the receipts last year were something like $6,670. Now, I should like to know the gross salaries paid to this bureau, if I may so call it.

Mr. McCLEARY. The amount is named in the bill which the gentleman has before him—$6,080.

Mr. PEARRE. So that the receipts barely pay all the expenses of the bureau.

Mr. McCLEARY. They covered the expenses of the bureau and more.

Mr. PEARRE. I would ask the gentleman whether he does not think that the salary of the sealer of weights and measures is too high, when he considers that the receipts of the office just barely pay him and his assistants, or whether he has not too many assistants; in other words, whether the expenses of this bureau are nor greater than the services rendered are worth?

Mr. McCLEARY. The point raised by the gentleman may or may not be well taken, but the committee has no option. The salary is fixed by law.

Mr. PEARRE. The committee has the right to recommend the reduction of those salaries by an amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not where it is fixed by law.

Mr. PEARRE. I would say to the chairman of the committee that I would have offered an amendment to this section if I had been here at the time that portion of the bill was read. I merely now suggest to the committee that it might be well to reduce those salaries or curtail the number of assistants.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia is authorized to advance to the major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police, upon requisitions previously approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia, sums of money, not exceeding $300 at one time, to be used only for the prevention and detection of crime, and to be accounted for monthly on itemized vouchers to the accounting officers of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph, commencing at line 3 and ending with line 10. I wish to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if he will frame an amendment to make this money available for the purpose of bringing into the District fugitives from justice, which I understand is the object of the provision, I will make no objection to it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is just what this section does. It was framed for that very purpose and that is just what it does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it makes this money available for other purposes. If says "for the prevention and detection of crime." If they can use $300 at a time without any restriction upon the amount during the fiscal year, it is apt to lead to abuses which it would be better to prevent right now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The sum of $300 was named. It is a mere nominal sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that under the language of this provision $300 could be demanded and drawn every day.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But does not the gentleman remember to have heard read the provision of the section that this money must be accounted for on proper vouchers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but the language of this provision is "for the prevention and detection of crime." That covers a very, very wide field.

Mr. CANNON. And of course we are against the detection of crime and its prevention!

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what the gentleman is opposed to, but I am opposed to putting this provision in in this way. The hearings before the committee show the purpose for which this money is wanted, and nobody has asked for this appropriation for the purpose stated in the bill.

Mr. McCLEARY. We recognize, Mr. Chairman, that it is subject to the point of order if the gentleman determines to press it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest just a word to the gentleman from New York, as his remarks seem to indicate he has a wrong impression of what this is for. Now, if a crime is committed in the District, as was explained to the committee, and the criminal flees and gets outside of the District, there is no fund with which to send a man after him and bring him back into the District. The money will not be advanced under the law as it is now until the criminal is within the District, within the jurisdiction of the officers and the courts of the District.

Now, if an officer goes after the criminal, he must necessarily advance his own expenses until he gets the criminal back, or else somebody must advance those expenses to bring back the criminal. Then whoever advances the money is reimbursed. Now, it was explained to the committee that by making $300 available to send a man out to bring back a criminal, that sum would be reimbursed; and that $300 turns over and over and does the work throughout the whole year. It is for the apprehension and bringing back of criminals into the District, where the law will provide for the recoupment of this fund. In short, it is for the detection and apprehension of criminals, and that is the only way we could see by which to express it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stated at the beginning of what I said that I had no objection to an item for that purpose, but I do object to the present provision in the bill. I stated that if the gentleman in charge of the bill would prepare an amendment——

Mr. BURKETT. In what way does the gentleman desire to express it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman in charge of the bill would prepare an amendment which would make this money available for the expenses of men detailed to go out of the District to bring back fugitives from justice, there would be no objection on my part; but this makes it possible to secure an advance of $300 for the "prevention and detection of crime."

Mr. BURKETT. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it is customary in a great many cities of the country, I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], to use money for the purpose of instigating criminals to act in order to bring charges against them. It has grown to be a great abuse in some of the great cities of the country, and it is quite unnecessary to give to the present police officials of this city the same opportunity and power to abuse discretion placed in them.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman any other way of expressing it? We expressed it as clearly as we could possibly express it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the gentleman in his statement said this money was to be advanced for the purpose of paying the expenses of officers sent out of the District to bring back fugitives from justice. I think that is very clearly stated.

Mr. BURKETT. There is nothing else contemplated. There is another place in the bill and another fund——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there is nothing else contemplated, why not limit it to that by stating it in that language?

Mr. BURKETT. What way does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has already stated it and I have repeated it.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, I am not desirous of perfecting the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I suggest that we pass this temporarily and let the gentleman prepare an amendment such as he suggests.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman that I will not prepare an amendment. It was not put in there by me.

Mr. McCLEARY. I think that by changing the phraseology slightly the objection to the rule will be removed. I move to strike out in line 3, page 39, the word "hereafter," and insert instead thereof the words—

In expending the foregoing sum—

So that this will be a limitation upon the expenditure of the foregoing sum; so that it will read—

That in expending the foregoing sum the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia is authorized—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up the amendment, so that the Clerk can read it to the committee?

The Clerk reads as follows:

In line 3, page 39, strike out "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof "in expending the foregoing sum."

Mr. McCLEARY. That makes it a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have made a point of order against the whole section as it stands, and I insist on the point of order. I submit to the Chair that no amendment can be offered to a provision with a point of order pending. The Chair must determine that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled out the entire paragraph. It is no longer a part of the bill. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] now proposes to insert a paragraph at the same point in the bill where the obnoxious one was stricken out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Clerk will report that amendment, then we will be able to determine about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in expending the foregoing sum the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia is authorized to advance to the major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police, upon requisitions previously approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia, sums of money, not exceeding $300 at one time, to be used only for the prevention and detection of crime, and to be accounted for monthly on itemized vouchers to the accounting officers of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair regards this proposition now as a limitation upon the expenditure of the money heretofore appropriated in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the money heretofore authorized to be expended is all of it specifically appropriated for some other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Then there will be no money available to expend under this. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For flags and halyards for station houses, $125.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 12, page 39, the words "twenty-five" and insert "fifty." Before that amendment is put, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill [Mr. McCLEARY] a question. How much does this bill appropriate for the opening and improving of Sixteenth street?

Mr. McCLEARY. I would answer the gentleman by saying that it appropriates nothing.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it is with considerable embarrassment that I criticise my colleagues for their action in reporting this bill, but there is hardly a gentleman in this House who is not familiar with Sixteenth street and who does not know of the years that that legislation has been considered before this House. I want to say that we have just paid the sum of $629,000 for right of way for opening that street, which leads from the front door of the White House to the District line, and for two years practically nothing has been appropriated to open or grade that great thoroughfare, which is intended to be the most magnificent boulevard in the city of Washington, if not in the world.

Gentlemen are constantly coming to the Committee on the District of Columbia and asking what they shall do with their property, saying that the street runs through it; that they want to build; that they want to improve what they have left. The only answer I can make is that no appropriation has been made for removing the buildings or grading and improving the street.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I desire to call your attention to some other items in this bill. Here is the estimate for the necessary amounts required for the streets and avenues, $200,000; the amount appropriated in the committee bill is $50,000. Another item, construction of county roads, estimated at $200,000; the amount appropriated, $54,500. For the improvement of Rock Creek Park, $100,000.

Why, Mr. Chairman, time and again I have driven through that beautiful park and wondered and wondered why it was allowed to remain in its natural state when the opportunity for developing it into one of the most beautiful parks in this section of country is afforded; and now, Mr. Chairman, for the maintenance and improvement of that park an appropriation is made of $2,500. Think of it! Twenty-five hundred dollars! Why, other cities, the cities of the great States of Illinois, New York, and Ohio, are appropriating not only hundreds of thousands of dollars, but millions of dollars, for purposes of this character and the benefit of the people who reside there. What is Congress doing for the poor that have no public parks to go to—$2,500! Think of it! Rock Creek Park requires the sum asked for, $100,000. The amount appropriated is $2,500. I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but I want to call the attention of the House to the general policy that has been pursued in reporting this bill. I find that this bill carries $600,000 for the filtration plant, while I believe the Commissioners asked for something like $1,400,000. Take the provision for sewerage, another extraordinary appropriation. It is $47,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like attention just a moment. I want to make this point here: That the policy in reporting this bill is——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me just at that point?

Mr. BABCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me until I conclude my statement. I would be glad to answer a question.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman know that for the filtration plant, on a revised estimate and full information, that the gentleman in charge of the expenditure of the money says that this bill carries every dollar that can be expended in the coming fiscal year? And does not the gentleman know, further, that this appropriation for the sewerage system covers every cent that can be expended for the coming fiscal year for the sewerage system, the heart of it, that must be done before this system can be utilized?

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman misunderstands my remarks. I was calling attention to the extraordinary expenditures. What I said in reference to the Rock Creek Park was entirely in a different line.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is all that was asked for.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no criticism on the appropriation for those projects. I criticised the park appropriation for maintenance and improvement, and then I was starting in to show that other items were necessarily made small on account of the extraordinary appropriations, but the gentleman interrupted me before I had time to explain my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended, because I would like to ask him another question right there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the committee that this is general debate on the bill. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the filtration plant and the sewage disposal system, $1,247,000, as an extraordinary appropriation, an appropriation that is not in the class of the ordinary expenses of the city, and the bill also carries in addition other sums that I have not time to discuss and which it is not necessary for me to point out at this time. But the policy of the committee that has reported this bill, Mr. Chairman, is the point on which I wish to speak, and that is, that no appropriation shall be made until the tax levy has first been made up and the money raised to pay it. Am I correct?

Mr. McCLEARY. We are trying to keep the District from going further into debt. The gentleman is correct as to that point.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am correct on that.

Now, Congress has appropriated for several other large and extensive improvements—the sewerage system, the filtration plant, the municipal building, the union station, and some others carrying large sums of money, amounting in gross to a number of millions of dollars.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if we pursue this policy that these large appropriations, the extraordinary appropriations must be met out of the current revenues of the District, and it means that within ten years grass will be growing in the streets of Washington; it means, further, that we will be like a country town instead of setting a pattern to the world as the greatest capital of the greatest nation on earth.

I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that I never knew of a constituent of a member of this House who would criticise his member's action or his vote for a liberal, decent appropriation for this great capital. When they come here they say, "This is our capital." And the Committee on the District of Columbia has stood here to maintain it as the capital of the 80,000,000 people of this country. I say, Mr. Chairman—and I regret to criticise my colleague—this is a cheeseparing policy that means necessary shrinking and shriveling and retarding the development of this great city.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a statement, and I will have it inserted in the RECORD, showing something like 100 items, from $1,000 up to $250,000, that have been cut out of the estimates, when more than half of them are absolutely necessary to the welfare and the development of the city. I want to say that if this policy is pursued, these extraordinary appropriations must be paid out of the current revenues, and that necessary appropriations will have to be cut down and eliminated from this and future District of Columbia appropriation bills. There are dozens and dozens of items here that are eliminated from the bill, and I do not believe there is a member of the committee who would say that they ought not to be appropriated for if there were funds to do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer this statement in connection with my remarks, and to give notice at this time that the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported an amendment to the present law which will be called up in this House at a later day, and which covers this whole subject in detail, giving the amount of all the revenues of the District, the amount of the projects that are provided under law, etc., and the proposed legislation authorizes the National Government to advance to the District of Columbia such sums as are appropriated by Congress that the current revenues do not supply. The General Government has already advanced to the District of Columbia about $2,000,000, and the resolution provides that the total sum advanced shall not exceed $10,000,000, to be repaid at the rate of $500,000 a year for twenty years, with interest at the rate of 2 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] have such time as he desires, say, ten minutes, or fifteen minutes.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Ten minutes will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the spirit in which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] speaks. The members of the Committee on Appropriations are just as desirous that this shall be a beautiful city, worthy to be the capital of this great nation, as he or anyone else can be. But we have seen money expended in cities all over the country to their great embarrassment in the future. I was struck by an expression in an editorial of the Post the other morning, which immediately followed one rather criticising the committee for the smallness of the appropriation. In the editorial occurs this suggestive thought: "The one thing we leave to our children is debt." It was speaking of customary municipal management. The committee desires to avoid that, if it can be done without cramping the growth of the city and without "cheeseparing."

My friend from Wisconsin was quite facetious regarding the parks. If there is anything in which this city glories, it is its parks. If there is anything with which it is well furnished, it is with parks. You can not walk ten blocks in any direction without coming upon one or more beautiful parks.

My friend spoke rather slightingly of our estimate of the value of Rock Creek Park, mentioning the fact that we had appropriated for that park only $2,500. Anyone who drives up in Rock Creek Park will discover that a large part of it, that part below the military road, is in good condition.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to my friend that the pineries in Wisconsin were in good condition before the ax of man ever touched them.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Below this military road, I was saying, the drives are good, and, as my friend suggests, the pineries of his State were beautiful before they were touched. The illustration is "not half bad." We believe that in "nature unadorned" is much of beauty, and that man sometimes takes away rather than adds to the beauty by trimming and cutting too much.

But the point I desire to make, Mr. Chairman, is this: The work upon that park is done by inmates of the workhouse. The appropriation of $2,500 made in the bill is for administration purposes. We do not need to provide large sums for carrying on the work itself, because that is done by those we are caring for by public bounty and whose expenses are met in another part of the bill.

My friend speaks slightingly of our dealing with the city in the matter of streets. Permit me to remind him that by personal inspection we discovered that streets were estimated for which are now paved in a way which would be regarded in any other city in the world as splendid. What was the proposition? To tear up the present pavement and substitute another. Take, for example, Louisiana avenue between Fifth and Seventh, which stood either first or second on the list, as arranged "in order of importance." When you reach the fountain going home to-night, where Seventh street crosses the Avenue, turn and look toward the court-house and see what kind of a pavement it is.

It is a fine block pavement, in excellent condition, and the proposition was to take up that excellent pavement—and I use the word advisedly, an excellent pavement—take that up and substitute for it another kind of pavement. I would be willing to leave it to the membership of this House, if they will go and examine it, as we did; and I would be willing to offer an amendment to the bill such as the gentleman from Wisconsin seems to want if 95 per cent of this House did not say that is a good pavement and ought to be allowed to remain as it is. If there are 5 per cent of the membership of this House who will say that we did wrong in cutting out any such change as that, then I shall be willing to accept an amendment from my friend to make the change he suggests.

This is not "cheeseparing," Mr. Chairman; it is simply square, honest prudence, such as we exercise in our own personal affairs, that this committee has tried to exercise in the affairs of this District.

When, in going down Pennsylvania avenue, you reach the corner of Tenth street and look south on Tenth street, down toward the Smithsonian Institution, you will find on that piece of street a piece of pavement that was marked as the most imperative among the wants of the District for improvement. Look at the street; it is splendidly paved with granite blocks. What is that part of the street used for? For the business of commission houses—for heavy draying. What better pavement than the very granite blocks which are already there? And it is in good condition, barring a few places where there has been excavation, I judge, for sewers or something of that kind.

If gentlemen of this House could go with us and examine one by one the streets that we have passed upon, I feel confident that invariably, or at least ninety-five times out of a hundred, they would say that the committee did wisely and well.

My friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] very properly directed attention to the extension of the water system—for the filtration of the water—and pointed out that, while it is true that $1,400,000 is needed for the completion of the plant, no one proposes to complete that plant this year. It could not be done if all the money were placed at the disposal of the gentleman in charge of the improvement, Colonel Miller, of the War Department. We brought him before us and asked him how much money he could use properly and prudently this year.

Mr. BABCOCK. I made no criticism at all on that improvement.

Mr. McCLEARY. Why did you mention it, then?

Mr. BABCOCK. Because it was for extraordinary purposes, outside of the usual expenses of the District, and because it was argued that as you had to appropriate this large sum of money, therefore it was necessary to cut down these ordinary appropriations. That appropriation is all right; I made no criticism of it at all. It had to be made.

Mr. McCLEARY. I agree with the gentleman when he states as a general proposition that extraordinary expenses which can not be met from the revenues of a given year, and yet which must be provided for, should be provided for by spreading the expenditure over a series of years. This can be done, either by saving from an income from year to year till the required sum is "saved up," or by borrowing money payable through a series of years.

But when we have the money—when we have $5,419,000 of District funds raised by taxation—why borrow, especially when we remember that the taxes thus raised are only 1½ per cent on a two-thirds valuation, amounting practically to 1 per cent, a burden that is not grievous at all, a burden less than we carry in our own home towns. For this taxation covers everything—covers what would be counted in our homes under the heads of State, county, municipal, school, all the items of taxation. All these expenses in this District, as I have said, amount to only 1½ per cent on a two-thirds valuation, which is equivalent to 1 per cent.

Now, I repeat, when we have right in our own hands the means with which to provide reasonably for extraordinary expenses as they come along and provide reasonably for current expenses, why deliberately run in debt? The policy of the committee is to treat this city generously. We are just as proud as anyone can be of this city as the capital of this country. We want it to be a great and glorious and beautiful city, and we believe that twenty years hence the men who then reside here will be grateful to us for being prudent to-day in expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT].

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. BURKETT. I think that will be enough. Mr. Chairman, in these five minutes I want to reply briefly and directly to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. His main criticism in support of his $10,000,000 loan proposition, which he tells us he will call up soon, has been upon the Appropriations Committee charged with the preparation of this bill, for leaving out, as he says, a great many items that should have been attended to and appropriated for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this committee maintains that there is ont a single dollar of appropriation that should have been made for the care of the lives and property and the welfare and comfort and protection of the people of the District of Columbia that has not been appropriated. This is not a "cheeseparing bill," as he denominates it.

Mr. BABCOCK. How about Sixteenth street?

Mr. BURKETT. I will tell the gentleman all about that. I will read every one of these items that he mentions and discuss their merits.

We have not "skimped" in any particular. And let me say further that within the revenue now available for the District of Columbia there is almost $5,000,000 that can be devoted and will be devoted to permanent improvements within the District. In this bill, carrying something over $7,000,000 for running this District, there is included over one and three-fourths million dollars in the way of street extension, in the way of sewer building and extension, in the way of extending and improving the waterworks system and filtration plant, in building schoolhouses, and adding books to the library, and that sort of thing.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin has brought in here a statement of several items, and has filed it and made it a part of his remarks, which he says we ought to have appropriated for, and did not. I will begin at the first. For instance, he says that in the surveyor's office, where the Commissioners have recommended an appropriation of $22,484, we have appropriated only $17,800. Ah! a misstatement by the juggling of figures or possibly a misapprehension of the facts. We appropriated every dollar that the Commissioners asked for, aside from raise in salaries. But we declined to appropriate it in the manner that they asked. And now gentlemen come in here and juggle with the figures for the purpose of making the House and the people of this District believe that we have not provided properly for that office.

Now, why? Turn over here in the Book of Estimates and you will find that the Commissioners wanted to load onto the District by way of salaries the difference between $17,000 and $21,000, $4,000 worth of salaried officers, and put them on the salary list. The committee says, "We will leave them as they have been for years. The law has provided who are salaried officers and who shall be on the salary list. These others you can employ on a per-diem basis as you need them," and we appropriated that amount of money and put it into the contingent fund, thus permitting them to employ those people on a per-diem basis.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I made no mention of that item.

Mr. BURKETT. But it is in the list here.

Mr. BABCOCK. Every item in the bill is in the list.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, take the next one. The next item that he criticises us for not appropriating for is $1,500 to resurvey the District boundaries. We had a hearing on this particular matter. What is this? They propose that somebody should make a resurvey, should go around the District and set stones down along the District line which will be thicker than the stones there now. We asked if there were not there stones occasionally now marking the boundary. "Yes; but whenever a man goes out to survey from the District line," was the reply, "he has to go away over there and find the stone before he knows where the line is." It is only a question of how many stones we put out there. That is the whole business. They know where that line is; it is already marked; it can be found whenever it is wanted. In fact, we pay these surveyors for that purpose, and when they go out to find the District line they can find it. It is possible for them to find it by hunting for it, from the stones already there.

Mr. McCLEARY. And by not going very far, either.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; by not going very far either, as the evidence shows. The next proposition is for the purchase of the Lattimore field notes, $7,500, and he criticises the committee for not appropriating that. Now, what are the Lattimore field notes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, as I was about to say, there is a man named Lattimore who is employed down here in the surveyor's office. He has an old set of field notes that, as the evidence shows, was of more or less value when they went into that particular portion of the city to look up some old title, but for years, ever since he has been employed in the District office, the District has been using these field notes. That fact probably has been taken into consideration in respect to his employment in fixing his salary. In the judgment of the committee that was not wise, it was not necessary, it was not proper at this time to appropriate to buy those field notes, because resurveys are being made, and in the course of time they may not be needed at all.

Now, the next proposition which the gentleman criticises the committee for is because it does not appropriate $500 for putting in shape the records of the permit clerk's office. That is allowed in the contingent fund. It is under the executive department, and they can put those records in shape out of that contingent fund. The next proposition is for not allowing $175,000 under assessment and permit work. Now, we allowed $145,000, which is current law, the same as we allowed last year. In the appropriation bill of last year we increased the sum $5,000. The year before it had been $140,000 and we raised it to $145,000, and this year we allowed current law.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? What is the annual increase in growth in taxation in the city of Washington?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, it was a good deal last year, under the tax law, which some people did not like.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; but for a period of years—say the past five or ten years.

Mr. BURKETT. I have not it.

Mr. BABCOCK. It exceeds 10 per cent, the appropriation does, practically, every year; 5 to 10 per cent.

Mr. BURKETT. What does?

Mr. BABCOCK. The increase in the appropriations—the natural growth of the city. Does the gentleman expect to maintain an appropriation which was fixed last year or five years ago or ten years ago, indefinitely?

Mr. BURKETT. We do, probably, on this sort of special work, because we are completing this work—the special work—every year. It does not grow any more one year than another. That is the growth; that is what this $145,000 represents.

Mr. BABCOCK. The total estimates, including water department, for 1893, were $6,717,865.43, and the total estimates for 1903, including the water department, were $10,707,497.97.

Mr. BURKETT. That is on account of the $1,500,000 tax law that we put on in connection with this bill last year.

Now, the next proposition is $200,000 that was asked for streets and avenues, on which we allowed $50,000. That is considerable of a cut, but the streets of Washington are paved according to a schedule made several years ago. When the Commissioners came before the committee, we asked if that was the schedule they would follow. We thought possibly conditions might change and there might be some streets that would come into prominence or would come into a condition of being necessary to be paved, which a few years ago had not been.

So we asked the Commissioners to revise the list of streets that should be paved in this District, that we might see what were the most important, and we said: "Put in your list the streets that need paving the most, the most important street first, the second most important street next, and so on." And when they brought us that revised list, what do you suppose the first one was? The first one on the list was Louisiana avenue, paved with granite-block pavement, going down the hill southwest from the city offices. The committee went over and investigated, and they said that if that was the most important thing to be paved, when we needed our money and could better use it in other directions, it was not proper to permit a bonding or a borrowing scheme for this District in order to tear up granite-block pavement and substitute asphalt for it.

One of the streets was down here in the wholesale district—Tenth street from Pennsylvania avenue south. We went down there and we never saw a thing but drays and wagons, wholesale houses, a lot of little manufactories, and that sort of thing. Any business man who would go down and investigate it to see what it ought to be paved with would say that it ought to be paved with granite blocks. So we did cut down this item. We thought if that was the most important thing they needed in the way of pavements we could use the money to better advantage in extending the sewers, which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] criticised us for doing.

Now, the next thing was the grading of streets and alleys. They asked for $10,000 and we allowed $8,000 for the extending and grading of streets and alleys. That is another one of these things that is carried along every year for the growth and development of the city, and we gave current law. So I might go on down through the list, but I am not going to take the time to do so.

Mr. BABCOCK. Get down to the parks.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, I will get down to the parks. The gentleman called special attention to Rock Creek Park, and then he threw in those few sympathetic words for the poor people of the District of Columbia. But he has not suggested, and the Commissioners of the District have not suggested, a single improvement in Rock Creek Park that would be for the benefit of the poor people of the District of Columbia. What are the improvements contemplated? They are the building of driveways that you can roll over with your magnificent carriages and teams. There is not an improvement contemplated in Rock Creek Park that is for the benefit of the poor people that the gentleman from Wisconsin is so anxious about.

Now, with reference to this parking matter, we did not appropriate as much as they asked us for the improvement of Rock Creek Park. That is true, but we have appropriated for parks all over this District. There are parks from one end of it to the other.

Mr. BABCOCK. In this bill?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; in this bill. We have appropriated for the care and the maintenance and the beautifying of every park in this District. The committee also appropriated as much as they thought was necessary for the care of Rock Creek Park.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman call attention to the different items of appropriation for the parks of this city in the bill?

Mr. BURKETT. We appropriated $25,000 in this bill for the parking commission.

Mr. BABCOCK. But not for the parks.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, in the sundry civil bill there is also carried——

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman stated that they had appropriated for all the parks in the city in this bill. I should like to have him show us a single item.

Mr. BURKETT. We have appropriated for everything that belongs in this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is another proposition.

Mr. BURKETT. And what we did not appropriate for in this bill will be taken care of in the sundry civil bill. The gentleman would not want us to duplicate in both bills, I think.

Another thing they criticise us for is the item for cleaning off ice and snow. The Commissioners asked $5,000 and the committee reported $1,000. Why? Because whenever there is any ice or snow on the streets of this city Congress is always in session. Rather than make an appropriation of $5,000, to be carried after next July until December, we simply appropriate $1,000 in case of a little emergency. That is the way we have done for years.

Mr. BABCOCK. In case of a snowstorm the gentleman would suggest a special appropriation?

Mr. BURKETT. That is the way it has been done for years, and it has only been required occasionally; but whenever we have a severe snowstorm Congress is always in session, and it does not take very long to make provision. Now, here is one thing I want to call attention to, because it is along the same line of argument that they are making.

A man came to me on Saturday evening last, after hearing some such arguments and said he thought that there was a terrible calamity visited upon the District, that we had cut down the appropriations to such a degree as to be very disastrous to the District. When I told him that we had not cut down the appropriations for the water, for sewerage, for the repair of streets or cleaning them, or anything of that sort of thing he was surprised. When I told him that we had appropriated for every schoolhouse, and that when they had come and asked us for 40 policemen at $50 we gave them 40 at $60, he was surprised. When I told him that we had appropriated for all the fire apparatus that was asked for, he was amazed, for he had been misinformed.

There were some officers that asked to have some salaries raised, and it appears in the statement of the Commissioners before the subcommittee that, as a general proposition, they thought we should raise the salaries of the heads of departments first. The committee took another view of the matter.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not think the gentleman wants to do me an injustice. I know I made no criticism about the salaries.

Mr. BURKETT. You have it right here in your paper as to what the committee did in the raise of the salaries.

Mr. BABCOCK. I made no criticism of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, our friend from Nebraska has shown a few details that we had rather expected to keep until next Monday, when the proposition for lending the District ten millions is to come up. It is well enough to do it now, and we will have some more of the same kind then.

Mr. BABCOCK. I hope it will be in the same line, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCLEARY. We will be with you.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKETT. These Commissioners came and they asked and they argued, that the salaries of each of the heads of the bureaus and departments might be raised. We did not raise these salaries. I do not think there are three exceptions to that statement. We have not raised any of the high-salaried clerks and officers of this District to speak of. What did we do? We took the drivers and laboring men who were receiving $30 and $40 a month and we raised them all up to $50 a month. These are the only salaries, I will say, gentlemen, with possibly three exceptions, that this committee are recommending to raise.

Now, here is another item to which I desire to call attention. That out of an appropriation of $125,000, as recommended by the Commissioners (that is, in this written statement), we only recommend $25,000. Now, the Commissioners estimated that $125,000. It was for the sewerage-disposal plant down here. When the Commissioners came before us and we asked the Engineer Commissioner how much money of last year's appropriation he had on hand, he began to figure, and he was surprised to find out how much money he had, and almost questioned whether he could expend it all in another year, and said that $25,000 more would be all that he could expend and we gave the $25,000.

In short, in conclusion, let me say we have appropriated on all of these improvements that the District has started on by legislation; we have appropriated every dollar—every dollar that has been asked for by the officers in charge of any of these public works. And let me say to the gentleman we have taken into consideration the amounts that it is going to cost for terminals, the highway bridge, the amount that it is going to cost for the District building, for the filtration plant, and the amount for all these things we have started out to build, and still we have enough revenue to-day to carry on the District business.

We are appropriating one and three-quarter millions for permanent improvements in this bill and three more millions of dollars are left for the other projects planned, of permanent improvements in the District. At that rate annually for the next twenty years, that the gentleman proposes to give the District to pay off the $10,000,000 loan, we will have $80,000,000 to appropriate for permanent improvements over and beyond what it will cost to run the District alone.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Wisconsin present his amendment to the paragraph in seriousness?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For chief engineer, who shall have had at least five years' actual experience as a member of some organized municipal fire department, $2,000; 3 assistant chief engineers, at $1,200 each; clerk, $1,000; fire marshal, $1,200; machinist, $1,000; 26 foremen, at $1,000 each; 14 engineers, at $1,000 each; 14 firemen, at $900 each; 7 tillermen, at $900 each; 27 drivers, at $900 each; 186 privates, at $840 each; 26 watchmen, at $600 each; and 1 laborer, at $480; in all, $264,320.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words in line 6, "who shall have had at least five years' actual experience as a member of some organized municipal fire department." I make it on the ground that it is new legislation, and in support of that I have last year's appropriation bill before me in which the language used is, "for chief engineer, $2,000," precisely the same as the words in this bill, with the exception of the words against which I make the point of order. It is clearly a change of existing law and is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to offer which I think will meet the objection of the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, line 8, insert, after the word "dollars," the following: "This sum shall not be available to pay a chief engineer who has not had at least five years' experience as a member of some organized municipal fire department."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that amendment. If it were permissible to put in words in that way, by indirection or as a subterfuge, nothing would come of any point of order against language in a general appropriation bill amounting to new legislation or a change of existing law. It is not in any sense a limitation on the amount to be expended, and that is the only sense in which such a provision can be put upon an appropriation bill. The gentleman knows that it will accomplish the same thing. It is the same provision in new language. It is seeking to incorporate in a general appropriation bill new legislation, and the gentleman's amendment is the same as the words I object to, only in a modified form.

Mr. McCLEARY. I do not understand the gentleman from Maryland to question the wisdom of some such provision. He is objecting to the form of the phraseology. I am trying to meet his wishes rhetorically and bring this so it will be within the well-known rule whereby a limitation of an expenditure is in order. It is upon that ground I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the effect of this language proposed in this amendment is the same as that which by consent was ruled out on a point of order. Going back as far as the able opinions delivered on this particular question by Chairman Dingley, the object sought is the real question, and the form of words is unimportant. In their form, in the opinion of the Chair, this language is a limitation upon the expenditure of money and legitimately proper. And while the present form is a much better one than the other, and less likely to challenge quotation in the future, the Chair would have overruled the point of order in the first instance, and he certainly does so now. [Laughter.] The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WARNOCK having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On December 20, 1903:

H. R. 16642. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to acquire by purchase or condemnation additional land in rear of the present site of the truck house in square No. 926, in the southeast section of the city, at an expense not exceeding $2,000, to be paid out of the appropriation heretofore made for said truck house.

In all, $39,500.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting a verbal error, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 41, line 23, strike out the word "twenty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the necessary traveling expenses of sanitary and food inspectors while traveling outside of the District of Columbia for the purpose of inspecting dairy farms, milk, and other dairy products, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. A few minutes ago in discussing the Alaskan boundary, the distinguished and learned and generally accurate gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] said that a paltry amount of territory——

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I invite attention to the fact that the gentleman from Missouri is not discussing matters germane to the bill, and I raise the point of order.

Mr. COCHRAN. The time I occupied was in the general debate; the time occupied by the gentleman from Iowa was in the five-minute debate. I will observe, however, in closing, that this point is generally made after a Republican orator has delivered himself, but never at any other time.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me correct the gentleman. The last orator to whom we have listened was on the Democratic side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Justices of the peace: For ten justices of the peace, at $2,000 each, and the further sum of $250 each for rent, stationery, and other expenses; in all, $22,500.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read. By the District code bill, which was passed in the last Congress or the Congress preceding, provision was made for ten justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and their salaries were fixed at $3,000 a year. Now, the paragraph just read is either a change of existing law or it is a perfectly useless proceeding, because if it be not a change of exising law it simply relegates these justices to the Court of Claims to recover in each case $1,000 salary not appropriated for.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very great piece of injustice against these justices of the peace, who accepted office in the face of the pledge of the law that they were to be paid $3,000 a year. The code prohibits their practicing law, and compels them to turn into the District treasury all the fees and emoluments of their offices. They are therefore entirely dependent upon their salaries. While it is true that $250 is allowed them for rent, stationery, and other expenses, it will be perfectly apparent to anybody who lives in the city of Washington that an allowance of $250 a year to pay office rent, stationery, and other expenses is a mere bagatelle. I am told—of course I speak only from information—that after these justices are paid their salaries, cut down as provided for in this bill, they will receive no more in a year than a deputy marshal does who is occupied in keeping peace in their office.

And it is to be borne in mind that these gentlemen accepted these offices with the understanding that according to the reading of the law their salary was to be $3,000 a year. I can not speak as to all of them, but I do know some cases where they entirely changed their mode of living, where they gave up the business that they had been previously pursuing, upon the faith of this $3,000 salary. To cut down the salary in this way is an injustice to these gentlemen which I do not believe the Appropriations Committee wants to inflict.

Some gentlemen say, "Well, there ought not to be ten justices of the peace in the District of Columbia." I think perhaps that is true; but the proper way of making an amendment to that effect is by a revision of the law creating these ten justices, and not by violating the rules of the House in legislating on an appropriation bill.

What is the saving to be accomplished by this reduction? We save the sum of $10,000 by cutting down the salaries of ten justices, when, as my friend representing the District Committee has assured us, the District treasury is just overflowing with money, so that there is a surplus of $5,000,000. Under these circumstances the Committee on Appropriations wants to save $10,000 by taking it out of the pockets of ten justices of the peace. Now, aside altogether from any question of order, I appeal to the sense of justice of the House to appropriate for these gentlemen what the law provides they shall receive.

I withdraw any pretense of a point of order, and I move to amend by inserting in line 2, page 47, the word "three" instead of the word "two" before the words "thousand dollars each." I move also to amend the total of the paragraph by adding to the amount $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves to strike out "two" in line 2, page 47, and insert "three," so that the paragraph will read:

For ten justices of the peace, at $3,000 each.

The gentleman moves further to amend by making the footing correspond with the amendment just stated.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] withdrew his point of order because he is too good a parliamentarian not to know that it would not lie, in view of the words "in full" in the opening paragraph of the bill. The bill appropriates "in full" for the purposes named. Therefore, whatever may be appropriated is all that the gentlemen could get and no more.

On the 30th of June, 1902, a little over six months ago, we passed a revised code for this District. In that revision a provision was adopted reducing the number of these justices from ten to six. Why that reduction? Simply because it was felt that six is a sufficient number. The salaries of six justices, at $3,000 a year, would amount to $18,000 to be expended for this purpose. Under this bill we propose to expend $20,000—a larger amount—for ten justices. The reduction of number provided for in the code is to take effect gradually, as the incumbents of these ten offices may resign or die. Not desiring to legislate any of these justices out of office, we provided for continuing the number; but, in view of the meagerness of the duties, we believe that a salary of $2,000 is ample.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] has not answered my proposition, that these gentlemen are entitled to be appropriated for in accordance with the law. I differ with him entirely as to the duties of these officers being "meager." As far as I am concerned, I know only of the case of one of these gentlemen, but I know that his duties are onerous and that he earns the whole of the salary as fixed by law.

It may be that six justices are a sufficient number; I have no doubt that such is the fact; but, as I have said, the proper way to provide for the reduction in the number of justices is by revising the law. It is no proper function of an appropriation committee to undertake to adjust salaries, to put them up and put them down. A little while ago the gentleman from Maryland [Mr, MUDD] inquired of my friend the chairman of the subcommittee if he did not think the salary of the sealer of weights and measures was too high. The gentleman replied that that might be so, but that his committee had no alternative, that the law fixed the salary and it was their duty to make the appropriation.

Now, the same rule that applies there applies here. But I do not care anything about technicalities. I appeal to the sense of justice of this House and assert that men who accepted office upon a pledge written in the statute books that they would receive a certain amount of money per annum for their services are entitled to have that amount of money. The gentleman of whom I speak was appointed after the passage of the code and accepted office on the face of the code. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How long has it been that the appropriation bills have carried $2,000 per annum instead of $3,000?

Mr. DALZELL. Last year and now this proposed here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Those are the only two?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should not have said a word about this matter were it not that I served upon the subcommittee last session of this Congress on the bill for the first appropriation, as I recollect, after the enactment of the code. We took up this matter and investigated it fully. We were much surprised to find that provision was in the code. Gentlemen understand how the District code is revised and how it was revised. We did it in a hurry—I do not know how many hundred pages there are, some one says 600 pages—and in about forty minutes' consideration. I doubt if the gentlemen who had charge of the code knew many things that were in it. We have been finding them out to our sorrow ever since, and I have no doubt that there are others to still follow after.

When we took up the first appropriation bill to provide for these ten justices of the peace, who had theretofore, as I recollect it, been feed officers, and not salaried officers, imagine our surprise to find that they wanted $3,000 each for these ten justices of the peace, in addition to $250 to pay the rent and for the stationery. We investigated the matter, and we found that six were more than there ought to be; so that, as I recollect it, we placed some provision upon the law which has been construed to mean that as these gentlemen go out of office the number shall be reduced to six, an ample number. We thought, as their stationery and office rent were paid—$250, making in all $2,250—that $2,000 was a sufficient salary for a man that, ordinarily, is like necessity—knowing no law. [Laughter.]

I must confess that I should not have said a word about it except in justification of our action then. I feel quite sure that before this legislation was had the salary was more than enough, from the many, many applications by mail and in person which I had—not from an army, but enough to make a respectable-sized company in a regiment which was agonizing to serve the country in this respect. I do not want to do any injustice, and did not when I figured this legislation—in effect, legislation reducing the number to six, as I have indicated, and reducing the salary for the current year to $2,000. That is all they are getting now, and this proposed for the coming year that it shall be at $2,000, with $250 more. I have no doubt that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] knows one very worthy man. I wish that we might reduce the number to four, which would be quite enough, and give the one worthy man my friend knows a little more and the others a little less.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know him, I know of him.

Mr. CANNON. Yes? Well, upon the whole, I submit that $2,250 is enough to pay by way of annual salary to a justice of the peace, when we have ten and do not need six.

Mr. DALZELL. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will agree with me that the proper place to amend that legislation is in the bill itself, and not in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we have already amended it by cutting the number down to six, to take effect when the first four go out of office. We amended it this year so that they will receive $2,000 for the current year, and this proposes, not subject to a point of order, to continue that $2,000 for the coming year. That is all I want to say.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I think my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will agree with me that it is no proper function of the Committee on Appropriations to cast aside the law and fix salaries, putting them up and putting them down, in their discretion. I agree with him and I am willing to concede that the code bill was passed hastily and perhaps without any very accurate knowledge on our part, but two wrongs do not make a right, and if we were guilty of carelessness in that case we ought to remedy that carelessness in the proper way.

Mr. CANNON. After all, I will say to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the main question is, first, have we the power for the coming fiscal year to continue the salary as it is this year? The answer is yes. Second, on the everlasting merits, or rather on the merits as they exist now, is $2,250 enough?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALZELL) there were—ayes 19, noes 36.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Any excess of said sum or of sums hereafter appropriated for this purpose, over and above the amount required for the payment of the interest on the funded debt of the District of Columbia, shall be applied by the Treasury of the United States to the purchase and redemption of the bonds of the District of Columbia: Provided, That should the Treasurer of the United States at any time be unable to secure bonds of the District of Columbia at a price which he may deem advantageous, he is hereby authorized to invest the amount available for the said sinking fund in bonds of the United States, the bonds so purchased to be registered in the name of the Treasurer of the United States, trustee for the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer of the United States to collect the interest, when due, on the bonds so held, and to invest the same for account of said sinking fund: Provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized, by exchange or by sale and reinvestment, to substitute bonds of the District of Columbia for the bonds of the United States so held when he shall deem it to be to the interest of the said sinking fund to do so.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The precision with which the appropriation contained in this paragraph is stated would lead to the supposition that the amount was arrived at by a mathematical calculation, for it appropriates the sum of $975,408. Why it should appropriate this sum in such precise figures it is hard to understand, unless it was reached by a mathematical computation of some liability and unless provision was made for enough money to meet it.

Mr. McCLEARY. Does the gentleman desire an answer?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now. I assume, however, that such is not the case; for if that were true certainly there would be no necessity for the elaborate provision which is contained in the next paragraph, a provision which says that in the event that a surplus remains out of this appropriation, or out of any similar appropriation in the future, that surplus shall be used in purchasing the outstanding securities of the District of Columbia; and then it provides that if such securities can not be purchased at a figure satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury such surplus shall then be invested in United States bonds and held as a trust fund against the public debt of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman one thing just there?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The purchase of the bonds of the District of Columbia is provided for here, but there are only a few of them and they are in the hands of strong men who could put up the price of those bonds to whatever point they pleased and force the District to pay that sum.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, I have no objection to purchasing those bonds, but I am at a loss to understand why we should appropriate a sum of money which leaves a surplus to be devoted to this purpose.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. A surplus is not appropriated, but in case there is a surplus then we take care of it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Assuredly if this large sum of $975,408 is arrived at by computing a liability which must be met by the Treasury of the United States, then it is certainly true that if it is even approximately correct no considerable surplus can arise, and what should be the manner of its disposition, I was going to say, would be a matter almost of indifference.

But the care with which this provision is drawn and the elaborateness of its form would indicate that there is in this section provision having in view a surplus to be applied in this way. Now, I should like to ask the gentlemen of the committee a question. Can the gentleman in charge of the bill state in precise figures the amount of interest on indebtedness of the District of Columbia which is to be met out of this appropriation—the amount of the interest?

Mr. McCLEARY. I prefer to answer the gentleman in my own way after he is through.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want an answer now. I am not through. The gentleman took the floor, and I supposed he wanted to be interrogated.

Mr. McCLEARY. I thought you were just about through.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, I am not through.

Mr. McCLEARY. I will explain the paragraph when the gentleman takes his seat.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have no doubt the gentleman can explain it, and to the end that he may do it completely I will ask him to state separately how much of this will be applied upon the payment of an interest obligation. Does this paragraph have in view a surplus; and if so, how much? If the interest can be arrived at exactly, I ask why the Appropriations Committee did not bring in a bill appropriating precisely enough to pay the interest? What is the object in creating a surplus to buy at a premium the public debt of the District of Columbia in advance of its maturity?

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Missouri evidently did not read the title of this subdivision of the bill. It says:

Interest and sinking fund.

Now, we must provide in this bill enough money to pay the interest on the obligations of the District and in addition thereto a certain sum to serve as a sinking fund with which to meet the principal when it becomes due, a certain sum year by year to apply upon the principal. Now, that is the "excess" that the gentleman did not understand, or appeared not to understand.

As to the exactness of these figures, I desire to say that we had the actuary of the Treasury make this computation, and it is a mathematically correct computation.

I repeat, then, this appropriation covers the interest for this year on the debt of the District. It also makes provision for a part of the principal. And it tells what shall be done with the sum collected toward the payment of the principal. The committee will understand that the debt of the District consists of 3.65 bonds, 6 per cent and 7 per cent bonds. The 6 and 7 per cent bonds are about extinguished. After this year there will be only 3.65 bonds.

The Treasurer is required to invest the sum raised for the sinking fund for the benefit of the District. The law requires that the sinking fund be invested in the bonds of the District. Hereafter, under existing law, he can invest only in the three-sixty-fives. But the amount of the outstanding indebtedness in that form is limited. It is in the hands of comparatively few people, who know when the Treasurer has some money which must be invested. Suppose they could know that he could invest only in that one thing. What would you do, Mr. Chairman, if you had such a situation before you? What would anyone naturally do who had such bonds? The natural thing to do would be to hold the bonds at a pretty stiff price.

Now, to keep the Treasurer from being imposed on as to the price of the three-sixty-fives, we have given him in this bill the alternative under which he can temporarily invest the sinking-fund part of the money herein appropriated in United States bonds bearing 2 per cent, the interest of which shall accrue to the sinking fund. When these people who hold the three-sixty-fives find that they can not squeeze the Government they will be more likely to sell the bonds at a fair price. Provision is made, further, that when he can get 3.65 bonds at a price which he deems just and fair to the District he can convert the United States bonds into 3.65 bonds, and set them aside as part of the sinking fund.

I trust the explanation is satisfactory to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. Without objection, the Chair will direct that the note incorporated on pages 60 and 61 and the top portion of 62 be stricken out. It is no part of the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For revenue and inspection branch: For water registrar, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $1,800; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; chief inspector, $936; 8 inspectors, at $900 each; messenger, $900.

Mr. PALMER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. These sums are appropriated to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District. I wish to inquire where the money is to come from that you appropriate for the filtration plant.

Mr. McCLEARY. All these items, Mr. Chairman, are payable one-half from the revenues of the District and one-half from the United States Treasury.

Mr. PALMER. About what year of the Christian era do you apprehend this filtration plant will be completed?

Mr. McCLEARY. Next year, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PALMER. According to Colonel Miller it will be a year from next December; that is, in December, 1904.

Now, there was some question raised here last year as to the location of this filtration plant and as to the cost of the land provided for it. It was stated that the land was purchased at a price of $18,000 an acre out in the neighborhood of the Soldiers' Home. It was suggested that it would have been more economical to go out into the country some place where the land is cheaper to obtain land for this purpose. I observe that the committee had Colonel Miller before them and interrogated him on that subject, and from his testimony it appears that a board of experts recommended that the land for a filtration plant should be bought 8 miles outside of the city.

Now, I would be glad to inquire how it was, when the board of experts recommended that this land be bought outside of the city at probably two or three hundred dollars an acre, that the property was bought within the city limits at $18,000 an acre, making an expense of over $600,000?

Mr. McCLEARY. While my friend was reading what he has quoted as being in part what Colonel Miller said, why did not he read the rest of Colonel Miller's statement? The Colonel made quite a full explanation of the matter.

Mr. PALMER. I read the whole of what Colonel Miller said, and I am bound to say that his explanation is not at all satisfactory. He said the reason why they did not buy the ground up toward the falls was because the filtered water running through a pipe might be deteriorated.

Mr. BURKETT. That the filtered water running through a ditch might be deteriorated, and that if we proposed to run it a long distance it would have to be run in an open ditch.

Mr. PALMER. With your filter up 30 miles you would not have to run an open ditch. Moreover, it is far less than 30 miles to the point on the river where the water is taken out.

Mr. BURKETT. It is not 30 miles. He said if he had to pump his filtered water up there he would have to pump the water to get the water into the filter, because filtered water requires to have a head and it would cost more to transport all the supplies, and so on, and all these things were taken into consideration.

Mr. PALMER. Pumping filtered water is no more expensive than pumping the raw water and filtering it after it has been pumped into the filter.

Mr. BURKETT. This thing has been gone over before either the gentleman or I became a member of Congress. It has been settled. Whether it is right or wrong, nobody inquired of the balance that were here five or six years ago.

Mr. PALMER. It seems to me that this filtration plant and buying land for it is under nobody's supervision or control, although I suppose it is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and Colonel Miller no doubt is a very intelligent officer detailed by the Secretary to do this work. Now, it seems from the testimony that Colonel Miller has very magnificent ideas—as, for example, he asked $3,000 to build a tool house at the Great Falls.

Mr. BURKETT. We did not give it to him.

Mr. PALMER. He did not get it; no. Colonel Miller wanted $3,000 for a house to cover up a scraper, a plow, and a horse; and he wanted $8,000 for making a survey for a new conduit pipe. You did not give it to him. But I only mentioned it to show the magnificent ideas of Colonel Miller.

I suggest to the committee that they inquire into it and see if there can not be some plan devised by which a filtration plant costing two or three million dollars to the Government can not be built for about what it would cost a private company if engaged in business. These filtration beds are to cost seventy-five or eighty thousand dollars each, and it will take thirty of them to filter this great amount of water—75,000,000 gallons needed, according to Colonel Miller's estimate, to supply Washington. It will run up into enormous figures. I suggest that the next time the committee gets Colonel Miller before them they find out what he is doing, who is making the contract, and who is making the money out of this work, as well as why $600,000 was paid for land at $18,000 per acre.

Mr. BURKETT. But he has kept within the estimate all the while.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; but who made the estimate?

Mr. BURKETT. And he has kept within the appropriation.

Mr. PALMER. Colonel Miller made the estimate and made the plans. I attribute nothing wrong to him, but am of the opinion that there should be some other plan adopted to carry on work of such magnitude.

Mr. BURKETT. They were made several years ago.

Mr. PALMER. It makes no difference whether they were made several years ago or several minutes ago. The question is whether the work is costing too much.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the matter on pages 64 and 65—namely, the notes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that that has already been done by direction of the Chair.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House as amended with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 16842, making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross to the House.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AN ACT RELATING TO PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report to be printed under the rule.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill S. 2296, entitled "An act to amend an act approved March 2, 1895, relating to the public printing," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
VINCENT BOREING,
F. C. TATE,
Managers on the part of the House.

T. C. PLATT,
S. B. ELKINS,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The effect of the accompanying report is to allow to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate 20 extra copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the use of the Senate.

JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
VINCENT BOREING,
F. C. TATE,
Managers on the part of the House.

PHILLIPINE COINAGE BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 393, have had the same under consideration and report the same herewith with an amendment inserting in line 5, after the words "and after," the words "not more than," with the recommendation that as amended the resolution be agreed to.

"Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this report, it shall be in order to consider H. R. 15520, entitled 'A bill to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, after five hours' general debate, to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill, it shall be in order to consider it under the five-minute rule, and the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the said bill shall remain privileged until the said bill shall have been reported from the said Committee of the Whole."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is to call up for consideration the Philippine coinage bill. The rule simply provides that it shall be in order, and limits the general debate to five hours—a length of time which the Committee on Rules was led to understand was agreed upon by the representatives of the two sides. Except in these particulars, the rule makes no change in the conduct of the bill. I understand there is no objection to it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. What effect will the adoption of the rule have upon the special order for to-morrow, the Alaskan Delegate bill?

Mr. DALZELL. That is a question the Chair will have to determine. I do not feel called upon to take any responsibility upon that matter.

Mr. LLOYD. I would like to inquire of the Chair what will be the effect.

The SPEAKER. The general rule governing such matters is that the order first made shall be the order that will govern the action of the House. The order first made was the one to consider the Alaskan Delegate bill, and the Chair is of opinion that the only method would be by raising the question of consideration. The Chair was unwilling to let the House lose an hour or two this afternoon. We may possibly reach an understanding between this and to-morrow.

Mr. LLOYD. It seems to me there ought to be some understanding in regard to the consideration of these two bills, so that there may be no conflict.

The SPEAKER. There can be no understanding unless the friends of the two measures can reach some agreement. The bill which has been fixed for consideration under the Cushman order, as it is called, will be entitled to consideration to-morrow, unless the question of consideration should be raised and the House should decide against consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this rule is acceptable to both sides of the House. It simply makes this particular bill privileged; and there is no opposition, as I understand, on the part of members of the minority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I should like exceedingly that in beginning the consideration of an important question like that presented in the pending rule it should be entered upon without the possibility of conflict with any other bill. If an understanding is to be reached, I think we ought to reach it now before the consideration of the bill comes up.

The SPEAKER. The House can not stand still, without proceeding with the business before it, when it has so much to do. The only question now before the House is on the adoption of the proposed rule.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not believe there will be any difficulty in making an arrangement so that both bills will be considered. I presume that the advocates of the Alaska bill will not care whether that bill be considered one or two hours earlier or later. What they want is consideration, and that can be secured.

Mr. LLOYD. I think I can say for the Committee on the Territories that their only desire is that this bill shall not lose its privileged position. So far as I am concerned—the chairman of the committee is not present just now—I am perfectly willing that the consideration of the bill named in the pending resolution should be proceeded with, but I do not wish the other bill to be displaced.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman would be satisfied, then, that we should go ahead with this bill, and that the other bill should follow?

Mr. LLOYD. If our bill is not thereby displaced.

The SPEAKER. The House has already indicated its willingness to have the Alaska bill considered.

Mr. LLOYD. In order to settle the question, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the consideration of the bill named in the resolution the bill providing for a Delegate from Alaska shall be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of the bill provided for in the pending resolution the order in regard to the Alaska bill shall become operative. Is there objection to this request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is now on the amendment of the Committee on Rules to the proposed resolution.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask unanimous consent to made a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to make a personal explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In an editorial in this morning's Post I am credited with the authorship of a quixotic scheme, namely, with the intention of calling the Germans of this country together "to protest"—I follow the language of the editorial—"against the irresponsible utterances of ill feeling toward Germany."

The editorial quotes a Philadelphia paper, and is based, I take it, upon a report emanating from a press agency here, which report, however, I have not seen, and I am, consequently, unable to judge whether and to what extent I have been misrepresented. The mere statement that I myself should have proposed to call such a meeting is a misrepresentation.

The fact is that I have received a number of letters from prominent Americans of German birth and extraction, in which a conference is suggested on Washington's birthday for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that a continuance of the old-time friendship between the United States and the German Empire is near and dear to the heart of every German, ethnologically speaking, in the country, and for the further purpose of protesting against that jingoism which aims at undermining it. While this is a good American purpose—if it is not, it ought to be—I did not encourage the project, and the suggestion that I should act as chairman of such a conference I rejected without a moment's reflection.

The meeting, possibly, will never be held, but if it should take place I shall attend it and tell my friends that the criterion in such matters is not the sporadic press comment but the attitude of the Government itself, and that the attitude of the present Administration during the Venezuela affair, for instance, and on all other occasions, was dignified, conservative, and in pleasing contrast with the jingoism displayed in many public prints.

What my correspondents complain of, and what really prompted them to make the above suggestion, was what I believe to be a syndicate letter, of several columns, published in a number of daily papers, containing a description of an imaginary naval battle between the United States and Germany. That article seemed designed to prepare the public mind for the eventuality of such a war, and one of my constituents wrathfully suggests that "if perfidious Albion had paid for that article, they could not have made a more hellish investment, but the man who wrote it should be tarred and feathered."

In this connection I want to go on record as saying—and I say it with all the earnestness that is within me—that to talk about a war between the United States and Germany is, in my judgment, nothing more nor less than a crime, and in protesting against such talk my correspondents would be backed, as I firmly believe, by enlightened American sentiment. In fact, there ought to be a law to punish those who try to stir up mischief between nations and who violate the sacred injunction of peace, the same as there is a law against disloyalty in war, the former kind of disloyalty being every bit as dangerous as the other, if not more so.

"A friend in time of need is a friend indeed," and the old fatherland was such a friend to us at a very critical period of American history.

Frederick the Great was the true friend of the colonies in the war for independence. He was one of the first to recognize the independence of the colonies, and went so far as to forbid the crossing of his territory by the Hessians, those unfortunate subjects of small greedy rulers who were sold to England to fight the colonies, but the majority of whom, I am happy to say, espoused the cause of liberty and independence as soon as they understood what the war was for.

In the civil war Bismarck was the only friend we had in Europe. From the very first he sided with the defenders of the Union, and at the very time when Gladstone declared in the British Parliament that the South would surely be victorious Bismarck authorized the purchase of Federal bonds by the financiers of Berlin and Frankfort. This was after we had knocked in vain at the doors of the English as well as the French Governments. There is nothing of this in American schoolbooks; but, nevertheless, these are historical facts which neither this nor any future generation should forget.

In conclusion, I desire to thank the Washington Post for doing me the justice of vouching for my Americanism. My sentiments in that respect, I am happy to state, are those of the vast majority of American Germans. While they may have been born under another flag, to-day they are nothing unless one and all, heart and soul, Americans, and they have no flag besides "Old Glory."

On some public questions they may entertain opinions differing from those of others, and they may vote nearly as a unit on them. They are opposed to prohibition, because prohibition is impossible and because they believe it to be a humbug, but to think so is their privilege as American citizens. They are against a too radical restriction of immigration, because in fairness they do not want to deny to others the privilege which they themselves enjoyed. They are for sound money, not because they brought their theories from the old country, as some of our friends on the other side erroneously suppose——

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I fail to see anything privileged in a discussion of the financial question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was given unanimous consent by the House to make a personal explanation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). But because of their innate and intelligent conservatism.

They are, one and all, for peace, for the maintenance of amicable relations, a continuance of the traditional friendship between the United States and Germany, and even in this, it seems to me, they occupy good American ground.

But let me say it once for all, peace or war, they are Americans, and their fortunes are linked, like those of every other citizen, to the fortunes of the American Republic, inseparably and forever.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15345. An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 622. An act granting a pension to Dicey Woodall.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1902. An act for the relief of Flora A. Darling.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14478. An act granting an increase of pension to Luman Fuller;

H. R. 11594. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Morrow;

H. R. 14416. An act granting an increase of pension to Alber H. Philips;

H. R. 14957. An act granting an increase of pension to Mathias Custers;

H. R. 15852. An act granting an increase of pension to Cyrus G. Norton;

H. R. 6326. An act for the relief of Hiram C. Walker;

H. R. 14477. An act granting a pension to John W. Bruff;

H. R. 15206. An act to establish Portal. N. Dak., a subport of entry and extend thereto the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880; and

H. R. 16642. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIX, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6779. An act to quiet certain land titles in the State of Mississippi—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6719. An act to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the eastern division of the eastern district of Arkansas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16734) to provide for an American register for the steamer Beaumont, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move that the House resolve itself into Committtee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 15520, known as the Philippine coinage bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that, but in connection with that request I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 16657) to extend the coinage system of the United States in the Philippine Islands may be also printed in the RECORD for the information of the House. That is the bill which I shall offer on the part of the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs as a substitute for the bill now under consideration, at the proper time, and I make this request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 16657 be also printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 15520, as presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair will submit both requests together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bills are as follows:

COMMITTEE BILL.

Be it enacted, etc., That the gold dollar of the United States, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, as defined by section 3511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be the standard unit of value in the Philippine Islands; and the lawful money of the United States shall be legal tender in the Philippines for all debts, public and private: Provided, That for amounts under 100 pesos the silver currency of said islands authorized by this act shall, when demanded, be paid.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the coinage authorized for use in the Philippine Islands by the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," the government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to coin, for use in said islands, a coin of the denomination of 1 peso, and one of the weight of 416 grains, and the standard of said silver coins shall be such that of 1,000 parts, by weight, 900 shall be of pure metal and 100 of alloy, and the alloy shall be of copper.

SEC. 3. That the Philippine peso authorized by this act and the silver coins issued under authority of the aforesaid act of July 1, 1902, shall be received for all dues to the Government of the Philippine Islands, unless otherwise specifically provided by law, at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the coinage authorized by this act shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," except as herein otherwise provided; and the government of the Philippine Islands may adopt such measures as it may deem proper, not inconsistent with said act of July 1, 1902, to maintain the value of the Philippine peso at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the lawful money of the United States; and in order to maintain such parity between said Philippine pesos and the lawful money of the United States may issue temporary certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at a reasonable rate, payable at periods of three months or more, but not later than one year from the date of issue, which shall be in the denominations of $50 or 100 pesos, or some multiple of such sum, and shall be redeemable in gold coin of the United States, or in lawful money of said islands, according to the terms of issue prescribed by the government of said islands; but the amount of such certificates outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $5,000,000.

SEC. 5. That the Mexican silver peso now in use in the Philippine Islands, and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in said islands, shall be receivable for public dues at a rate to be fixed from time to time by the proclamation of the civil governor of said islands until such date, not earlier than the 31st day of December, 1903, as may be fixed by public proclamation of said civil governor, when such coins shall cease to be so receivable: Provided, That the public offices of the government of said islands may at any time refuse to receive such coins which appear to be counterfeit or defective.

SEC. 6. That the treasurer of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to receive deposits of the standard silver coins of 1 peso, authorized by this act to be coined, at the treasury of the government of said islands or any of its branches in sums of not less than 20 pesos, and to issue silver certificates therefor in denominations of not less than 5 pesos, and coin so deposited shall be retained in the treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand and used for no other purposes. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and for all public dues in the Philippine Islands, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any banking association in said islands may be counted as a part of its lawful cash reserve.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Director of the Mint of the United States are hereby authorized and directed, when requested by the government of the Philippine Islands, to make and prepare any drawings, designs, and plates, and execute any coinage, engraving, or printing of notes and certificates authorized by this act, and to make a proper charge for the same, covering as nearly as may be the actual cost, which shall be defrayed from the revenues of said islands.

SEC. 8. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and all provisions of law in force in the Philippine Islands making any form of money legal tender after December 31, 1903, except as provided in this act, are hereby repealed.

PROPOSED MINORITY SUBSTITUTE.

Be it enacted, etc., That the lawful money of the United States shall be legal tender in the Philippine Islands for all debts, public and private, and the coinage laws of the United States are hereby declared to be in full force and effect in the said islands.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of retiring the silver coinage of the Philippine Island, and substituting therefor the coins of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to redeem, on presentation in the Philippine Islands, all the Mexican silver pesos now in use in the Philippine Islands, the silver pesos and subsidiary silver coins issued under the authority of the Spanish Government, not including any Mexican silver pesos that may be imported into the Philippine Islands after the 15th day of March, 1903, at their bullion value, the same to be declared from time to time by the government of the Philippine Islands, and the silver and minor coins authorized by the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," shall be redeemed at the rate of two pesos for $1 of the lawful money of the United States; and from and after six months from the date when this act shall take effect no coins shall be a legal tender, in the payments of debts thereafter contracted, for any amount, in the Philippine Islands, except the coins of the United States; and whatever sum may be required to carry out the provisions hereof and to pay all expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish such regulations and employ such agencies as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes hereof: Provided, That all debts, except those otherwise provided for in the contract, owing on the date when this act shall take effect or contracted within six months thereafter shall be payable in the silver coins now in circulation in the Philippine Islands, or in the lawful money of the United States at the rate of exchange prescribed at the time by the Philippine Commission.

SEC. 3. That the silver coins issued under the authority of the act of July 1, 1902, shall be received for all dues to the government of the Philippine Islands at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the lawful money of the United States and upon such receipt shall not be reissued until recoined into denominations of dollars, halves, quarters, and dimes, of the weight, fineness, and value now fixed for said coins by the coinage laws of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the Mexican silver pesos now in use in the Philippine Islands and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in said islands shall be receivable for public dues and in the discharge of all debts, public and private, at their bullion value, to be declared from time to time by the government of the Philippine Islands, until the 1st day of January, 1904, when such coins shall cease to be so receivable for public dues; but such coins shall continue to be so receivable at such rate for the payment of private debts contracted in such money before six months from and after the date this act goes into force and effect, and all of said coins coming into the treasury shall not be reissued as such, but shall be recoined into silver coins of the denominations, weight, fineness, and value now authorized by the coinage laws of the United States.

SEC. 5. That the mint authorized under the act of July 1, 1902, to be established at Manila shall coin American gold and silver coins under the supervision, regulation, and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the said mint shall be taken over by the United States Government upon terms agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Philippine Commission.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act and all regulations, rules, and enactments of the Philippine Commission which may now be in force in the Philippine Islands and inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not differ in principle from the coinage provisions of the Philippine civil government bill which passed the House last June. It proposes that there shall be coined in the Philippines a silver coin to be called a peso and that it shall be received at the ratio of two to one for the United States gold dollar, which gold dollar is to be made the standard of value in the archipelago. There has been in some quarters an entire misapprehension as to the character of the bill. It has been called revolutionary, radical, unusual.

Other adjectives, I may say epithets, have been applied to it of a more or less critical character. The bill is not revolutionary. It is conservative. It does not call for anything in the way of untried experiment. It simply proposes to follow out the policy which England adopted with success in India when she made stable the ratio of the silver rupee with the gold sovereign at 15 to 1; that is, 15 rupees to 1 sovereign, and the rupee to be taken arbitrarily at 16d. It is the same principle which is embodied in the financial legislation of the Netherlands in Java.

The first suggestion for this legislation for the Philippines was in the report of the Taft Philippine Commission in 1900, their first report. Governor Taft, in testifying before the Committee on Insular Affairs, said that—

What the Commission were anxious to bring about, if possible, was a suspension of the fluctuations of the value of the silver dollar, from which bankers were the only persons who seemed to make any profit.

On the other hand—

I read from his testimony—

we were exceedingly anxious not to disturb the coinage as it now exists in the islands among the Filipinos.

I mean this, that we are exceedingly anxious not to disturb the values of oriental peoples; and the Filipinos, who do not differ from other oriental peoples in that respect, have a great regard for traditions and names. Therefore we thought if we could devise a system by which the standard could be as little subject to fluctuation as possible—that is, it should be a gold standard and at the same time have a silver coinage so near to the present silver coinage as to not make any difference by reason of names in the minds of the people—that that would be the best coinage to adopt.

The committee will observe that that is a very conservative suggestion, not to change the names and appearance and size of the coins now in use among the people generally throughout the archipelago, and he follows it up with this statement:

I am very certain that to attempt to adopt as a whole the coinage of the United States in those islands would be productive of nothing but disaster.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the bill which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], a few minutes ago, announced that he should offer to-morrow as a substitute for the pending measure, I desire again to call the attention of gentlemen, and especially of gentlemen upon the opposite side of the House, to the concluding sentence which I have just read:

I am very certain that to attempt to adopt as a whole the coinage of the United States in those islands would be productive of nothing but disaster.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire when that statement was made?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That statement was made last spring, but I have a recent letter from Governor Taft, and more than one, in which he reiterates that sentiment. Here is what he said in a letter to me which I received the latter part of October:

Since I have found the difficulties that present themselves in all business and industrial relations in these islands due to the fluctuations in silver, I am convinced that the enactment into law of the House plan for a gold standard in these islands is second in importance only to the provision for a legislative assembly.

He has written a letter since that time in which he corroborates that, and in even stronger language.

The War Department, soon after this report of the Philippine Commission in 1900, sent to the islands Mr. Charles A. Conant, who, as the committee well knows, is one of the world's foremost gold-standard advocates, a man who has written books on the subject of coinage and of banking, a recognized authority in finance the world around, now connected with the Morton Trust Company of the city of New York.

He went to the archipelago, and, as I said last summer, I inferred from conversations which I had with him that he went there predisposed to favor the enactment for the Philippines of a coinage law similar to that of the United States of America. He came back and reported to the War Department, in an exceptionally able document, his entire accordance with the suggestions of the Philippine Commission for the coinage of a Philippine peso, the ratio of which was to be made stable at 2 to 1 with the gold dollar of the United States.

Not only do the Philippine Commission and Mr. Conant favor the plan which is embodied in the pending bill, but Lyman J. Gage, when Secretary of the Treasury, cordially approved it. In Appendix F to the report of the Secretary of War in 1900 is a note by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Lyman J. Gage, in which he says, after speaking of the bad financial system in the islands:

The evident cure is to establish their domestic money in a fixed relation to the world's money, or what might better be called the selling-house standard, London or New York. Can this be done? Probabably it can. How? By following, in a modified way, what is now in vogue in the United States—that is to say, let the island government, or our own Government, as may be thought the wiser, buy silver bullion and coin 412½ grains, nine-tenths fine, into pesos or Filipino dollars. Pay them out for all goods bought or service rendered, at the ratio of 2 silver pesos to $1 of gold, and redeem them from the holder at the same ratio, namely, $1 in gold for 2 silver pesos (or Filipino dollars). At the present price of silver bullion there would be a nominal profit of about 5 per cent to the Government in thus buying bullion and coining money.

The Secretary then declares that there are two possible objections to this plan. After analyzing these, he says:

These two objections, however, are more nominal than real, because they would tend to be self-corrective. * * * It seems imperatively necessary to open the way to an increased supply of the circulating medium there. No method seems to be so direct and immediate as to reopen the mint at Manila for the coinage of silver under the conditions and limitations above set forth, or, as an alternative, to the unlimited coinage of pesos, or dollars, of about the weight and fineness of the Mexicans, for the public. * * * One or the other of the courses pointed out ought to be adopted. In my opinion, the method first above described is greatly to be preferred.

In other words Secretary Gage "greatly prefers" the plan proposed in the bill now under consideration.

We have increased the number of grains in the peso from 412½, which was the number proposed in the House bill of last Spring, to 416, because of the subsequent decline in the value of silver bullion, it having gone down approximately 30 per cent. The idea all the time of course has been to have this practically a token coin. Its limitation in coinage and the fact that it is to be received for public dues and for private debts will hold it at par, as, under similar conditions, have the silver dollar in this country, the silver thaler in the Netherlands, and the rupee in India.

We had before the Committee on Insular Affairs Henry W. Peabody, a business man of wide repute, the head of a great commercial house in Boston which has establishments in Boston, New York, London, Manila, Yucatan, South Africa, and all around the world. He strongly indorsed the plan proposed by the pending bill, except that he thought it would be better, as a matter of practical detail, to have the standard of value a gold peso of half the value of our gold dollar. That is, he would cut the gold dollar in two, call one of these halves a Philippine gold peso, and then have the ratio between it and the Philippine silver peso 1 to 1.

This question was asked him:

Your proposed amendment would amount to nothing more than a matter of practical detail; it would not change essentially the principle of the pending bill?

Mr. PEABODY. The principle of the bill and most of the provisions of the bill would be unchanged.

This man, of wide business experience, and perfectly familiar with business conditions in the Philippine Islands, was asked whether the Philippine government could maintain the parity of the coins as provided by the bill. This is the question propounded to him:

Do you believe that the resources of the government are such that it can without much difficulty maintain the gold standard?

To which he replied:

There would be no difficulty in doing so, because there would be something like 35 per cent cost of silver that is gold redemption.

You mean seigniorage?

Mr. PEABODY. Yes; that would suffice to make what most people would call an ample redemption fund.

Aside from this distinguished authority, we have the report of Professor Jenks, who was sent as an expert to the Orient to study and report on financial conditions there. He visited the Orient, made an exhaustive study of the situation in the Philippines, the Straits Settlements, in Java and India, and in a report to the Secretary of War last fall indorsed the coinage plan proposed in this bill as the one best adapted to the Philippine Islands. After enumerating the different reasons which have led him to his conclusions, he says:

For all these reasons, therefore, it seems on the whole best that the Filipinos be given a fixed rate of exchange for their currency as compared with the gold standard of the United States.

Then he adds a statement which is of great significance, gentlemen of the committee—especially so because of the announcement made here a short time since by the gentleman from Virginia that he would offer as a substitute a bill providing for the United States coinage system complete in the islands.

It is, however, desirable, whenever any country is to establish a new system of currency, that the value of the coins most common in circulation be changed as little as possible.

Now let us stop right there. How much does the pending bill propose to change the value of the Philippine silver coins now in use? How much would the substitute bill of the gentleman from Virginia change the value of these coins? We propose a silver peso of the size now in use, which shall be equivalent to 50 cents in gold. To-day its bullion value is about 37 cents—a margin of 13 to 14 cents. The gentleman from Virginia would have a silver dollar smaller in size than the coin now in use, but which shall be equivalent to 100 cents in gold, although its bullion value would be 36 or 37 cents—a margin of 63 to 64 cents.

Professor Jenks says that it would be unwise abruptly to make a change like that in the coinage of any people and especially of an oriental people.

The wages of labor and prices already fixed are to a considerable extent matters of custom. If a monetary unit is introduced of considerably more value than the one abandoned, it will be necessary to make a nominal reduction of wages and prices. The consequence is that laborers and less well-informed sellers of produce will feel that their income is being arbitrarily lessened and great dissatisfaction is almost certain to be the result. One can easily see how a sudden action of that kind on the part of a government might produce even a revolution among people not well informed on monetary matters.

Governor Taft testified that, in his opinion, the arbitrary introduction of the American coinage system into the archipelago would result in nothing but disaster. And Professor Jenks in effect strongly indorses this view. He says:

One can easily see how a sudden action of that kind (the introduction of a monetary unit of high value) on the part of the government might produce even a revolution among people not well informed on monetary matters.

He then makes his recommendations:

It seems, therefore, the wisest plan for the United States, if it intends to act in the interest of the native Filipinos and not exclusively for the interest of a comparatively few exporters and bankers, to adopt the gold standard and adopt the system of coinage recommended, which will produce as little disturbance as any that has been proposed. It is extremely unfortunate that the system could not have been adopted before the last fall in silver, as in that case there would have been no disturbance that would have been noticed.

The professor said in his report, as we all know, that the government of India made stable the ratio between the silver rupee and the gold sovereign at 15 to 1, and that it has maintained the ratio without trouble since. He says that in 1900 the demand for the rupees in India became stronger than ever before, so that the government, after purchasing all the silver it could, telegraphed to London to buy and send out more silver. The prophecy was made, when India proposed to go on a gold standard that fixed a ratio between the rupee and the sovereign, that there would be a dearth of gold and that the treasury would be drained of that metal. But the professor says that on the contrary the demand was for more silver instead of for more gold.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman states in the report that silver depreciated 30 per cent last year. Now, the American dollar and the India rupee depreciated to a larger extent. How can the gentleman by legislative fiat, or by legislative command, make a certain standard? Will he alter it or stop the fluctuation?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman forgets an acknowledged law of monetary science, that a limited coinage of a token coin, which coin is received for public dues and for private debts, will hold it at par. It is the unlimited coinage of a token coin which leads to the fluctuation. For example, our silver dollar here has never been redeemable, at least up to 1900, nor has it ever been at a discount. Why? Because subsequent to 1873 we have not had free coinage, and the supply has not gone beyond the demand. The limited coinage of the silver dollar, the fact that it is received for debts, public and private, and that it is legal tender have held it at par.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman knows that that was largely due to the intelligence of the American people. Will the same principle prevail among the Filipinos? Will they take the coin at a double ratio? It has worked in the United States, but it does not work in India with the rupee, and it will not work in the Philippines.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman mean by saying that it does not work in India, when every witness that has been before our committee, when questioned on the subject, says that it does work? Has the gentleman been in India—has he any foundation for his assertion?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I think it has caused trouble at different times.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There was at the outset a slight difficulty, but it passed away. It was but temporary. Since that time there has been no difficulty whatever. The treasury has been filled with gold and the rupee has circulated at the ratio mentioned.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think it entirely fair to quote the example of India? India found herself in the position of a silver-standard country and had to make the best of conditions. It stopped the coinage and is now trying by exchangeability to maintain the parity of the two methods. But the silver circulation of India to-day is $1.58 per capita and of the United States $8.50, and this bill on the House side authorizes an unlimited coinage and on the Senate side a per capita coinage of over $12. There is the difference between your illustration and the facts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Connecticut is entirely mistaken if he supposes there is to be unlimited coinage.

Mr. HILL. Is there any limit in the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is left entirely with the government there, just as it is in India.

Mr. HILL. Is not that unlimited coinage?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman suppose that the government out there is going to enter upon unlimited coinage?

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman suppose that any government that ever issued fiat paper money intended to go beyond the possibility of redemption? And yet there has never been a case in the history of the world where a country entering upon that policy did not exceed the limit and go beyond the possibility of redemption.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is making statements which strike me as unfounded in fact. At least I have been unable to find a solitary authority—and I have read everything obtainable on the subject—which substantiates what the gentleman has said. Here I have the statement of Professor Jenks, the last expert who went there and studied this question, in which he says:

> While there is no strong demand for gold for circulation in India, the government seems to have succeeded in establishing a gold basis for the currency, and in maintaining without serious difficulty a fixed rate of exchange

He says further:

> According to the opinion of both business men and bankers in India, the fixing of a rate of exchange has lessened the opportunity of the bankers for gains from their exchange business.

Later in his report he says, speaking of Netherlands-India:

> Although the standard is a gold standard, and although the exchange has been kept substantially fixed throughout the entire period of the relative fall in the price of silver, gold is practically not at all in circulation in Netherlands-India.

That seems to be the case also in India. In Java the bank holds a large reserve of gold, but it is not paid out on demand. By reason of the limitation in coinage, and of the fact that the coin is received for public dues and private debts and that it is a token coin, it has been kept at par.

The silver dollar of the United States, of which there are hundreds of millions, has always floated at par. The bullion in it has run down so as to be worth less than 40 cents, yet it passes everywhere current as a dollar. It is received for public dues and private debts. The limitation in the coinage, the uses to which it can be put, and the demand for it keep the token coin at par. That is the rule of finance which is not denied.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the gentleman this question: If he were starting out with a new financial system in the United States, would he adopt a system which included six hundred millions of full legal-tender silver dollars as an initiatory step?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Other things being equal I would not presume that I knew more about what ought to be done for the Philippine Islands than does the Taft Commission; than does Professor Jenks, who went upon the ground and studied the subject; than does Charles A. Conant, one of the foremost gold advocates of the world. I would not think that I, so far away, was as competent as those men to judge of what ought to be done in the Philippines, especially where their opinion is corroborated by so distinguished a financier as Lyman J. Gage, and by the experience of the government of India, which has adopted this system; and by the Netherlands, which has established it in Java.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think that is an answer to my question, whether, if he were initiating a new system of finance in the United States he would start out with six hundred millions of legal tender silver dollars?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You ask me to answer a question which is not germane to the issue now in hand; which, in my judgment, has no relevancy whatever.

Mr. HILL. Is it not germane in this respect: You are proposing to provide a new system of finance for an archipelago 7,000 miles away, not nearly so strong financially as the United States, and are proposing to give it a system which you would not establish in the United States if you could.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would establish it in the United States if this country were situated similarly to the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. HILL. Suppose there were precisely as good authorities on the other side?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not been able to find them.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps you will before you get through with this debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I alluded by way of illustration to the history of the silver dollar in the United States, saying that it has been kept at par simply because the coinage has been limited and the dollar can be used for the purposes I have mentioned. Now, let me say that the United States Treasury Department has issued a pamphlet (circular No. 113) giving "information concerning United States bonds, paper currency, coin," etc., in which I find this statement on page 18:

> Gold coins and standard silver dollars, being standard coins of the United States, are not redeemable.

Here we have the Treasury of the United States, in the year 1900, notifying the world that the silver dollars of the United States are not redeemable. Yet, although the bullion in them was worth but from 40 to 50 cents, they passed current for 100 cents. Why? Because of the indisputable law of finance that a limited coinage of a token coin, if you give that coin the uses I have mentioned, will float at par. Such is the history of finance everywhere. Here we have the Treasury of the United States notifying the world, four years after the great campaign of 1896, that silver dollars were not redeemable; that if you brought them to the Treasury the Department reserved the option of giving you gold or not.

Mr. HILL. I should dislike very much indeed to have the statement go out to the country, and especially to the world, that the United States silver dollar is not redeemable. The Treasury Department since the passage of the gold-standard act of March 14, 1900, has held and holds to-day that it is in duty bound to exchange gold for silver or silver for gold, and is doing it every day and has been doing it since 1900, notwithstanding there is no specific law to that effect.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Permit me to ask the gentleman from Connecticut this question: Prior to the law of 1900, which the gentleman has just mentioned, were the silver dollars at a discount?

Mr. HILL. In my judgment, prior to the law of 1900——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Were they at a discount?

Mr. HILL. The Treasury Department was in duty bound under the parity clause of the Sherman Act to exchange silver dollars for gold; and it was the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury in 1893, that if called upon to redeem the paper of the United States he would redeem it, not in gold, but in silver, that helped to bring on the panic.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Nevertheless in 1900 the Treasury Department of the United States in an official document, which I hold in my hand, says, "The silver dollars of the United States are not redeemable;" and prior to 1900 there were hundreds of millions of those dollars in circulation in the United States, all at par. What kept them at par? The undeniable rule of finance which I have mentioned and apparently can not repeat too often, that a token silver coin of limited coinage, an unlimited tender for private debts and receivable for public dues, keeps at par with gold. It is the rule in India; it is the rule in the United States; it is the rule in the Netherlands.

I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15520, the Philippine coinage bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Mr. CULLOM. I present a telegram which I have just received from sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., in opposition to the placing of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the control of and within the department to be designated the department of commerce and labor. I ask that the telegram may be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

[Telegram.]

CHICAGO, Ill., January 20, 1903.

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted this day by the directors of the Chicago Board of Trade:

Whereas it is proposed to place the Interstate Commerce Commission under the control and within a department to be designated the "department of commerce and labor;" and

Whereas by the act of 1887 to regulate commerce it is specifically provided that the said Commission be nonpartisan; and

Whereas to include the said Commission within the proposed new department would place a purely executive duty upon a commission principally engaged in exercising semijudicial authority; and

Whereas the object of the act to regulate commerce is not so much to promote commerce as it is to regulate and control its chief instrumentality, viz, transportation; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission was originally under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department and was removed from the Department by reason of the recommendations of at least two of its Secretaries:

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago respectfully and earnestly protest against merging the Interstate Commerce Commission within the proposed department of commerce and labor.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be telegraphed to President Roosevelt and Senators NELSON, ELKINS, CULLOM, and MASON, and to Representatives HEPBURN and MANN.

R. G. CHANDLER, President.

DIGEST OF COURT OF CLAIMS DECISIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 126) to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, together with the rules of practice of and the statutes relating to that court, to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 12 on page 1, before the word "copies," to fill the blank with "one thousand;" and in line 3 on page 2 to fill the blank before "dollars" with "two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, including the statutes relating to, and the rules of practice of, that court, prepared by Chapman W. Maupin; that there be printed 500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the Attorney-General, 250 copies for the use of the War Department, 250 copies for the use of the Navy Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for public sale, the whole edition to be bound in sheep; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, the preparation and editing of said digest by him to be paid for, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price not to exceed the sum of $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same, and shall not be payable until said work shall have been printed; nor shall any money be paid out on account of said work until the Court of Claims, or some member thereof, shall certify that the work, as completed, is satisfactory to that court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 7053) to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 7055) granting a pension to Vina Lindenbower; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Mrs. Vina Lindenbower praying for a pension for nursing and caring for Union soldiers, together with the affidavits of Dr. S. H. Melchoir and S. D. Galbraith. I move that the bill and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 7056) to provide for the disposition of church lands in Porto Rico, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 7057) granting an increase of pension to John Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7058) granting a pension to Abbie M. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7059) granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Casler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7060) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Jackman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 7061) granting an increase of pension to Napoleon J. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 7062) amending the statutes relating to patents, relieving medical and dental practitioners from unjust burdens imposed by patentees holding patents covering methods and devices for treating human diseases, ailments, and disabilities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 7063) permitting the building of a dam across the St. Croix River at or near the village of St. Croix Falls, Polk County, Wis.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7064) granting a pension to Amanda L. Mardin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 7065) for the relief of the heirs of the late Joseph E. Montgomery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 7066) correcting the military record of Boniface Meyer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7067) granting an increase of pension to James H. Mount; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7068) granting an increase of pension to John Sexton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 7069) for the appointment of an additional judge in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill relates to matters in the Indian Territory. I am not quite sure whether bills of this sort have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a matter relating to internal affairs down there. However, I believe it is immaterial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Arkansas thinks the bill should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and if he is informed as to that reference, the Chair will order it to be referred to that committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the bill go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think under the rule bills of this character go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Most bills relating to the appointment of judges do go to that committee, I know, but in matters relating to the Indian Territory I am not quite sure whether bills for the appointment of practically local judges there have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or not. I have no objection to the bill going to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I would suggest that the bill go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 7070) granting an increase of pension to William G. Cantley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7071) granting an increase of pension to Francis N. Bonnean; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 156) dedicating to the city of Columbus, in the State of Ohio, for uses and purposes of the public streets, part of property conveyed to the United States by Robert Neil by deed dated February 17, 1863, recorded in deed book 76, page 572, and so forth, Franklin County records; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for improving Kansas avenue from Trenton to Utica streets, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment authorizing the sale of tracts of land, not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, in the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Red Lake County, Minn., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 to aid in the reconstruction of the building for the Homeopathic Hospital, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That J. W. Reser have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, in connection with Senate bill No. 2580, first session Fifty-fifth Congress, there having been no adverse report thereon;

Ordered, That Elijah A. Gilbert have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, in connection with Senate bill No. 829, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, there having been no adverse report thereon;

Ordered, That Charles A. Bess have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, in connection with Senate bill No. 2759, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, there having been no adverse report thereon.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, as it originally appeared in the report of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, but with the addition of 50 full-page illustrations, 7,000 copies of the report of the commissioner of education for Porto Rico, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Education of the United States, and 1,500 for the use of the commissioner of education for Porto Rico.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination to be made of the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, between Wenatchee and Kettle Falls, with a view to removing obstructions to navigation, and to submit plans and estimates of cost therefor.

PUGET SOUND AND LAKES WASHINGTON AND UNION CANAL.

Mr. TURNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate the report of the board of engineers appointed to determine the feasibility of constructing a canal, with necessary locks and dams, connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Washington and Union, as provided by the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to morning business?

Mr. QUAY. I rise to inquire whether the morning business is closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet closed. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the desire of the Senate as to this resolution?

Mr. QUAY. As I understand it, the Chair rules that the resolution of the Senator from Missouri comes in under the order of morning business and is a part of the order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a part of the order, and the Chair desires to know what the Senate wishes to do with the resolution. It has been laid over from morning to morning, retaining its place.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will go over another day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the resolution may retain its place on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if he has any objection to a reference of the resolution to the committee?

Mr. VEST. I have not.

Mr. SPOONER. I have a conviction, Mr. President, that it is not in the power of the constitution of the Senate to originate a bill which increases a tariff rate, or reduces a tariff rate, or removes a tariff rate; and for the purpose of securing from the committee a report upon that subject—and it would be as well for that purpose to secure a report upon this resolution as any other measure—with the consent of the Senator from Missouri, I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been laid on the table by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. Why should it go to the Committee on Finance and not to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? If it is a mere question of the privilege of the Senate, the Finance Committee has no jurisdiction over it.

Mr. SPOONER. It relates to the tariff.

Mr. HOAR. I am aware of that; but if it is referred for the purpose of ascertaining what are the privileges of the Senate, as I understand the Senator to state that it is to be referred for that purpose, it should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Finance Committee have at various times made reports upon this subject. There is no objection, certainly, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections also making a report if they should see fit to make it.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to perform that labor, I should be very glad to have him do it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make the suggestion because of a desire to perform any labor. I desire to retain the proper jurisdiction in the different committees of the Senate; that is all. I think the question of the constitutional right of the Senate to originate certain measures is a question which belongs to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if there be any question belonging to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a resolution proposing to instruct the Committee on Finance in regard to a certain matter in relation to tariff duties. Certainly, if the resolution has any reference at all, it should go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators allow the Chair, if possible, to get the resolution back before the Senate? Is there unanimous consent that the unanimous consent given by which the resolution was tabled be reconsidered?

Mr. HOAR. What was the unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for unanimous consent was that the resolution should lie on the table, retaining its place. That was agreed to. Now, is there unanimous consent——

Mr. HOAR. Has not the agreement by unanimous consent exhausted itself by the resolution going over until this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was done this morning—five minutes ago. Is there unanimous consent that that action shall be considered? The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is now before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope a motion will now be made to refer it to some committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. That is the pending motion.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. QUAY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the omnibus statehood bill. I have not the number at hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, there will be no objection upon our side to proceeding immediately with the consideration of the statehood bill. We are quite ready to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. PETTUS. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider a bill relating to Alabama courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama desires to ask consideration for a bill on the Calendar touching courts in Alabama. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURNHAM. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14839) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on the first Monday in September of each year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I object for the present, and I will object, as at present advised, for some time to any request for unanimous consent for the intrusion of any other business into the belly of the discussion of the statehood bill.

I will say to my friend from Alabama, however, who seems interested in the speedy passage of this measure, that later in the day, if possible, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will be willing at the same time to allow a vote to be taken upon the bankruptcy bill, if that can be done without debate. The bill has been read, and I think there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. QUAY. If the time occurs when I can withdraw the objection to the bill of the Senator from Alabama, I will certainly not object to acceding to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects, and the bill called up by the Senator from Alabama will be returned to the Calendar.

Mr. BURNHAM addressed the Senate. After having spoken for nearly three hours, he said:

Mr. President, I believe those who have preceded me have not occupied much more time than I have done, and I should like to suspend for the present, resuming to-morrow.

Mr. QUAY and Mr. CULLOM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire yields the floor.

[Mr. BURNHAM'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. QUAY. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to state that he does not desire to proceed further this evening, but will go on to-morrow. I gave notice yesterday, first, that I would move to proceed to the consideration of the statehood bill at the conclusion of the morning business to-day; and second, that I would ask the Senate to remain in session continuously until it was disposed of.

I do not desire to impose upon my distinguished friend from New Hampshire. If he desires to postpone the delivery of the remainder of his remarks until to-morrow, that course is entirely satisfactory, I have no doubt, to many upon this floor who have been listening with the greatest interest to what he has said. But if he is not going to speak, then I will have to ask an opponent of the statehood bill, or some person in favor of the statehood bill who desires to be heard, to take his place on the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senator will not adhere to that position. It is a novel one, certainly an extraordinary measure, an uncommon device. The other day when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] was delivering his very able argument and at a certain hour desired to quit for the day and conclude on the next day, no objection whatever was raised to that course.

Mr. QUAY. No; the Senator does not understand me. I have no objection to the Senator from New Hampshire yielding the floor for the day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am coming to that. Nor was there a suggestion that anybody should interject into the midst of the remarks of the Senator from Ohio a speech of his own. That in itself would have been a discourtesy to the Senator from Ohio.

I think it must be clear to the judgment of every Senator here that when a Senator is making a closely knit and continuous argument, very carefully prepared, as the Senator from New Hampshire is making, it will not add anything to the understanding of the question being discussed, for some other Senator, for the mere purpose of talking, to interject a speech in the midst of it.

What we are trying to do, Mr. President, is to debate the question before Senators whose minds are open, in order that each one of us may have the most light possible. What we are attempting to do is not merely to waste time. Yet the Senator must see that if what he suggests were done it would be nothing but the wasting of time. It could not afford any good results to any person who desires to be informed upon this question to interject into the midst of the careful argument of a Senator, very thoroughly prepared, some discursive remarks by some one else, merely for the purpose of taking up time.

I therefore trust that the Senator will not insist upon his somewhat anomalous request.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. I will insist upon my request.

Mr. CULLOM. As I have stated once or twice before, I am very anxious that the subject of the treaty with Cuba, which is now in the Senate, should be taken up and acted upon as speedily as is consistent with its proper consideration. We have now but a couple of weeks or less remaining before the end of this month, and at that time, by the terms of the treaty, it expires. I should like very much, if the Senator from Pennsylvania would allow me, to move an executive session.

Mr. QUAY. I can not prevent that.

Mr. CULLOM. I know you can not prevent my making the motion, for I have a right to make it; but I should be glad if the Senator would consent to it without any contest. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] has concluded for the day a long speech, and, being weary, he does not desire to speak further this evening. I do not know whether the speech yet to be delivered is very long, but I think, in ordinary courtesy to the Senator from New Hampshire, he should be allowed to discontinue his remarks for the day and commence them again to-morrow without any interruption; but whether he does or not,

I think the Senator from Pennsylvania having charge of the statehood bill will get along just as well without contesting the question of having an executive session this afternoon as by contesting it.

So far as I am concerned, I have been trying to get along without any controversy between myself and that Senator, as he knows, and I thought, when I told him a while ago that I desired to make this motion, that he certainly would consent to it if the Senator from New Hampshire felt that he ought not to be expected to proceed further to-day. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will now allow me to make the motion without any controversy.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I regret to say that I am not able to assent to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, and that I must adhere to the notice I gave yesterday. As the Senator knows, I am in favor of the treaty, and I have no doubt it will be ratified, but he will obtain but an hour for its consideration by going on this afternoon, and in order to accommodate him this afternoon we shall have to break off the arrangement of the friends of the statehood bill that the Senate be kept in session. So I feel it to be my duty to antagonize the motion, and I ask that it be voted down.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I will make the motion so as to see whether the Senate, under the circumstances, desire to stay here and do nothing, rather than to go into executive session and consider the treaty. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Clark, Wyo.	Heitfeld,	Pettus,
Alger,	Clay,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Culberson,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Bate,	Dietrich,	Lodge,	Simmons,
Berry,	Dubois,	McComas,	Simon,
Beveridge,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	McLaurin, Miss.	Stewart,
Burnham,	Frye,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Burrows,	Gamble,	Mason,	Turner,
Burton,	Gibson,	Millard,	Vest.
Carmack,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Wellington.
Clapp,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Perkins,

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is unavoidably detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

The Chair announced that the motion for an executive session was carried, but he will, of course, regard that as an open question, under the circumstances, and will again put the question on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. QUAY. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. He not being in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that by arrangement the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] who has just voted in the affirmative is paired with my colleague [Mr. BAILEY], who is absent.

Mr. CULLOM. I am reminded by the announcement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that I am paired with his colleague [Mr. BAILEY]. I agreed with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] this morning to stand paired with the Senator from Texas for to-day. I will transfer that pair, by the leave of the Senate, to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and will therefore let my vote in the affirmative stand.

Mr. QUAY. If the Chair will allow me to make an inquiry, I should be glad to know who is the standing pair on the other side of the Chamber with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has no pair.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but I understand that the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if that is correct?

Mr. SPOONER. That transfer was requested of me this morning upon the statement that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] had no pair.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] are on the same side on this question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand the Senator from Oregon and his regular pair are agreed on this question. Then, if it be satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but I will take the liberty of transferring that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and vote "nay." I think that arrangement will also release the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He is detained, I understand, by illness. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi (when Mr. MONEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is detained from the Senate by illness, as I have stated. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when Mr. PENROSE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] upon this question is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], as I am informed.

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. PRITCHARD'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of sickness. My colleague has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. QUAY (when Mr. SCOTT'S name was called). I understand that the Senators from West Virginia are paired with each other on this question. I have been so informed.

Mr. SPOONER. I agreed with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to pair for the day upon all questions relating to the statehood bill with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], who is absent without a pair.

Mr. QUAY. Is the Senator sure of that?

Mr. SPOONER. I am not, but I am so informed.

Mr. QUAY. I am inclined to think he would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know how he would vote. Then, Mr. President, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], but I understand it has been arranged to transfer that pair to the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did I understand the Senator to say an arrangement had been made?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. That was my understanding.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I had not so understood it. Of course, if anybody knows about it, it is all right.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The assistant sergeant-at-arms gave me the information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well, The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], who happens to be absent to-day, has charge of these matters, and I have not heard before of the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], but if the assistant sergeant-at-arms says so, of course I have no objection, because the junior Senator from West Virginia and the senior Senator from West Virginia are on opposite sides on this question.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not know that it is material that the Senator has not heard of it, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. QUAY (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired on this question with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but

I understand he has been paired with another Senator on this question. I therefore feel free to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this question with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I make this announcement as to all votes which may be had during the remainder of the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is absent, but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the pairs may be stated. There seems to have been a good deal of confusion in regard to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pairs will be stated before the vote is announced.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I inquire how the junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. LODGE. Can the pairs not now be stated, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter will read a statement of the pairs.

The Reporter read the pairs which had been announced during the progress of the vote.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not possible to have the list of all the pairs stated? No doubt the Reporter has correctly read the pairs as announced, but I want to hear read the list of all the pairs as they stand. I have known it frequently done on occasions where there was confusion in regard to the pairs. What I want is an actual statement of all the pairs as they now stand.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, there is some confusion in regard to the pairs of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and myself, and I think the record does not show the precise situation. If I may be pardoned, I will state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and myself have a general pair. My pair with the Senator from Oregon was transferred to the Senator from Wisconsin. Afterwards the Senator from Wisconsin transferred that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN]; so that eventually the Senator from Oregon stood paired with the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from Wisconsin and myself were both released from our pairs and voted.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to inquire what was the statement of the record with reference to the pair of my colleague [Mr. BAILEY]? That was omitted just now in the statement which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. CULBERSON. The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] stands paired with another Senator, as announced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] a moment ago, who transferred his pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is paired with both the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], according to the announcement.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber with the expectation of voting; but I understand that the roll has been called and that I have been paired. I desire to know with whom I have been paired.

Mr. QUAY. I did not catch the remark of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey states that he came into the Chamber with the expectation of voting, and finds that he is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which was the pair transferred by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw my vote, Mr. President. That leaves the Senator from New Jersey the right to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his vote.

Mr. DRYDEN. Then, Mr. President, I vote "yea."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With whom has it been announced, if at all, that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] are paired? Have they been announced as being paired? Both would vote "yea" upon this proposition if here.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SPOONER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS], and vote "yea."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. SPOONER. Therefore I have a right to vote; and I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. Now let the pairs be read from the desk.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi (after voting in the negative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I desire to inquire whether he has been announced as paired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no pair has been announced for the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Then I withdraw my vote. [A pause.] I am now informed that the Senator from Washington, if he were present, would vote the same way I do; and so I will let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, can not the pairs now be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order has been called, which is the announcement of the vote.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it was part of the regular order to announce the pairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the list of pairs.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. WARREN with Mr. DANIEL.
Mr. HALE with Mr. FOSTER of Washington.
Mr. PLATT of New York with Mr. PENROSE.
Mr. KEARNS with Mr MITCHELL.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. ELKINS.
Mr. HAWLEY with Mr. TELLER.
Mr. DILLINGHAM with Mr. TILLMAN.
Mr. KEAN with Mr. MONEY.
Mr. KITTREDGE with Mr. PATTERSON.
Mr. DEPEW with Mr. MCENERY.
Mr. PLATT of Connecticut with Mr. BAILEY.
Mr. PRITCHARD with Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] is absent without a pair, so I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER], and vote. I vote "nay," and I understand the Senator from Washington if present would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 37; as follows:

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, before proceeding further, during the morning hour, about the time when this bill was taken up, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] asked unanimous consent for the consideration of three measures on which they pledged themselves there would be no discussion. I objected, but said at the same time that I thought during the day an occasion would arise when that legislation might be disposed of. That time has now arrived, and I am ready to give way to those three Senators for the purpose of calling up their bills, with the understanding that they shall not be discussed. I withdraw my objection, leaving it open to them to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BERRY. Without displacing the regular order.

Mr. QUAY. Without displacing the regular order.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that we may proceed with the consideration of the bill to amend the bankruptcy act. I will state that I have consulted with the gentlemen who so far as I can ascertain are opposed to the bill, and none desire to debate it. It merely corrects an injustice. The bill has been already read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw the objection made in the morning hour, with the understanding that the bill will elicit no discussion. If it provokes discussion, I shall renew the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. HOAR. It has been read.

Mr. QUAY. It has been read.

Mr. HOAR. It was read yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. There are objections to the bill which ought to be considered in the Senate, and for the time being I shall have to object to it, as I want to offer an amendment. I would not object on any occasion when there is time to consider it at all.

Mr. HOAR. May I be allowed to say that I made the statement I did to the Senate on the understanding that nobody desired to discuss the bill? But if the Senator from Alabama, who I understand does not desire to discuss it, wishes to offer an amendment, certainly I do not want to press it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I understand the Senator from Alabama makes no further objection to the present consideration of the bill to amend the bankruptcy act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Alabama withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Chair will now ask if there is objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out section 1 as follows:

That clause 15 of section 1 of an act enlitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"(15) A person shall be deemed insolvent within the provisions of this act whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, or which is exempt from being taken on execution under the laws of the United States or of the State or Territory in which the proceedings in bankruptcy were begun shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts;"

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 6, to strike out "SEC. 2."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 2, line 11, after the word "services" to insert "but not at a greater rate than in this act allowed trustees for similar services;" so as to make the clause read:

(5) Authorize the business of bankrupts to be conducted for limited periods by receivers, the marshals, or trustees, if necessary in the best interests of the estates, and allow such officers additional compensation for such services, but not at a greater rate than in this act allowed trustees for similar services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 2, line 14, to change the number of the section from 3 to 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 2, line 18, after the word "for" to strike out "or been put in charge of a receiver or trustee" and insert "a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property," and in line 22, before the word "Territory" to strike out "or" and insert "of a;" so as to make the clause read:

Or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a State, of a Territory, or of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, to change the number of the section from "4" to "3," and in the same line, before the word "section," to insert "subdivision b of;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That subdivision b of section 4 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out:

SEC. 4. Who may become bankrupts. a Any natural person and any unincorporated company owing debts shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt.

b Any corporation engaged prrincipally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt, on petition of an officer or stockholder of such corporation, duly authorized at a meeting of stockholders held for that purpose by the vote of a majority in amount of the total stock of the corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, to change the lettering of the subdivision in section 3 from "c" to "b."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, to strike out the quotation marks at the end of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, to strike out the letter "d" at the beginning of the subdivision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, to change the number of the section from "5" to "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after the word "credit," to strike out:

Upon a materially false statement in writing made by him to any person for the purpose of obtaining credit, or of being communicated to the trade or to the person from whom he obtained such property on credit.

And insert:

From any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit.

In line 19, after the word "or," to strike out:

(4) Made a fraudulent transfer of any portion of his property to any person.

And insert:

(4) At any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filing of the petition transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.

On page 5, line 1, before the word "been," to strike out "or denied" and insert "in voluntary proceedings;" in line 3, before the word "proceedings," to strike out "his" and insert "the;" and in the same line, before the word "refused" to insert "in bankruptcy;" so as to make the subdivision read:

"b The judge shall hear the application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by parties in interest, at such time as will give parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard, and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filing of the petition transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed, any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5) in voluntary proceedings been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6) in the course of the proceedings in bankruptcy refused to obey any lawful order of or to answer any material question approved by the court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, to change the number of the section from 6 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, before the word "obtaining," to strike out "frauds, or;" so as to read:

SEC. 17. Debts not affected by a discharge.—a A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district, or municipality in which he resides; (2) are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, or for alimony due or to become due, or for maintenance or support of wife or child, or for seduction of an unmarried female, or for criminal conversation;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, to change the number of the section from 7 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, before the word "days," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen," and in line 16, after the word "be," to strike out "not more than twenty days after the first publication" and insert "ten days after the last publication unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time;" so as to read:

a Upon the filing of a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, service thereof, with a writ of subpœna, shall be made upon the person therein named as defendant in the same manner that service of such process is now had upon the commencement of a suit in equity in the courts of the United States, except that it shall be returnable within fifteen days, unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time; but in case personal service can not be made, then notice shall be given by publication in the same manner and for the same time as provided by law for notice by publication in suits to enforce a legal or equitable lien in courts of the United States, except that, unless the judge shall otherwise direct, the order shall be published not more than once a week for two consecutive weeks, and the return day shall be ten days after the last publication unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 21, after the word "petition," to strike out "on or before" and insert "within five days after;" so as to make the clause read:

b The bankrupt, or any creditor, may appear and plead to the petition within five days after the return day, or within such further time as the court may allow.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, to change the number of the section from 8 to 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, to strike out the following:

That the wife shall not be so examined except as to business transactions to which she is or has been a party, and she may be examined to determine that fact.

And insert:

That the wife may be examined only touching business transacted by her or to which she is a party, and to determine the fact whether she has transacted or been a party to any business of the bankrupt.

So as to make the proviso of section 7 read:

Provided, That the wife may be examined only touching business transacted by her or to which she is a party, and to determine the fact whether she has transacted or been a party to any business of the bankrupt.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 14, to change the number of the section from 9 to 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 23, before the word "section," to insert "and;" and in the same line, after the words "subdivision e," to strike out "and section 70, subdivision e;" so as to make section 8 read:

SEC. 8. That subdivision b of section 23 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"b Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered by such trustee might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, except suits for the recovery of property under section 60, subdivision b, and section 67, subdivision e."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 1, to change the number of the section from 10 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" in line 7, before the word "cents," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," and in line 11, after the word "moneys," to strike out "received and paid out" and insert "disbursed to creditors;" so as to make section 9 read:

SEC. 9. That subdivision a of section 40 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a Referees shall receive as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $15 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and 25 cents for every proof of claim filed for allowance, to be paid from the estate, if any, as a part of the cost of administration, and from estates which have been administered before them 1 per cent commissions on all moneys disbursed to creditors by the trustee, or one-half of 1 per cent on the amount to be paid to creditors upon the confirmation of a composition."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 10. That section 47 is hereby amended by adding thereto the following subdivision:

"c The trustee shall, within thirty days after the adjudication, file a certified copy of the decree of adjudication in the office where conveyances of real estate are recorded in every county where the bankrupt owns real estate not exempt from execution, and pay the fee for such filing, and he shall receive a compensation of 50 cents for each copy so filed, which, together with the filing fee, shall be paid out of the estate of the bankrupt as a part of the cost and disbursements of the proceedings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" in line 8, after the word "moneys," to strike out "received and paid out" and insert "disbursed;" in line 10, after the word "exceed," to strike out "ten" and insert "six," and in line 11, after the word "less," to strike out:

Five per cent on the next $1,000 or part thereof, 3 per cent on the next $8,500 or part thereof, and 1 per cent on such moneys in excess of $10,000. In the event of the confirmation of a composition after the qualification of a trustee, the court may allow such trustee not more than one-half commissions on the moneys or property received by him.

And insert:

Four per cent on moneys in excess of $500 and less than $1,500, 2 per cent on moneys in excess of $1,500 and less than $10,000, and 1 per cent on moneys in excess of $10,000. And in case of the confirmation of a composition after the trustee has qualified the court may allow him, as compensation, not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of the amount to be paid the creditors on such composition.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That subdivision a of section 48 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a Trustees shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $5 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and from estates which they have administered such commissions on all moneys disbursed by them as may be allowed by the courts, not to exceed 6 per cent on the first $500 or less, 4 per cent on moneys in excess of $500 and less than $1,500, 2 per cent on moneys in excess of $1,500 and less than $10,000, and 1 per cent on moneys in excess of $10,000. And in case of the confirmation of a composition after the trustee has qualified the court may allow him, as compensation, not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of the amount to be paid the creditors on such composition."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 10, before the word "have," to strike out "or section seventy, subdivision c;" so as to make section 12 read:

SEC. 12. That subdivision g of section 57 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"g The claims of creditors who have received preferences, voidable under section 60, subdivision b, or to whom conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances, void or voidable under section 67, subdivision e, have been made or given, shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender such preferences, conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 3, after the word "required," to strike out "or permitted, or, if not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property transferred;" so as to read:

"a A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required.

"b If a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person. And, for the purpose of such recovery, any court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, and any State court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 16, before the word "clause," to strike out "subdivision a and;" and in line 18, before the word "hereby," to strike out "are" and insert "is;" and after line 18 to strike out:

"a The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district, or municipality, except such taxes as are a lien on a homestead claimed by or set off to him as exempt from being taken on execution, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and upon filing the receipts of the proper public officers for such payment he shall be credited with the amount thereof, and in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax, the same shall be heard and determined by the court."

On page 12, line 7, after the word "recovered," to insert "for the benefit of the estate of the bankrupt;" and in line 9, after the word "such," to strike out "creditors in so doing" and insert "recovery;" so as to make section 14 read:

SEC. 14. That clause 2 of subdivision b of section 64 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"(2) the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases, and, where property of the bankrupt, transferred or concealed by him either before or after the filing of the petition, shall have been recovered for the benefit of the estate of the bankrupt by the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, the reasonable expenses of such recovery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 15. That subdivision b of section 65 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"The first dividend shall be declared within thirty days after the adjudication, if the money of the estate in excess of the amount necessary to pay the debts which have priority and such claims as have not been, but probably will be, allowed equals 5 per cent or more of such allowed claims. Dividends subsequent to the first shall be declared upon like terms as the first and as often as the amount shall equal 10 per cent or more and upon closing the estate. Dividends may be declared oftener and in smaller proportions if the judge shall so order: Provided, That the first dividend shall not include more than 50 per cent of the money of the estate in excess of the amount necessary to pay the debts which have priority and such claims as probably will be allowed: And provided further, That the final dividend shall not be declared within three months after the first dividend shall be declared."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 4, to change the number of the section from 15 to 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 12, to change the number of the section from 16 to 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 23, after the word "dockets," to strike out the comma and "as well as the indexes of judgments in the several courts of the United States;" and on page 14, line 1, after the word "corporations," to strike out "for the purpose of transcription or otherwise;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That said act is also amended by adding thereto a new section, section 71, to read as follows:

"SEC. 71. That the clerks of the several district courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indexes of all petitions and discharges in bankruptcy heretofore or hereafter filed in the said courts, and shall, when requested so to do, issue certificates of search certifying as to whether or not any such petitions or discharges have been filed; and said clerks shall be entitled to receive for such certificates the same fees as now allowed by law for certificates as to judgments in said courts: Provided, That said bankruptcy indexes and dockets shall at all times be open to inspection and examination by all persons or corporations without any fee or charge therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment wass, on page 14, line 4, to change the number of the section from 17 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 72. Provided, That when the bankrupt in any State has waived his right to claim his exempt property, to his creditors, the bankruptcy court shall not set apart to him this exemption as against said creditors.

And insert:

SEC. 72. That neither the referee nor the trustee shall in any form or guise receive, nor shall the court allow them, any other or further compensation for their services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. That said act is also amended by adding thereto a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 72. That neither the referee nor the trustee shall in any form or guise receive, nor shall the court allow them, any other or further compensation for their services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 13, to insert as a new section:

SEC. 19. That the provisions of this amendatory act shall not apply to bankruptcy cases pending when this act takes effect, but such cases shall be adjudicated and disposed of conformably to the provisions of the said act of July 1, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if there has been a report made with this bill.

Mr. HOAR. There has been no written report. The changes in the bill are very simple. They are all in the line of ameliorating the condition of the bankrupt and diminishing the fees. Here is the main and important feature of the bill: The Supreme Court has decided by one majority that a creditor can not prove his claim if he has received a payment on any debt against the debtor; that is, if the debtor's property is not equal to his debts. Even if he received it innocently and without reason to believe the debtor's insolvency, he must surrender it before he can prove an undisputed claim. An important feature of the bill corrects that.

Mr. MALLORY. It seems, however, that this amends the present bankruptcy law in very many particulars; in fact, it seems to be a revision of the bankruptcy law. Of course I have not had an opportunity to give it consideration. This is the first time my attention has been called to it.

Mr. HOAR. The committee has given it very thorough inquiry and the minority, while they are not proposing to vote for it, gave notice that they did not desire to debate it or to make any opposition to it.

Mr. MALLORY. That is the attitude of the minority of the Judiciary Committee?

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me to secure the passage of a short Texas court bill, containing not over a dozen sentences.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, that I have no objection to his request, but I had assented to the reception by the Senate, if it were willing to do so, of the bills of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] and of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. CULBERSON. I am perfectly willing to wait.

Mr. QUAY. Following the disposition of their legislation I will not object to the request of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Texas after he recognizes the Senator from Alabama.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14839) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on the first Monday in September in each year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read in full this morning. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PETTUS subsequently said: I understand, sir, that objection has been withdrawn to House bill 14839.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection made to the bill which the Senator from Alabama called to the attention of the Senate the Senator now informs the Senate has been withdrawn. The bill has been read. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6595) fixing the time and places for holding regular terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the western district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the circuit and district judges for the western district of Virginia shall appoint one clerk, who shall be clerk both of the circuit and district courts and shall reside and keep his office in the city of Roanoke; and shall appoint another clerk, who shall be clerk both of the circuit and district courts and shall reside and keep his office in the city of Charlottesville, said clerks in said respective cities to take charge and custody of the court records and papers, attending the sessions of the said courts, issuing all proper process, and discharging all the clerical duties in connection with the business of said courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15506) to amend section 14 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASHTABULA HARBOR, OHIO.

Mr. QUAY. Now I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HANNA. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 7034) providing for the expenditure of money hitherto appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio. I will state briefly that this is simply a change of the appropriation for Ashtabula Harbor; it is recommended by the Engineer Department; the contracts are about to be made, and it is very important that it should be acted upon now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that of the money appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of the harbor of Ashtabula, Ohio, in the act approved June 13, 1902, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, so much as may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be deemed desirable may be expended in the extension of the west breakwater.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this bill?

Mr. QUAY. I do not. I just rose for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. QUAY. I ask for the regular order.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to give a notice? I wish to give notice that after the routine morning business tomorrow I shall move that the Senate take up and proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a little bill here which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. It once passed the House and the Senate and went to the President and a mistake was discovered in it. It was reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the other morning and objected to by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. It is a very short bill. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow it to be passed by unanimous consent, laying the regular order temporarily aside.

Mr. QUAY. I will not object to the bill the Senator from Missouri desires to call up, but after it is disposed of I shall insist upon the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 7033) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the regular order. The regular order is the bill known as the statehood bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, we are now ready to take a vote on this bill if nothing further is to be said upon it. Of course, I am not disposed to stop discussion in this highest tribunal of the world.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] spoke for nearly three hours to-day. He has not had an opportunity to finish his speech. I submit in all fairness and courtesy he ought to have a chance to finish his speech in the morning, and that it is out of all reason to insist at this time, in view of these facts, that we shall go on with the bill.

Mr. QUAY. Well, that question was practically determined by a vote of the Senate. I as much as any other Senator upon this floor am disposed to be courteous to the Senator from New Hampshire, and I listened with much interest to his remarks. But it is patent to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that if one Senator upon the part of the opposition to the statehood bill is to be allowed to occupy two or three days and if a very large multitude of them, as I understand the Senator from Indiana, are to occupy the floor on the question, it is not worth while to prosecute the bill any further.

A conclusion, no matter what it may be, ought to be reached upon the bill. If it is to be defeated I would be glad to have it done, in order that the brushwood may be cleared out of the front of important national legislation pending.

As to the immediate proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, I can not say that I will antagonize it, though it was my purpose when I came here to insist upon a session of the Senate continuously during the day and during the night. If the Senator from New Hampshire can not go forward, and if the Senator from Indiana is not prepared to furnish a substitute, I will have no objection to allowing the statehood bill to be put aside for the present informally, without disturbing its place, with the understanding that at the conclusion of the morning business I am going to move to take it up again, and that I will not yield to-morrow. I hope the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] will be prepared to put up his men.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. No; let us have an executive session.

Mr. BURTON. I hope I may be allowed to call up a short bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to allow me to bring forward a bill which has already passed Congress once and was vetoed by the President under a misapprehension of the facts? It is a short bill of only one page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the motion.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 6968, a bill of only one page.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator says the bill was vetoed.

Mr. BURTON. But it was done under a misapprehension. The Department formerly reported against the bill, but the Department is now satisfied with the bill and recommends it.

Mr. CULLOM. What is it about?

Mr. BURTON. It is a bill granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, in the Territory of Arizona. It passed both Houses of Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the occasion for its being here now?

Mr. BURTON. The Committee on Public Lands recommended that the bill be passed over the President's veto, and instead of doing that I introduced a new bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Complying with the provisions of the veto?

Mr. BURTON. After submitting it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, I introduced a new bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Do they recommend it?

Mr. BURTON. I have not letters, but they stated that there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a written recommendation?

Mr. BURTON. No, sir; there is not a written recommendation.

Mr. CARMACK. The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; the committee reported it. It has been very fully considered by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that, as the bill has been vetoed, we ought to have some information in regard to it.

Mr. BURTON. Our committee unanimously recommended that the bill be passed over the President's veto.

Mr. LODGE. It is conceivable that some one might differ with the committee.

Mr. BURTON. That is quite true, but it is a bill which consists of only a few lines and——

Mr. LODGE. Even Senators who are not on the committee, of course, have a right to look at the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. It is a short bill and I do not think there will be any objection to it, if you will hear the bill read.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to hearing the bill read, but I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the Constitution require us to take a vote on a bill which the President has vetoed? Can a committee simply substitute a new bill?

Mr. BURTON. We did not substitute a new bill; that is, I simply introduced a new bill.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. CARMACK. Is it identical with the old bill?

Mr. BURTON. It is substantially identical. It is in the same line.

Mr. HOAR. Can we get away from the President's veto in that manner?

Mr. BURTON. The bill was vetoed, as I have stated, at the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Now the same office is satisfied with the bill. It is not in the exact language of the bill that has been passed. It was changed a little merely to make it a new bill. I preferred, and the committee preferred, a new bill rather than to take action on the old one.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator whether it was so changed as to meet the objection which the President made to it, or is this an attempt by the introduction of a new bill to change it a little so as to make it nominally a new bill to go around the veto?

Mr. BURTON. In fact, to be candid, the object is to pass a new bill rather than to present the question on the veto.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that——

Mr. BURTON. I am satisfied that if Senators will hear the bill read there will be no objection to it. There were no objections to it in our committee.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's bill, and I shall not, but I should like to be allowed to say that I do not fancy the practice which has grown up, and for which the Senator from Kansas is not in the least responsible (I dare say we are all alike responsible), of stating what is the opinion of any head of a department or what is the opinion of the President of the United States himself about measures pending in this or the other House. There is a constitutional method by which the President conveys his approbation or disapproval of bills, and outside of that method I hold it to be contrary to the privileges of the Senate to have the opinion of the President of the United States stated in legislation. The House of Commons or the House of Lords always resent it, and have in history done so for a great many years, when that statement is made about the Crown.

Now, when the President has formally communicated to us a veto and has not under his right to communicate to us his opinion and recommendation said anything else, I do not think it is within the limits of Senatorial privilege to say that the head of a department, or especially the head of a bureau like the Land Office, thinks the President made a mistake and after all we ought to pass the bill.

I do not care so much about that, but the great newspapers all over the country are informing us that certain bills are Administration bills, and that certain Senators have been at the White House and have arranged with the President of the United States what the Senate shall do about a treaty or about a trust bill, or about some other important matter of legislation. It is nobody's business to be arranging with the President of the United States what the Senate shall do. We are an independent body. The time for the President to make up his mind about statutes is after we have passed them, and not before, except when he avails himself of his constitutional privilege and makes a communication to the entire body by a message, as the Constitution provides.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely right, of course. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement with regard to this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator let me make a suggestion? I want to withdraw the bill and make a statement. Will the Senator permit me to do that for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. For that purpose I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. BURTON. Of course the motion to adjourn is not debatable, and I do not want to debate it.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that this bill seems to provoke discussion on the method in which it is brought here, so far as I am concerned I will not press it. It is not my measure at all, I will say; it is not personal to me in the least. I will not ask to have the bill considered at this time; but if Senators prefer that course, I will ask the consideration of the bill that has been vetoed. I have brought the bill forward in perfect good faith. I did not suppose there was any objection to the measure. But certainly I do not want to bring the bill forward under the rule of general consent when it would provoke discussion. Therefore I will not press the bill any further.

Mr. SPOONER I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 22, 1903, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 21, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FUR-BEARING ANIMALS IN ALASKA.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 13387) to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, with the accompanying report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 13387, with the accompanying report. If there is no objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15520, the Philippine coinage bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] may control one half of the time allowed for general debate and that I be allowed to control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] control one half of the time for general debate, and that he control the remaining half. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been exhausted upon this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has consumed thirty-nine minutes of his time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I mentioned some of the objections which have been urged by experts and by others familiar with the conditions in the Philippines against the immediate introduction into the islands of the United States coinage system, complete. There was one objection which I omitted to mention yesterday—the danger of counterfeiting. That danger is easily understood upon an examination of the facts.

The pending bill provides for a Philippine silver peso, the bullion value of which would be approximately 37 cents and the face value 50 cents in gold, a difference of 13 cents. The proposed substitute bill provides for a silver dollar, the bullion value of which would be approximately 36 or possibly 37 cents, while its face value would be 100 cents in gold, a difference of 63 or 64 cents per dollar. That margin of 63 or 64 cents would offer a great inducement, so the experts told us, for the skilled mechanics and jewelers of China and Japan, where labor is very cheap, to indulge in the counterfeiting of the American silver dollar.

One of these men could make silver dollars in China or Japan and his detection would be almost impossible. Indeed, through the Straits Settlements and in Java to-day they are troubled with counterfeit silver coin, although there the difference between the bullion and face value is nothing like the difference which would result if we were to adopt the proposed substitute bill of the gentleman from Virginia. That, in the opinion of the Taft Commission, and especially of Governor Taft and of Vice-Governor Wright, both of whom have testified before the committee, is a most serious objection, under present conditions, to the establishing of the United States coinage system in the Philippine Islands.

There is another objection which was forcefully presented by Mr. Peabody. And for the information of gentlemen who were not present yesterday I desire to say that Mr. Peabody is not a mere theorist, but that, on the contrary, he is a practical business man, at the head of a firm which has establishments in Boston, New York, Yucatan, Manila, London, and South Africa—in fact, around the world; a man who has had commercial relations with the Philippine government through his house in Manila, and whose experience has given him an accurate and profound knowledge of the financial conditions and needs of the islands.

That man, a conservative New England business man, declared himself against the proposition to introduce the United States system of coinage complete into the Philippines.

I read from the record of his testimony:

Would the system proposed by the bill be preferable to the one providing for the introduction of the American money, the complete system?

He replied as follows:

The introduction of American coinage as a whole would work a great hardship and would be almost impossible to adjust.

That corroborates the statement of Governor Taft, which I read yesterday, wherein he declared, before our committee, that abruptly to attempt to introduce the American coinage system as a whole into the Philippines would result in nothing short of financial disaster. And this declaration of Governor Taft's is in turn corroborated by the statement of Professor Jenks, a part of which I read yesterday. And as this statement comes from an expert of world-wide repute, who visited the Philippines, the Straits Settlements, India, and Java for the purpose of investigating financial conditions, I desire once more to call it to the attention of members of the House.

Before reading it, Mr. Chairman, I desire again to remind members of the committee of the difference between these two bills; a margin of 13 or 14 cents only between the bullion and the face value of the silver pesos proposed by our committee bill, and a margin of 63 or 64 cents between the face and the bullion value of the dollar proposed by the minority substitute.

And, by the way, this substitute was never presented to the committee. There is no minority report. The substitute was not even introduced into the House until after the pending measure had been reported.

But, says Professor Jenks, the expert sent to the Orient by the War Department:

It is desirable, whenever a country is to establish a new system of currency, that the value of the coin most common in circulation be changed as little as possible. The wages of labor and prices already fixed are to a considerable extent matters of custom. If a monetary unit is introduced of considerably more value—

And the minority substitute would establish one of considerably more value—than the one abandoned, it will be necessary to make a nominal reduction of wages and prices. The consequence is that laborers and less well-informed sellers of produce will feel that their income is being arbitrarily lessened and great dissatisfaction is almost certain to be the result. One can easily see how a sudden action of that kind on the part of a government might produce even a revolution among people not well informed on monetary matters.

Then he adds what I omitted to read yesterday:

If the new currency, however, is one whose monetary unit is substantially the same or only a trifle higher than the one already employed, no evil result will follow. There might even be a slight increase in the value of the monetary unit, which would inure to the benefit of the wage-earners and the local producers. The system of currency recommended in the first place by the Philippine Commission—

That is the system of the pending bill—

And afterwards formulated more completely by Mr. Conant, special commissioner of the War Department, follows out this principle. The new coin would be substantially equal in value to the Mexican dollar or peso formerly in use.

That is the coin of the pending bill, gentlemen. Then he adds:

It seems, therefore, the wisest plan for the United States, if it intends to act in the interest of the native Filipinos and not exclusively for the interest of a comparatively few exporters and bankers, to adopt the gold standard and adopt the system of coinage recommended, which will produce as little disturbance as any that has been proposed. It is extremely unfortunate that the system could not have been adopted before the last fall in silver, as in that case there would have been no disturbance that would have been noticed.

The House did propose to adopt this system, Mr. Chairman, prior to the late fall in silver. We passed a gold-standard bill through the House last June, which, if it had been enacted into law, would have saved that archipelago from its present financial distress. As you know, it was blocked in the Senate, which demanded the free coinage of silver. The House absolutely refused to accept that, and so the status quo remains.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. What is the relative weight of the proposed Philippine peso as compared with the present standard silver dollar?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The present standard silver dollar has 412½ grains of silver and the peso would have 416 grains, the same as the Mexican dollar, the coin now principally in use in the islands.

In referring to the Straits Settlement, Professor Jenks says:

In 1897 a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Singapore was appointed to prepare a report regarding the change of standard. A majority of the committee reported in favor of the adoption of a gold standard with the English sovereign as a basis, with a Straits silver dollar equivalent to 2 shillings of value, and in favor of some measure of maintaining this fixed rate of exchange.

The opposition came in part from the bankers, who have probably gained from the fluctuations in exchange. * * * The Chinese merchants favor the fluctuating silver currency.

In Java—

Says Professor Jenks—

its silver guilder is maintained at a fixed rate of exchange with gold, and its business men are free from the speculative influences and other disadvantages which accompany a violent fluctuating rate of exchange.

He says:

The standard is a gold standard, and although the exchange has kept substantially fixed throughout the entire period of the relative fall in the price of silver, gold is practically not at all in circulation in Netherlands India. A gold coin, even an English sovereign, is rarely seen. * * * The Java Bank holds a large reserve in gold, but it is not paid out on demand.

Mr. Chairman, I have recently received, as I understand members of the House have generally received, copies of the Manila Cable News, a daily paper published in Manila. I have here the second section of it, which contains a page devoted to an article under the headlines:

Wreck and disaster caused by depreciated currency in the Philippines—Business ruined and advancement retarded—The government has lost more than a million dollars—Loss to citizens incalculable—Views of prominent business men on the situation—The conditions clearly explained.

In the center is a picture of Governor Taft, and below it this statement:

Governor Taft believes that a stable currency is essential to the well-being of the Philippines. He favors the coinage of the Conant dollar and the issuance of treasury notes for the purchase of Mexican silver as bullion for coinage.

This article contains interviews with business men in Manila. One of them of prominence says:

Although I was one of the members of the American Chamber of Commerce who voted for gold alone, I believe the introduction of the gold and what is known as the Conant dollar would afford an impetus to the trade of the Philippines which we can not well do without.

He says:

Our business suffered from the change, as when the prices of articles were quoted to customers in gold and figured out in Mexican at the Government rate it seemed abnormally high to the natives, and in many cases they have turned on their heels and walked out of the store. Another phase of this: The native and the Chinaman, having been accustomed to the peso, often flatly refused to consider gold prices, and when a price was quoted to them in gold they offered double the amount of dollars in pesos, and when their attention was called to the rate of exchange, they ignored it and refused to purchase.

Another witness, Mr. Guamis, a Spaniard connected with a large business house in Manila, gave as his opinion that—

We want the gold standard, with an additional coin. This additional coin will be useful in the provinces, where the native has not yet been accustomed to the American money. It is simply impossible to convince the native from the start that an American 10-cent piece is worth as much as a peseta.

The peseta would be practically the same in size as a 20-cent piece in American money, but its value would be only that of an American 10-cent piece.

This man, speaking from experience, declares that—

It is practically impossible to convince the natives on the start that an American 10-cent piece is worth as much as a peseta.

Another witness, Mr. Cadwallader, connected with an extensive business house in Manila, says:

As to the "Conant" dollar, I believe it is just the thing for the Philippines. The straight gold will not do. The natives must have a coin similar to the Mexican dollar. They can not be made to understand that our money is worth just twice as much as the Mexican. I am heartly in favor of the introduction of the "Conant" dollar, and believe it to be the only solution of the problem. I have been here over four years, during which time I have had an opportunity to study the labor question, and I believe I understand it thoroughly. I have employed both Chinese and native labor and know just what to expect from them. When I say they will not accept the American money, I know what I am talking about. We must have an additional coin.

Other men who were interviewed say the same thing. There was one gentleman interviewed who told the newspaper that he thought we ought to introduce at once the American coinage system complete. Among other things, he said:

Now, suppose I owed a native a peseta, and I laid down a peseta and a 10-cent piece, side by side. He would pick up the peseta, of course; but if I refused to pay him in Mexican, and gave him the 10-cent piece, what would be the result? He would finger the dime suspiciously and grumble. However, when he went to a store, presented his 10-cent piece, and asked for that much rice he would receive a peseta's worth.

He begs the whole question in that. There would be "grumbling," as various witnesses, testify, but the man would not get the peseta's worth of rice. That is one of the troubles which it is expected would obtain in these islands if we arbitrarily force American money on them. Governor Taft has often said that it is of the utmost importance that no disturbing element be injected into the life of the Filipino people. Nothing could bring disquiet more quickly than to introduce a system of money, which a large portion of the people would imagine was doing them a great wrong.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I wish to reiterate what I said a moment ago, that, in my opinion, if this bill does not pass the House and go to the Senate, there will be no coinage system enacted for the Philippine archipelago at this session. The reasons are plain. The time is too short, and the calendars too congested to admit of our beginning over again. Moreover, the Senate Committee on the Philippines would not report any such bill as that proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

I do not wish to impute wrongful motives to anybody, but I can readily understand how some persons might wish all financial legislation for these islands to fail at this session. Bankers there would reap a great benefit as a result of such a failure. Business ruin would come to many others. That ruin would produce effects there and entail results political here which no man can foretell. In any event it would furnish a war cry upon the stump in this country which might be made very effective where people do not understand the circumstances.

But, Mr. Chairman, I, as a member of this House, would consider long and well before casting my vote to defeat the pending bill and to enact the substitute into law against the protest of the Philippine Commission, headed by such a man as is William H. Taft. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not this system which is proposed in this bill is intended as a permanent system or as a temporary system for the islands?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand it, we enact this law to meet conditions now pressing in the Philippines. It will, I think, be the coinage system of the archipelago for many years. That was the opinion of Mr. Peabody, and it is the opinion of every man who has thoroughly investigated the situation.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would like to ask whether or not in the system which you propose there is a provision for any coinage of less size than 10 cents?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has evidently forgotten the Philippine civil government act of last July, in which we provided for subsidiary money for the archipelago.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I think I know the provisions of that act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It provides for the coinage of a 5-centavo, a centavo, and a half-centavo piece.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question. I see in the report a statement that five of the banking houses in which there was sought an interview declined to give an interview. I would like to know if the gentleman has any knowledge why they refused, and if so, I would like to have him state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Indiana will discover, if he reads the evidence, that the witnesses who appeared before the Insular Committee and testified on this subject, and the experts who have reported specifically upon these propositions, say that the only people now in the islands who are making any money out of the financial disorganization are the bankers. They are, therefore, directly and peculiarly interested in maintaining the status quo.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the currency—what is the amount of silver that is now current in the Philippines?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, they have about forty millions of silver, of which six millions is what is called the Spanish Filipino peso. The balance are Mexican pesos. The Mexican is a coin of 416 grains. The Spanish Filipino peso is somewhat lighter.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the current value of the Mexican peso now?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, the ratio is somewhere about 260.

Mr. PERKINS. What value is given to that by your bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Two to one.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, you increase the value?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the result of this bill would be to increase the purchasing value of $40,000,000 of silver currency by about how many per cent?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman can figure that out himself.

Mr. PERKINS. Say 25 per cent?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We make a difference of 13 cents in the peso. It is now worth 37 cents; we make it worth 50 cents.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the result is that the holders of $40,000,000 of coin will by this bill have the value of that coin increased about 30 per cent?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think it will amount to that when it comes to purchasing labor or products. The Commission is——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will my colleague on the committee allow me a suggestion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Allow me to say that the Commission, by this bill, is allowed to fix the rate at which the Mexican coins are to be received in payment of obligations.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] that under this bill the current value of the pesos in the archipelago will not be increased a single farthing.

Mr. PERKINS. Why not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because they pass at their commercial value and are received for taxes and public dues at a rate fixed by the insular government, and as they are so received they will be taken out of circulation and recoined into new pesos, which shall have a value of 50 per cent of a gold dollar.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, the old pesos will have to be presented for recoinage before they have their value under this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, sir. They have nothing but their commercial value until taken up and recoined, and the new coin is stabilized at 2 for 1 of the American gold dollar.

Mr. HILL. Why was the original provision of the Conant bill, submitted last year, which required the taking up of the Mexican pesos, now current in the island—why was that stricken out of this bill, so that that money is not to be taken up, so far as anything in the bill shows?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The discretion of taking up that currency is left to the Commission.

Mr. HILL. Why was the provision put in the other bill and left out of this?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It can make no kind of difference, because there was no provision in the other bill to exclude it from the archipelago. It would simply go there at the bullion value.

Mr. HILL. In the other bill it was distinctly provided that it should be taken up and recoined into the coin provided for in the bill. That is all left out here.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My understanding is that in the other bill it was provided that this coinage should be received for public dues at a certain rate of exchange; that it should be recoined; and then (if the bill does not expressly say so the meaning is the same thing) that the Government should either coin the Mexican peso that has been received in the course of business or shall buy bullion and coin these new dollars. So that in effect the two bills on that proposition are the same.

Mr. HILL. Then it was left out accidentally, not intentionally?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, sir.

Mr. HILL. Not for any specific purpose?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; for no specific purpose. I think the matter is immaterial.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the questions of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] I wish to call their attention to this provision of the bill:

That the Mexican silver peso now in use in the Philippine Islands, and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in said islands, shall be receivable for public dues and in the discharge of all debts, public and private, at a rate to be fixed from time to time by the proclamation of the civil governor of said islands until such date, not earlier than the 31st day of December, 1903, as may be fixed by public proclamation of said civil governor, when such coins shall cease to be so receivable for public dues; but such coins shall continue to be receivable at such rate for the payment of private debts contracted in such money before the 1st day of June, 1903: Provided, That the public offices of the government of said islands may at any time refuse to receive such coins which appear to be counterfeit or defective.

Now, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Connecticut, as to the conditions under which these Mexican coins will be coined, I refer him to the beginning of section 5, where it is provided—

That the coinage authorized by this act shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

That is the Philippine civil government act.

Now, let me refer to this provision of that act:

The subsidiary silver coins authorized by the preceding section shall be coined under the authority of the government of the Philippine Islands, as such amounts may be determined, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States, from silver bullion purchased by said government.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman will not find in that act what he is looking for. It has been taken out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HILL. The provision of the original act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There never was any provision in the original bill for the complete redemption of the Mexican coins in the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the gentleman this question. In the original bill——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. The gentleman has assumed that a fact existed which never did exist. There never was anybody who proposed to redeem all of the Mexicans in the Philippine Archipelago. The gentleman has assumed that in the question which he propounded to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. HILL. Not at all, not at all. I will ask the gentleman this question: In the original bill, as presented by Mr. Conant, and heard before the Philippine Committee, was there not a provision for taking up the Mexican coins in the archipelago and recoining them, together with the Spanish coin which was in the archipelago? Now then, in this bill, has not that provision been distinctly stricken out and the new coinage limited to purchases of bullion? Am I right, or am I not right?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That, as I understand, would not make the slightest difference in the world with the enforcement of the provisions of this law.

Mr. HILL. Am I right, or am I not right?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That may be right.

Mr. HILL. Yes; that is what I thought. What is the motive which has prompted that change from taking up the existing coinage to the purchase of additional American silver bullion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not believe the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is right on the record.

Mr. HILL. The chairman of the committee admits that I am right on the record.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. My impression is also that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is entirely mistaken. The first question which he asked gave everybody, as I presume, as it did me, to understand that there was to be a redemption of the Mexicans in the islands.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman will recall that he appeared before the Committee on Insular Affairs, that he made certain statements which so misled Mr. Conant that Mr. Conant arose and repudiated, as he thought, the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. In what respect?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That there should be a redemption of the Mexicans in the island. He said that could not be done; that Mexico coins the Mexican pesos; that they are not coined in the Philippine Archipelago, and nobody knows how many would be shipped there if we undertook to redeem them.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, not by way of criticism, but entirely for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. It is contemplated that a large amount of silver pesos will be issued by the Philippine government. Where does the chairman of the committee suppose that the silver which is to be used will be obtained, and how will the silver be obtained which is to be used in the new coinage? I ask for information.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think the bill amply covers that. It declares that the coinage provided for under it may be coined under the same conditions provided for in the act of last July. The act of last July contains the following language:

That said government may in addition and in its discretion recoin the Spanish Filipino dollars and subsidiary silver coins issued under the authority of the Spanish Government for use in said islands into subsidiary coins provided for in the preceding section.

Mr. HILL. Why, there is not any of that Spanish coin to amount to anything.

Mr. McDERMOTT. What becomes of your Mexican dollar under this bill?

Mr. HILL. You tell me. There is nothing in the bill to provide for it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I reserve the balance of my time.

[Mr. JONES of Virginia addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], the chairman of this committee, in concluding his speech a few moments ago, said to the House, although it was probably not understood on this side, but was to the members on the other side, that there was some attempt or at least some idea on the part of the majority of the committee to make political capital out of this bill. In other words, he said to the people on that side of the House, "Unless you pass this bill I offer, then there will be no bill passed at all," and that we, the minority, would be delighted to see it take that turn. I want to deny that absolutely, every word of it. So far as I myself am concerned, and so far as any member of the committee whom I have heard express himself on this question is concerned, there never has been any matter of partisanship or anything of that nature suggested, nor has there been any attempt to make any political capital out of it. We realize the condition in the Philippine Islands.

We understand and know that there must be some legislation there in order to correct the evils which are existing there, and I stand here to deny that assertion that we are attempting or have intimated by the position we take in this matter to make political capital out of it. Have we not done the same thing that we now offer for Porto Rico? Have we not done the same thing for Hawaii? Is there any political capital in that? I hope that gentlemen on that side of the House will disabuse their minds of any such idea. I wish to call attention to another fact. The chairman of the committee held up certain coins and undertook to explain to members on that side and upon this side of the House why it is that these Filipinos could not understand the difference between the sizes of these coins and their purchasing power. Now, I desire to read you something. He has been reading from the testimony of Mr. Peabody.

I wish to read you something which he asked Mr. Peabody, his own witness, in respect to that identical idea, and what the answer of Mr. Peabody was. Some of these theorists and some of these witnesses who have been over in the Philippine Islands and who were brought before our committee and some of whose reports were read, insisted that those people over there are ignorant. Who brought these witnesses here I do not know, but I suppose it was somebody who has an object to serve in having this bill framed in the manner in which it is submitted to this House today. As I say, they insist that those people over there are ignorant. In other words, if you have two silver dollars, one of which calls for 50 cents and the other for a dollar, that they can not understand or distinguish the difference between them, that they have not the capacity to do that. Recurring now to the testimony of Mr. Peabody given before our committee, the following took place:

Mr. CANNON. Is not an American silver dollar exchanged for two Mexicans, right there under his nose?

Mr. PEABODY. It would change for two and a half at present.

Mr. CANNON. Is not that done to-day?

Mr. PEABODY. But he is paid in the Mexican dollar.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, does he not understand that? Does not everybody understand that if he has an American dollar he can get two and a half Mexicans for it?

Mr. PEABODY. They know the value of the coin they receive; yes, sir; but the question would be whether the millions of wage-earners would be contented or willing to see that the purchasing power of 40 cents in American money was as much as that of a dollar in Mexican silver.

The committee will see that the whole turn of this is on this wage idea which has been advanced by my colleague on the committee all along the line. I continue to read:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Peabody, right there permit me to say this, and tell me what you think of it: Governor Taft and Governor Wright say, on that point, that back in the country, where the millions of these people live who are used only to silver in small quantities, if you were to take a silver piece of a certain size, the value of which they know to-day, and then take a piece of silver of practically the same size and the same weight with a little different stamp on it, and tell them that that coin of the same size and same weight was worth twice as much, there would be trouble. What do you think of that?

Now, mark that that is what the chairman says—that there would be trouble—suggesting that idea. And then he says: "What do you think of that?"

Mr. PEABODY. There would not be any trouble in any comparative value of the two coins in that way, because they would understand that. But if you attempted to change the rate of wages in two coins that looked exactly alike, and which appeared the same to them, and to withdraw one of them from circulation, there would be no opportunity of comparison after you had retired the Mexican dollar.

You see, they keep prominent the question of wages. Now, to go a little further, with Mr. Peabody still on the stand, Mr. CRUMPACKER takes him up:

Mr. PEABODY. But it would be a very much more simple problem to introduce a 50-cent peso in place of a 36-cent Mexican dollar than it would be to enforce a 100-cent United States dollar in place of a 36-cent peso.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Peabody, do you not believe that in the course of six months or a year, if we extended even the American system down there as it is to-day, the people of the islands would learn the increased purchasing power, and that all affairs would be adjusted to the new situation?

Mr. PEABODY. Yes, sir; I think the legal change of adjustment of values at a stated rate would be understood by the most ignorant of the islanders if it applied to everybody.

You will notice that the witness there said that this would be understood by the most ignorant of the islanders, it would be understood by all of them, and the truth about it is, if I understand the situation there to-day, that they do understand it; and why should they not? We have our garrisons perhaps in every town and at every crossroads, or have had. They have come in contact with this American money in every direction and everywhere. They are bound to know of its increased purchasing power. They do know it, and now gentlemen say that they are afraid! In other words, the chairman of this committee read to you to-day from that distinguished expert, Professor Somebody, that if we make this radical change down there in this currency it will bring on a revolution or will be likely to do so. Now, is not that the most perfect humbug that was ever attempted to be put upon the Congress of the United States? Have we not changed their flag, have we not changed everything on God Almighty's earth down there except their money? And they have got none to change, as my colleague on the right suggests.

Gentlemen, they say that in order to get rid of friction, in order to have a stable currency down there, the majority bill must pass. I trust I am talking to men who will consider this matter, men who are going to think about this question before they vote. I want to ask the chairman and the gentlemen on the committee on that side who propose to support this bill this question: If your bill passes and becomes a law, 2 pesos, containing 416 grains of silver each, 3½ grains heavier than our own silver dollar, are to pass for one of our dollars. Now, how in the name of high Heaven are you going to keep down the friction when we have our troops located there, in every part of the country, and are being payed off every month at the rate of not less than $2,000,000, putting the United States currency into circulation there, and it is coming in contact and being constantly compared with their money? How are you going to prevent it? It seems to me, gentlemen, it is impossible.

Now, we have the evidence of their expert witnesses that these people know the difference, that they know the purchasing power of the American dollar and know that it is worth far more than theirs. They want a stable currency. They are entitled to it. We have given it to Porto Rico. Why, if I remember correctly General Porter's report to the Committee on Porto Rico on this subject it was that if we hurriedly rushed into this business and substituted the United States currency down there we would have another revolution or disturbance of some sort. But we did it. We redeemed the currency, took up their Porto Rican dollar, substituted our own, and I have never heard one word of objection to it up to this hour. The same thing is done in Hawaii. We took up their money and substituted ours, but now when you get down to the Philippine Islands they must have a regular crazy-quilt currency in order to meet the ideas of that distinguished advocate of the gold standard, Mr. Conant. Well, we put the gold standard down there ourselves when we introduced the currency of the United States. One gentleman suggested that we ought to have a United States Filipino coin. Would not that be good? How would it sound to have a United States Georgia coin?

Now, these are the ideas of some of these experts, some of these theorists. Practice is one thing, theory is another. Plenty of gentlemen were ready to say that we were going to destroy everything in Porto Rico. Probably they thought the same thing about Hawaii; but when the thing was put in practice we found that it was not so, that it did not work out as they anticipated it would.

Now, these gentlemen propose another thing. It has been suggested here by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT] that up to a certain time this Mexican coin, which is largely in circulation in these islands, shall be receivable for public dues and on private contracts, but nowhere does the majority bill propose to redeem and take up that currency that happens to be in the hands of the people of that country, either the business man or the laborer or anybody else. After a certain time it is to be absolutely outlawed so far as the laws of the country are concerned; it is to be worth no more than junk. Now, that is the proposition that they offer to the committee.

Another thing, gentlemen: In order to maintain the parity in this bill that is offered by the majority they authorized the Philippine Commission to issue interest-bearing certificates not to exceed the sum of $5,000,000. That is done in order to maintain the parity between the silver pesos that they have authorized here and the standard gold dollar, so they say. They propose to go into the certificate business again. I have a recollection of about $265,000,000 of bonds issued myself in order to maintain parity. At least that was claimed to be the purpose. Would gentlemen like to see this Government go into that business again? I do not, and I see no reason for it if our own currency is substituted for theirs. The fact is they have no currency to amount to anything, anyway.

Now, gentlemen, I have heard no one yet attempt to explain the question of maintaining the parity by issuing these certificates. Is there any reason for that? If they are redeemable in gold dollars, and with the United States behind them, there will never be any question or any necessity to maintain the parity as long as we have one standard. According to my ideas it is impossible for it to be otherwise. Now, I want to read this provision:

and in order to maintain such parity between said Philippine pesos and the gold coins of the United States may issue temporary certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at a reasonable rate, payable at periods of three months or more, but not later than one year from the date of issue, which shall be in the denominations of $50 or 100 pesos, or some multiple of such sum, and shall be redeemable in gold coin of the United States, or in lawful money of said islands, according to the terms of issue prescribed by the government of said islands; but the amount of such certificates outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $5,000,000.

Now, I call your attention to that provision in this law which probably many of you have not read, and to which your attention has not been called. You can consider that when you come to cast your vote for the majority or minority bill.

Now, the distinguished gentleman on the other side, as my colleague has said, has been acting very largely upon the recommendations of these gentlemen who appeared before them in the committee. Who sent them before the committee I do not know.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. How do those who are in favor of permitting the issue of that bond understand that the money received from the bond is to maintain the parity?

Mr. MADDOX. That is exactly what I am listening to hear some one on that side get up and explain. I do not understand that. Now, what I am calling the House's attention to here is that the difference between the majority bill offered to the House and that which the minority offers is that we substitute the currency of the United States. One of the ideas that the gentlemen who advocate the majority bill advance for not substituting American coinage is that they are afraid that some one will counterfeit it.

Mr. HILL. I would suggest that you ask, supplemental to that question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as to how the five million is to be paid, for it has got to be paid sometime or other.

Mr. MADDOX. That is an important question, and yet it has got to be paid, as suggested. I reckon some of them on that side will offer an explanation. I admit that I can not. They are offering as one of the reasons that they urge against adopting American coinage that it would be dangerous to do it, as that coin could be counterfeited.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can not they counterfeit the local coin too?

Mr. MADDOX. This peso that they propose to coin and pass into the currency of the country is nothing but a token coin, and yet for some reason and for some purpose, I do not know what, they have raised it 3½ grains because silver has declined. The idea occurred to them when they were arranging this bill that they were going to keep the two metals at a parity, but everybody knows that can not be done, that under existing laws silver vacillates every day.

The silver in that coin, according to their statement, is worth 36 cents, so there is a 14-cent margin between 36 cents and 50 cents in the token money. Would that be any inducement for a man to counterfeit it? That is quite a lively per cent; and the gentleman from Wisconsin speaks like these Chinese are adepts in this counterfeiting. But gentlemen need not travel over there to find counterfeiters. We can find enough of them at home. Is there anything in that? It is true that there is a greater inducement so far as the difference between the value of American dollar over the proposed pesos, which is one-half, but is there not sufficient inducement in that to cause counterfeiting to go on just the same? Then, I undertake to say this, that the danger will be far greater for them to counterfeit United States coin than there will be for them to attempt to counterfeit the 50-cent pesos issued by the islands. They would counterfeit this peso, with more silver in it, with a difference of 14 cents in it, rather than to risk counterfeiting the United States coin, with the power of this great nation behind it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that we probably have used more time than the other side, and I suppose some gentleman over there will occupy some time now.

The CHAIRMAN. The other side, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia, has already occupied more time than his.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee].

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the time of the committee only a moment to state my views on this subject. The affairs of the Philippine Islands at the present time are in what may be called a transitory state. So far as the business between the Philippine Islands and this country is concerned, it amounts in the way of business, as measured at this day, to practically nothing.

Now, the question for the House to determine is whether it is better in this transition period, when no considerable business is done with these islands, that it should have this anomalous Philippine currency or have the currency laws and the coinage laws of the United States extended and give to the people of the archipelago a fixed and stable currency. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if any considerable business between this country and the Philippine Islands should develop in the future that it is infinitely better, not only for this country, but for the people of those islands, to have our coinage laws extended there. If this bill as reported by the majority is to be temporary only the reason ought to be controlling, because if in the future it is to be supplanted by our coinage laws and our currency it will involve a greater disturbance than at the present time, when there is practically no business there, and the introduction of American money therefore would be comparatively easy. If the bill, however, is intended to be a permanent measure, then I take the position that this country ought to extend its coinage laws to every foot of land and to all the people within its control and dominions.

I believe the true policy of this country is to have free trade, absolutely, between all of its possessions and all and every part of the United States, and while I am opposed to the colony-holding business into which the Republic has been launched, yet, if we are to hold colonies, it occurs to me, in justice to ourselves and to them, our coinage laws should be extended to them, as well as free trade between our possessions and the United States.

I want to say another word, Mr. Chairman, and that is in answer to the criticism of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that the minority was somewhat in fault in not having their bill at the time the majority bill was adopted by the committee. The fact was, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], I was present, and I made the motion in committee that the coinage laws of the United States be extended to the Philippine Islands, and gave notice that a bill would be prepared in accordance with the motion then made. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other gentlemen who wish to speak on this subject. I will yield, as I only wanted time to state my position thus briefly.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how much time we have occupied on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one hour and ten minutes remaining to the affirmative side and one hour and twenty-five minutes remaining on the side of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

[Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is recognized.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we have used on this side as much time as has been used on the other, and I think the chairman of the committee should use some of his time now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are seventy minutes remaining on each side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we desire to close the general debate on this side, and I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia proceed if he can.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I realize, of course, that the gentleman will close the debate on that side, but I think he ought to use some of his time now. Several gentlemen on this side have spoken and, as yet, but one on that side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield half an hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the first question for consideration in the logical order of this debate is whether a change of standard in the currency of the Philippine Islands is desirable at this time. The other side of the Chamber seems to be divided upon that very important proposition. The minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs recommend the adoption of a bill extending the American system of currency into the archipelago, and I assume that the majority of the opposition side will support that measure. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] who has just addressed the committee, is opposed to any change at all, as I understand from his remarks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe, if the gentleman will permit me, that the adoption of the American system is better than the proposed bill, but I am opposed to the passage of any bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems, from the situation there and the testimony of men competent to judge of conditions, that a more stable currency is imperatively demanded by all of the interests of the islands. A stable currency is necessary to a prosperous business condition in any country, and the fact that the Republic of Mexico may have prospered to a considerable degree in spite of her currency system argues nothing against the principle that a sound currency is one of the indispensable requisites to the best and highest conditions of trade and commerce in any civilization.

In the Philippine Archipelago there has been great business disturbances on account of the constant downward tendency of silver. The standard of value is silver, and they have what we understand to be free coinage, and the currency of the archipelago goes at its bullion value.

When the Taft Civil Commission assumed control of affairs in the archipelago the rate of exchange between gold and the Mexican peso and the Spanish peso in the islands was about two to one. In view of the fact that the operations of this Government in the islands required a considerable volume of money, and large amounts were sent from here there, it was necessary to fix by governmental authority a ratio at which public officers might receive the current coins of the country.

The ratio was first fixed at 2 to 1. That was on the 1st day of December, 1901. Since then the ratio has been changed 7 times. On the 26th day of December, 1901, the depreciation of silver was such that the official ratio was fixed at 2.10. March 27, 1902, it was fixed at 2.27. July 7, 1902, it was fixed at 2.35. September 3, 1902, it was fixed at 2.40. October 22, 1902, it was fixed at 2.46. November 11, last, it was fixed at 2.50, and November 23, the last record that I have, the rate of exchange was fixed at 2.60.

These frequent and radical changes illustrate the disastrous effect of a currency that has such a rapid depreciation as Philippine silver has had during the last year, and the evidence before the Insular Committee shows that, notwithstanding the official rate of exchange is 2.60 to 1, the bank rate is, and has been for some time, from 2.68 to 2.72. The Government overvalues the current coin in its official rate, and is receiving the Spanish peso and the Philippine peso in lieu of gold at more than their real value, and during the last year it has lost over a million dollars in the depreciation of the coins that it has collected and received for public taxes and revenues in the archipelago.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the gentleman will yield for a minute, does not the gentleman recognize that all taxes are practically paid by products, and that if the money depreciates it takes that much more of products?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, in its final analysis the gentleman may be theoretically correct; but when a government imposes a fixed rate of taxation and it is to be paid in current money, all of its estimates and calculations are based upon the supposition of a fixed purchasing power, and when such depreciation occurs between the time the tax rate is fixed and the time the tax is collected the loss is sustained by the government. In the Philippines it amounted to a net loss to the government of over $1,000,000 within less than a year's time, in the depreciation of the coins they received in the payment of taxes.

Mr. MANN. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, may I ask him a question? I do not wish to break in on the gentleman's argument.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MANN. What do you mean by saying that there is a net loss to the Philippine government of $1,000,000? They do not take in any less money, do they?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They do not.

Mr. MANN. They do not pay out any gold for silver, do they?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. MANN. They make no exchange?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. MANN. You mean that the money that they take in is worth a million dollars less?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do they not pay salaries with this same money?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They do not as a rule.

Mr. MANN. What do they do with the money?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They deposit it at the bank.

Mr. MANN. What object is there in depositing this money at the bank? Why do they not pay it out?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, they deposit at a bank, and they do pay salaries on the official rate to provincial officers. They check against the account in the bank to pay salaries and expenses, and if they are paid in silver they are paid at the rate in force at the time of payment, which is much higher, as a rule, than the rate when the money was received.

Mr. MANN. Do you mean that all salaries are fixed on the gold basis?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. All salaries are fixed on the gold basis; but the government is required to use a great deal of money besides in payment of salaries, and in those uses the current value of silver is the basis, or, if the government insists on payment at the official rate, the difference is included in the price it is compelled to pay. The loss is the same, whichever way it is considered. The rate of exchange fixed by the government is not the current rate in private transactions.

Mr. MANN. That simply means loss after collection in depreciation of silver, and not really a loss of money. You say it is a million dollars. I do not see how it is possible to be a million dollars, but I have no doubt that you have authority for the statement.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have that information from J. H. Barrett, assistant insular treasurer. He gives the exact loss on account of the depreciations as $1,304,568.96.

Mr. MANN. What is the amount of the collection?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not have that, but I think it is seven or eight million dollars altogether.

Mr. MANN. That would be one-seventh, notwithstanding they have made nine—I think the gentleman said nine—different changes in the ratio in about a year of time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman must bear in mind the important fact that a great deal of the money was on hand in the form of deposits received at our rate of exchange and paid out at a much higher rate. The government has coined balances amounting to six or eight million pesos, and had them on hand at the time rates were changed.

Mr. MANN. Did he state if it was put in the bank and held upon a gold basis?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; it was not on a gold basis in the bank always. Banks keep two kinds of accounts—gold and silver. All accounts were kept in silver until the insular government required gold accounts also.

Mr. MANN. If not deposited on a gold basis, there could be no loss on a gold basis.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the situation of affairs, and it is stated by the officers there that there is a loss. A depositor who has a silver account in a bank must lose with the decline of the value of silver. It is somebody's loss, whether it is the customer's or the bankers' is not so material. That is a proposition of ethics that is not involved in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. The difficulty with me upon this point has been that whether the Philippine government would not do better by paying the salaries on a silver basis rather than undertaking to maintain a gold basis for salaries and a silver basis for other use.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. All the government operations are conducted on a gold basis.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think a portion of the salaries are paid on a gold basis. Where Filipinos are employed they are paid upon a silver basis, and the Americans employed are paid upon a gold basis.

Mr. HILL. School-teachers, Army officers, and clerks are all paid in American money, and always have been; but insular officials are paid in insular money.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me suggest the method of business. All the officers of the insular government proper are paid in gold, I think, but the provincial officers are paid in current money, upon the assumption that they are to be paid out of the provincial fund.

Mr. MANN. Upon a silver basis, you mean.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Upon a silver basis.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can not this all be remedied by having your import duties made upon a gold basis, instead of changing the entire silver coin to a gold basis? And would there be any loss whatever if these import duties were imposed in gold there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have given the situation there now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why change the entire currency and the entire standard of value in the operations between individuals and the government when there is simply a shortage of revenue?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They have silver currency, and all dues to the government are payable in gold, and to subserve the convenience of the people the government fixes a ratio between gold and silver so that public dues can be paid in either currency.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would all have to be paid ultimately in products.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is refining the question beyond the point which it is required to go in this discussion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the opinion among business men and all who have thought upon the question is universal that the currency of the islands ought to be put upon the gold standard. The silver standard operates unjustly and disastrously. It is maintained by England in the Straits Settlement and in the Federated Malay States, because English people do the banking there and conduct a large commerce with people in silver countries. Men who are possessed of knowledge and experience are able to protect themselves, but the poor and the helpless are always at the mercy of the capable and the wise. The losses from fluctuations in currency are finally visited upon the ignorant and the helpless in all countries.

I quote from Professor Jenks's report in relation to the operation of the silver standard in East Sumatra, a Dutch colony, and he says the same condition exists in the Straits Settlements and the Federated Malay States. He says:

> There is probably no reason to doubt that under the somewhat peculiar circumstances of this colony of the East Coast the silver currency is, for the present at any rate, decidedly beneficial, not merely to the planters, but also to the productive and mercantile classes in general, while it would probably be difficult to show that the Chinaman, the laborer, is seriously, if at all, injured by his use of this coin, although it is he chiefly who bears the burden.
> Even, however, if it could be shown that the silver standard was maintained at his expense, it is still an open question as to whether the country should endeavor to enlighten the Chinaman, with the certainty that it would be deprived of a considerable part of his services if it were to undertake the task of enlightenment. It should be borne in mind that he is not a citizen; he is an exploiter in a small way who comes to take back to China with him most of his earnings.

That explains the attitude of Great Britain in maintaining the silver standard in many of her oriental colonies. Mining and agriculture are conducted there on a large scale, and almost all the labor is performed by Chinese coolies.

They go there under contract; they are accustomed to the use of the large silver dollar; they know what it means in Chinese trade and Chinese civilization; and Professor Jenks, in his report, says the coolies are so ignorant of the operation of economic law, that notwithstanding the depreciation—the decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar—they do not know where to locate the difficulty, and therefore the planters and the mine owners continue to employ them at a fixed price and to pay them with the constantly depreciating dollar, greatly increasing their profits by the operation.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Is it possible that the gentleman from Indiana offers that statement as a justification for stabilizing the silver currency of the Philippines and exploiting it at the expense of the working people of the islands?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I offer the statement to illustrate the hardship that the silver standard works upon the laboring people in the Orient. Is it not a correct application of an economic truth? Is it not an injustice to the ignorant coolies to be paid year after year in a depreciated coin at the same nominal rate? Do they not carry chiefly the burden of this very imperfect and most unsatisfactory system of coinage?

Mr. HILL. That is all true. And now the proposition in the bill of the majority is to stabilize that system. Does the gentleman advocate that? Is that what we are in the Philippine Islands for?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The proposition of the majority is not to stabilize such a system at all, but to supersede this fluctuating, depreciating currency with a dollar or peso that will be worth as much next year as it is this year; that will be worth as much when the money is paid as it is when the price is agreed upon.

Mr. HILL. I admit that it is proposed to stabilize; but to stabilize what? To stabilize a condition reached after seventeen years of depreciation of silver.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is in accord with me respecting results, but we differ about methods. We are both for a coinage system that will benefit the people of the Philippine Islands and will especially protect the ignorant and helpless who are now the prey of the bankers, the money changers, and the merchants, the men who with a lead pencil write the prices of their commodities without consulting the interests of their patrons.

That is the situation now, and I do not know as it makes much difference where we stabilize the currency so we make its value permanent. The bill of the majority stabilizes the currency at the point where, by tradition and custom, the people of the archipelago associated it, so they will understand more readily its relation to commodities and the fixed standard of value than if we seek to double the traditional value.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Did my colleague understand and say that the incorporation of American money in the Philippine Islands will accomplish that result? Did not the gentleman vote for the Porto Rico and the Hawaiian currency bill? Eighty per cent of the people in the Hawaiian Islands are of the very class of those of the Philippines now.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the extension of the American currency might ultimately—I do not say it is a hopeless proposition—accomplish that result; but how long would it take? It occurs to me, from what I know of conditions down there, that the pathway to that eventuality is a rugged, rocky one, beset with a great many dangers and dire possibilities that this Government is not now prepared to encounter. It is true that we extended the American currency to the island of Porto Rico; but everybody who has investigated conditions there knows that it did disturb, that it did dislocate, local conditions. It could not help it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I must deny that proposition.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is impossible to materially change the standard of value in any country without creating business disturbances, and in many instances working great hardship. That condition was created in Porto Rico by the change, but the difficulty would be multiplied many times in the Philippines, judging from the testimony of men who know and who are best calculated to give judgment on the question, and the situation there just now will not bear much more in the way of discord and friction.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think that the conditions would be worse by a change of this kind in the Philippine Islands than they were in Porto Rico? Is he not aware that shortly after Porto Rico was taken we introduced the American money, and that for five years the American money has been circulating in every nook and corner of the Philippine Islands until to-day there is more American money in the Philippine Islands than there is of any other kind of currency, and that this money is going there to-day at the rate of $2,000,000 a month, right out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I know there is a large amount of American money in the Philippine Islands, principally in the city of Manila; it is in the treasury of the Government or in the vaults of the banks. But there is no American money in the interior among the people who do business on a small scale.

Mr. HILL. Do not the officers at every Army post, the soldiers at every encampment scattered all over the archipelago, receive their pay in American money?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true enough; and that American money finds its way back to the banks. I am talking about the condition of the 6,000,000 natives outside of Manila. If we were legislating for the benefit of American officers, American soldiers, and American school-teachers there, I would believe with the gentleman from Connecticut that it would be the proper and intelligent thing to extend the American currency to the archipelago. But we are legislating for another class of people—a class of people who for generations have been transacting business with the Mexican dollars, with the Spanish pesos and pesetas and centavos, and all that sort of thing. That coinage is woven into the fabric of their business and their civilization.

Custom is infinitely stronger in the Philippine Islands than it is in this country. It is the observation of Professor Jenks that the Chinaman, who possesses fully as high a standard of intelligence and business acumen as the native Filipino insists upon receiving payment of his wages in the large round silver dollars year after year. He will not take anything else; and though they are constantly depreciating, he has not sufficient knowledge of the operation of economic law to know where to locate the difficulty.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me to cite just a single fact in opposition to his suggestion that the Chinaman does not know what he is taking? Last year in China, at Pekin, I could exchange one dollar for eleven 10-cent pieces, the difference being simply the variation between subsidiary coinage and the full legal tender; and the "poor Chinaman," who is supposed to be so ignorant that he does not know the difference, had calculated that variation exactly, so that he would give to any comer eleven 10-cent pieces for a dollar merely on account of the fineness of the coin.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not pretend to say that Chinamen are all ignorant and inexperienced, for they are not. There are many able, shrewd, capable business men in the great Empire of China and in all the marts of the Orient. But the difficulty with the gentleman from Connecticut is that he associated with none but intelligent business men; he did not go down into the provinces and pueblos back in the archipelago and come in contact with the native Filipino in his real home condition.

The gentleman did not associate with the Chinese coolie, who has no appreciation of economic law. It is true that Chinese business men are among the shrewdest business men on the face of the earth; it is likewise true that they go into Singapore and the Straits Settlements, and the Federated Malay States and impose these miserable dollars upon their ignorant countrymen who sweat and toil. British bankers say this is a wise policy. The spirit of Machiavellianism, a wise policy, indeed! They are not our citizens and it is not our business to educate and enlighten them as to the value of money; so they will go on receiving cheaper and cheaper coin, while the profits of the employer continue to grow larger and larger.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it not a fact—I ask for information—that in the city of Manila to-day you pass American silver at its parity value? Is it not true that the American silver dollar will be received in the city of Manila at virtually twice, and at the present time a little more than twice, the value of the Mexican silver dollar?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then what disturbance to business would result if we simply made more American silver dollars to go out gradually farther and farther into the country there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have been laboring for some time to demonstrate the reason why it should not be done. If we had only to legislate for the city of Manila we might extend American currency there without inflicting much hardship, because the people of Manila are fairly well informed in regard to the relative value of the several kinds of money. But by many times the larger portion of the inhabitants of the islands do not live in the city of Manila. They do not have the intelligence, they do not have the experience necessary for their own protection. They are slaves of tradition, custom, and superstition; and their whims and caprices are a factor in the successful operation of any money system.

It would be an egregious mistake to impose our system upon such a people. We must take into consideration the whole situation—the rinderpest, which destroyed the carabao and brought on a rice famine, the cholera, the locusts, the fact that the archipelago has recently been devastated by a dreadful war, and the consequent demoralization. If we add to the already aggravated situation may we not reasonably expect insurrection, and possibly revolution? Is it the time now, let me ask gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, from a political standpoint, to further aggravate a situation that is already bad?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman this question, Whether the conditions in the Philippine Islands to-day are worse than they were in Porto Rico after the hurricane, when the island was practically destroyed, and it was about that time that we introduced the American money there. I supposed our genial friend, the delegate——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman, but I have only ten minutes more time and there are a number of questions which I desire to discuss.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. HILL. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that I have asked the delegate from Porto Rico if he would change back and he said he would not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, briefly, in answering that question I want to say that the conditions in the Philippine Islands to-day are infinitely worse than they ever were in the island of Porto Rico. There is no comparison. The sentiment of discontent, the disposition to ascribe to the American Government in the archipelago the responsibility for the distresses of the people, are such now that conditions are really serious and they will not bear any more aggravation. They are infinitely worse than they ever were in the island of Porto Rico.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to my colleague, I must decline to yield. I have but little time and have several propositions to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the face of the testimony which was submitted to the committee which reported this bill, and in view of the character of the argument which was adduced by the various witnesses before the committee, I believe there is but one intelligent course for this country to pursue, and that is to establish the Conant system of currency, fixing the peso at 50 cents in gold and stabilizing it on that basis, so that business men and bankers and toilers may know, when they receive a peso, exactly what it is worth—so stabilize it that it will be worth as much next year as it is to-day, so that all can depend upon it. I would like to go further into that question, but I do not have the time.

The pending bill provides that the standard unit of value shall be the gold dollar. It has been suggested that the standard unit ought to be a fictitious peso, equal to one-half the gold dollar. If we were making a permanent system of currency for the archipelago and were going into the business of coining gold pesos, making the silver peso exchangeable for the gold peso, there would be force in the suggestion that the gold peso be made the standard unit of value, but no one pretends that either this Government or the government of the Philippine Islands shall coin any gold pesos.

If there is to be redemption or interchangeability, the redemption shall be by the American gold dollar and the interchangeability shall be with the American gold dollar. Therefore every consideration of logic and practicability suggests that the standard unit of value should be the American gold dollar. Redemption is to be in the American gold dollar and exchangeability shall be with the American gold dollar, and that ought to be a standard unit of value.

Now, the question about the ability of the archipelago to maintain the parity I have not time to go into at length, though I would like to do so. It does present, in my judgment, a question that is somewhat serious, but with a limitation upon the volume, and the power which is conferred upon the insular government to employ the usual safeguards, including the issuing of temporary certificates of indebtedness for the maintenance of a redemption fund, it is the judgment of men who are qualified to speak upon that question that there will be no difficulty on the part of the insular government in maintaining the parity of the coins.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him one question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HILL. Was not the bone of contention between the House and the Senate last session the absolute, unalterable position taken by the Senate that they could not do just what you are proposing to do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, I understand that the Senate took the position that the Philippine government could not maintain the parity and the House took the other position, and the Senate, I understand, is converted to the position of the House, because a bill has been introduced and reported by the Philippine Committee of the Senate establishing the Conant system, substantially, as we provide for it here. They have changed base upon that question.

Now, in relation to the danger of authorizing an unlimited issue, that danger is always present in a fiat currency. It has been the temptation of governments in all times to abuse the power, to yield to the pressure to create fiat money when it can be done by simply printing and issuing; but I hope the American people have had sufficient experience so that they are able to safely handle that question, and I make the assertion that the insular government of the Philippine Islands, where the discretion is lodged by this bill, is safer upon that proposition than the United States Government itself.

Mr. HILL. I have thought that to be true.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Safer than the Federal Government, because the insular government consists of the Philippine Commission, appointed by the President of the United States. They are in a position where they will not yield to a temporary frenzy in time of great depression for more money and cheaper money, where political clamor can not influence them, and their safety and conservatism are free from assault. They are free from conditions that move the Congress of the United States, a body which is very liable to reflect in its work the weaknesses as well as the virtues of popular opinion.

In times of great pressure and great distress in the country, in times of monetary panic, there is always a demand for more money and cheaper money, and if a Republican President had been elected in 1892 and the panic had come on the country as it did come, I have many times wondered if in 1896 Democracy, under the banner of free silver, would not have swept into power, and that abominable heresy have been inflicted upon the country. Who can tell?

I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, that my friends on the other side of the Hall oppose the system that is proposed by the committee. I would not have been surprised at all, if the committee had proposed the bill that the minority report, the minority had insisted upon the Conant plan. I presume that is the legitimate function of the opposition party.

I would not charge gentlemen in control of the minority measure with attempting to play politics with the situation—they never do that; but if the American system of currency as it exists here should be extended to the Philippines and should create further distress and disturbance who can tell what effect it might have upon the next Presidential election, how great a factor it might be, how effectively the argument might be used that the Administration lacked the ability to preserve and maintain peace and tranquillity in the islands after it has been once established there?

There is another proposition I want to refer to before I conclude, and that is involved in section 6 of this bill. An attempt was made to amend section 6 so as to preserve the rights of creditors in the discharge of debts that were contracted under the existing currency, to pay them off in that currency at its face value. On an analysis of that section I am satisfied that the committee did exactly what it did not intend to do.

If this bill shall pass, debts that have been contracted in the past and that are payable in Mexican coin and Spanish pesos today would be payable in the legal-tender money of the country at the time of payment, and this would add at least 25 per cent to every existing obligation. It was the intention of the committee to make provision so that debtors who now owe money might discharge their obligations in the currency in which the debts were contracted. And at the proper time I shall submit an amendment to that section which I think will accomplish what the committee desire to do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall use all the time that has been allotted to me, as there are several gentlemen who desire to speak on this side. In fact, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion until I listened to some of the arguments advanced by gentlemen on the other side in support of the measure offered by the majority.

But when I observed from the closing remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that he had taken occasion to appeal to political considerations to secure the passage of this bill, it was evident to me that they were not willing to risk the passage of the bill upon its merits alone. It seemed to me, in listening to the chairman of the committee that the most of his argument, as well as the arguments of those distinguished gentlemen from which he quoted so extensively, were directed more against the financial situation in the Philippine Islands than in support of any particular measure for the relief of those conditions.

We admit that legislation of some kind is necessary. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I knew just how far we had proceeded along the route of incorporating the Philippine Islands into the United States as a part of the United States I might be better prepared to discuss this question. But I want to say that so long as the American Government continues to hold on to those islands as a part of the United States I believe that we should govern them the same as any other Territory of the United States, and I am not prepared to say that even the passage of this substitute offered by the minority is necessary to make American money a legal tender in the Philippine Islands.

There is no question but what there is a great deal of American money in the islands to-day. The report of the Schurman Commission, the evidence taken before the Committee on Insular Affairs, as well as the statements of the distinguished gentlemen who have visited those islands, all show that there is now a large volume of American money in circulation in those islands. Now, what will be the result if you pass the bill offered by the majority? In connection with that large volume of American money you will have another currency, entirely different, namely, that provided by this measure.

They will have the American dollar in the Philippine Islands and the Filipino peso, almost the same size, but with only half the value. One is to be exchanged for a hundred cents in gold and the other for 50 cents, and both issued by authority of the same Government. It will necessarily lead to confusion, a great deal more than if there were but one system of coinage for the islands. So long as we retain those islands, so long as they are occupied by the American Government, and I may say by the American people, a large amount of American money will be in circulation there, and I believe it will be better, not only for the Americans there, but natives as well, that they should have but one system of currency. A double system can but lead to confusion.

If there is anything that a person of but little intelligence and without any education learns more rapidly and more easily than anything else in this world it is the value of money, and it will only take them a short time to acquire this knowledge. If we are ever going to introduce American money into those islands, can you select a better time than now for that purpose? You admit they have a bad financial system. Why not supplant it with a better one? The bill offered by the majority is but an experiment at best. If you adopt it how long do you expect to continue it; one year, five years, or ten years? And if you do will you ever be in any better condition to introduce American money than now? It is said our money is more valuable and laboring men will refuse to work for a reasonable price.

There will never be a time in the history of those islands when there is more reason for an advance, and a great advance, in the rate of wages than at the present time. The amount of American capital going into those islands for their development will necessarily more than double—yes, more than treble—the demand for labor, and wages ought to increase. There is no better time for wages to increase in those islands, and therefore no better time to introduce money of a higher value than at the present time and under present conditions.

It is said that the laborer will refuse to take the American 50-cent piece as readily as the Filipino coin twice the size, though their value be the same. When he learns than an American coin half the size of a Filipino coin will buy just as many of the necessaries of life he will no longer hesitate to accept the American money at its full value. But the chairman of the committee says the merchant will endeavor to keep up the price of his goods and sell them higher on account of the introduction of American money. Will not the competition between the merchants in those islands regulate that matter there the same as it does at other places, and will it not be a very short time until the prices of the goods sold there will adjust themselves to the new American money, and when the laboring man sees that he can get just as many of the necessaries of life for 25 cents in American money as he could for 50 cents of the other money he will readily accept it.

Here is another suggestion I want to make, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that this Government, when establishing a currency system in those islands differing from that in Porto Rico, differing from that in other territories of the United States, is discriminating against those people, and it will not help the establishment of friendly relations between the United States and the Filipinos. I should think their pride would be to be treated as nearly as possible the same as other citizens of the United States and that they would want the same kind of money as we have in other parts of the United States. I believe it would have a tendency to increase our trade there, and it certainly will not hinder it.

Here is another suggestion I want to make. Gentlemen on the other side took the position that those people were not capable of self-government. By the passage of this bill one of the greatest functions of a government is imposed upon them, that of maintaining parity between an unlimited amount of silver coin and gold coin. It is true it is limited, but only by the discretion of the Commission itself; and while it is a great Commission, while we all recognize that Judge Taft and his colleagues on that Commission are men of distinguished ability, I do not believe that Commission or any other commission is as capable of legislating and establishing a coinage system for the people of the Philippine Islands or any other people as the American Congress. I think here is where that question ought to be settled.

Now, what do you do by this bill? You provide that in order for them to maintain their parity, the Commission, officers who are foreign to that people, not a part of those people, shall have the power to issue gold certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $5,000,000. You can not have more than five millions in circulation at one time, but you can issue five millions every year, because these bonds are made payable in three months, and not more than one year. And at what rate of interest? At such reasonable rate as the Commission may fix. The Commission can issue them at any rate of interest which it considers reasonable.

Suppose this bill passes and we should have designing men in those islands, as we had in the United States a few years ago, who wanted to force the Philippine Government to issue five millions of gold certificates, could they not do so and produce the same endless chain for forcing the issue of gold bonds in the Philippine Islands that we had in the United States? Will you contend that that people, whom you claim are entirely incapable of self-government, and weak in finances, are able to take care of a condition as serious as the one we had in our own country a few years ago while trying to secure gold to maintain the parity of our two metals?

But that is not all. When this $5,000,000 is issued, the power of the Philippine Commission to maintain the parity is exhausted. How are you going to pay off that indebtedness? There is no provision made, and while it is outstanding no further indebtedness for this purpose can be created. Suppose under such conditions the two metals part company, suppose the parity disappears, what remedy have you then? None. I say it is a mistake. I care not how sound this bill may be in other respects, it is a mistake to place upon the people in those islands, in their present weak condition, the burdon of maintaining the parity between the two metals as provided for in this bill. I think the safer plan is to extend to those people our own monetary system, as provided in the substitute offered by the minority.

Now, gentlemen talk about stabilizing the currency over there, and the word "stabilizing" seems to be rather fascinating to those on that side of the House—"stabilizing the currency." How do you stabilize it? By your bill you simply put it all in the discretion of the Philippine Commission. That is all. And, as was said by my colleague, you would have about as much legislation if you would simply pass a bill of a few lines authorizing the Philippine Commission to take charge of this whole question. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 1193. An act to correct the military record of Henry M. Holmes; and

H. R. 16021. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. RAWLINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 53.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination to be made of the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, between Wenatchee and Kettle Falls, with a view to removing obstructions to navigation, and to submit plans and estimates of cost therefor.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty-five minutes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I am going to convert you to the gold standard. In 1861 the Philippines had a gold standard with a mint of their own. In 1876 the Mexican dollar, the cheaper money, drove out the gold and took possession of the country, but it has taken possession of it on a gold basis. Gold has always measured silver there on the basis of 16 to 1.

Now comes the proposition to substitute another standard, 32 to 1. We have had various authorities quoted to us why this should be done. The chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs has given us what he calls many authorities. I give him the authority of the United States Senate, who say in as emphatic words as Governor Taft said, that it would be disastrous to the Philippine Islands to change the standard. They said so in their official report made to the United States last June. And now he comes in here with a proposition that proposes to change the standard from 16 to 1 to 32 to 1. It is not a proposition to adopt the gold standard in the Philippine Islands; it is a proposition to adopt the silver standard in the Philippine Islands on a basis of 32 to 1, saying to my silver friends from Colorado, "You shall never advance silver in this country beyond 32 to 1," and saying to the gold-standard friends, "We will try and hold it up by a reserve fund to 32 to 1." That is what this bill proposes to do; not to adopt a gold standard at all.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of the committee, cites Japan among other cases. I want the members of the House to compare in their minds the difference between Japan and the gold standard at 32 to 1 and the Philippine Islands and a silver standard of 32 to 1. There is this difference: Japan, when she started in on the gold standard, had seventy-eight millions of full legal-tender silver, and what did she do with it? The first thing was to sell forty millions of it as bullion and recoin the other thirty-eight millions into subsidiary coin, and they have to-day a gold basis.

Look at the difference. The committee brings in a 32 to 1 standard, and what do they propose to do? Deliberately inject seventy-five millions, according to the Senate, and an unlimited amount, according to the House, of full legal-tender silver into the currency system to begin with—the very thing Japan disposed of before she went on a gold basis at all. The two conditions are radically opposite. The Senate bill proposes an imaginary unit of 12.9 grains. This bill does not propose any gold whatever. The entire system of coinage will be silver and nothing else. There is the difference between the two.

Gentlemen cite India. The difference is just as marked in India as in Japan. Why, sir, does any sane man believe that if India were starting a new system of coinage she would start in with several hundred millions of silver rupees? Not at all. The people of India found themselves in that condition, and they are doing the best they can. This is a proposition to begin over again, not to make the best of existing conditions. And it is proposed to drive out everything in the way of coinage over there and start anew; start where we are, in the United States, only 50 per cent worse. Would we to-day inaugurate a new coinage system in the United States with 600,000,000 legal-tender silver dollars? Not by any manner of means. Yet that is the proposition.

Gentlemen say that India is maintaining parity. It is true. But she is maintaining parity by exchangeability, and there is not a thing in this bill which says anything about exchangeability. India is paying out gold for silver and silver for gold. It is a very sad fact that India was able to do this last year by reason of the circumstance that six and a half millions of gold came in from the poor peasants who, on account of the famine and other hardships of life, were obliged to surrender their personal ornaments and turn them into the treasury of India.

Look at the difference. India has $1.58 per capita of silver. We have $8. The Senate bill starts off with the proposition to supply that little desolated archipelago over there with $75,000,000—$12.50 per capita—and the House bill makes no limit whatever; it leaves the matter entirely discretionary with the insular government—not with Governor Taft, but with the men who will succeed him after he has gone upon the Supreme Bench or become President of the United States. That is the difference. It is to be left entirely with them to coin all they please.

Next, Mr. Conant is quoted. I know Mr. Conant. He is an able man; and he is cited here as authority for this new patent hybrid currency system proposed to be started over in the Philippines. I want to ask the chairman of the committee for what has Mr. Conant received such great distinction in this and other countries? For a History of Banking—a magnificent work. He is an able gentleman. In that work he has gone into the banking system as existing in every country of the world. He submitted to this committee a banking system for the Philippine Islands, every word of which has been discarded from the bill and rejected. If gentlemen thought so highly of his currency system, why did they not think well of his banking system? But every word of the latter was rejected.

We have been referred to the Netherlands as an illustration of silver being maintained at par. It is true; but it is the coinage of the Netherlands in Europe that is being maintained at a parity, just as ours would be if we should adopt this minority proposition and introduce our coinage over there. There is no special silver coinage in the Netherlands; and all of the coinage of the Netherlands is maintained at parity to-day by a provision in their laws that if at any time the Government of the Netherlands should deem it wise, they may withdraw a large part of its silver coinage and melt it down into bullion, without waiting for the approval of their legislative authority. So, when the Netherlands are cited as a justification of this proposition, it is simply an argument in favor of the bill presented by the minority here.

Now, the chairman of this committee ought to be fair. He has presented here a paper which he and other gentlemen have received recently from the Philippine Islands, called the Cable News, and he has read a number of statements as to the desirability of this new system of coinage. He read a word or two from Mr. William H. Anderson, of the Pacific Oriental Trading Company, one of the largest importing houses in the islands, having agencies at Honkgong, India, and various seaport towns.

Let me read what the gentleman did not read from the expressions of this same gentleman:

The next house visited was the Pacific Oriental Trading Company, one of the largest importing houses in the islands, having agencies at Hongkong, Iloilo, Cebu, Tacloban, and other seaport towns. Mr. William H. Anderson, general manager of the company, said to the Cablenews representative:

"The currency of the Philippines is in awful shape. Commerce has been given a blow from which it will not recover soon. When the currency of a country is affected, the commerce, the life of any country, the mainstay of any nation, is also affected. Without commerce there can be no prosperity.

"Manila is rapidly coming in contact with the markets of the world, and the commerce of the Philippines had been making rapid strides until the depreciation of Mexican money began. Since that time commerce has retrogressed woefully. However bad the effect of the recent silver fluctuations have been upon the business community, Manila has not yet lost her standing with the other markets. Being, as we are, in contact with the other markets, our currency should be the same as theirs—gold. I do not believe in the Conant dollar as a medium of exchange. Many claim that the American money will not be accepted by the natives. Why, the first thing a people learn—I don't care where they live or what kind of people they are—the first thing they learn from foreigners is their money. It is nonsense to say that the natives will not accept the American dime in place of a peseta."

Why, sir, an American nickel goes for gold anywhere in the world. A Japanese 'ricksha man, a Chinese cooly, will take an American nickel for gold anywhere. There are a dozen gentlemen on this floor who know that what I am saying is true, for they have had the knowledge of personal experience. I cite as one of these a gentleman immediately before me [Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania].

Mr. Conant says the same thing in his testimony; yet gentlemen come in here and say that these natives in the Philippine Islands will not accept American money. Why, sir, only last week I called upon a colonel of the American Army, whom I met out there in the Philippines. He has been there two years. I said to him, "Give me your judgment as to what kind of currency would be acceptable in the Philippine Islands. Will those people take American money?" He said, "Yes." "Why," said I, "the natives would not know that an American 10-cent piece was equal to a 20-centavo piece of Philippine coinage." "Do you think so?" said he. "Why, sir, away up in the northern end of Luzon, away up in the woods, those people coming into my quarters would ask me to sell American coin at a premium over and above the rate fixed by the Commission. Why? Because, as they said, when they got American money, they knew where to find it, and when they had their own money, it was sometimes here and sometimes there."

And they were ready to pay a premium of 12 per cent, or 272 cents, for a dollar instead of $2.60, the rate fixed by the commission in order to get American money, and that is what they are doing to-day; and I shall go into that subject in a moment as to the facilities which they have for doing it.

Mr. Anderson adds:

It is nonsense to say that the native will not accept the American dime in place of a peseta. Of course you may go back into the interior, employ a native to do a certain thing, and he will naturally prefer to be paid in Mexican, simply because he is accustomed to that currency. Now, suppose I owed a native a peseta and I laid down a peseta and a 10-cent piece, side by side. He would pick up the peseta, of course; but if I refused to pay him in Mexican, and gave him the 10-cent piece, what would be the result? He would finger the dime suspiciously and grumble. However, when he went to a store, presented his 10-cent piece, and asked for that much rice, he would receive a peseta's worth. His education would then be complete. He would realize, through this simple object lesson, that American money is worth twice as much as the Mexican and would be satisfied with the former.

Aside from the losses which we sustain from the use of the peso there are other objections to it. It is the most cumbersome coin in existence. It can not be transported with the ease with which currency should be taken from one place to another. Frequently our losses from its use can be attributed solely to its cumbersomeness. For instance, a man sends in an order from the provinces, and we ship the goods on the next steamer. (Here is another obstacle in our way, but I will not dwell upon it. I mean transportation, or rather the lack of it.) It may be a month before the goods arrive, and, owing to the scarcity of paper money in the provinces, the merchant can not remit for his goods, even if he wants to do so, immediately. He must wait until some friend can carry the money for him, or he must make a special trip to pay for the goods, which is often impossible. The result is we wait from two to three months for the money. In the meantime the price of silver has fallen, and when the money finally arrives we find that we have sold the goods for about the amount they cost us plus the transportation and other expenses incurred in getting them here.

WE LOSE, IT MATTERS NOT IN WHAT COIN WE DEAL.

We have now put our business on a gold basis, but before this we lost heavily on such transactions. And now that we have begun doing business in gold our trade is falling off on account of the advanced prices which we quote in Mexican at the Government rate. We lose both ways. If prices are in Mexican we lose on exchange, and if our prices are in gold we lose in trade. So it is apparent that we lose, no matter in what coin we deal.

What we want is a stable currency, and it is absolutely necessary that we have it. Everybody is a victim of the present currency system. As I said before, I am not in favor of the Conant dollar, but its adoption would greatly relieve the situation, because it will be stable.

How was it in Porto Rico? I wish that our good friend, the Delegate from Porto Rico, was permitted to stand upon this floor and tell the experience of the people of Porto Rico with regard to their change of currency. I have here a letter, which I have not time to read, from Governor Hunt, of Porto Rico, in which he states that while there was trouble for about thirty days, owing to conditions down there, that the change was a wise one, and substantially saying that if he had it to do he would do it over again. I want to have one letter read, showing in a very few words the result of the change of the currency system from the irredeemable currency of Porto Rico to American money, and I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN COLONIAL BANK OF PORTO RICO,
San Juan, August 15, 1901.

CHARLES A. CONANT, Esq.,
Special Commissioner to Philippine Islands, Manila.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 25th July came duly to hand. The change in currency in this island was made easily and comparatively quickly, and did not result in hardship to the people to any great extent. At first the smaller merchants were disposed to ask dollars in place of pesos for their wares, but competition in business soon stopped that. Wages have risen slightly, but not as a result of the change of moneys, the cause being purely the result of better conditions and greater profits among the agricultural classes, save with the coffee growers. With them the destruction of crops, and in many cases of whole plantations, by the hurricane of 1899, has cheapened the price of labor. We do not think that harm resulted to anyone, save temporarily in a few cases, through change of money, and it has removed the fluctuation of value in the money of the country. American currency was at a premium most of the time, and values changed as much as 2 per cent in a single day. There is no more of that, much to our relief, and the people here appreciate the change from their cheap money to one that passes current the world over. We trust the same plans may be carried out in all of "Uncle Sam's" new dominions, as it does a good deal toward Americanizing the people of the country.

Truly, yours, E. L. ARNOLD, Cashier.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to have read also the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America.

The Clerk read as follows:

And if in addition United States currency shall follow the flag, the time is not far distant when the prices current of all Asia will be written in United States money. Porto Rico suffered temporarily by a changed standard, but it took no longer to learn the purchasing power of the different denominations of United States money than it would to have learned a new system. Surely the world has as many kinds of money as it needs, but it has none so convenient as United States money. Let United States money be made as secure as the British pound, and its employment in the commerce of the world will become as universal as the use of the English language. They are both the natural servants of commerce.

Mr. HILL. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the expression of opinion on this bill by a gentleman whose superiority on a question of coinage and currency over any other citizen of the United States will not be doubted by anybody in the country. I refer to Mr. Horace White, of New York. He declares as his opinion that this is simply a silver-purchasing bill. That opinion is as follows:

THE PHILIPPINE CURRENCY BILL.

Just before the holiday adjournment of Congress Senator LODGE reported from the Committee on the Philippines a bill (S. 6357) to regulate the currency of the islands. It provides, first, that the gold peso, equal to a half-dollar of our money, shall be the unit of value, but does not provide for any gold coinage. Instead of that, it makes the gold coins of the United States legal tender in the Philippines at the rate of $1 for 2 pesos. Next, it provides for a silver peso of full legal tender, to be coined from bullion bought by the Government, and of which the Government must coin twenty millions, and may coin seventy-five millions. Thirdly, it provides for subsidiary silver coins to be legal tender for $10.

The effect of this measure is to establish in the Philippines what is called the "limping standard," a phrase applied to countries which have the gold standard nominally, but also have a large amount of silver of full legal tender. Germany, France, and the countries of the Latin Union are in this category. The United States is in the same category. None of the countries named consider the condition a happy one. The European nations took the limping standard because they could not help themselves. They caught it as people catch the measles. They had large amounts of silver in circulation in the early seventies, when the gold standard swept over the civilized world, and they could not get rid of it. Germany made great efforts to sell hers, and did dispose of a part of it. In doing so she broke the price of the metal, so that when the Latin Union countries decided to stop coining silver they had no market on which to sell theirs. The United States is the only country which took this kind of measles voluntarily. We took it with our politics, but no political party is very proud of it now. Nor shall we have any reason to be proud if, after our experience with it and our knowledge of it in other lands, we inflict it upon a people who are under our legislative control.

The great objection to the limping standard is its uncertainty. Those who are under its régime never know where they may stand a year hence. A bill is now pending in Congress to remove the uncertainty which the limping standard entails—a bill to provide for the redemption of the silver dollar in gold. The act of March 14, 1900, recognized the uncertainty by a clause requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the silver dollar at par with the gold dollar, but did not provide him any means to do so. Senate bill 6357 recognizes the same uncertainty attaching to this system in the Philippines, by authorizing the government of the islands to adopt such measures as it may deem proper to maintain parity between the gold and silver coins and to borrow $10,000,000 gold for that purpose. This clause of the bill expresses the fear of its framers that the equilibrium of the standard will not be maintained without extraneous and extraordinary efforts.

Looking at the details of the bill, it is very doubtful whether parity can be maintained if the government of the Philippines exercises all the powers conferred upon it. It must coin 20,000,000 and it may coin 75,000,000 silver pesos of full legal tender, at the ratio of 32 to 1, while the market ratio of silver to gold is 43 to 1. The line of prudence and safety under the limping standard lies in keeping the amount of the overvalued money (the silver pesos) no greater than the retail trade of the country can absorb, but the temptation will be ever present to overpass the limit. We know how this is ourselves. Unless the Philippine government is wiser than the Washington Government was we may expect to see the limit overpassed as it was under the Sherman Act.

In devising a new monetary system for the Philippines the simplest plan is the best. The gold standard, as provided in the bill before us, with a silver subsidiary coinage of the kind provided in the act passed by Congress last year, is quite sufficient. There is no good reason for thrusting in a third kind of money whose sole virtue will consist in its redemption in gold. These pesos would be both an element of danger and a needless expense. As the bill provides for issuing paper certificates for them like our silver certificates, why not issue the certificates in the first instance? The pesos are to circulate on the credit of the government, not on their intrinsic value. Our silver certificates would circulate just as well, perhaps better, if there was not a dollar of silver behind them. If the Filipinos prefer to handle silver rather than paper, give them plenty of half pesos, which the bill also provides for. The natives probably know that two halves are equal to a whole one.

As the pesos are quite unnecessary, the only visible object of coining them is to make a market for silver bullion. We trust that the Senate committee is not now trying to "do something for silver" at the expense of the Filipinos, but we recall the fact that the Senate bill of the last session did have that aim, since it contained a clause that the coins might be made at our mint, but that the silver bullion so coined should be of American production.

We are told by some people that if we introduce the single gold standard we shall increase the wages of labor in the islands. That depends upon the ratio between gold and silver which may be taken as a starting point. Wages in the Philippines, although nominally the same as of old, have been actually reduced by the decline in the value of silver. The laborer, who gets a peso in wages, can not buy so much with it as before. As regards future wages, the question is, what shall the future peso be? The bill says it shall be an amount of gold equal to half of an American dollar. That is the ratio of 32 to 1. It is a fair starting point, since it was the market ratio when we took the islands. It was the ratio actually adopted by Japan in the same year. There has been a fresh drop in silver within a few weeks, which has cut the effective wages of labor still lower. The Filipino laborer has been thrown down by the force of circumstances, and Congress ought not to hold him down, but rather to lift him up and put him on his feet, especially since Congress neglected its duty in this particular last summer, when it might have avoided the major part of this trouble.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I will submit a letter on this question from Governor William H. Taft, just received from the Philippine Islands, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MANILA, P. I., November 25, 1902.

Hon. E. J. HILL, M. C., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR Mr. HILL: I thank you very much for your letter of the 15th of August. The monetary condition here is now dreadful. Exercising the authority which the Philippine act gave me, I have fixed the official ratio as 1 to 2.60; in other words, the Mexican dollar has lost in gold value in less than one year 30 per cent. This has inflicted a great deal of hardship upon the wage-earners, whose salaries do not change with the change in value of silver, while that which they buy and have to live on does change and follows the market for silver.

Mr. HILL. Just one moment there, Mr. Chairman. I want the members of this House to listen to that sentence. Eighteen years ago the Philippine Islands were on a gold basis, and wages paid accordingly. You can take the testimony of these commissions—the Schurman, the Taft—all of these commissions right straight through, and it will show you that while prices have advanced as silver has decreased, wages have been practically stationary, and these poor people there have been robbed by this depreciation in silver. Now, then, what does this bill propose to do? Where it started, sixteen or eighteen years ago, dollar for dollar and has gone down to one-fifty, two hundred, two-fifty, two seventy-two, this bill proposes, by power of governmental action, to take silver from two seventy-two and lift it up to two hundred and hold it there, and when it proposes that, it proposes to hold the wages of these poor people—never over 10 cents a day in any money—right there at two for one, and "if you do not do it, gentlemen," they say, "it means revolution!" I never yet heard of a people who started a revolution against their own increase in wages. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman not know that since the American occupation of the Philippine Islands the wages of laboring men have doubled, nominally, in the coin of the country and in some instances trebled?

Mr. HILL. I know they have in Manila.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to know what the gentleman means by saying that they have remained stationary.

Mr. HILL. They have in Manila, and I am glad of it. But they are only now paid 10 cents in gold.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask what the gentleman meant by stating to this committee that the wages had remained stationary during all these periods and that it was the purpose of the committee——

Mr. HILL. I said that was the purport of the testimony through every commission. I have read every word of it from beginning to end, and it shows that the effect of this fall in silver has come from the pockets, from the sweat and blood, of the poor working people of these islands, and I have very little doubt that that had as much to do with the Philippine insurrection as any other one thing. I say that as Republicans, anyhow, it does not lie in our mouths to say that we will refuse to pass a currency bill which will help in wages the laborer, increasing his pay from 10 cents a day upward. [Applause.] That is my doctrine.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. This bill provides or attempts to provide, first, that the unit shall rest upon the United States gold dollar.

Mr. HILL. Well, this bill does. The Senate bill does not.

Mr. CANNON. Second, that 2 pesos shall be a legal tender, within certain limitations, for a dollar.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And that the peso is to have a weight of 416 grains.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. That the money shall be maintained at a parity by redemption.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In gold.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, that gives the 2 pesos double the weight of our half dollar, and more.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And puts the burden upon the insular government to maintain the parity.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, so much for the bill. I would be glad to know what the gentleman would put in its place?

Mr. HILL. I would put American money in every possession of the American Government anywhere. Whenever we take them, I would let American money go with the American flag.

Mr. CANNON. That is to say, the gentleman would put the gold dollar there as the unit, and it would put the half dollar there not weighing half as much as the peso, and he would maintain that at a parity, would he not?

Mr. HILL. Oh, certainly.

Mr. CANNON. How much easier is it to maintain a half dollar at a parity with gold, when the half dollar does not weigh half as much and is not worth half as much intrinsically as the peso?

Mr. HILL. I stated some time ago, before the gentleman came in, that if the United States were to start a new system of coinage to-day not even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], with his antiquated notions in regard to money, would consent to have it start with 600,000,000 legal-tender silver dollars in our currency to-day. [Applause.] But this is a new proposition. This is to start off a new system of currency among a poor, ignorant people—amongst a low-down people, only half civilized.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me another question, because he switches——

Mr. HILL. Well, I am careful not to switch the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Under this bill the insular government maintains the money at a parity. Now, who maintains the United States half dollar, under the gentleman's scheme, at a parity with gold in the Philippines?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that question just as soon as we hear the rest of Governor Taft's letter, if you will hold it for a moment or two.

Mr. CANNON. I will hold it, but I should be glad to have an answer as to how that is to be maintained.

Mr. HILL. There is no trouble about that. I will come to that.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want declamation——

Mr. McCALL. But information.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moreover, those who have permanent investments—and there are quite a number in Manila and the islands—the income from which is payable in silver, are suffering greatly. The depression in agriculture is very great; 90 per cent of the carabaos have died, and they are almost indispensable in the cultivation of rice. Rice has gone from $4 Mexican to $7 a picul of 137½ pounds; and in many of the provinces, due to defective interisland transportation, it has reached $12 a picul. We have had to buy 300,000 piculs with the hope of steadying the price, and we expect to distribute it through the provinces.

We are very much in need of legislation that shall put us on a gold basis. I do not insist on the Conant plan, though I think that the most feasible.

Mr. HILL. Listen to that, gentlemen. One moment. I want the members of the House to listen to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield fifteen minutes more to the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for fifteen minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. But I should like to hear what Governor Taft says.

Mr. HILL. I am learning by experience, following the example of our friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], never to allow the thread of one's argument to be broken until one gets ready to have it.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. HILL. I want it distinctly understood by the members of this House that we have been told to-day that the adoption of American money in the Philippine Islands will prove disastrous to them, and will even create a revolution; and yet Governor Taft says to me, over his own signature, that he does not "insist" on that proposition; that all he wants is legislation giving us the gold standard.

Now, I ask the Clerk to go on with the reading, please.

The Clerk read as follows:

But some relief must be given us, and that at this session of Congress. I sincerely hope, too, that Congress will be generous and will reduce the Dingley rates from 25 per cent reduction to 75 per cent, so that agriculture may receive encouragement here. Neither the sugar crop nor the tobacco crop will reach America in sufficient quantities to influence the market, but, on the other hand, it will greatly aid us. Anything you can do to help us in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

I am, with great respect, sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, we were asked last night to give authorities, and we have tried to cite a few. I ask the chairman why he does not quote his witness of six months ago—the Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, who appeared before the committee in favor of this proposition. He is now standing for American money only.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What does he know about the condition of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HILL. He knew six months ago, when he was your witness. I saw that from the investigation. If you inquire you can not find an officer of the Treasury Department of the United States, from the Secretary, the Treasurer of the United States, to the assistant treasurer of the United States, who is not to-day in favor of the introduction of American money. Gentlemen, you have not got to introduce it; it is there.

Mr. CANNON. But if my friend will allow me, because he has the courage of his convictions——

Mr. HILL. I know just exactly what the gentleman wants me to say, and I am ready to say it—that the United States has got to maintain the parity over there, and he does not believe in doing that.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I admit it, and I admit that we have got to maintain the parity of our money anywhere in the world, wherever it goes, less freight and insurance in transferring the gold.

Mr. CANNON. We get at the exact point of difference between us.

Mr. HILL. I am not ready to discuss it, but by and by I will take it up if I have time.

Mr. CANNON. It goes to the very gist of the matter.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is whether this will be a greater change for American money than if we adopt this system. Last summer when this matter was under consideration I went to the Treasury Department and inquired as to the amount of American money that had been sent there, and I found that the Pay Department had sent $24,000,000, the Quartermaster's Department sent $3,000,000, the Commissary Department $370,000, and was advised that other payments of the Pay Department would amount to $12,000,000 in drafts; so there were forty millions of American money we had sent there. The other day I asked Mr. Meline, the assistant treasurer, how much they were sending over there now, and he said on an average $2,000,000 a month was being sent there of American money.

Our friends of the Insular Committee recognized that situation last session and provided that American money should be a legal tender. But they have stricken that out now, leaving only gold as a legal tender there. So if you go on and adopt the provision in the insular bill you have got two tasks before you: First, to drive out the Mexican, and then to drive out the American money; and the last is not a good task for American representatives to be engaged in—to attempt to drive American money out of those islands. Whether we are going to keep them or not, and I think we are going to keep them, let us keep the American coin in circulation there, and it ought to be there to keep our trade in the same form of money. Talk about the peasants and natives not accepting American money! When I was there in Manila, I visited the Insular Cigar Manufactory, where they have 2,500 hands employed. The manager is an Englishman.

I asked him if a change to the coinage of the United States would be of advantage to him. He answered, "The trouble is, you didn't do it when you came here." He said, "You ought to have adopted American money immediately." He said, "The danger is in the delay in doing it." I asked him, "How do you pay your employees?" He said, "In anything; American dollars, Singapore dollars, Bombay dollars, Mexican dollars, anything I may happen to have, on the going ratio, and they take it just the same, according to the going ratio." They understand it, and they will understand it. The quickest thing one learns is to count in a foreign language and to reckon foreign money.

This is one of the tasks before you. Now, gentlemen, this bill is to establish the silver system in the Philippine Islands, to stableize the present rate of wages. That is what it means. My friend from Illinois wanted to ask me a question. Although my throat is very sore, I will endeavor to answer it if I can. Now, providing we have American money there, who is going to maintain the parity? Who is going to maintain the parity of this money?

Mr. CANNON. The insular revenues of the insular government. The silver half dollar contains over twice as much silver as the American.

Mr. HILL. Certainly; but who maintains the parity of the American dollar in the Philippine Islands? Answer me that.

Mr. CANNON. The American dollar in the Philippine Islands——

Mr. HILL. Who maintains the parity?

Mr. CANNON. It maintains itself.

Mr. HILL. That is what it will do if you make this change. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend——

Mr. HILL. I will tell you how it will affect the gold coin. If your government which you have started—our government, pardon me—which we have started over there is able to maintain the parity under the terms of this bill, who is going to furnish the gold for commercial transactions under the terms of the bill which the gentleman has reported?

Mr. CANNON. Who furnishes it under your system?

Mr. HILL. The banks.

Mr. CANNON. The bank?

Mr. HILL. The bill provides that the government shall do it under your bill, and the very losses which are occurring now from the shrinkage of silver, which losses occur to the man who has got the Mexican dollar in his pocket, will be saddled on the government under the terms of your bill, and they have got the balance of trade against them all the time, and they can't do it, and the Senate told you so last June.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me right there. The Government of the United States, my friend will admit, practically maintains the parity of money. All the forces operating responsible for government, added to a full legal tender, and great blocks of it redeemable specifically in gold. My friend will admit that in the last analysis the Government here maintains silver that is intrinsically worth less than 40 cents at a parity with gold. We would have to-day the same thing there. He says whereas that burden under a wise administration ought to be borne by the insular government, in my judgment——

Mr. HILL. Now, gentlemen, if you have a full legal tender of American gold with a subsidiary coinage in the Philippine Islands, I would not be here opposing this bill. Why? Because it would be just like Canada. Her system is gold with a full legal tender and silver for subsidiary, and bank notes for commercial transactions. A man when he wants the gold goes to a bank, pays the rate of discount, and gets the gold. It is just the same in Hawaii. They had the gold and a full legal tender and a subsidiary coin for small money and bank money between the two. But these people have come in and injected a new feature, put a burden on this little weak government that has not yet started. Instead of giving it milk, they are putting upon it a full legal tender of silver.

Now the gentleman said, "Who is going to maintain the parity of the American money if we put it over there?" I will tell you how it will work. Suppose there was nothing but American money there and I wanted to pay a bill in New York. I would go to the bank and pay 1½ per cent premium and get the gold in American money. That is the way they did in Hawaii. They had to pay a premium of 1 per cent in gold. Why should they pay it? Because if I did not get it, I could take the American money, send it to San Francisco, and have the gold come back, and the cost would be the expense of the shipment and the interest while the transaction was going on. But under your system what do you get? Simply this: You have got seventy-five millions of legal-tender money, and it is all the money you have got; you have no gold-coinage system under this bill. But you want gold and you have got to have it in order to transact business. How are you going to get it? Gather up legal-tender silver and go to the Treasury and say you want gold for it. "But," they reply, "we can not give you gold for this." Where, then, is your parity? Do you suppose that legal-tender silver would be worth two dollars for one if you could not give one for two? I do not think so.

Now, then, suppose the government did the same thing which the bank does; and without violating any confidence, let me say that I had a conversation with Mr. Conant the other day as to the modus operandi of this measure. I asked him how we are going to maintain exchangeability. He said: "The government will charge exchange the same as a bank does." In other words, you propose to start out with that half-civilized people over there and put them in the banking business to begin with.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will not the banks have the same facilities under the Conant system as they have under the system you advocate?

Mr. HILL. Certainly; but do you suppose that anybody wanting $10,000 in gold would go to the bank and pay 1½ per cent exchange for it when they could go to the treasury of the Philippine Islands and get it for nothing? [Laughter.]

Consequently you transfer the whole burden of supplying the gold for the foreign business of the Philippine Islands from the banks and from the commercial transactions to the government. Your government is not strong enough for that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Would there be any exchange on gold with an adequate gold reserve in the treasury?

Mr. HILL. Certainly there would, because you have not a clause or a line or a syllable in this bill which proposes to make it obligatory on the government to pay gold. The matter is simply optional as you have fixed this bill. In the original Conant bill you had a provision, which you have stricken out, that American money should be exchangeable and should be legal tender all the way down. But you have stricken out all that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. HILL. Oh, there is no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish simply to say that he is not stating the exact facts; that is all.

Mr. HILL. I am willing to be corrected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The original Conant bill never contained any different provision with reference to redemption or exchangeability from that contained in the pending bill, which was drawn by Mr. Conant; at least, drawn when he was present.

Mr. HILL. There is nothing anywhere in this bill that requires exchangeability on the part of the government. Let me read the provision of the bill. We who are in the habit of discussing measures of this kind expect to have them drawn carefully. To-day, in the Banking and Currency Committee, I have had put upon a bill as an amendment a little proposition which I do not think anybody at the start considered for the moment to be essential; yet upon careful examination it was found to be vital. Let us see what provision there is in this bill for maintaining the parity of this money:

That the coinage authorized by this act shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902.

I have looked that act through and through, and there is no provision there except as to the denominations of the coins. There were such provisions in the original Conant Act; but the act of July 1, 1902, was a compromise between the House and the Senate. I think it was intended to refer back to the act of July 1, 1902, as it was before the conference committee got to work upon it; but when the bill left the hands of the conference committee certain provisions which some gentlemen now seem to think are in that bill were stricken out:

That the coinage authorized by this act shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," except as herein otherwise provided; and the government of said islands may adopt such measures as it may deem proper, not inconsistent with said act of July 1, 1902, to maintain the value of said peso at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the gold coins of the United States.

That is all the restriction there is; there is not anything else—"such measures as it may deem proper." They may exchange if they want to, and they need not exchange at all if they do not want to. What is the value of this silver coin under such circumstances?

And in order to maintain such parity between said Philippine pesos and the gold coins of the United States may issue temporary certificates of indebtednesss, bearing interest at a reasonable rate, payable at periods of three months or more, but not later than one year from the date of issue, which shall be in the denominations of $50, or 100 pesos, or some multiple of such sum, and shall be redeemable in gold coin of the United States or in lawful money of said islands, according to the terms of issue prescribed by the government of said islands.

How are they to be paid? We have been through one experience of that kind—one experience of trying to get gold to maintain the redemption of the greenback—and the United States to-day has $262,000,000 of bonds unpaid as the result of that experience.

Mr. Chairman, without detaining the committee further, I will say what else I may wish to add under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. How much is there remaining to the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs—of course he desires that his side shall close the debate—to state how many speakers he has in reserve, whether one speaker is to occupy the whole of the thirty minutes, or whether it is to be divided.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think that one speaker will occupy the whole time.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, to all, legislation on the subject of money and finance is difficult and in its application to conditions is shrouded in some degree of intricacy, uncertainty, and doubt. This may in some measure be attributed to our efforts to follow the specialist and the theorist, who has a pride for his own remedy for the financial ills that may from time to time confront us. It may come in part from the uncertain sea of industrial operation on which proposed new legislation is to embark. Difficulties are made still more perplexing by forces operating to promote legislation. One trouble comes by reason of the distance of our insular possessions and the difficulty of ascertaining and determining the real conditions, but the most dangerous and the most potent is the force looking to its own special interests. I stated on the floor but a few days ago on the consideration of the Hawaiian coinage bill that I favored American money in all the United States and in all the territory subject to its jurisdiction.

The measure proposed by the minority of the committee for Philippine relief is not an untried expedient; it is not an experiment. In it is found our legislation for Porto Rico. Under the Porto Rico financial act, passed in the face of predictions of disturbance and disaster to that island, prosperity came to all interests, and universal satisfaction prevails. This is not problematic or unproven. It is found in the history of Porto Rico since we sent our system of money there.

The statement of my colleague on the Insular Committee [Mr. CRUMPACKER], that the act resulted in disorders of a substantial nature, should not go unchallenged. It did not. My authority for this is the best, none other than the statement of Porto Rico's chosen representative, who now sits in this House.

We have the precedent of Porto Rico and of Hawaii to follow to justify our action in placing American money in American territory. What is there to make the Philippines exceptional? Do number of inhabitants change a principle of government? Porto Rico has a million people, and in force they are equal to several millions in the Philippines. Is it exceptional in the Philippines because of her oriental population? You find in Hawaii, in round numbers, 124,000, or four-fifths of her population, are Chinese, Japanese, and Hawaiians, the latter not as alert as the native Filipino, and yet American coinage was given by the legislation of this House only a few days ago to that oriental population.

The minority present in their substitute a safe and sure highway for insular financial legislation and do not venture on the new and untried pathway of exploration and exploitation as does the measure presented by the majority of the Insular Committee. Your measure changes their financial system; you have precedents for making it American; then why use this as a stepping-stone when it involves two changes instead of one, involves a departure from Americanism and a fleeing from American money?

This change of money in the Philippines proposed by the other side involves all the troubles, and no others, that would come from carrying American coin to the islands and is an unsafe and unwise departure from our policy of financial legislation.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the ten minutes that remain to our side to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a moment ago, receiving permission to interrupt the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], asked a question, to which he received a reply; and afterwards I understood him to say that the advisability of this entire legislation turned upon the point which he had made by asking the question. He asked, "Who is going to maintain the parity out in the Philippine Islands?" and expressed the opinion that the insular government ought to do it. Now, if it be true—and he generally does know the salient point of a case—that this is the salient point of this case, we might just as well wrestle it out here.

Now, the Democratic substitute, or rather the minority substitute, offered here to-day—because this ought not to be a party question—does not change conditions so far as the volume of silver money is concerned, nor does the majority bill offered here make any change in that respect. So that what is left is this: Who shall maintain the parity of existing silver money? There will be no silver money in the Philippine Islands the parity of which is to be maintained except the silver money which we as the Congress of the United States have placed or shall place there, and it is just as absurd to say that the government of the Philippine Islands shall be held responsible for maintaining the parity of silver which we shall place there as it would be to say that the government of New Mexico should be held responsible to maintain the parity of American coins there.

In further answer to the gentleman's question I would like to ask another: Who now maintains the parity of existing American silver coin? There will be nothing outside of existing American coins, except a few recoined pesos which will take the place of the pesos authorized to be coined in the Philippine Islands under the act of January, 1902, by the Congress of the United States. Why, Mr. Chairman, there will be no expense attending the operation. The parity of our coins is maintained automatically. The parity of the American silver dollar is maintained in Manila now.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] admitted on the floor to-day that at this time our silver dollar passes in the purchase of commodities and in payment of services upon the streets of Manila for two dollars and some odd cents worth of Mexican dollars; that it passes there now at its gold-parity value, whereas the Mexican dollar passes at its bullion value. I want to ask the gentleman another question. Who maintains to-day the parity of the American silver dollar in London and in Paris and all around the world? Does the gentleman mean to tell me that the great Congress of a great Republic ought to authorize a coinage of any sort and still leave it to some little outlying dependency, some petty crown colony, and some subdued appendage, some subject appurtenance to maintain its value and our good faith with the nations and with the commerce of the world? Is that the salient point in this case, Mr. Chairman? If it is, it seems to me that the gentleman's argument rests upon very poor legs.

Not only that; I said a moment ago that that parity was now maintained everywhere, and that there is nothing either in the minority bill or in the majority bill so far as volume of silver goes to change existing conditions in that respect.

There is something, however, which threatens the maintenance of the parity of the Filipino silver coin which would be authorized to be issued under this majority bill if it shall pass here, because it would not be a United States silver coin, but nominally as well as actually a purely Filipino coin.

This morning the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] said that wherever you had a limited coinage of silver, at the same time receivable for public dues and private debts, that the parity maintained itself. That is not true without conditions to the statement. It is true wherever you have a great Government like this, with an immense, gigantic commerce behind it, it is not the stamp printed upon the coin that gives it its value, but it is the demand for the coin back of the fiat, a demand changed, perhaps created, by the fiat. When a great government that collects countless millions of money every year in public dues, receives it for public dues, and when a great people who export and import immense amounts settle their private debts in the coin, and thereby make that demand for the coin, too, it is easy with a limited coinage, even at a very high token value above its bullion value, to maintain it. But that is altogether a different thing from saying that a little country like Mexico or Venezuela or the Philippine Archipelago, with very small receipts of public dues and a limited commerce, could do the same thing. As a matter of fact Mexico has tried it and has failed; and not Mexico alone, but a dozen little republics and kingdoms upon the surface of this earth.

So that there is danger under the gentleman's bill to the maintenance of the parity in the Philippine Islands, dependent as it is upon the Philippine government and Philippine commerce. There would be no more danger to the maintenance of the parity of American silver dollars in the Philippine Islands upon the passage of the minority bill than there would be to the maintenance of the parity of American silver dollars in New Mexico or in Arizona or in any other Territory of the United States.

Gentlemen of the Republican side, I wish you would think about this measure before you pass it. This measure has not been well considered. It has been long considered, much testimony has been heard, but the fundamental principles involved in it have been but little considered. This transcends in importance a mere coinage measure, even.

In my opinion it violates a fundamental principle. The coinage of money is the exercise of a Federal function. Are you, then, going to leave it to a Territory—aye, worse, a Territory from a Democratic standpoint, but a crown colony, a mere appurtenance from your standpoint? Are you going to leave the exercise of a great function, considered so National and so Federal by the framers of the Constitution that they denied it even to a State, to this nondescript? This bill is wrong fundamentally; it is also wrong as a matter of policy and expediency, and let me come to that just for a moment. I have already told you why I thought it was wrong on the financial ground—that the parity of silver issued under it and by the orders of the American Congress might possibly be endangered. But it is wrong as a mere expediency from another standpoint. It is always foolish to take two bites at a cherry if you know beforehand that you are going to eat the whole cherry. There is no particular sense in taking two bites at a quinine pill if you know you are going to swallow the whole pill.

Gentlemen tell us that this is a temporary measure, and that we will gradually approach the American coinage system and gradually put it into operation—that this is a sort of bridge bill. If that is true, then in God's name if it is a bridge bill, between the present state of coinage conditions and banking conditions in the Philippine Islands and those existing in the balance of the United States, why not make the bridge long enough to cover the chasm and be done with it?

Get rid of the Philippines the first chance, but while a part of the common domain, every principle of constitutional law, expediency, and equity demand that they shall have the benefit of uniform laws and equality of conditions in industry, commerce, and finance.

Gentlemen in their testimony before the committee here told you that it is easier and will cause less dislocation of business to substitute a "fiat" 50-cent peso, as they call it, for the same peso worth in bullion value 36 cents; that is easier to do that than it is to substitute a 100-cent American dollar. If that were true, is this easier first, to make a difference of 14 cents and afterwards make up the balance of the difference between your original 36 and your 100, taking two bites at two different times, causing two local disturbances and dislocations of business—is that easier than to do the whole business at once? There is not a man upon this floor who believes—I challenge a member of the majority to say so—that this is intended as a permanent bill for the Philippine Islands. All the testimony before the committee, all the conversations of members of the committee, the nature of the bill itself, everything goes to show, and they admit it, too, that it is intended for a temporary measure, a bridge, so to speak. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi said that all the testimony before the Committee on Insular Affairs shows that this is a mere temporary, makeshift measure. That is about as accurate as many other statements which have been made in opposition to the pending bill. Mr. Peabody, in his testimony before the committee, said in answer to this question from Judge CRUMPACKER:

> Your idea is that this system proposed by this bill establishes a permanent system in the Philippines?
> A. Yes, sir.

Nothing has been said to the contrary. I simply said in reply to a question put to me in the debate that I did not know, but that I thought the system would stay there for many years. I was not prepared to say that it would not, as changing conditions might necessitate new legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was equally inaccurate, and even more positive in his inaccuracy. He said that this was a hybrid—"a hybrid, a new and patent system of coinage." I am amazed that a gentleman with all his learning and undoubted business knowledge should apparently be so ignorant of the facts.

I do not say that he is ignorant. I simply think that he forgot. It is not "new," "patent," nor "hybrid." Secretary Gage, in note "F" to the Secretary of War's report of 1900, indorsing the plan proposed in this bill, says:

> Pay them out for all goods bought or service rendered, at the ratio of 2 silver pesos to $1 of gold, and redeem them from the holder at the same ratio, namely, $1 of gold for 2 silver pesos (or Filipino dollars).
> * * * * * * *
> The evident cure—
> For the financial troubles in the Philippines—> is to establish their domestic money in a fixed relation to the world's money, or what might be better called the settling-house standard, London or New York. Can this be done? Probably it can. How? By following in a modified way what is now in vogue in the United States.

The "patent" system, to which the gentleman from Connecticut was referring in contemptuous terms, is, says Secretary Gage, the system "now in vogue in the United States."

Mr. HILL. I did not know that we had a system of 32 to 1 coinage.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But that does not meet the point I am making at all, and nobody is aware of that fact better than is the gentleman from Connecticut. The principle is not changed whether you stabilize the ratio at 32 to 1 or 16 to 1.

For many years Java has had this "new, patent, hybrid system." India has this "new, patent, hybrid system." It is not an untried experiment. It is a system long successful in the Orient.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut says that this bill does not propose that there shall be any gold in circulation, as if that fact were a subject for reproach. Professor Jenks, who has just returned from the Netherlands and India and the Straits Settlements, says, page 30:

> It is perfectly possible in Oriental dependencies to maintain a fixed rate of exchange between gold and silver without the necessity of bringing gold, to any great extent, into circulation.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] objects to this bill because, as he says, people in the Philippines would ask the government for gold; it might be refused, and then "what would become of your parity?" Now, the Bank of France will not pay gold on demand in exchange for other kinds of money except at its own pleasure.

It pays it or not in its discretion, which discretion it has always exercised. And yet does anyone pretend that there is not a parity between all kinds of money in France? The limitation of a coinage, together with the fact that it is responsible for public debt and all debts public and private, and the consequent demand for it keeps it at par with gold.

The gentleman says that it is the great demand in France and other countries for silver which keeps it at a parity. Let us see what would be the demand for silver in the Philippine Islands? They have there to-day approximately 40,000,000 pesos valued at $20,000,000 in gold. We propose to give them instead 40,000,000 of other pesos valued at $20,000,000 in gold. Now, the revenues of the islands aggregate from ten to twelve millions of dollars in gold or twenty to twenty-four millions of pesos a year, so that 1 peso in every 2 passes through the custom-house or into the tax coffers of the government annually.

That demand of itself, together with the limitation in the coinage, is sufficient to stabilize this proposed ratio. So says Hollander, who was in Porto Rico when they made the change of standards in that island; so says Governor Taft; so says Mr. Conant; so says Roberts, the Director of the Mint; so say all of the witnesses who have appeared before the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says that the proposition in this bill is to "stabilize a silver standard," and he asks, with a great deal of apparent force, "Do you propose to put that sort of a standard on this helpless people?" Now, what a complete perversion of terms, what a mistake, to put it mildly, the gentleman from Connecticut did make in that question. It embodies a fallacy which must be apparent, on reflection, even to him.

Stabilize a silver standard! Who proposes to "stabilize a silver standard?" Nobody. We have to-day in the United States a silver dollar, coined only in limited quantities, the bullion value of which is 37 cents and face value $1, and it circulates at par. Have we stabilized the silver standard here? No. Now, in the Philippines we propose to have a Filipino coin of silver worth 50 cents in gold, and to stabilize it with gold at that ratio.

Will that be "stabilizing the silver standard?" No; and it is a complete perversion of terms, a fallacy in reasoning, and a mistake in statement to assert the contrary. The gentleman was confused himself if he did not confuse anybody else. There is no attempt here, no proposition to stabilize the silver standard, and a financier like the gentleman from Connecticut, who so unsparingly ridicules the bill reported by the Insular Committee, should have known it.

The gentleman from Connecticut made another mistake and he received some applause for it. He said not a word is there in this bill about exchangeability. "They have stricken out the provision for exchangeability that was in the bill last spring." There was no provision in the bill of last spring making exchangeability compulsory.

Mr. HILL. But there was a provision in regard to exchangeability.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not a compulsory provision. There is to-day in the pending bill a provision which on this point embodies essentially the provision of the bill of last spring. Says the bill:

> And the government of said islands may adopt such measures as it may deem proper, not inconsistent with said act of July 1, 1902, to maintain the value of said peso at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the gold coins of the United States.

For purposes of exchangeability and to maintain the parity, the Government could, under that provision, in its discretion, exchange gold for silver or silver for gold, transfer-current fund, in the Treasury of the Government to the coinage reserve fund; issue temporary certificates of indebtedness, buy gold coin or bullion, or sell drafts on their deposits in the United States.

These provisions were all set forth in the bill of last spring, but the language of the pending bill is broad enough to include them without specific enumeration. This is the opinion also of Mr. Conant as expressed to me.

So there is nothing in that point, or alleged point, of the gentleman from Connecticut. We have taken out nothing. There is nothing to hide. I thought that the gentleman tried to convey the impression that we of the Insular Committee, who do not pretend to be experts in finance, but are simply trying to carry out a plan which we deem best for the islands and in accordance with the recommendation of the Philippine Commission—I thought the gentleman was seeking to convey the impression that we, without consulting Mr. Conant, had weakened the bill of last spring and erred in the measure we now offer to the House. The fact is that we took his judgment upon every single proposition in the bill. He has approved everything in it. It contains nothing which has not received his cordial indorsement. This disposes of another of the alleged points of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. Chairman, something has been said about the success of the experiment in Porto Rico. Now, there is a fallacy in that suggestion. An example or illustration is good in logic only when the attendant or surrounding circumstances are the same. Porto Rico is one island. The community is homogeneous. Its extent is about 40 miles by 90 miles. It has a million of people, peaceable and quiet. The Philippine Archipelago comprises hundreds of islands.

It contains, as gentlemen know, more territory than the combined area of New York, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Vermont, and is peopled by scores of different tribes, speaking scores of different dialects and tongues.

Back in the interior are millions of people little accustomed to modern business methods. Professor Hollander, a recognized authority upon taxation and finance, was in Porto Rico representing the United States Government when the change in monetary standards was made in that island. He was before the Committee on Insular Affairs, and I will read from his testimony:

> The CHAIRMAN. Let me read you briefly what the Philippine Commission says upon this very point and see if it accords with your views:
> "Limitation of the quantity operates in regard to coin as in regard to commodities—the value is raised by scarcity. Upon this method of giving value to silver reliance is chiefly placed in the countries of the Latin Union, in Holland, and in the United States. The limitation of the coinage of silver to the amounts previously existing and to the amounts fixed by the Government has given an artificial value to silver coin of all these countries, keeping them at par with gold."
> Professor HOLLANDER. I am in entire agreement with that view.
> The CHAIRMAN. So, then, you think the plan proposed is entirely feasible; that is, the establishing of the American gold dollar as the standard of value, with a silver coinage limited in quantity which shall be received for public dues, that the demand for it will keep it at par with gold, and that has been the experience of other countries mentioned in this report?
> Professor HOLLANDER. That is my opinion.
> The CHAIRMAN. Would you think in a country in such a disturbed condition recently as the Philippines, where the restoration of confidence in the executive and government is of prime importance, that it would be advisable at once to force the American coinage system?
> Professor HOLLANDER. Unhesitatingly I should say no; it would be inadvisable.
> The CHAIRMAN. That being the condition in the Philippines, then, you would be opposed to the immediate introduction of the American system of coinage in the Philippines?
> Professor HOLLANDER. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] read an extract from the testimony given before the Insular Committee by Mr. Peabody, and Mr. Peabody was made to say that the introduction of the American system of money in these islands would not be attended with difficulty. I heard that examination, and I was expecting that somebody would bring it up, but I supposed that the rest of the testimony would be read before making that quotation, because in and of itself it is so grossly misleading. After Mr. Peabody had given the testimony which the gentleman from Georgia has read, this further testimony was given:

> The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Peabody, in your reply to the questions of Judge CRUMPACKER, do I understand you to say that there would be no trouble, or hardly any trouble, about the immediate introduction of American money in the islands?
> Mr. PEABODY. Not American money; no, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. That was what Judge CRUMPACKER was asking you; and that is what he induced you to say.
> Mr. PEABODY. I misunderstood his question, in that case. I intended my answer to refer to the new pesos.

A little farther in his testimony I find the following:

> The CHAIRMAN. Now, to end this and get your exact opinion, do you think it would be wise for us to enact a law extending the American system of money to the Philippine Islands, either immediately or at some definite time in the future to be arbitrarily fixed now by statute?
> Mr. PEABODY. I do not, sir. I think it is very important to continue a unit of money as nearly as possible that which they had always had in the form of silver.

Now, what becomes of the quotation read by the gentleman from Georgia, which in and of itself so completely perverted the meaning of the testimony of Mr. Peabody? Was that fair to the House; was it fair to the Insular Committee; was it fair to anybody who wishes to do what is right on the pending bill?

Mr. Chairman, I have it to-day from a man who knows, that a bill to establish the American system of coinage in the Philippines can not pass the Senate. Nobody knows it, Republicans of the House, better than do our political opponents on this floor.

They would be glad to be able to point with scorn at what we have failed to do for the poor people of that archipelago and to say: "Look at their pitiable financial condition; you have not given them a gold standard; you have not given them anything; you have only labored and brought forth nothing." That is exactly what will happen if the system proposed in the substitute bill be adopted by the House.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment.

Mr. HILL. I was going to ask the gentleman's reason for making that statement. Who are the men? Where are the people who shall say that when the House of Representatives votes for American money it shall not go? Where is the opposition coming from?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is coming from people who believe with Judge Taft when he declared that to establish the American coinage system in these islands would produce only disaster, and who also believe that letter which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] had read to-day did not modify his testimony at all.

Mr. HILL. That does not answer my question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just one moment.

Mr. HILL. If the House of Representatives voted for American money, who is going to say nay?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is out of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Gentlemen are going to oppose it in the Senate——

Mr. HILL. Ah, then, let them take the responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will answer the gentleman's question. Mr. Chairman, the House last spring passed a bill containing coinage provisions and embodying essentially the provisions of the pending bill. That bill went to the Senate and the Senate would have nothing but free coinage.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And where was the gentleman from Connecticut then?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] did not, I believe, very seriously oppose that bill last spring.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We all voted for it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know whether he voted for it or not.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment, I want to finish. The Senate absolutely refused to have anything but free silver, and the House reluctantly decided, or its conferees did, that rather than have free silver we would have nothing in the way of new coinage for the Filipinos. So we retained the status quo. We have seen what has followed. Since that time the Senate has receded from its position; at least, the Committee on the Philippines has, to the extent of reporting a bill, as we all know, which embodies practically the principle of the bill now here pending.

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment. Let me finish. Therefore, the Senate will not go back in this short session, with crowded Calendars in both Houses, reconsider entirely the whole proposition, and accept the American coinage system. I am sure, not only from what I know of human nature, but I have it to-day from a man in a position to speak with authority, that no such bill as the proposed substitute would be reported from that committee. Then why——

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman offer that as an argument for the passage of this bill, that we are to be held up?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all. There is no holding up about it.

Mr. HILL. If he does, I think it is time the House should assert itself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all. It is simply a proposition to get some legislation for the Philippine Archipelago, to help those people out of the Slough of Despond in which they now are.

Mr. FOWLER. But you propose what is wrong.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We do not propose to do what is wrong, we propose to do what we belive to be right, I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] who interrupted me sotto voce. We propose to do what the Philippine Commission, headed by the gentleman's great and good friend, as the gentleman himself calls him, William H. Taft, says would be right.

The letter which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] had read here does not at all modify the position which Governor Taft took upon this proposition in his testimony before our committee. The gentleman from Connecticut had it read to convey the impression that Governor Taft had receded from his former position. I read Governor Taft's testimony wherein he said—and this is his language:

> In my opinion, to attempt to introduce the American system of coinage into the Philippine Archipelago would result in nothing short of disaster.

Has he modified that? Did the letter modify that? Not at all. The gentleman came very nearly misleading some members who spoke to me. What Governor Taft did say was:

> I do not insist on the Conant plan, but I think it is feasible.

He is a wise, high-minded man, who knows the duties of an executive and the duties of a legislator. "Insist" is a strong word. He does not "insist" before the American House of Representatives that any plan which he favors shall be adopted. "Insist" is a strong word, and I infer that the gentleman from Connecticut wrote to him and asked him if he "insisted" on the plan.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no right to make any such inference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will ask the gentleman if he did not do that?

Mr. HILL. I sent to Governor Taft a copy of the amendments offered at the last session of Congress, providing for American coins, so that he might read it and fully understand it, and he replied that he does not insist upon the Conant proposition, but he thinks it would be the most feasible. That is all there is to it. He had it with the proposition for American coin squarely before him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But did he indorse the plan? Not at all. He knew of the testimony of the gentleman from Connecticut before the Committee on Insular Affairs and therefore was well aware that the gentleman from Connecticut is a strenuous advocate of a system in which he, the governor, does not believe.

The governor adheres, in so far as his silence can be considered as adherence, to his testimony, which is that to attempt to establish that in those islands would result in nothing short of disaster. There is no modification of that statement. What consolation can the gentleman get from the epistle which he has had read here from Governor Taft?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the gold dollar of the United States, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, as defined by section 3511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be the standard unit of value in the Philippine Islands; and the lawful money of the United States shall be legal tender in the Philippines for all debts, public and private: Provided, That for amounts under 100 pesos the silver currency of said islands authorized by this act shall, when demanded, be paid.

The following committee amendments were read:

> In line 7 strike out the words "lawful money" and insert in lieu thereof the words "gold coins." In line 8, after the words "United States," insert "and the silver coins herein authorized."
>
> In line 9, after the word "in," strike out the words "the Philippines" and insert "said islands."
>
> In lines 10, 11, and 12 strike out all after the word "private."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am in favor of the proposition submitted by the minority for the use of American coin in the Philippine Islands and the extending of our coinage system to those islands. When the proper time comes I shall offer this amendment, which I am satisfied is necessary to the rounding out and completion of the substitute offered by the minority. This amendment I shall offer at the end of section 1 of the substitute:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized in his discretion to coin a half-cent coin of such form and with such devices as he may designate, and such half-cent coin shall be a legal tender up to the same amount as the 1-cent coin now authorized by law.

In other words, the proposition which I shall vote for and which I favor is the substitute bill offered by the minority, amended by adding to the coinage system of the United States, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, a half-cent coin.

Now, the gentleman has just stated that unless we adopt the proposition submitted by the majority members of the Insular Affairs Committee there will be no legislation at this session, and states that he is authorized or practically authorized to-day by somebody whom he does not mention to draw such a conclusion, if not to make such a plain statement. In the eight years that I have been a member of the House of Representatives I do not remember that any such threat has ever before been made to secure the passage of a bill upon the floor of this House, and it seems to me that it is our duty as members of the House of Representatives to vote our judgment upon this proposition, regardless of any action that may be taken anywhere else.

Now in regard to the feasibility of this proposition, we have done the same thing for Porto Rico, and we have voted to do the same thing in the Hawaiian Islands. It is simply a question as to the quickest way to give relief to those people in the Philippine Archipelago. Is it to authorize a new system of coinage, with new dies to be made, with new coins to be made, with a mint to be opened and started, and probably taking at least a year, or six months anyway, to get this new coinage into circulation, or shall we do as we did in the case of Porto Rico, send commissioners from the Treasury of the United States over there next week with an abundance of American money and take up their money, make the exchange, and we coin such as we see fit at our own option? Why, it seems to me that it is almost impossible to compute the advantage that would come to these people by our voting now to adopt American money and put it into use and operation over there, rather than to wait to establish a new system of coinage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to strike out the last two words, Mr. Chairman.

One of two conditions, it seems to me, is bound to result if Congress pass the majority bill. Either the Philippine Islands government must go into the banking business, providing a reserve in gold with which to redeem the silver pesos, or else it will have to maintain the parity of the silver peso with the gold by means of limiting the coinage of the pesos.

As to the first condition, it is plain that the difficulty is great, as the imports to the islands exceed the exports by over $7,000,000 a year. This balance of trade, which is now paid mostly in silver, must then be met in gold, as by this legislation you overvalue the silver peso. All of that portion of the gold which will go to the Orient will be dropped into that bottomless well from which it is never rescued, as the experience of the past century has shown. Gold which goes into the interior of China never appears again in commerce. This reserve will become the storehouse for the supply of gold to the Orient on account of its proximity and the fact that the expense and risk of bringing it to the islands will be borne by the Philippine government. That the endless chain will be worked by those desiring gold in the Orient, through their agents in Manila, can not be doubted. Under such conditions, it seems to me, the effort to establish the parity between the peso and gold will be too expensive to maintain.

The only other way of maintaining the parity between the silver peso and gold will be by limiting the coinage of silver pesos, so as to make them dear and thereby increase their value above the bullion value of the same; in other words, by the substitution of a managed or fixed currency as against an automatic currency which responds to the demands of commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that in either dilemma we will find the legislation detrimental—detrimental to the government if it maintains the gold reserve; detrimental to the people if the parity be established by limiting the currency sufficiently to raise the value of the peso above its bullion value. If you attempt to limit the number of silver pesos and in that manner elevate its value to gold, then you are not supplying a sufficient currency for the Philippine people, and that will be felt most seriously by the commerce of the islands. In other words, this bill substitutes for an automatic currency a proposition that the Commission shall determine how much money the people shall have. You say that five men appointed from the United States shall determine how much currency the Filipinos shall use.

Mr. Chairman, in that event it will result in this managed currency, which will not be adequate and will not be sufficient to supply the needs of commerce in the Philippine Islands, and consequently it will react upon the people and upon the industries of those islands. So either horn of the dilemma that we take, either position we assume, it seems to me in all likelihood will be detrimental to the business interests of the islands.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the substitute as against this proposition; but I do not believe that the substitute ought to pass. I believe the best thing to do is to let the system they have now alone, and not attempt to fix the ratio between the silver and the gold in these islands, because Mexico does not do it, Hongkong does not do it, the Straits Settlements does not do it, China does not do it, but they leave the settlement of balances in foreign trade upon the value of the metals in the open markets of the world, and they have no trouble in fixing the values and adjusting their balances in that manner. Why should we not do this in the Philippines? The very fact that the Commission has attempted to meddle with and fix the ratio there has been the cause of the difficulties in the islands. It has undervalued silver and then overvalued silver, and the result has been the exportation of silver or gold, depending upon the world's market value of the same, whereas if it had left their bullion value to be determined by the trade, we would have had the same condition as in Hongkong and Shanghai. Consequently my vote shall be in favor of the substitute as against this measure; and if the substitute is adopted for this measure then I shall cast my vote against it, because I think the existing condition is better than that which either one of these bills will produce.

The bad conditions in the Philippine Islands has not been caused by the silver standard, as other silver-standard countries would have been in the same condition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I showed this afternoon, the prosperity of Mexico, for instance, over what it was twenty or thirty years ago is almost unparalleled. Where we have doubled our exports in this country in the last thirty years, Mexico has quadrupled hers. While our banking deposits have increased largely in this country, the Mexican deposits have increased three times proportionately to ours. There is not a comparison that you can make upon any condition that existed in this country and that but what shows that the Mexican advance has been much greater than ours. Take the item of building railroads, for instance. It has increased in Mexico in the last thirty years three hundred fold, 30,000 per cent, while in ours it has only increased 100 per cent. Take the question of bank assets, and they have increased two hundred and seventy fold in Mexico, or 27,000 per cent. Take the silver deposits; they have increased one hundred fold, or 10,000 per cent. Take their deposits in the last eight years; they have quadrupled. [Loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to a little incongruity between the arguments of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Indiana. This morning the gentleman from Wisconsin paid a very high tribute to the expertness and ingenuity of the Philippine people, because he said that if we had the American dollar out there, the bullion value of which was only about 36 or 40 cents, and coined it into a dollar which would pass for a hundred cents gold, that those people would counterfeit that dollar to an enormous extent. It follows from that one of two things is true. Either they have better machinery and better implements to counterfeit, or they are superior to our own people in their ingenuity and expertness in the counterfeiting business. That is a very high compliment to the ingenuity of these people.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will allow me, he misunderstood me. I did not say that the Filipinos would do the counterfeiting, but that the expert mechanics and jewelers of China and Japan would do it. So the witnesses said who appeared before our committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then the expert jewelers of China and Japan have either better implements for counterfeiting or are more expert and ingenious than Americans are—that is, those living in the Philippine Islands. It seems to me that that argument answers itself. The temptation is as great to counterfeit silver coin in the United States as it possibly could be in the Philippines after the passage of this bill, and yet the temptation to coin on the part of mechanics in the United States is as great and the opportunity greater. The temptation to make money even dishonestly or criminally with his remarkable mechanical ingenuity and his great greed for money will carry the average citizen of the incalculable American nation as far as the next.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Granted that the temptation to counterfeit may be as great in the United States as in the Philippines, does not the gentleman know that the liability to detection is much less in the Philippines than in the United States?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I ever heard that the liability of detection in a proconsular government with despotic power, where they have the right to enter houses, search the place, and do many things they would not have the right to do here, would be any less than on the continent of America.

Now, let me go ahead. A little while afterwards the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] assumed exactly the opposite position. He argued that these people in our oriental appurtenance were such intolerable fools that they could not learn the difference between the purchasing power of an American silver dollar and a Mexican silver dollar; that it was a great injustice to send the American silver dollar out there because the poor fools would cheat themselves all over the islands. I asked if our dollars did not already circulate in the city of Manila at double parity with the Mexican dollar, ours going at their gold parity and the Mexican at their bullion value. I asked for information and he gave me the desired information in the affirmative. Now, if it be true that the two coins are circulating in Manila side by side, and that these people have learned their respective values, it must be because the people have been brought face to face with them and know the value of each. Now, if some more money should be put out it will go farther and farther from Manila, and they will learn more and more and further and further their respective values. I take it that every military post in the Philippine Islands to-day has put out American silver and American gold. I have been informed by gentlemen in the Philippine Islands that it is the case.

But I want to go further with the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] by reading some of the testimony before the committee. He said this morning that that state of affairs was confined to the city of Manila. The distinguished and astute and ingenious gentleman, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked in the committee room this question of Mr. Peabody, the chosen great expert who is vaunted so much by the gentleman from Wisconsin:

Mr. CANNON. Is not the American dollar exchanged for two Mexican dollars right there now under their noses?

Mr. PEABODY. It would change to-day for——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The answer is "for more than two for one."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not now in order,

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent for three minutes longer to finish reading this extract.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide a coinage system in the Philippine Islands, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 15345. An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 622. An act granting a pension to Dickey Woodall.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Senate concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination to be made of the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, between Wenatchee and Kettle Falls, with a view to removing obstructions to navigation, and to submit plans and estimates of cost therefor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6216. An act to pay in part judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii for property destroyed in suppressing the bubonic plague in said Territory in 1899 and 1900, and authorizing the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for the payment of the remaining claims.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve all points of order on the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury and the Acting Attorney-General, submitting a report relative to the condition of the Federal building at Syracuse, N. Y.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting a revised estimate of appropriation for new building for Bureau of Engraving and Printing—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the secretary of the American National Red Cross, transmitting the annual report for the year 1902—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16023) to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 3305); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOWLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 395) requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House the names of all national banks which have held United States deposits, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3306); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TALBERT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16228) providing for the issue and circulation of national-bank notes, submitted the views of the minority, to accompany report (No. 3148, part 2); which said views were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12316) granting an increase of pension to Weden O'Neal, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3261); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1978) granting an increase of pension to Wesley S. Potter, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3262); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4412) granting an increase of pension to John J. Rees, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3263); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5412) granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Spring, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3264); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6543) granting an increase of pension to David C. Morgan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3265); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1131) granting an increase of Pension to Sydda B. Arnold, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3266); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3607) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Helton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3267); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the merging of the Interstate Commerce Commission within the proposed department of commerce and labor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9503) to authorize the Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 261) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station in the vicinity of Cape Flattery or Flattery Rooks, on the coast of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 13353) granting an increase of pension to George Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 15112) granting a pension to Matilda A. Marshall;

A bill (H. R. 15114) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo F. Canfield;

A bill (H. R. 15113) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy; and

A bill (H. R. 13997) granting an increase of pension to Lyman A. L. Gilbert.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4519) making an appropriation to construct a gravel road from Shiloh National Military Park to the city of Corinth, Miss., together with all necessary bridges, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6808) to extend the time granted to the Muscle Shoals Power Company by an act approved March 3, 1899, within which to commence and complete the work authorized in the said act to be done by said company, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14273) granting a pension to John H. Whidden, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10826) granting an increase of pension to Josiah S. Fay, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. PATTERSON), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14836) granting a pension to Rebecca L. Chambers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Warsaw, Poland, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment providing that upon the approval of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill by the President, the clause in said bill relating to the United States minister to Netherlands and Luxemburg be given immediate effect, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CARMACK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4923) granting a pension to William L. Whetsell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 6983) granting an increase of pension to Gilman B. Johnson;

A bill (S. 6984) granting an increase of pension to Maria A. Marden;

A bill (S. 6982) granting an increase of pension to Linda F. Moulton;

A bill (S. 6981) granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo P. Duncklee;

A bill (H. R. 15789) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Cooper;

A bill (H. R. 14256) granting an increase of pension to Jessie R. Dewstoe; and

A bill (H. R. 12141) to amend an act entitled "An act amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to pensions to remarried widows," approved March 3, 1901.

Mr. DEPEW. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3517) to amend the law creating the district of Teche, Louisiana, to report it adversely. I will state that the report is not unanimous.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that there is a minority of the committee who do not agree to the report. I ask leave hereafter to file a minority report, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the report made by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and, without objection, the Senator from Arkansas can at any time file the views of the minority.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7815) granting a pension to Nancy A. Killough, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. PRITCHARD), from the same committee, to whom was referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3302) granting an increase of pension to Henry G. Wheeler; and

A bill (H. R. 15398) granting an increase of pension to Andrew W. Miller.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. 157) providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10350) granting a pension to Rebecca Piper; and

A bill (H. R. 7130) granting a pension to Elizabeth Lowden.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on the Philippines, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1152) to authorize certain persons who have intermarried with Cherokees to sue for their interest in certain moneys of the tribe from which they were excluded, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7047) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 156) dedicating to the city of Columbus, in the State of Ohio, for uses and purposes of the public streets, part of the property conveyed to the United States by Robert Neil by deed dated February 17, 1863, recorded in Deed Book 76, page 572, etc., Franklin County records, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6486) to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers of the Confederate army and navy, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

JOSEPH'S BAND OF NEZ PERCES.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report favorably and unanimously a resolution, and I ask for its consideration. It is very short.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 5311) entitled "A bill for the relief of Joseph's band of Nez Perce Indians," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act and report to the Senate what amount or amounts, if any, are legally or equitably due the said Joseph's band of Nez Perce Indians under the various items of claims set forth in said bill.

AUSTIN ALMY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6364) granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy, to report it with amendments, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on Pensions were, in line 7, after the word "State," to strike out "Volunteer;" in the same line, after the word "Infantry," to insert "war with Mexico," and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Austin Almy, late of Company D, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7072) granting an increase of pension to James A. Hoover; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7073) granting a pension to Thomas W. Coe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7074) for the relief of Elias E. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7075) to provide for the erection in the city of Washington, D. C., of a fountain by Edward Kemeys; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7076) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Pinkham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7077) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus B. Norris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALGER introduced a bill (S. 7078) granting an increase of pension to Geneveive Ludlow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7079) granting an increase of pension to James W. Ruff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7080) granting an increase of pension to Moses Hill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7081) granting an increase of pension to Orville V. Percy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 7082) granting an increase of pension to James Congdon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7083) to provide for the enrollment and organization of a United States naval reserve; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7084) to establish a naval militia and define its relations to the General Government; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington introduced a bill (S. 7085) granting an increase of pension to Jane M. Watt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7086) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer H. Richardson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 7087) for the relief of Henry J. Hewitt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7088) for the extension of Eighth street northeast; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 7089) granting a pension to Joseph Ellmore; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for continuing the work on the Connecticut avenue bridge, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relating to leave of absence to per diem employees of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $375,000 to establish a permanent military camp ground for the instruction and maneuvering of troops of the Regular Army and National Guard in the vicinity of Camp Douglas, in Juneau County, Wis., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 of the money now idle in the Treasury due the estates of deceased colored soldiers for the purpose of erecting in the District of Columbia a memorial national home for aged and infirm colored people; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Amherstburg, Canada, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

PARK SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the report of the commission on the improvement of the park system of the District of Columbia be printed and bound in cloth for the use of the Senate.

TYPES OF BREECH MECHANISM.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, be directed to furnish the Senate with a list of the types of breech mechanism for ordnance made by or for the War and Navy Departments since January 1, 1891, or at present in course of construction, together with the number of each type made since the date mentioned, or at present in course of construction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. PROCTOR. Let it be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PROCTOR and Mr. SPOONER. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

STANDARD OF CLASSIFICATION AND GRADING.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of S. 7009, "A bill to provide for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, flax, corn, oats, barley, rye, and other grains, and for other purposes," for the use of the Senate.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, on yesterday I gave notice that after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day I would move to proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill. Since then I have had some conversation with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who also gave notice yesterday that he would move to take up the omnibus statehood bill at this time. I do not wish to unnecessarily antagonize the Senator's motion. I understand it will be agreeable to my honorable friend if I move to take up the immigration bill in the morning hour to-morrow.

I therefore give notice that after the routine morning business to-morrow I shall move to proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, and I trust that we will be able to dispose of it. The bill has been considered by the Senate, all the amendments have been agreed to, I believe, save one, and if we give to it our earnest attention to-morrow I think it can be disposed of. It certainly is of the utmost importance that this measure should be passed at the earliest possible date.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the notice given by the Senator from Indiana, I ask unanimous consent to make a single observation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if it is his purpose and the purpose of the committee to press the bill to a conclusion in the form in which it now is? I have noticed by the press a suggestion that the intention was to change it somewhat materially.

I will say, so the Senator may understand my position, that I am not at all satisfied with the bill in some of its features as it stands at the present time, and will take occasion to so state when it is up for consideration. But possibly the committee intends to so change it that it will meet with my concurrence.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will say to the Senator that I am not advised what notices he has seen in the press. It is the desire and intention of the committee to press the consideration of the bill as it is now reported to the Senate.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield just one moment that I may call up a small measure for a very poor man involving only $140.

Mr. QUAY. What is the purpose of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MASON. It is to ask for the consideration of a bill which involves, as I said, only $140.

Mr. QUAY. I can not yield at present, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, but I will do so after the statehood bill is before the Senate.

Mr. MASON. All right.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the statehood bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no objection to that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I now ask that the statehood bill be temporarily laid aside that the Senate may consider House bill 3728, a copy of a bill which has already passed the Senate, and when the House bill is passed I shall ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate consider the following bill.

Mr. QUAY. I will not object if the bill elicits no discussion. Otherwise I will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the order of business?

Mr. MASON. I am informed that I was mistaken about the bill having passed the House. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will not be kind enough to yield to me until I can call up a short bill?

Mr. QUAY. I was not attending to what transpired in relation to the bill the Senator from Illinois called up.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. QUAY. Then I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

NELLIE ETT HEEN.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12240) granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north of range 101 west, in the State of North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read in full to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is a written report coming from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. HANSBROUGH) on the 7th instant.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The report is quite lengthy, and if the Senate will indulge me for a moment I think I can explain the provisions of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will just have the middle part of the report read it will explain it fully.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well; I desired to economize the time of the Senate; that was all.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. QUAY. If this bill is going to occupy much time, I shall be compelled to object to it. My understanding was that there would be no objection and no consumption of time.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are only a few more lines left of the report.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow the reading of the report to be concluded. It is not very long.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report. The entire report is as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. HANSBROUGH), from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 12240):

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12240) granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, in the State of North Dakota, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee recommend that the preamble be stricken out and that the bill do pass.

Lem A. Heen on the 28th day of May, 1895, made homestead entry for the south half of northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, in the Minot land district, in the State of North Dakota. His application to enter was accepted and the entry placed of record, the filing fee accepted, and receipt duly issued therefor to the said entryman. He thereupon entered upon the said tract and has resided thereon continuously since said date and is still residing thereon with his family, and has complied fully with the law relative to residence upon, cultivation, and improvement of Government homesteads, and has valuable and substantial improvements thereon.

On the 14th day of July, 1900, Heen offered final proof for the tract. This was rejected on the 26th of September, 1901, for the reason that entryman was not a citizen of the United States; neither could he become one, being born in China and a Chinaman, and was not a qualified entryman, and patent could not issue to him. Heen, however, immigrated to the United States about 1876, prior to the date of taking effect of the Chinese-exclusion act, and married a white woman and a citizen of the United States, by name Nellie Ett Parker. There is issue of said marriage still living, but under the ruling of the United States Land Office patent can not issue to the entryman, nor to the wife of the entryman, nor to the child of the entryman. In consequence, a great hardship will be worked upon the entryman and his family and he will be deprived of a home and the fruits of his labor unless the pending legislation be passed.

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office report favorably, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 1, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, in which you inclosed a copy of H. R. 12240, entitled "A bill granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, in the State of North Dakota," and asked for information or suggestions thereon.

In answer, I inclose a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under date of the 29th ultimo.

It is shown by the report that the preamble to the bill recites the facts substantially as they are of record, and as the matter is one within the discretion of the Congress the Commissioner has made no recommendation, but has stated that he has no objection to urge against the passage of the bill.

I concur in the report.

Very respectfully,
E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from you, for report in duplicate and return of papers, of a letter from Hon. JOHN F. LACEY (dated March 24, 1902), chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands House of Representatives, United States, together with a copy of H. R. 12240, entitled "A bill granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north of range 101 west, in the State of North Dakota." Said bill reads as follows:

"Whereas one Lem A. Heen did, on the 28th day of May, A. D. 1895, make homestead entry for the following-described tract, to wit, south half of northwest quarter, and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north of range 101 west, in the Minot land district, in the State of North Dakota, which application to enter was accepted and the entry placed of record, filing fee accepted, and receipt duly issued therefor to the said entryman Lem A. Heen, by the officials of the said United States land office at Minot, in the said State of North Dakota; and

"Whereas, under and by virtue of the same, the said entryman, Lem A. Heen, did thereafter enter upon said tract, and has resided thereon continuously since said date, and is now residing thereon with his family, and has complied fully with the law relative to residence upon, cultivation, and improvement of Government homesteads, and has valuable and substantial improvements thereon; and

"Whereas the said entryman did, on the 14th day of July, 1900, offer final proof for the tract above described, which proof was rejected on the 26th day of September, A. D. 1901, for the reason that the said entryman was not a citizen of the United States, neither could he become one, being born in China, and a Chinaman, and was not a qualified entryman and patent could not issue to him; and

"Whereas the said entryman did emigrate to the United States on or about the year 1876, prior to the date of taking effect of the Chinese-exclusion act, and did thereafter marry one Nellie Ett Parker, a white woman and a citizen of the United States, and that there is issue of said marriage now living, and that under the ruling of the said United States Land Office patent can not issue to the said entryman, nor to the wife of the said entryman, nor to the child of the said entryman, for the reasons stated aforesaid; and

"Whereas in this a great hardship will be worked upon the said entryman and his said family, and will deprive them of a home and of the fruits of their labor, for which under the law there is no remedy: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described land is hereby granted to Nellie Ett Heen, to wit: The south half of the northwest quarter, and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, situate in the Minot United States land district, in the State of North Dakota."

As the facts in this case are substantially set out in the preamble of this bill, and as the matter seems to be one for Congressional discretion, no recommendation will be made by this office, but I have no objection to urge against the passage of the bill.

The bill, with the accompanying letter, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The following is the House report on the measure:

[House Report No. 2066, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12240) granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, in the State of North Dakota, having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend the passage of the bill:

The purpose of this bill is to grant to Nellie Ett Heen the above-described land (160 acres) for the reasons which are fully set forth in the preamble of the bill, and briefly stated are as follows:

Lem A. Heen, a Chinaman, legally married to Nellie Ett Heen, a white woman and citizen of the United States, made a homestead entry of the above-described lands on May 28, 1895, which application was accepted, entry placed of record, filing fee accepted and receipt regularly issued therefor to said entryman by the officials of the United States land office at Minot, N. Dak.

Thereafter said Lem A. Heen entered upon said land and resided continuously thereon since said date (and is now residing thereon) with his wife and children and has fully complied with the law relative to residence, cultivation, and improvement of Government homesteads, and has valuable and substantial improvements thereon.

And the said Lem A. Heen, on the 14th day of July, 1900, offered final proof for the tract above described, which proof was rejected on the 26th day of September, 1901, for the reason that the said entryman was not a citizen of the United States, neither could he become one, being born in China, of Chinese parents, and therefore not a qualified homesteader, and patent could not issue to him.

Therefore great hardship and injustice will be worked upon said entryman and his family, who entered upon the said land innocently and in good faith, supposing the entryman could perfect title, and they will, by reason of the law, be deprived of the fruits of their labor.

In view of all these circumstances, which are fully corroborated by the Secretary of the Interior, it is deemed a simple act of justice to the wife, Nellie Ett Heen, to grant her the lands (160 acres) embraced in the homestead, and for this the bill provides.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPOONER. The Chair will hear one if I can be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. SPOONER. I object to it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow a statement to be made concerning this matter, and then I do not think he will object to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will state my objection; and if I am wrong, I shall be very glad to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall be glad to hear the Senator's reasons for objecting to the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The homestead law has always excluded aliens.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is true.

Mr. SPOONER. It is impossible under the homestead law of the United States, based on wise public policy, for an alien to avail himself or herself of the homestead law. That has always been the rule, and I think it is based upon wise public policy.

Here is a proposition by a special act to confirm a homestead entry to an alien. If we begin this I do not know where we would stop it. I think it is a bill which really calls for more attention than it is liable to get, depending upon the very great courtesy even of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, just a word, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit me. This is not to confirm a homestead to an alien. It is a grant of land to the wife of an alien who was a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. The alien made the entry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The alien made the entry, the entry was accepted in the local land office, and the final proof was denied because he was an alien. He has lived on the land for seven years, has made improvements upon it, and, I submit, he has endured great hardships as a result of the action taken by the local land office.

Mr. SPOONER. A great many American citizens, who settled upon land in my State, spent years there, made improvements of great value, and cultivated the land, after selling the trees, and all that, were, by the action of the local land office, excluded from the benefit of the land. I know the power of precedent. If this old settler were living, Congress would not pass this bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. As I said in the beginning, in giving title to this land we are not giving the title to an alien, but giving it to his wife. They were married some fifteen or twenty years ago. They have one child. They have lived on that land seven years, and made improvements there. This is merely a grant of land to the wife of this alien, who came to this country prior to the passage of the Chinese-exclusion law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the alien living?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. He is living.

Mr. SPOONER. The man is alive?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The man is alive, and his family live on the land at present.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes to the Calendar.

BRIG. GEN. H. C. MERRIAM.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent that the pending measure may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill (S. 5891) to authorize the President to appoint Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam to the grade of major-general in the United States Army on the retired list. It is a bill for the promotion of General Merriam, which has the approval of the War Department, and quasi of the President. General Merriam is one of the great generals who was crowded out from any promotion when he was retired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Army," to insert "and place him;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam to the grade of major-general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendwas concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the President to appoint Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam to the grade of major-general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list."

MONUMENTS TO GENERALS NASH AND DAVIDSON.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution No. 16, for the erection of monuments to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution referred to by him. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I shall not object to the joint resolution of the Senator from North Carolina if it provokes no discussion, nor shall I object to a bill which I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] desires to call up; but after those bills shall have been disposed of I shall ask that the regular order be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read to the Senate for its information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 16) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand, the Continental Congress appropriated a certain sum of money for the erection of monuments to a very considerable number of distinguished generals. During the last session we passed a bill appropriating, I think, $25,000 for the erection of a monument to one of those generals, who was singled out from the list—a Virginian. I recall the fact that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], not now in his seat, gave notice that Connecticut had distinguished generals in that list, and it seems to me improper that we should now take two more out of that list and pass an appropriation for the erection of monuments to them. If we are going into this business, we ought not to discriminate. So I shall have to object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to permit me to make a short statement about this matter, and possibly his objection may be overcome.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw my objection for the present, so as to hear the statement of the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, if the joint resolution is to create controversy here, and to be discussed, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the joint resolution is not before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement. It will take but a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a joint resolution providing for the erection of monuments to the memory of both these distinguished generals of the Revolutionary war, not only passed the Continental Congress, but there have been since that time a number of favorable reports, both in this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol on this subject. In 1842 a favorable report was made in the Senate upon a similar joint resolution. In the Forty-fourth Congress a joint resolution to the same import was reported favorably to the Senate, and unanimously passed this body. In the next Congress a like favorable report was made to this body, but no action was taken thereon.

The amount proposed to be appropriated is exceedingly small, only $5,000, while the amount appropriated for the erection of a monument to the memory of General Mercer, referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, which was made at the last session of Congress, was $25,000.

I do not desire to antagonize, and I shall not, of course, antagonize the erection of monuments to other generals, but these two generals were exceedingly gallant officers and I think this a specially meritorious proposition. One of them, General Davidson, fought at the battles of Brandywine, Monmouth, and Germantown. He was wounded at the battle of Calson, and finally killed in 1781 in the battle at Cowans Ford, on the Catawba River, in North Carolina.

I sincerely trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I feel constrained to insist upon my objection to the consideration of the joint resolution this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the joint resolution goes back to the Calendar.

COURTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, by the kind indulgence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 14275, relative to the terms of United States courts in South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 14275) providing for additional terms of court in the western judicial district of the State of South Carolina; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (S. 6216) to pay in part judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii for property destroyed in suppressing the bubonic plague in said Territory in 1899 and 1900, and authorizing the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for the payment of the remaining claims, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. QUAY. Before proceeding with the debate, I desire to send to the Secretary's desk the usual telegrams for insertion in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania presents certain telegrams in relation to the statehood bill and asks that they be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Let them be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts demands that the telegrams be read. They will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the telegrams, but was interrupted by Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I object to the further reading of the telegrams, if it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects to the further reading of the telegrams.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought the Senator from Pennsylvania requested the reading of the telegrams.

Mr. QUAY. I did not; I requested that they should be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. KEAN. We should like to hear the telegrams read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given, as the Chair understood, that they should be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did not the Senator from Pennsylvania request their reading?

Mr. QUAY. I did not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not request their reading, but he requested that the telegrams should be printed in the RECORD without reading, and there was no objection.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection to their being read except the consumption of time.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asked that the telegram be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent having been given that the telegrams should go into the RECORD without reading, it is not for the Chair to rule what that may mean.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

Mr. BURNHAM addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken, with interruptions, for more than four hours,

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if it will suit his convenience as well to proceed with his remarks in the morning?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; I shall be very glad to do so. I was about through, anyway.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will indulge me, I will, for certain reasons well known to us all, move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment to enable the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

[Mr. BURNHAM'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Goverment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PETTUS. I now renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me that I may make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 23, 1903, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ATTEMPTED CORRUPT INFLUENCE.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to offer a privileged resolution, and to ask for its immediate consideration. I call for the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas information has come to the Committee on Naval Affairs, through a member of said committee, of an attempt to corruptly influence his action respecting proposed legislation pending before said committee and the House: Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or such subcommittee thereof as said committee may appoint, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to fully investigate said matter, and for such purpose it is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to administer oaths. Said committee shall have authority to report at any time, and the expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this resolution is reported in accordance with a unanimous vote of the committee; and I move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not fully hear the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss]. I think he said that the resolution had been carefully considered——

A MEMBER. And that it is a unanimous report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no name mentioned in the resolution?

Mr. FOSS. No name.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It occurred to me as I heard the resolution read that it is rather vague and uncertain; but if the committee is satisfied with it, I shall not interpose any objection. It does seem to me, however, that where you propose an investigation there ought to be something more definite and certain than a mere report that some member has been approached by somebody. As to what the purpose was, or who the member was, or when the incident occurred there is no hint in this resolution. With all deference to the committee, and to my friend its chairman, it seems to me that it is too vague and uncertain to say simply what this resolution says and then upon that enter upon an investigation. I certainly would be of opinion that the resolution ought to be more definite than it is. I do not, however, rise to object to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman expect that the Committee on Naval Affairs would set forth the evidence on which they have acted?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all; but they might give the name of the member approached.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that the committee carefully considered this matter, and thought it better not to insert the name in the resolution. The resolution has been presented in pursuance of the unanimous vote of the committee. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOSS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TAWNEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 15520, the Philippine coinage bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment—an amendment reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 1, strike out "lawful money" and insert "gold coin."

Mr. FOWLER. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There are pending, as the Chair understands, three amendments.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I rise to debate the committee amendment. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I think debate was closed last night on the pending amendment.

Mr. HILL. Oh, this is a new amendment. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] properly has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on this amendment was not closed last evening, but no further amendments are in order at this time.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is there any limitation whatever upon this coinage that is provided in this measure?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That question is easily answered. The bill provides that the Commission shall maintain the coin at parity with gold. That requirement absolutely precludes unlimited coinage. It is a fundamental law of finance that under that requirement there can not be unlimited coinage. Of necessity it requires a restricted amount of coinage, otherwise it can not be maintained at parity.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me one word more in reply, I will move to give him another five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the bill gives the entire discretion in the matter of the maintenance of parity to the Philippine Commission.

Mr. FOWLER. What can they do to maintain parity?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They can do what I suggested yesterday they are allowed to do under the provisions of the pending bill. They may do what they deem necessary to maintain parity and under that provision can, in their discretion, exchange gold for silver or silver for gold, or sell gold drafts on the United States or transfer any funds in the treasury of the government to the currency reserve fund, or issue temporary certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. FOWLER. Up to the amount of five million.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A previous chairman of the Coinage Committee of the House of Representatives, Hon. Mr. Walker, of Worcester, Mass., in a communication declares that he favors the system recommended by Mr. Conant, viz, two pesos for a gold dollar. As to the amount of the coin to be issued, he says:

What should be the limit of amount?

I should say the amount should by all means be limited, and that the limit should be at the discretion of the Secretary of Treasury of the United States.

Now, the Committee on Insular Affairs instead of giving this discretion to the Treasurer of the United States, 8,000 miles from the islands, has simply conferred it upon the Philippine Commission.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, last June I took occasion to use these words with reference to the pending legislation coming from this committee:

If I desired to call down upon the Philippine Islands the curse of curses, I should doom them to the silver standard, with the free coinage of silver. If I desired to raise a certain and complete bar to all progress and prosperity, I should subject them to the schemes and chicane of the bullion brokers, whose limit is measured by the last farthing of profit.

The free-coinage scheme contained in the Senate bill gives the lie to three of the most notable and glorious educational campaigns in American history, and reverses by legislative enactment three deliberate judgments rendered by the American people at the polls.

Instead of a brave advance, it is a cowardly retreat. May God grant that no such humiliating spectacle shall ever be charged to the Republican party, whose progress in monetary reform has been slow, but always onward and upward, and never backward and downward.

The coinage provisions of the House bill, though not without criticism, look in the right direction and are incomparably preferable to those in the Senate measure, which must prove, if enacted, an everlasting scourge and withering blight to that struggling people.

If American civilization is to be the salvation of the Filipino, you will lift him farther and faster by the adoption of American money than by any other force.

It will teach him the lessons of the flag and impress upon him the power and glory of the Republic, while the theoretical instruction of the schools is making comparatively slow progress; for through no American coin will he be filched of his legitimate gain.

Establish in the Philippine Islands the gold standard—the standard of the whole commercial world—thus placing them beyond a daily bullion tribute to the money changers, and you will start the Filipino on the sure road to a perfect confidence in the American people and in the justice and honor of our Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall discuss only one or two principles in connection with this subject. I undertake to say that the committee have reported a measure that would in effect amount to the free coinage of silver in the Philippine Islands, because, forsooth, it is only limited by the discretion of the Philippine Commission, as just stated by the chairman of the committee. I would like to have this House understand that at no time in the history of the world—at no time—has a government by its enforcement been successful in the management of the commerce of the country. I want to read now from an article contained in the Bankers' Magazine for December, written by Mr. Charles A. Conant, wherein he announced sound principles, and I think outlined the policy that we should pursue in this House, for I undertake to say that there are no political questions involved in such a matter as this. The laws of economics are as certain and immutable as the laws of gravitation, and when we, as legislators, cease to apply a patch here and a patch there, or a salve to some running sore, and apply ourselves to the adoption of sound economic principles, we will make some progress.

In this article Mr. Conant uses this language:

Another lesson blazed in burning letters over the history of State intervention in the money market is that the public credit should be kept separate from the commercial credit. If each is strong, it will stand alone. If either is weak, it is more likely to drag down the other, if they are tied together, than to sustain it. The fiscal policy of the Government should stand toward the banking world in much the same position as that of any private firm or corporation. Its misfortunes need not then affect seriously the banking and commercial system of the country. A deficit should be covered by loans, if it can not be promptly met from taxation, but they should not be forced loans levied upon the public or the banks. If the Government undertakes to issue paper as a substitute for money, or if it seeks, by one remove from this process, to force the banks to do this to meet its needs, then a disturbing factor is introduced into all business calculations. The medium of exchange ceases to be the metallic standard of other commercial peoples and becomes the same object of speculation as interest-bearing securities.

While public credit and commercial credit remain separate, either may suffer shocks without impairing materially the steadiness of the other. Each may suffer somewhat in sympathy with the other, but not by any means to the same degree or with the same disastrous effects as where they are linked together. If a Government like that of Spain or Italy should cover its frequent deficits by the issue of bonds, even if compelled to sell them much below par, the commercial business of the country would be affected only indirectly. The metallic standard would be unshaken, the money in which contracts were executed would be the same as the money of other commercial states, and foreign capital could be obtained freely for solvent business enterprises. If, on the other hand, commercial credit should be shaken while public credit remained unimpaired, the restoration of sound conditions would be much more prompt; because the power of the state would enforce upon the banks conservative methods and the resumption of specie payments as soon as conditions would permit. The experience of the United States, where specie payments were quickly resumed by the banks after the panic of 1857, proves the benefit of independent public credit when commercial credit is impaired.

The time of Mr. FOWLER having expired, by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, it was extended ten minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that while the bankers in 1857 resumed specie payments in the course of a year, when the United States Government left the gold standard in 1861 it remained seventeen years off from the gold standard. Mr. Conant further says:

The experience of France in the throes of her struggle with Germany and with the Commune proves the priceless value of a firm commercial credit when public credit is dragged in the gutter.

Now, gentlemen, these are the words of Mr. Conant in the December number of the Bankers' Magazine, and they state sound economic principles.

Apart from the establishment of the gold standard by this bill, I assert that it amounts to practically the free coinage of silver. I assert that there is not one single precedent in the history of the world that justifies tying the Philippine government to the maintenance of the parity of silver and gold, not one.

I want to call attention to one observation which was made here yesterday in favor of this bill, which was that there was great danger of counterfeiting. It ought to be understood that there are to-day about 800 teachers scattered all through the archipelago, that there are 15,000 American soldiers at 145 or 150 garrisons, which implies the current circulation throughout all that country of American money. That we are going to remain there so far as we now see, there is no doubt, so that American money is to continue to circulate through the Philippine Islands. Therefore, if there is one single scintilla of proof that they are going to counterfeit the money in case you adopt American money, that same fact exists to-day and will continue.

Now let me say right here, if it is true that American money is going to circulate in the Philippine Islands with the new form of money which this bill proposes you are going to supply the Philippine Islands, the people will be subject to the Chinese and Japanese money changers, not only every day, but every hour of the day. Gentlemen think that simply because these both are legal tender that the poor people, scattered as they are in the mountain fastnesses and out-of-the-way places, are going to be always ready to determine whether this money is worth this or that. The people always and at all times everywhere are subject to the chicane of the money changers, and there never was organized a scheme or plan that was so successful in taking the profits out of any people as a scheme where daily money changing is required; and I am in favor of some money that is the same at all times, and one money, so that there can be no comparison instituted by the money changers and money shavers of the Philippine Islands.

One more point and I have finished what I desire to say, and that is this: That when we pass a law by which we establish a system there the ostensible object of which is to throw the responsibility on the Philippine Islands, when you assume that we are relieving ourselves of the burden, I say that the burden will remain still upon the American people and that we are morally bound to see that the law works precisely as we declare it will work. We must save them harmless; and I say here and now that if this bill as reported by the majority should be passed and become a law there are men in this House who will be here when you will be called upon to cure the evils that that very law will bring to the Philippine people. I want to state to you that I am in favor of the substitute bill instead of the bill reported by the committee, and shall so vote. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to what the gentleman read from the article written by Mr. Conant. My interpretation of that article makes it nothing more nor less than an argument in favor of asset banking, and asset banking is a proposition strongly indorsed, as everybody knows, by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey. That is the only interpretation to be put upon it. And with all respect to the gentleman, it does not appear to be germane to the subject before us. Being only an argument in favor of asset banking, what has it to do with the question of stabilizing the ratio in the Philippine Islands between silver and gold, as India and the Netherlands have done in their oriental dependencies? In my judgment nothing whatever.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey says that the bill provides for free coinage in the Philippines. Now, a complete and perfect answer to that statement is to say that the requirement of the maintenance of the parity between gold and silver in the archipelago absolutely prohibits free coinage there. I note that since I read this extract from the letter by Mr. Walker a gentleman who seemed disposed to vote against the pending bill has entered the House, and I desire to read what Hon. J. H. Walker, the predecessor of the present chairman of the Committee on Coinage of this House, said about the proposition contained in this bill. Mr. Walker was chairman of the House Committee on Coinage and Banking one or two Congresses since, and is a man of wide experience in business affairs and an authority on finance. He says:

My impression is that it——

That is, the silver in the Philippines—

should be of the same weight as the silver coins of the United States, of course, to be legal tender in the Philippines at one-half, measured by our gold dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Walker continues:

I should say the amount should be by all means limited, and that that limit should be at the discretion of the Treasury of the United States. Of course, he would, in coming to this conclusion, advise with the proper authorities in the Philippine Islands.

Now, is it not strange that Mr. Walker should be interpreted as being an advocate of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, a proposition he always denounced in unsparing terms on the floor of this House and in his public addresses throughout the United States. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], on reflection, will see that his interpretation is not the true one. That discretion must be lodged somewhere. The bill proposes to lodge it in the Philippine Commission, the government of the Philippine Islands.

As to the danger of counterfeiting, the gentleman from New Jersey says that there are 800 or 1,000 teachers now who are paid in our money.

Mr. HILL. Paid in American money.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Paid in American money. I came from the War Department this morning and was in the Bureau of Insular Affairs and was told that the teachers were not paid in American money, but in Filipino money at the gold ratio. In other words, they take the equivalent of the gold in Filipino money and pay it out among the people. The soldiers are paid in gold money which, however, finds its way quickly back to the banks. A comparatively small quantity of it circulates through the province of the archipelago. The teachers, they informed me this morning, the Filipino teachers, are paid in Filipino money taken from the municipalities by taxation. The American teachers are paid by the treasury of the island in Filipino money at its gold ratio. How does this practice familiarize the people of remote provinces with American money?

Now, about the danger of counterfeiting. The danger of counterfeiting the silver dollar would consist in this fact, that the counterfeit coin would be a perfect coin except that it would be made in the wrong place. It would not be like counterfeit coin of inferior quality and of less bullion value in this country, which, because of its perfect resemblance to the genuine coin, is made to pass current. Expert labor is cheap in China and Japan, and numbers of men could make silver dollars, absolutely perfect in weight, purity, and appearance, which would be much more dangerous than the average counterfeit in the United States. To this must be added the extreme difficulty there would be in preventing this work in China and Japan and in keeping the fraudulent coinage out of the Philippines.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, in his argument before the committee, contended that one of the strongest arguments in favor of his bill, and against the substitute offered by the minority, was the danger of counterfeiting under the substitute, and he has so much faith in that argument that he repeats it before the committee again this morning.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that whether you pass the bill of the majority or the substitute of the minority, the inducement for counterfeiting in the Philippine Islands will be substantially the same; because you have a large volume of American money there, now American silver there, and it will continue there and be used as money among the people, whichever bill is adopted, and that will be a sufficient inducement to engage in counterfeiting silver coin under either bill, if they are so disposed. When we take this fact into consideration, we see there is no force in the argument offered by the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, that there is great danger of wholesale counterfeiting if the substitute passes.

Further, Mr. Chairman, if I understood the language of our distinguished chairman on yesterday, he charged the minority of the committee, as well as the minority of the House, with bad motives in presenting this substitute. The gentleman had no reason for making any such charges as this. Speaking for myself and other members of the minority, I can say that it is offered in good faith, and because we believe it is the best solution of this question. I was sorry to see our distinguished chairman depart so far from his usual course of fairness in debate to appeal to partisanship on his side of the House to secure the passage of this bill.

He abandoned, I say, the merits of his bill, and appealed to partisanship for support. Nor did he stop here; but he went even farther and brought from the Senate a serious threat which he held over the heads of the majority, that unless the House passed this bill there would be no legislation on this question at this session. Sir, I hope the time has not come when the great American House of Representatives has so far degenerated as to become entirely subservient to the Senate. It will be time enough to talk about a surrender after this bill has gone into conference. And I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this House is not here merely to register the opinion of witnesses who come before our committee on this question, whether Peabody or some other body; nor to register the opinion of the Senate, as the gentleman has learned it, as he claims, from one in authority, who, I suppose, is Senator HANNA, of Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to occupy ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished governor-general of the Philippines, Judge Taft, introduced his statement to the Committee on Insular Affairs by saying:

I want to say first that none of the members of the Commission are experts on coinage, and therefore they were able to be unanimous in their recommendation.

Practically the same reason has induced me to speak on this subject—because I know nothing about it. [Laughter.] Sir, whenever there is introduced into this House, or into the discussions of the country, a question that involves coinage or currency a crowd of witnesses arises in all directions and comes running with books, starting usually at Adam Smith and coming along down to the gentleman who figures in this report, Mr. Conant; and no one of them since I have been a member of this House has ever agreed with any other upon any proposition and given the same reasons for such agreement. I have known a Committee on Banking and Currency with thirteen members to have fourteen opinions upon a single question. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. No one of which agreed with that of the gentleman now speaking. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. No one of which was ever enacted into law by the vote of this House, nor did any one come anywhere near it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read certain marked passages from the report of this committee, for my benefit.

The Clerk read as follows:

I am very certain, with deference to Mr. HILL of Connecticut, that to attempt to adopt as a whole the coinage of the United States in those islands would be productive of nothing but disaster. The wages and prices of everything have increased very much in the islands. Wages have doubled and trebled. If the members will take the time to read the report of the meetings held by the Commission throughout the islands, in 39 different provinces and districts, I think it will be found that in every instance what they call the "jornal"—the daily wage—has doubled, and in many instances has trebled. Now, if you propose to introduce a system in which the American peso is to be the standard—it is called the dollar—then, certainly, those people who deal so much in names, the wage-earners, will insist on getting as large a proportion of the American dollar as they now do of the Filipino peso.

The storekeepers will insist on doubling their prices, and in that way, with a people where communication is not easy, with a people where they are more or less dependent on the tradesmen, where competition is not wide enough to enable the people to get the benefit of the law of supply and demand, we feel certain that prices will go up even beyond what they are now, and wages will go up. Mr. HILL said to me, "What is the disadvantage of having the wages go up; is it not well to increase the wages of the wage-earner?" I said, "Mr. HILL, if the manufacturers of Connecticut first had the wages there doubled or trebled, and then you introduced a coinage law that would again double or treble them, you would have disaster throughout your very prosperous State, and why put upon us that same burden?"

The CHAIRMAN. You draw a distinction between an actual rise in wages and the rise caused by a different standard?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. One being natural and the other artificial?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; I think it is an artificial, arbitrary change, which does no good to either side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It does a harm in this way. Does it not render it hard for men who have debts to meet in the immediate future to pay them?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Without opportunity to earn money under the new system?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. As you say, it destroys the relation between debtor and creditor, and also between the supplier and the consumer.

Mr. LOUD. Are the debts on the gold basis?

Governor TAFT. No, sir.

Mr. LOUD. On the silver basis?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Your comparison between the State of Connecticut and the conditions which exist there is not applicable, because the State of Connecticut is only one State of the United States.

Governor TAFT. But I was trying to bring it home to Mr. HILL. I think the analogy is sufficiently correct to make the argument a strong one, that where you have the employer and the laborer, that that which suddenly changes their relations, which is not the result of normal influences, is apt to produce financial disaster.

Mr. LOUD. In a locality, perhaps; but if the change be general throughout the country, you can not say?

Governor TAFT. I think you can. I think it only means the disaster is wider spread. The labor trouble in the Philippines is much greater than it is in Connecticut. Labor is much more expensive in the Philippines than it is in Connecticut, and if you are going to double the value you only increase the difficulty.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You mean that labor is more expensive in the Philippines as to effectiveness?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You do not mean the daily wage?

Governor TAFT. No, sir; I mean in the amount that the unit of labor produces.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, that is the opinion of Governor Taft, in which, as I understand, he was joined by the entire Commission and supported by the unanimous sentiment of the people of the United States. This Congress is responsible for doing something. The demand is here, and the hour has come. We are charged with a duty. Now, how shall we perform it? After the testimony of the Philippine Commission comes the result of the laborious and patient effort of the Committee on Insular Affairs. I have profound respect for the learning and study of these gentlemen—the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]—but I am compelled now, in my ignorance and blindness, to decide what I shall do about voting. I am here now without time to follow out the ramifications of the scientific attainments of these gentlemen. I am, to use a slang expression, "up against" a proposition, and that proposition is how I am going to vote.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to state what I intend to do. I will take the preponderance of evidence, the greatest weight of the evidence, the evidence that is united, the evidence that is in compact form and which comes to us with the weight of authority, and that is the report of this Committee on Insular Affairs. I may be all wrong; but in the discharge of my duty I shall take it upon myself to follow them. I have listened to their arguments, I have read their reports, and I have listened to what has been said by these other gentlemen, and I give full weight and credit to the patriotic purpose of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the other side, who has just taken his seat. But I must vote, and I will not vote to overshadow or weaken this measure by amendment, but will stand by the report of the committee, and I believe that in the long run it will be determined that the practical men in the Philippine Islands who have sent this message to us and the practical men who have worked out this measure in Congress are entitled to the credit in the end of having solved this proposition correctly. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. If the gentleman who has just taken his seat votes according to the weight of evidence, if he votes according to the statement of the "practical men" in the Philippine Islands, he will vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver. All through the reports, as I showed yesterday, the statements of the witnesses from the Schurman Commission down to and including the Taft Commission have been uniformly in favor of the unlimited coinage of silver in the Philippine Islands. Every banker there, almost every merchant there—I mean those who were there before the American people went there—has been uniformly in favor of the continuance of the Mexican dollar. It is since American people have gone in there and have seen the operation of this system that they come now and demand a new system of coinage; and it is since Governor Taft himself has had experience in the matter that he writes, as in the letter which was read yesterday, that he does not "insist on his plan;" that all he wants is action by Congress.

What Governor Taft wants is action; what the Philippine Archipelago wants is action, and they do not want to be held up here by anybody, as we were threatened yesterday, when it was intimated that if we did not pass this particular bill no legislation shall be enacted. The gentleman says that he is up against this proposition. I tell him no, no! The House of Representatives is up against the proposition that if they do not vote in a way in which they are told to vote by somebody else they shall have no legislation at all. [Applause.] That is the question we are up against, and nothing else. We have a right—a constitutional right—to vote according to our judgment here on the case as it is presented to us, no matter what the consequence may be, and to let anyone else—Executive, Senate, or anyone else—who chooses not to pass upon this proposition take the responsibility. Our duty is to do what our consciences and our judgment tell us we ought to do.

I want to say one word more. Yesterday I quoted from a speech of the Secretary of the Treasury. This morning I went to the Secretary of the Treasury and said to him that if any apology was necessary for quoting from a public speech I was there to make it. He said none was necessary; that he believed in this legislation, and told me furthermore, gentlemen, along the same line, that there is now in Washington from Mexico a gentleman endeavoring to arrange for an absolutely uniform system of coinage between Mexico and the United States, so that they may bring their coinage system exactly to ours. And why? Because as a neighboring state it will tend to increase the trade communications between the two countries; and I want to say to every one of these Representatives from the Pacific coast that whenever they vote to put a new and strange system of coinage in the Philippine Islands they are practically building a fence between the trade of those islands and the trade of that coast which will always prevail. Some of them who visited the Philippine Islands last year know absolutely the truth of the statements I have made. The uniform line of testimony by those who were in the Philippine Islands before we went there and by those who have been there since is in favor of the adoption of American money, holding it there with the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, there is no greater educator in American customs and American practices than the daily use of the American coin. The lesson is not a new one. We had it two thousand years ago, when a man came to the Master of us all and wanted to know where they should pay tribute, which meant allegiance and devotion. The Master took a coin in his hand and pointing to it said, "Whose image and superscription is this?" The man answered, "Cæsar's." "Then," said the Master, "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." So that that lesson has come down to us, and every day when these people over in the Philippine Islands pass our coin among themselves it is an object lesson to them of the blessings and privileges which I hope will come to them under an American Government. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at the attitude of our friends on the other side of the Chamber in respect to this bill. They have led us to believe heretofore that they wanted us to get out of the Philippine Islands, and the quicker we did so the better. No matter if we left them to drift and look out for themselves, we must get out right off. Now they come in here with a proposition to fix upon these islands forever, not only the standard, but the coins of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. If I get a little more time.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think by extending the coinage laws of the United States to the Philippine Islands and giving them our lawful money we could get out of there if we wanted to much more easily than if we gave them a distinctive currency which we would have to redeem and provide for?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, on the other hand, I think it would look as though we meant to stay there forever, if we would give them our coinage. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Well, if we are to stay there forever, ought not they to have the coin of the United States?

Mr. PAYNE. And I note it as a sign of progress on the part of the Democratic party. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Then, too, I hope that no one will ever try to force my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] into doing what he does not want to do. [Laughter.] He is making a great bugaboo here about the position of some one in the Senate, and he appeals to the House not to be forced in this matter. Well, I hope that the House will not be forced by anybody outside of the House, not even by the Secretary of the Treasury, to follow his views or other views upon this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert upon finance or upon coinage or upon any of these things. God forbid that I ever should be, because if I should join that crowd I should lose what little usefulness I have ever had in these matters as a member of the House. It was only when this matter was taken out of these committees, the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and referred to a few of us—you remember how that was—who had never served upon these committees and never had become experts, never had studied finance, never had studied coinage and banking and those things until we did not know anything else—it was not until it was referred to such a committee as that, that any practical legislation was ever gotten through the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we commenced last year upon this matter in the bill providing for a temporary government for the Philippine Islands, and the House approved substantially what is in this bill to-day; approved substantially the redemption of these pesos by the gold dollar, making a standardization of those pesos, making two of them equal to the gold dollar. We ran up against the Senate then, and I am not afraid of them now because we ran up against them then and were not able to force the House bill upon them. We did get something out of the Senate then, and I hope that when this measure goes to the Senate and finally comes back to conference we may get something practical out of it.

But we started in in the direction of making a new coin for the Philippine Islands. When that bill was finally becoming a law, and was agreed to by the House of Representatives, we started in to make what might be called a half peso, a 50-centavo piece, to be coined out of silver. We provided for everything except the standardization of that 50-centavo coin, and so we provided for all the minor coins down to the centavo in that act, and we provided that on the face of that coin should appear the statement that it was issued by the government of the Philippine Islands, but that on it should also appear the sovereignty of the United States of America; so that if the American money going over into the Philippine Islands will remind those people of the greatness and the goodness of the United States of America, the coins we provided for in that bill last summer will also remind them of the greatness of the United States of America.

Now, having gone that far, we are asked to take the back track; we are asked to turn around and take up that coinage which we provided for in the bill which we passed at the last session and to give them a new coinage, to wit, all the coins of the United States of America; and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] proposes to extend it a little and to provide for a half-cent coin to be used in the Philippine Islands, and I suppose also for the poor people of the United States, if they happen to get hold of them, so that we shall add that much to our coinage.

Mr. HILL. We will not add anything. We have always had authority for the half-cent coin, but we simply discontinued the coinage of it.

The time of Mr. PAYNE having expired, by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, this proposition on the part of the minority of the committee is that the Government of the United States shall purchase the bullion, and they appropriate in the bill sufficient money to pay the expense of purchasing the bullion and coining it for the Philippine Islands, United States coin to be used. Of course the seigniorage would go to the benefit of the United States under that bill, and not to the benefit of the Philippine Islands. The committee, on the other hand——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman is entirely mistaken as to the proposition of the minority. We do not provide for that at all.

Mr. PAYNE (reading):

And whatever sum may be required to carry out the provisions hereof and to pay all expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish such regulations and employ such agencies as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes hereof.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That is to redeem the Mexican silver, and not to buy bullion.

Mr. HILL. That is the same language that was used in the Porto Rico act in making the transfer there.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if that does not authorize them to purchase bullion, I do not know very well how they could be authorized. There is no authority outside of that. It does not apply to bullion now on hand, which is already devoted by law to other purposes. It simply provides for coinage, and gives the Secretary of the Treasury an opportunity to coin and to pay all expenses out of the money not otherwise appropriated. If it does not provide that authority, as I have said, I can not understand the language which these gentlemen have used. Perhaps they are experts on this subject of coinage, and for that reason an average man can not understand what they mean.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is simply to round out what we did a year ago. It is to provide that these people may have the same peso that they have been accustomed to, except that it is to give it value. It is no violent change for them; it makes no violent change between the laborer and the employer, between the poor people of the islands and those who are more well to do. It makes no violent change in trade relations. It simply gets rid of the present condition, which is that a man does not know the next morning what a peso will be worth that he went to bed owning at night. It renders it equal to one-half of the gold dollar of the United States. Gentlemen say that we have provided for the free and unlimited coinage of silver pesos. We leave that to the Philippine Commission; we leave that to the same gentlemen who have so well governed the islands; we leave it to them to provide the amount of pesos which they shall have, and if it is unlimited, it is because these men do not exercise their judgment and do not exercise their discretion.

So far as I have been acquainted with these gentlemen, I would be fully as willing to leave it to them as to leave it to the great Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives of the United States, so we provide against disturbing the size of the pesos; and in so doing we are making no violent disturbance in the trade relations of those islands. And we go a little further than that. There is a provision here which I think would operate as a practical provision against counterfeiting the silver pesos. If we made them the size of our dollars and adopted the currency of the United States and sent it over there it would be a great incentive there to counterfeiting those dollars for dollars issued from our mints. These islands, 10,000 miles away, have no such facilities for the detection of counterfeiting as we have here in the United States.

They have no organized bureau to detect counterfeiting in those islands, among those ignorant people; and a people far scattered among the islands would afford a great chance of counterfeiting. They could go in there with your American dollar, bearing the stamp and impress of the United States of America, and when informed that it is only worth about 30 cents, they would ask why, and they would say, "Because some clever man has counterfeited the coin of the United States." Do you think it will be a proper measure or a popular measure among the people of those islands? But to give them a full-sized dollar for a peso, but only worth 50 cents, with very little to be made in the process of counterfeiting, you have a remedy against counterfeiting those coins.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman—and we had the benefit of the learning of the gentleman from Connecticut when he was before the committee—for these reasons, coming from practical men who have been there for months and for years building up government in these islands, acquainted with all the trade in the islands, with all the various channels of trade, with all the lines of trade, with all the various conditions of trade that exist there, I shall vote, even if I dissent from the distinguished gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in favor of the bill reported by the committee, favored by the House last session, and which we hope may become the law, and which the Senate kept from going on the bill a year ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from New York twitted those of us who want to get out of the Philippines with some sort of imagined inconsistency because we were supporting the substitute bill. His ground is not well taken. Upon the other side, the cannon might be turned upon him, as it might be said of him and other men who want us to remain permanently in the Philippine Islands that he is very inconsistent indeed when he does not want to give the Philippines the benefit of the uniform coinage and banking laws of the United States.

If you are going to remain there, then the substitute which we have offered is right. If you are going to leave there, then the substitute which we have offered is yet right, and it is right for these reasons: If you leave the Philippine Islands, you want to leave behind you, if possible, a state of things which will increase American trade and commerce in the Philippines and in the entire Orient. Nothing will make as powerful an agency for that purpose as an extension of the circulation of American money in the Orient, and if it circulates among the Philippine people it may possibly circulate throughout all the adjacent Orient.

People acquainted with the history of this subject realize that the great financial stability and prosperity of France has been largely due to the fact of the formation of the Latin Union giving the weight and fineness and circulation of French coins to Switzerland, Italy, Belgium, and Spain.

Now, gentlemen, there is no question of politics involved here. This is not a question of getting out of or staying in the Philippine Islands. I believe with all my heart that a greater mistake was never made than ever having landed a man to stay upon the Philippine shore after the Spanish fleet was destroyed. I believe that the grandest efforts of American statesmanship might well be directed to the great purpose of formulating some sort of a scheme whereby we could honorably and safely get away from the Philippine Islands. But I claim that when we leave we should leave behind us American money as a stimulating agency for the expansion of American trade in the future.

One more word or two, Mr. Chairman, and I shall have done. The main argument made by gentlemen upon the other side and by witnesses before the committee was that if we attempted to introduce the American silver dollar it would lead to a great disturbance in business and especially in the wage rate; that the men who before were receiving certain wages would not receive a dollar of American money where he had been receiving two dollars in Mexican money, although the dollar in American money is worth two dollars of Mexican money, but that he would want two dollars of American money.

In other words, it would double the wages in the Philippine Islands. So much the better for them, and so much the better for American labor to come into some sort of competition with them. But, my friends, that argument is based on the assumption of absolute stupidity, irresistible—I hardly know what to call it—Gibraltar-like resistance to waves of knowledge, that gentlemen take for granted must be peculiar to the Orient.

Now, I want to say this—that it will cause less dislocation of business to introduce into the Philippine Islands, and less disturbance to the wage rate, the American dollar already partially known there, whose value is known and which passes at its face value, than it will to introduce an entirely new coin unknown to the commerce of the world, not identical in weight or appearance to any other coin on the surface of the earth.

If it be true that these people are so stupid that they can not learn the difference between 100 cents and 50 cents, they will be so stupid that they can not learn the difference between 50 cents and 36 cents. These gentlemen propose to coin a coin that will not circulate at its bullion value, as the Mexican dollar in the Philippines now does, not at 100 cents in gold, as the American dollar does, but differing from the American dollar only in this, that whereas it has 36 cents in it and is "fiated," as you Republicans say, at 50 cents, the American dollar is "fiated," as you claim, at 100 cents.

Now, I want to show you by reading this testimony that I am not mistaken about the actual circulation of the American silver dollar at its gold parity value in the Philippines. I tried to read this testimony yesterday.

Mr. CANNON. Is not an American dollar exchanged for two Mexicans, right there under his nose?

Meaning the nose of the Filipino—

Mr. PEABODY. It would change for two and a half at present.
Mr. CANNON. Is not that done to-day?
Mr. PEABODY. But he is paid in the Mexican dollar.
Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, does he not understand that? Does not everybody understand that if he has an American dollar he can get two and a half Mexicans for it?
Mr. PEABODY. They know the value of the coin they receive, yes, sir; but the question would be whether the millions of wage-earners would be contented or willing to see that the purchasing power of 40 cents in American money was as much as that of a dollar in Mexican silver.

And further along Mr. Peabody says:

If the two coins were in circulation, however, they would understand the value of the gold peso dollar.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Peabody, what is called the Conant plan, the plan outlined in the bill under consideration, would involve that same difficulty to a certain degree, would it not?
Mr. PEABODY. Yes, sir; I think it is open to the construction, as one reads it, that the United States dollar was intended to become a unit of trade, and the silver peso would be a coin for convenience.

Now, these are the facts. There is our dollar there already, partially known to the people, circulating at gold parity value, at that value in the purchase of commodities and paying labor, at the rate of two and a half dollars of Mexican money. Now, gentlemen say the objection is that the American dollar, circulating clear through the islands, would "disturb business" and "dislocate trade;" and in order not to "disturb business" and "dislocate trade" they want to coin an entirely new, hitherto unknown coin, like no other coin in the islands in denomination or weight, and giving it additional fiat value of the difference between 36 and 50 cents, and then rest the burden of artificially maintaining the parity by bond issues upon the Filipino people.

There is no government under the sun that can maintain a token dollar automatically, as we do, except a great, rich country. No small or poor country can do it. I say to-day that if you turn the Philippine Archipelago loose as an independent nation upon the earth, it can not by any legislation float a token coin. The United States can float it because the commerce of the United States floats it, because the public tax-receiving power of the United States floats it, because the debt-receiving power of the people of the United States—it being a legal tender for private debts—floats it, and because all these added together are a million times any imaginable amount of silver that the United States will ever have.

That is not true of Porto Rico, if you try to rest your burden upon her, or the Philippine Islands, if you try to rest your burden upon them, or of Mexico, which has tried to stand under such a burden and failed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the two arguments I have referred to are out of this case. It seems to me, gentlemen—and I hate to utter this thought—but it does seem to me as if the gentleman from Ohio had arisen, and the gentleman from New York had arisen, not so much to argue this case—for they have by no means argued it—as to make an impression upon that side of the Chamber that it is a political question, without quite saying as much. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of calling attention to the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] with reference to the proposition of the minority. The gentleman distinctly stated that the minority bill gave to the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited power to purchase bullion silver. There is not one single line or sentence in this bill which will support any such statement as that. There is not a line in it upon which such a statement as that could be predicated. Nothing could possibly be further from the purpose and intent of the bill, and I can not understand how so well informed a gentleman could make so erroneous and absolutely unfounded and unjustifiable a statement as that. Mr. Chairman, the second section of this bill provides:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of retiring the silver coinage of the Philippine Islands and substituting therefor the coins of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to redeem, on presentation in the Philippine Islands, all the Mexican silver pesos now in use in the Philippine Islands, the silver pesos, and subsidiary silver coins issued under the authority of the Spanish Government, not including any Mexican silver pesos that may be imported into the Philippine Islands after the 15th day of March, 1903, at their bullion value, the same to be declared from time to time by the government of the Philippine Islands, etc.

Then it provides that whatever sum may be required to carry out the provisions hereof, and to pay all expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith is hereby appropriated, etc.

Whatever sum may be necessary to defray the cost of the recoinage of the Mexican coinage in circulation in the Philippine Islands and the Spanish coin in circulation there is to be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States. There is not one single word, not one single syllable, not one single intimation in the measure in regard to the purchase of an unlimited or any other amount of silver bullion. On the other hand, let me call the gentleman's attention to the provisions of the bill which he supports. Under that bill the Philippine Commission can dispose of the Mexican and Spanish pesos as they may feel disposed. They can pile them up in the vaults of their treasury or sell them as old junk. It does not provide for the recoinage of one single one of them. On the contrary, it permits the Philippine Commission to go the world over and to buy silver bullion and coin an unlimited amount of silver currency. Not a word is said as to what disposal shall be made of the present silver currency when it comes into the treasury in payment of public dues. This alone is a fatal defect in the bill of the majority.

Think of such a proposition as that! Think of a bill intended to embrace the whole subject relating to coinage and omitting absolutely any reference to the recoinage of the silver which is to be received by the government, and leaving the disposition of it absolutely in the discretion of the Philippine Commission, but at the same time conferring upon that Commission the right and authority to buy silver bullion anywhere in the world and to coin it to any amount—even to the amount of five hundred million, if they so desire—and then to sell certificates of indebtedness in order to secure gold with which to maintain the parity between the silver so purchased and coined and the gold dollar of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that a gentleman who is so astute as to be able to discover in the bill of the minority what never was in that bill can overlook such fatal omissions and can approve such monstrous propositions as are to be found in the bill of the majority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs and gave something of attention to this bill—not so much as many other members of the committee—but, taking counsel of Governor Taft and General Wright and others, as well as the best judgment that I could bring to the consideration of the question, I agreed to the majority bill.

I must confess that the condition in the Philippine Islands, as I believe, from what they all represent and everybody acknowledges, is so serious that I am exceedingly anxious to get the best legislation that is practicable in order to remedy that condition. The condition does not rest, so far as responsibility is concerned, upon the House. If the House had had its way, we should have had a stable currency in the Philippines to-day. As the matter is now, you have there silver alone, and it fluctuates up and down, according to the real value of the bullion in the coins.

Now, I am frank to say that if I could not get anything better than the minority bill I would take the minority bill, because, in my judgment, it is better than the existing status. But I must say that the provisions of the majority bill seem to me to be better. All legislation that is had should be adopted with reference to the injury to be cured and the condition of the people upon whom it is to operate. Now, in the Philippines we have a civil government—quasi civil—civil in places, uncivil, perhaps, in other places. The Philippine Commission is substantially the government, and in the main will remain the government, I apprehend, for many years to come, under the direction of Congress.

Gentlemen on the other side—and I have something of sympathy with some of their propositions from time to time—have taken the position that the people of the Philippines should as rapidly as possible stand upon their own feet, should be educated along the lines of self-government. It seems the gentlemen think now that those people are not quite so competent for self-government, even with the aid of the Philippine Commission, as they were one year ago or two years ago. The truth of the matter is that up to this time they are not, taken as a whole, competent for self-government. They do not to any extent speak our language. For two or three hundred years they have been under a different form of government, so far as they have been governed. They are familiar with the status. Therefore it appeals to my judgment, when Governor Taft and other people charged with responsibility say that while the unit ought to rest upon gold and the American dollar, it would not be good policy to give the coinage that circulates a different name from what it has received heretofore. I can understand that. Why, sir, we have not adopted the metric system in the United States, and there is not enough courage in any Congress to enable us to adopt it.

Why? Because gentlemen on that side of the House, and some on this, time and again have talked about millimeters and centimeters, and lifted up their hands in holy horror and exclaimed, "Great heavens, millimeters!" Well, now, there is something in that. We have been always used to pounds and ounces and tons, and for fifty years the use of a highly civilized people, such as we have, of those terms has kept the metric system—which is the best possible theoretic system—away from the United States. Now, then, with that explanation by way of groundwork, what does this bill do?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. It provides that the unit shall rest upon gold—the gold dollar. What next? That the coinage that is to be used in the Philippines under the government that we have there, full provision for which shall be made, shall be called, so far as the minor coinage and subsidiary coinage is concerned—instead of half dollars, quarters, dimes, and nickels—pesos, centavos, and so on. Well, I am a little mixed up now as to the exact difference between a centavo and a peso. I presume the centavo is the hundredth part of the peso—centum, a hundred—but I am not sure. [Laughter.] Is any one of my many friends upon that side or this absolutely sure about it? We can tell what it is by the provisions of this bill, but for popular use are many of us sure? When you read the bill, what do we find it does? We find now the Mexican coinage, the Spanish coinage, all kinds of silver money, circulating there, exchangeable in nothing—not maintained at a parity or at a stable value.

This bill provides that in lieu of the present coinage, within apt time and by proper provision, the silver bullion shall be coined into pesos and that each peso shall weigh 416 grains. In other words, that a peso shall have more silver in it than does the United States silver dollar, and that two pesos shall be legal tender equal to an American dollar. Now, the peso has double the amount of silver in it that the half dollar has, and I am looking at my dear friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who is always afraid of anything passing for money unless intrinsically it is worth as much as it purports to be worth.

Mr. HILL. Is not the gentleman himself in the same position? Pardon me, so that I may be allowed just for a moment to read his own language.

Mr. CANNON. After all, I say so many things in different connections——

Mr. HILL. I read from what the gentleman says:

I only want to say this: Any provision, any legislation, any condition that would use cheap money to presume upon the ignorance of labor ought to be cut up by the roots.

[Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, so I say now. In just what connection I said that I do not know; but let me reply to the gentleman. If he calls the halves and the quarters of American money cheap money, and claims that that cheats labor—and that is practically his position—then the peso, which stands in lieu of the half dollar, would make two half dollars, for it has enough bullion in it. I do not recollect in what connection I said what the gentleman has just quoted. I have said a great many things, but in this connection I say when you coin these pesos, in the language of Governor Taft, you coin a piece of money the name of which is familiar to the eight or ten millions of people in that country. It contains twice as much silver as the half dollar will contain if you adopt the House bill. True, at the present ratio it is worth only 36 cents if melted into bullion. That is true, but it is worth twice as much as the half dollar is worth to melt into bullion. Now, then, who coins these pesos? It is to be done by the Philippine government. Who gets the seigniorage in the coinage? The Philippine government, and it ought to get it. How can they be maintained at parity with gold? By various factors; one by exchanging it with gold. How else? By limiting the coinage. That is another factor. If you would only issue a half million or a million——

Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I can not yield at this time.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. A little later and I will yield to my friend.

Mr. FOWLER. But it is pertinent right here.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have the gentleman tell the House where the Philippine government is going to get the gold to exchange for the silver and so maintain the parity.

Mr. CANNON. Under the authority of this law it is made the duty of the Philippine government by every factor within its reach to maintain it.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. CANNON. Hold on a moment. Let me answer one question before another one is asked. It is made the duty of the Philippine government by every factor within its reach to keep it at parity. What are the factors? The first factor is not to issue more than is required for the purpose of circulating money, and if you could get just that amount and no more it would circulate without any redemption or exchangeability. Everybody knows that that lies at the foundation of this whole matter.

That is one factor; and if this passes we have for governor of the Philippine Islands, cooperating with the Commission, in my judgment, a man of larger mold and greater wisdom than any man of my acquaintance. He is there on the ground; he has been there wrestling with these questions; he prays that Congress will speedily give a stable currency. He recommends a currency equal to gold to be maintained, and he recommends that it be called a peso, because every one of the 10,000,000 of people know what that is and it has a familiar sound to their ears. Now, what harm can be done? "How are we to get the gold?" says my friend. The bill provides——

Mr. FOWLER. How much—$5,000,000?

Mr. CANNON. The bill provides for $5,000,000, and, I have no doubt, properly limiting the coinage, for I can not tell how much there ought to be. I have no doubt that the $5,000,000 provision is ample for that purpose. Now, suppose it passes, what will happen? Governor Taft and the Philippine Commission, with full power of legislation, intelligent, being upon the ground, will begin. How will they begin? As this bill provides, by taking in the present coinage. They will take that coinage or have the power to take it, or have the power to buy additional bullion, one or both, according to the best interests of those people, and coin it into pesos, full legal tender. They will go into circulation. They are worth twice as much, to go into the melting pot, as the half dollar is. There is another factor. I have no doubt, with wise administration, that they will work it out. The seigniorage that comes from the coinage of the peso goes into the Philippine treasury, as it ought to go.

The time of Mr. CANNON having expired, by unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, they say, why not coin American money? That is American money. The peso becomes American money, and better American money, if you speak from the mere bullion standpoint, than our American half dollar. Under the authority of Congress the Commission upon the ground provides for its coinage and gets the seigniorage, and has full power in the premises, and it will be American money, sensibly made upon the ground by the Filipino government and adapted to the Filipino, adapted to the inhabitants of the lower archipelago, adapted to all of them. Oh, no, some gentlemen say, do not give them American money that they understand and that is adapted to their wants, but pry open their mouths with a crowbar and give them this American money of ours that we understand, whether they understand it or not. My God, what statesmanship! [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a single question?

Mr. CANNON. In a minute. Of course, I want to say one other thing, and if I have any time left I will yield.

Now, let me address myself for just one second to the minority substitute. I have not time to read it. It makes the United States furnish the money. It empowers the United States to coin the money. The profit of coining less than 40 cents worth of silver into a dollar under this substitute goes into the Treasury of the United States, not into the treasury of the Filipinos; nay, nay.

Mr. PAYNE. Will they buy the bullion or take the bullion they have?

Mr. CANNON. Whether they buy the bullion or take the bullion they have, the profit, 60 cents on the dollar, goes to the United States. That is not quite fair. If there is profit in this monetary system, let it go to the people among whom the money circulates. Give them just as much as we can, with due regard to their language, with due regard to their civilization, with due regard to their religion, or want of it—and they have a good deal of both in the archipelago. Give them, just as fast as they can take it under the guidance of the Philippine Commission, a journey toward self-government.

Mr. HILL. Why did not you do it in Porto Rico?

Mr. CANNON. Why did not we do it in Porto Rico? Because Porto Rico is not on all fours with the Philippines. Porto Rico is at our doors, a little bit of an island, where you could almost stand in the center of it and with a sling throw a stone into the sea; an island thickly populated, entirely different. Because aloes is good for a horse when he has the colic, does it follow that aloes is good for a horse when he is sick all over with bots and everything else? Nay, nay. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to be entirely fair. The worst possible condition that we can have touching our money exists in the Philippines to-day, and Congress as a whole is responsible for it. I believe the majority bill is the better, largely from my own judgment and conclusively from the testimony of Governor Taft and Lieutenant-Governor Wright and the people who have had their feet upon the ground and have dealt with these people and with the economic and financial situation there.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if debate is not exhausted on this.

Mr. CANNON. I should like half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Half a minute.

Mr. CANNON. Half a minute is quite enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I believe the majority bill is best. I believe the minority measure beats nothing by long odds. I shall vote against the minority measure, because I think the majority is the best, from all the testimony of people who have knowledge about it. If we can not get the majority measure, then I will vote for the minority measure. That is better than hell. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CORLISS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13679. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 15506. An act to amend section 14 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts;"

H. R. 14839. An act providing that the circuit court of appeals of the Fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on the first Monday in September in each year; and

H. R. 14275. An act providing for additional terms of court in the western judicial district of the State of South Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 126. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, together with the rules of practice of and the statutes relating to that court;

S. 7034. An act providing for the expenditure of money hitherto appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio;

S. 7033. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901; and

S. 6595. An act fixing the times and places for holding regular terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the western district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have never changed my mind about our occupation of the Philippine Islands since I left those shores, homeward bound, in October, 1901.

I believe to-day, as I believed then, that "about face; forward, march home" will be the best orders this Government can give, and that it will eventually give them.

It will not be long before the taxpayers of the United States will be forced to appreciate that we are carrying on a very expensive foreign missionary enterprise.

The Commission itself has been forced to admit that its pathway is not so rosy as in the earlier stages of its occupation it assured the people of this country it would be.

With difficulty they raise sufficient money to carry on the expensive, elaborate, and Utopian government they have planned.

They come to Congress with numerous propositions, every one of which has for its purpose the raising of additional revenue to run the government we have imposed upon those simple people. First it was legislation to lower the tariff taxes, which was yielding practically nothing of income, as no goods were shipped to this country, and no customs were therefore paid back to the Philippine government. By a reduction of from 75 per cent to 25 per cent they thought this source of revenue would be increased. Second, we had the request for a grant of $3,000,000 to allay the dangers of famine, brought about from decreasing agricultural production. Then we have the proposition before us giving this Commission the right and power to at their own sweet will regulate the money of this archipelago. No member of this House can fail to appreciate how important as a revenue raiser such powers are, especially when there is a heavy margin for seigniorage and no limit placed upon the amount of coin which can be manufactured.

One great virtue will be found in the measure proposed by the Insular Committee, and to my mind the only one, and that is, if their scheme of coinage is enacted into law it will not act as a barrier to at any time in the future, near or remote, prevent our cutting loose from these troublesome and expensive possessions in the far-off Orient.

That those men belonging to the Democratic party of this country should be called upon to support the bill presented by the minority is hard for me to understand.

Only the fact that the Democratic party from the beginning were opposed to the subjugation of these islands, and would have treated them as allies and friends (such as they had shown themselves to be) instead of enemies, can furnish an explanation for this magnanimous proposition.

The Democratic people of this country realize the injustice and brutality we have heaped upon the heads of this generous, hospitable, and helpless people, and at every stage stand ready to help them and confer upon them substantial benefits.

Speaking for myself, let me say it is with great hesitation and reluctance that I will support the measure proposed by the minority, as, in my opinion, it will greatly interfere with and postpone the happy day when the American people will confer upon the Philippines that liberty, independence, and self-government they are entitled to.

Language and money are the two most powerful and lasting bonds which can bind the Philippines to the United States. They are, as well, the greatest and most lasting benefits we can confer upon them.

With a good start among the youth of this people, I believe the English language will become of universal use; and if the money of the United States is introduced and allowed to come into general use, its stability, convenience, and adaptability to their needs will make it a permanent institution—at least as long as it is backed by the credit of this great commercial nation.

I am not one of those who can be persuaded by the arguments brough forth in this debate that there is anything to prevent the introduction of the United States money into these islands and thus making it the exclusive circulating medium. That its introduction and use would create disaster and possible revolution are idle tales and foolish prophecies.

The truth is, long ago, from the beginning of American occupation, we have been introducing it, and the amount there now in the hands of the common people, could it be definitely ascertained, would be surprising.

United States coin and greenbacks are and for a long time have been hoarded by the more intelligent natives. Even the Moro people, by far the least intelligent, as a class, of the islands, as far back as the fall of 1901 seemed to fully understand the fact that an American 50-cent silver piece was not only equal but better than the largest and brightest Mexican dollar in circulation, but knew that a $1 United States silver certificate was equal to the two best Mexican dollars they could find, and, they assured me, much easier to carry about their persons.

At that time they were circulating at the rate of two Mexican for one American. When the Mexican dollar declined, it made it in fact as well as in their eyes only more desirable to keep and save as it increased in value and purchasing power. That is why they were hoarded.

Nor is it hard to understand which is the real situation prevailing in this country.

It seems so hard for some members of this House even to understand that the Filipino people are not ignorant savages. Such is not the case; they stand on a plane far above the average Oriental of the Tropics.

A member of this House who visited the Philippine Islands with me but a few days ago returned from a trip through Cuba and parts of Mexico, assured me that the common people in the Philippines were, in intelligence and culture, far superior to the Mexicans of the same class.

They live almost entirely along the shores of the islands and there come much more frequently in touch with foreigners and visitors than the people of this country, and this has been especially true during the four years of American occupation. This gave them frequent opportunity of getting, to some extent, acquainted with American money. During the entire time of American occupation we have had many thousands of soldiers living among them. They have been widely scattered, occupying as many as from 700 to 800 different stations at one time. These men were paid in United States money and used it in dealing with the natives until they became familiar with its appearance and value.

Thousands of school-teachers and public officials, both American and native, have freely circulated among these islanders, all to a greater or less extent using the lawful money of the United States.

With these exceptional opportunities, is it not hard to believe that disaster would result from the introduction and use of a money that from experience the people have found to be a superior money of greater purchasing power?

I hold it to be a truism that before the common people know how to read or write they learn to recognize the coin in circulation, to want it, and appreciate fully its purchasing power.

Then why are we met with such miserable, weak arguments when discussiug this important measure. What possible danger can there be of writing into the committee's bill the words that the lawful money of the United States shall be legal tender, receivable for debts, public and private, in those islands.

In view of the large amount of our money circulating and hoarded there now, this is but just. Do that, and in spite of your new coinage proposition American money will in a short time run out of general circulation your new coinage, and the evils of constant fluctuation will cease. There will not be any heavy exchange, such as will assuredly take place if we discredit our own lawful money, which we have circulated there and obtained full value for.

I do not believe that the people of those islands will ever cut any great figure in world growth and progress. Their part as assisting in the development of the Orient will be small.

The most we can expect of them is that they will very gradually advance in education and in thrift. They are isolated from the world, and for centuries will remain so.

Their commerce is limited to but a very few articles which will reach the trade currents of the world, and they are not susceptible to any great increase in amount.

They are not at all suited for the elaborate, expensive, and Utopian government we have set up there, and will soon fall back to one which will be simpler, less expensive, and more in accordance with their real requirements.

We must not forget that they are 10,000,000 of people bound together by the strongest tie which can bind a people—that of national kinship. Nor that we are at the most less than 10,000, to whom they have only feelings of antagonism when their real feeling are aroused.

We are 1 to 1,000. Under any system of government which is not a despotism pure and simple, who will be the real controlling factors when they become sufficiently well organized to assert their power?

They do not lack men both able and accustomed to lead. As soon as the present scheme of government gets into practical operation we will see the future native government shaping itself.

It can start with factions which may adroitly be played by us, one against the other.

Such a policy will not last long—like a solid wall you will find the native opposing the work and influences and control of the intruding foreigner.

What of good we have conferred upon them will be accepted as due them and all obligations on their part will be repudiated.

We will be blamed for everything of mischief which we have wittingly or unwittingly introduced and the veriest shadow will be magnified.

The money of the American taxpayer which we have spent there from the time we paid the $10,000,000 installment until the time we cease to make further annual investments will never in kind or in commerce or in any other way be returned.

We will look upon this country as the great graveyard of our soldiers—officers and men alike. We will look upon it as the fertile source of the increase of our enormously expensive pension list. After every pensioner of the war of the rebellion shall have been gathered to his fathers we will find staring us in the face a pension list hardly less in amount than those years when it reached its high-water mark. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendments to section 1. Is there any demand for a separate vote on any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross. The Chair hears no demand.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to substitute in lieu thereof the text of the bill numbered H. R. 16657.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Virginia to accept as an amendment to his text in the first section the following:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to coin a half-cent coin of such form and with such devices as he may designate, and such half-cent coin shall be legal tender up to the same amount as the 1-cent coin now authorized by law.

I ask the gentleman to accept that as an amendment to the first section of his text.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept that as an amendment to my proposition, and I offer it all as one substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer it as a substitute for section 1?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. My motion is to strike out everything after the enacting clause and to substitute the bill I have offered as an amendment, with the modification offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The gentleman from Virginia will understand that his motion is not in order at the present time. He can offer it and have it pending.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that this would be the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers a substitute to the entire bill, which may be considered as pending, but it can not be voted upon until the bill is perfected.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would ask the Chair if I can offer it as a substitute for the first section—to strike out everything after the enacting clause and offer it as a substitute for the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his substitute for the bill at this time and have it pending.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. It would be regarded as pending, and the Chair will recognize me after the reading of the bill is finished to offer it as a substitute for the whole bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be considered as pending and the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Virginia (interrupting). Mr. Chairman, unless members of the House desire to have it read, I will state that this is the substitute which I stated at the beginning of the debate I should offer and which is printed in the RECORD of yesterday and which I suppose the House is familiar with. The only addition is the modification suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman offer this by way of amendment to the first section, or as a substitute for the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers it as a substitute for the entire bill. His offer is submitted to the House and will be pending, but before the committee will take a vote on it the reading of the bill will be completed. Without objection, the reading of the substitute will be dispensed with.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I think that all any of us want is a fair vote on this proposition. I ask that the first section of the bill be stricken out and the substitute be inserted in place of the first section. That is a parliamentary proposition which I have a right to make. And then I shall move to strike out each succeeding section without inserting anything in lieu of it. I do this so that we may get a vote without taking up time in voting upon propositions that will amount to nothing. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed in that way.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I object to that.

Mr. HILL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the pending substitute be inserted in place of the first section of the bill. I move to strike out the first section of the bill and insert this substitute.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In the first place, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is not authorized to offer the substitute.

Mr. HILL. I am authorized to offer an amendment, am I not?

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute has been offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], and the matter is not within the control of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say that the purpose I had in offering my bill as an amendment to the first section has been correctly stated. I understood the Chair to rule that it could not be done, and therefore I accepted the suggestion of the Chair. If it be permissible to move to strike out all after the enacting clause, or to strike out the first section and substitute therefor the minority bill, with the understanding that if this motion prevails I shall subsequently move to strike out the other sections of the majority bill, then I make that motion, if the Chair recognizes me to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to substitute the amendment which he has sent to the Clerk's desk in place of section 1 of the pending bill, giving notice that if this motion be adopted he will move to strike out the other sections of the pending bill. Of course, the gentleman understands that if this motion should be submitted at this time, it will still require the reading of the rest of the bill for amendment.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. It would require it, I suppose, after this motion has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the pending section of the bill be stricken out and that a substitute offered by him be adopted. The Clerk will read the proposed substitute, unless the reading be dispensed with by unanimous consent. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words to the committee upon the proposition involved in these two conflicting measures.

When the financial doctors disagree it is very difficult for me to come to a conclusion. We have ranged upon one side here the great lights of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, and upon the other a former chairman of that committee and the members of the Committee on Insular Affairs, who have had special charge of this measure. Now, if I were in the frame of mind that some gentlemen are in—notably my friend from Colorado—I might say, "A plague on both your houses!" and vote against both propositions. But I think that Congress is under peculiar obligations to dissipate, if possible, or at any rate so far as it can, the financial chaos that now admittedly envelops the Philippine Islands. I do not think we are at liberty to reject both these propositions, because I believe that some measure looking in the direction of one or the other of the propositions now pending it is most important for us to pass.

I do not care to discuss the question what cause is responsible for the present condition of affairs in the Philippines—whether it is the loss of their domestic animals, or the failure of their food supply, or any of the other causes that have been mentioned here. There is one cause that has not been especially brought to the attention of the committee, and that is that those people have just passed through one of the most devastating and bloody wars of modern times, which I think would account in large part for the bad condition of affairs now existing there.

But undoubtedly they are suffering from the lack of some stable sort of currency, and I think that we should pass one or the other of these bills. I am rather inclined to favor (although I shall hold my mind open until the last argument upon it) the proposition championed by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], which makes the entire money of the United States a legal tender in the Philippine Islands, and does not discriminate in favor of any kind of our money. I do not believe that the fact that our national money is extended there will have any tendency to unite those islands permanently to the United States. If we extend our national system of finance there, and give those people the money that we have here and the right to use all of it that they can get, then they will have our American money, which passes not merely here but which passes in foreign countries. It will be a national money; and I should prefer, for my part, to have national money there than to have a coin made according to the bill of last summer—made expressly for those islands, and having impressed upon it some mark of the sovereignty of the United States, which will chiefly be a badge of the servitude of those people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that one great difficulty with the bill of the majority is that it proposes to impose upon the government of those islands the maintenance of a system of currency consisting of silver and gold at the ratio of 32 to 1, when the natural ratio is as 42 or 43 to 1. I admit that the gentlemen who represent the United States there exercise great powers; they are proconsular officers, exercising powers oriental in their character and magnificence, but I do not believe their powers are great enough under existing conditions to maintain in those islands the parity between gold and silver at the ratio or 32 to 1 when the natural ratio is 42 or 43 to 1.

That objection to the position of the majority is, to my mind, a very strong one, but I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I think one or the other of these measures should be adopted. From the light I now have I should vote for the proposition of the minority, which is supported by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]; but if that should fail, then I should vote for the proposition of the majority.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I rise to inquire whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia is to be voted upon before the balance of the bill has been read. I desire to submit a few suggestions upon that proposition if the Chair has not clearly satisfied himself in regard to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that on the point of order the Chair has already held that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia may be offered as a substitute to section 1 of the pending bill. That is the question now before the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The bill reported by the committee is an experiment, a new system in our finance. If ever, we should not experiment with the finances of the Philippines in their present distressed condition.

The substitute offered is not an experiment. It is based on our present financial policy, a policy to which I do not subscribe. But as we must accept the one or the other, I choose the lesser evil, I hope and think, the substitute, rather than the one "we know not of."

It has been stated that the reason why we should adopt the substitute is that the Filipinos are not acquainted with the American money. Mr. Chairman, that statement I know to be incorrect. There is not a country anywhere around the world which is halfway civilized that is not fully acquainted with the purchasing power and the legal value of our money. There is not a jungle in the Philippine Islands, save possibly away back in the mountains where the uncivilized tribes are, where the people of the Philippine Islands are not perfectly familiar with every one of the American pieces of money, including our greenbacks and silver certificates.

If any member would in the least take issue with me on this point, I respectfully ask him to inquire of my colleagues who went with me to the Philippine Islands.

What does this bill propose to do? Not to give these people a money with which they are perfectly familiar, or ever used, but to give them an entirely new coin, a coin of which we know nothing ourselves. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen will remember when the fathers were discussing our money unit and the money question in the American Congresses away back in the infancy of our Republic, that Thomas Jefferson laid hold of the money with which the people were "most familiar" as the starting point, to wit, the silver dollar. He said the people "North and South" are "familiar" with this old dollar and he adopted it as the foundation of our money coins.

We have had for the past two or three years more than a hundred thousand soldiers in the Philippine Islands, each one of whom has been paid in American money, and a large part of that money has been expended in the Philippine Islands. You can not go into any hut or "shack" in the Philippine Islands where you will not find the keeper of such a store familiar with the American money—as a rule, has it in cash box. He hands you the correct change in a trade.

Again, we are keeping in the Philippine Islands a large army, a fixed institution there. Each soldier costs the United States Government to equip and maintain him per year $1,285. Multiply that by 23,000, which I believe is the size of the army now in the Philippine Islands—as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin—and you have about $30,000,000 spent in this way, mostly in the Philippine Islands.

Then add to that the half price which is paid to 600 scouts that perambulate the highways and byways of the Philippine Islands, then add the money paid to the American navy which must float all over the Philippine Islands, not to-day, nor to-morrow, but as long as we hold the Philippine Islands, and you will understand how it is and why it is that the Filipino is perfectly familiar with the American money and knows why so much of our coin is in the Philippine Islands? Again, we pay our American teachers over there in the local currency. On this Professor Atkinson, in his last report (War Report, 1903, p. 949), said this:

Coupled with this difficulty was the depreciation of the Mexican currency in which the teachers were paid. The appropriation for the salaries of teachers is made by the Commission in this local currency; hence the disbursing clerk is compelled to make all checks payable in such money. All might have been well had the currency maintained its former ratio of $2 Mexican to $1 gold, but, on the contrary, it depreciated regularly. The postal authorities refused to accept it in payment of money orders on the States, and then the teachers were in a serious difficulty. Many of them had families at home dependent upon them, and others had incurred debts which they had to meet.

The matter was given most serious attention, and requests sent to the Civil Commission asking that some definite step be taken. In answer the following reply was received from Commissioner Ide, secretary of finance and justice, and sent out immediately in the form of a circular to the teachers:

"The difficulties referred to are fully appreciated by the Commission and by this office, but they are temporarily incident to the situation. The changed ratio for the next quarter will probably, before the quarter is through, operate to the advantage of civil employees, so that they will obtain more than their salary as fixed in gold. It will be necessary for all to be a little forbearing. It might be remarked that the Commissioners themselves are subject to precisely the same inconvenience as the writer of the within letter, and suffer the same pro rata loss. It is impracticable to make payment for the month of December in other than the currency that was appropriated for that purpose and that is available. The only method for immediately relieving the difficulty would be to require all customs receipts and internal-revenue taxes to be paid in the money of the United States, so that there might be money of that character available for all insular purposes; but in view of the early action of Congress on the currency, when it is expected the subject will be placed on a permanent basis, it is not considered advisable to make so radical a change as the one suggested, and one that would so seriously disturb the business of the islands."

To endeavor to equalize the ratio, the Commission fixed the legal ratio of Mexican currency to gold at $2.10 to $1 for the first quarter of 1902. The postal authorities, moreover, accepted the local currency at this ratio to the amount of $50, gold, per month from all civil employees. The commercial ratio, however, continued to increase rapidly, and for the second quarter of the year the ratio was established at $2.27 to $1; but almost immediately the parity was lost, and at times the commercial ratio was $2.50 to $1. The post-offices were forced to refuse Mexican currency at any ratio, in order to protect themselves, and the situation for a time was very embarrassing.

Gradually the ratio fell off, and with the beginning of the third quarter the ratio was established at $2.35 to $1, and, although this rate was only fixed positively for ten days and is subject to change at any time to preserve the ratio, yet it has remained steadily at that figure for nearly three months, until to-day the government ratio is a few points better than the commercial ratio, and the teachers and other civil employees are in a position to regain some of their losses during the first half year. The post-offices now accept Mexican currency in practically unlimited quantities from civil employees at the established ratio. The failure of Congress to pass legislation regarding the currency of these islands has been largely responsible for the peculiarly trying and unfortunate position in which all government officials and employees have been placed, and the Philippine Commission has exercised its full power to do justice to all.

With the policy of fixing the ratio for ten days and then continuing the ratio indefinitely a new complication has arisen of minor importance, but which is still causing some uneasiness among the teachers. While the ratio was unfavorable many teachers refused to sign vouchers made out in terms of American currency, but which were to be paid by checks for local currency at the established ratio. To meet this objection vouchers were changed to read "local currency." With the ratio fixed quarterly these could be made out and sent out in time to be received by the majority of the teachers by or before the last day of the month, upon which day they could be signed and returned to the central office for payment.

With the ratio fixed indefinitely, there is always the possibility of a change during the last few days of the month, and the amounts can not be inserted in the vouchers until the last day of the month, and consequently a delay of several days to two weeks or more results. If the original practice of making out the vouchers in terms of United States currency had not been objected to by the teachers, the present delay would have been entirely avoided, as salaries of all employees are fixed in terms of United States currency, but paid in local currency at the ratio fixed by the Commission.

These teachers were not employed to be paid in local currency. They were employed to be paid in American money. Now, as long as we keep American soldiers, the American Navy, and American teachers there, why should they not be paid in American money? This will take almost untold millions of American money into the Philippine Islands. Why should we have there a mixed money created by the order of Congress when we have our money uniform? Why should we not have all of it our full legal-tender money? Again, we are not "running" the Philippine Islands, I hope, for the American people only. I hate such a thought.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, why should we create a local and an entirely new coin? It is true that it will stay within the limits of the Philippine Islands. It is made legal tender only in the Phillippine Islands by the very words of this statute. The Filipino is a merchant, the Chinese are merchants, and the Japanese are merchants. Why should you give them a local coin to go into Japan and China and the far Orient where it is not legal tender, in law or effect? Why should you do that? Why not give them the same legal-tender money which we have in this country? If we prosper under the gold standard, why deny them the same standard? Should we make flesh of ourselves and bone of them? Why should we not give them the same money that we have to take into the far Orient and buy their goods, whether it be a half dollar or silver certificate?

The silver dollar is a full legal tender, so far as its purchasing power goes, in the Orient. The great use and necessity for the American coinage is what makes it pass as tender in all civilized lands. Not so with the peso, this little coin which the Taft Commission will introduce in the Philippine Islands. It is necessarily confined in its operations to the limits of those islands. This peso is a money with which they are not acquainted—which will check business.

Why, Mr. Peabody alludes to that fact, and I understand somebody has read his statement here that we should have this little local chinquapin money over there for these people. Back in November, 1900, he says it will produce "confusion" with these people because they are not familiar with it, but after a while they might become acquainted with it. But they already know our money. Here is the letter of Mr. Peabody, in Document No. 160, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.

So, now, if we want to give these people the same opportunities to become a great people that we have, or that the majority pretends it is going to give them, why not give them the same uniform money that we have?

It is true it will tie these people to us as possibly nothing else will. I do not want the Filipinos tied to us permanently, but let us be just and fair though the heavens fall.

As long as they are under the American flag and "within the jurisdiction of the United States," I say we should treat them with the same respect, and particularly in matters that concern their liberties and their civic and commercial welfare, that we confer upon ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The proposition to substitute the bill of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] for the first section brings the whole question to a decision.

Before the vote is taken, I wish again to remind members of the House of the exact situation. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] repeated a few minutes ago the statement that the House was asked to yield to a threat which comes from the Senate. There is no threat. If I was understood as making a threat, I beg to retract what I said, because I had not the slightest intention that any utterance of mine should be susceptible of such an interpretation. I did, however, desire to call the attention of the House to the facts. What are they? The newspapers have acquainted every gentleman with the fact that the Senate is in a deadlock practically over the omnibus statehood bill. Trust legislation is about to come up. None of the great appropriation bills save only the pension appropriation bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The legislative bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the legislative bill. All of the remaining great measures must be crowded into five weeks to pass the Senate and the House of Representatives. Should the substitute bill pass the House, it will, of course, go to the committee of the Senate which has Philippine legislation in charge. That committee last spring declared themselves in favor only of the free coinage of silver for the Philippine Archipelago; nothing else.

Now, they have reported a coinage bill similar in principle, though differing somewhat in detail, from the bill here pending. They will not—and this is not a threat—they can not be expected at this late day to go back to the beginning and to report and pass through the Senate at this session a bill like the proposed substitute, differing so utterly from anything they have heretofore recommended for the Philippines. When I said yesterday that I knew from one in authority that that is true, it was because of a recent conversation which I had had with a very distinguished Republican Senator, himself a friend of the gold standard.

Now, wherein does that simple statement of fact constitute a threat which should call for the vehement protest of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]? The gentleman was very earnest, indeed, about it, and apparently very indignant that a threat should be brought here. There is no threat. A statement of that kind, embodying a fact known to everybody, does not constitute a threat.

The time of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin having expired, by unanimous consent at his request it was extended for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] repeated in his last speech the statement that we are proposing to establish in the Philippine Archipelago a "strange system" of finance, and he appealed to the gentlemen from the Pacific coast not to vote for it for that reason. There is nothing strange about the proposed system. Secretary Gage, as I read yesterday, in his note, Appendix F to the report of the Secretary of War for the year 1900, declared that in principle it is essentially the system now in vogue in the United States.

Let us see what that statement of the Secretary means. What have we in the United States? A silver dollar the bullion value of which is 37 cents, stabilized at a dollar in gold. We simply propose by this bill to put into the Philippine Archipelago a peso, also worth 37 cents as bullion, and stabilize it at 50 cents in gold. Where is the difference in principle? What is there strange about it, and why does the gentleman from Connecticut reiterate that statement here? Here is what Governor Taft said on this proposition:

> We were exceedingly anxious not to disturb the coinage as it now exists in the islands among the Filipinos.

He did not think it was to be a strange system. On the other hand, "We were exceedingly anxious not to disturb the coinage as it now exists in the islands among the Filipinos."

The substitute proposes to take the silver coin of the islands and raise it abruptly from 37 cents to 100 cents.

> I mean that we are exceedingly anxious not to disturb the values of oriental peoples, and the Filipinos, who do not differ from other oriental peoples in that respect, have a great regard for tradition and names. Therefore we thought if we could devise a system by which the standard could be as little subject to fluctuations as possible—that is, should be a gold standard and at the same time have silver coinage so near to the present silver coinage as to not make any difference by reason of names in the minds of the people—that that would be the best coinage to adopt. * * *
> I am very certain * * * that to attempt to adopt as a whole the coinage of the United States in those islands would be productive of nothing but disaster.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked, as did also the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], "Where will they get the gold, and how can they maintain the parity?" Mr. Peabody and other witnesses declared that there would be no trouble, because the 35 per cent of seigniorage which would go into the treasury would constitute an ample redemption fund, and that it, together with the powers conferred upon the government by the bill would enable it easily to maintain the parity.

The gentleman from Connecticut read an extract from the testimony of the gentleman from Illinois, in which he said that he was opposed to cheap money in the Philippines. Now, I do not perceive how that could have the slightest effect in discrediting the statement made to-day by the gentleman from Illinois. Free coinage would make cheap money. But there is no proposition contained in the bill to give the archipelago cheap money. We propose a coin worth 37 cents as bullion, but to be equivalent to 50 cents in gold, and make it stable. That is not cheap money.

I would like to know wherein the gentleman from Connecticut contends that there is any contradiction in the two statements of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HILL. Why, simply on this point. If the gentleman from Illinois wishes me to explain, I have not the slightest objection. The only argument brought forward in favor of this majority bill is in favor of money that can be circulated outside of the city of Manila for a dollar, and the gentleman from Illinois in his righteous indignation said that if there was any such proposition—this was months and months ago he said this, when perhaps he looked upon this question from a little less stringent force behind him than he does to-day, when he feels called upon to support a committee of which he was a member—if he were called upon to do that he would aid in rooting up such a system root and branch.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall only ask to be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHATTUC. I was addressing the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. Does the gentleman rise to a point of order?

Mr. SHATTUC. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHATTUC. How long does it take us to get at a vote on this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Cincinnati will decide that question for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from Cincinnati—the gentleman from Ohio—I wish to say that I shall not discuss the question indefinitely, but only for five minutes more.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts said that he was opposed to placing a coin in the Philippine Islands having a superscription upon it which would be a badge of servitude to the Philippine people. Why, Mr. Chairman, before the Committee on Insular Affairs there were brought some designs for the coin proposed by the bill of last summer. The designs were executed by a native Filipino. They were done with rare skill, and we were told by the gentleman who brought them that the opportunity to draw a design for a Philippine coin which would be characteristic of the islands was a source of much pleasure to the artist and to the Philippine people generally. Neither he nor they looked upon the proposed superscription as a badge of servitude.

The gentleman from Mississippi said that we propose a coin the weight of which is not like that of any other coin on earth. And yet it is to contain 416 grains of silver, the identical weight of the Mexican peso, which is now and for many years has been the coin principally in use in the Philippine Islands. We propose to leave the coin exactly the same in size and weight and name as the coin they have to-day, and simply to make it stable at 50 cents in gold instead of at 100 cents in gold. Wherein consists any justification for the anathemas heaped upon the proposition of the bill? There is nothing strange in it. It has proven a success in Java and in India, is indorsed by distinguished experts, and asked for unanimously by the Philippine Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee that reported this bill to the House, I wish to occupy the time of the committee just a moment. When providing a system of coinage for the Philippine Islands was first presented to the Committee on Insular Affairs, I believe I am safe in saying that every Republican member of that committee, like some of the Republican members of the House, favored the introduction in the Philippine Archipelago, not only the American system of coinage, but our denominations and nomenclature, some of us for a long time during the investigation insisting upon it, as much so as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] or the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER].

The Republican members of the committee, consisting of some of the leaders on this side of the House, I repeat, entertained the same idea that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and myself entertained. But the more we investigated the question, the more testimony we received, and the more we heard from the witnesses with respect to industrial, financial, and commercial conditions in the Philippine Islands, the more we were convinced that to introduce our American system of coinage in toto, including denomination and nomenclature, would create more distress industrially than exists there to-day.

The members of this committee are not, as the gentleman said this morning, experts in the matter of coinage; but we applied to the conditions as they were testified to the committee our practical common sense, and reached the conclusion that recommendation of Governor Taft and his associates on the Philippine Commission, and the recommendations of other experts sent to the Philippine Islands by the War Department of our Government for the express purpose of investigating this question, should be followed rather than opinions based largely upon sentiment.

The idea that occupied the minds of many members of our committee, when we began the investigation of the question, was that of Americanism in the Philippine Islands, regardless of any industrial or commercial conditions. It was our belief, as the gentleman from Connecticut now contends, that the introduction of American coinage in denomination and in nomenclature would tend to Americanize the Philippine Islands.

But when we were told by General Taft that one of the greatest difficulties the Commission had to contend with in securing peace and order and maintaining it was to remove the suspicion in the minds of the Filipinos that the American Government had taken possession of the islands for the purpose of exploiting them and robbing the people as the Spaniards had done for centuries; that the principal effect that the introduction of American coinage with our denomination and nomenclature would be to create distrust, because the ignorant debtor class would be imposed upon by the creditor class, thereby creating dissentions and disturbance and afford the opportunity for the enemies of the American Government to sow the seeds of dissention among the native Filipinos, create insurrection—it was then that we adopted the plan suggested by the Commission.

In doing so we believed, as did the commissioners and Governor Taft, that it was not only just to the people of the islands, but it would tend to conciliate the natives of the archipelago more than any one thing the Government could do. The system of coinage proposed by this bill is the American system in every essential. It differs only in the fact that subdivisions of the coin and the names of the different pieces conform to that which they are acquainted with and know the value of, and in this way, Mr. Chairman, we protect the ignorant and unthinking from that imposition that will otherwise be meted out to him.

Those members of the committee who were guided partly by sentiment at the beginning of the investigation in favor of American coinage in the Philippines deferred to the judgment of the Commission, and especially to the judgment of Governor Taft, who had made a study of the conditions in the Philippine Archipelago. And I believe that if the members of this House would read the testimony of the men who appeared before our committee, those who entertain the idea that it is unwise for us to adopt this system of coinage would change their opinion and their judgment, just as the Republican members of the committee did after hearing the testimony, giving full consideration to the same. We are legislating for the Filipinos, not for the Americans. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this proposition be closed in one minute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask the gentleman to make it five minutes. I should like to be heard a few minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Virginia by providing that all debate be now closed on this question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Make it five minutes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move as an amendment that the debate be closed in five minutes.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SHAFROTH, it was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. JONES of Virginia, as modified, was then adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate being closed, the question is now on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, to strike out all after the enacting clause, in section 1, and substitute in place thereof the amendment offered by him.

Mr. TAWNEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and substitute that which he has offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is to strike out, in section 1, all after the enacting clause and insert in place of it the substitute which he has offered, he having given notice that he will move to strike out the other sections of the bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. JONES of Virginia,

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 115, noes 95.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin and Mr. JONES of Virginia were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 141, noes 118.

So the motion of Mr. JONES of Virginia was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I give notice that I shall call for the yeas and nays on this question in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That in addition to the coinage authorized for use in the Philppine Islands by the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," the government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to coin, for use in said islands, a coin of the denomination of 1 peso, and one of the weight of 416 grains, and the standard of said silver coins shall be such that of 1,000 parts, by weight, 900 shall be of pure metal and 100 of alloy, and the alloy shall be of copper.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I move to strike out the section just read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for order, so that we may hear what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be taken upon striking out all of the succeeding sections together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole vote upon striking out all of the sections of the pending bill after section 1.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. PAYNE objected.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I move, then, to strike out this section.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, that question is debatable, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. It is debatable.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, according to the usage of parliamentary procedure in the House, when a motion is made to substitute, it is always in order first to perfect the original text before the substitute can be voted on. Owing to some confusion in the situation to-day, a motion was made to substitute an entire bill for the first section of the pending bill. Now, the gentleman from Virginia proposes to go ahead and strike out each of the remaining sections, without perfecting the text. I think it would be in order to first perfect the sections before a vote is taken on striking them out. I do not know whether there are committee amendments to this second section; I have not the bill before me. If there are committee amendments, I submit they should first be voted upon and the text perfected before any vote is taken on the motion to strike out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I objected to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia for unanimous consent; and I did so because under the well-known principles of parliamentary procedure the control of this bill has passed to the other side; and it is for the gentleman from Virginia to make his own motions in his own way, he and his party associates having entire control of the bill itself and all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAWNEY). The Chair questions the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] as to the control of the bill having passed to the gentleman from Virginia simply because of an adverse vote on one amendment to the bill. The position of the gentleman from New York, however, is parliamentarily correct, that the committee amendments to section 2 of this bill will have to be passed upon and the section perfected before a vote can be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I did not know there were any committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments to section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "one," insert the word "Philippine;" and in line 8 strike out the words "and one."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the whole of section 2 as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out the whole of section 2 as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Philippine peso authorized by this act and the silver coins issued under authority of the aforesaid act of July 1, 1902, shall be received for all dues to the government of the Philippine Islands, unless otherwise specifically provided by law, at the rate of 2 pesos for $1 of the lawful money of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 18, strike out the words "lawful money" and insert the words "gold coins."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the whole of section 3 as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out the whole of section 3 as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Virginia) there were—ayes 116, noes 30.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, before anything more is read, it seems to me that this is rather an absurd situation. I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the sections of the original bill be considered as having been read, and that they be then voted upon together as amended.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will amend his motion so as to make it read also that the committee amendments be considered as adopted, I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And the committee amendments be considered as adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the remaining sections of the bill be considered as read and the amendments thereto adopted, and that the question be then taken upon the motion of whether they shall or shall not be striken out of the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propose an amendment to section 6, which is not reported as a committee amendment. I shall therefore have to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will change my request for unanimous consent and ask that that course be followed with all of the sections except section 6, and when that is reached the gentleman can offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then submit the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi, as already submitted, with the exception of section 6 of the bill. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out all of the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that the gentleman wait until we have disposed of section 6, or perfected it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana can offer his amendment to section 6, perfecting it, and it can then be voted upon with the remainder of the section.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I will send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the second amendment, beginning on line 10, page 4, the following: "for public dues; but such coins shall be receivable at their face value for the payment of all private debts contracted before the 1st day of June, 1903, unless otherwise specifically provided in the contract."

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is first entitled to the floor, if he wishes to be heard.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, just a few suggestions upon the amendment. Section 6 of the bill provides that the Mexican silver peso now in use in the Philippine Islands and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in the islands shall be receivable for public dues and in the discharge of all debts, public and private, at a rate to be fixed from time to time by the proclamation of the civil governor of said islands, until such date, not earlier than the 31st day of December, 1903, as may be fixed by public proclamation, etc.

Now, if this bill should be adopted, it will at once fix the new gold peso and American gold coin as the sole and only legal tender in the archipelago, and private debts contracted under the existing currency, with the understanding that they are to be paid in Mexican pesos and Spanish silver pesos at their face value, would have to be paid in the gold peso, and the effect of the adoption of this section will be to add at least 25 per cent to every obligation carried by any individual or corporation in the entire archipelago. The first committee amendment to that section ought to be defeated. It ought not to have been put in. The intention of the committee in putting in the second amendment was to save the rights of men who created obligations on or before the 1st day of June, 1903, to discharge their obligations in the currency that was recognized as legal tender, unless it were otherwise expressly provided in the contract.

The amendment that I have submitted saves to the debtors the right to pay their debts in the kind of currency in which they impliedly and equitably contracted them. If this amendment be not adopted, I repeat that it will add at least 25 per cent to every item of indebtedness in the entire islands. The amendment saves those who have by express stipulation provided for payment in a specific kind of money. If there be obligations payable in gold coin or in Mexican pesos specifically, they will still continue to be payable in gold coin or in Mexican pesos; but it would create a panic in any country to add 25 per cent by a specific item of legislation to all of the indebtedness of the people, and I regard it as highly important that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understood a few moments ago that by the decision of the present occupant of the chair all debate on this bill was closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair has not so ruled. It was only on the pending section, which was section 1.

Mr. BABCOCK. The motion was that debate on the pending bill be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the motion to be on the pending section and amendments thereto.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that when people differ with relation to the monetary system which should exist in the Philippine Islands, as has been demonstrated here to-day by the speeches and votes upon the various propositions, it is wise statesmanship not to do anything until we know what is best to do. I submit that when the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs tells us that calamity will result if we adopt the American coinage for the Philippine Islands, and then the gentleman from Connecticut rises and says that there will be untold misfortunes if the measure presented by the majority is adopted, it seems to me, we ought to hesitate as to whether we should impose upon those people either of these measures.

Mr. Chairman, investigation was made by the Senate Committee on the Philippines last year as to what should be the proper monetary system for the Philippine Islands. The majority of the Senate committee at first was in favor of the Conant system as it was presented. It provided for a light-weight silver dollar, which was to contain only 322 grains of silver—not the Mexican dollar of 416 grains, not the American dollar of 412½ grains, but a new dollar entirely. They started in with the idea that it would be best to adopt that kind of a dollar for the Philippine Islands. The House Committee on Insular Affairs also indorsed the Conant proposition. The investigation proceeded. Hearings were had, and the testimony of prominent men who knew something about the situation in the Orient was taken. Among them was the agent of the Hongkong and Shanghai bank which has branches all over the Orient, and the conclusion to which the Senate committee unanimously came was that the silver standard should exist, and not only that, but that the United States should open a mint for the unlimited coinage of silver pesos, exactly as Great Britain has done for the unlimited coinage of the British silver dollar for Hongkong and the Straits Settlements.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the aim sought to be accomplished by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] in his amendment to section 6 of the original bill has already been accomplished by the adoption of the substitute itself, which contains exactly the same provision. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired? I should like two minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand the gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. I do not want to take him off his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, that Senate committee came to the conclusion that we should have an open mint, just as Great Britain now has for Hongkong and the Straits Settlements, and that country is not contemplating a change in the situation there. The proposition which I wish to make to this House is that we let the coinage question of the Philippine Islands alone for the present. When the Senate committee within the last year has indorsed two distinct currencies for the Philippine Islands, one of which was unanimously adopted by the Senate; when we have two propositions here different from each other and from each of the Senate measures—parties claiming serious disasters will result in the adoption of either measure—should we not better let the measures rest until they are thoroughly digested? Should we impose a currency for all time on Philippine people when Senators and members of this House have been changing their minds every session as to the proper financial system for the islands? The trade of the Philippine Islands will draw to those islands whatever money is the legal standard there, which is the Mexican dollar, and as an open mint exists in Mexico for the coinage of those dollars it makes an automatic currency for the Philippine Islands. If you will just simply call off those gentlemen over there who constitute the Commission and tell them to stop trying to fix a ratio arbitrarily by law between gold and silver, and let the values fixed in the world's markets prevail, you will have the same conditions existing as now exist between Mexico and Hongkong and the Straits Settlements and the gold nations of the world. So that there is no great necessity and no great emergency for the passage of any bill whatever respecting the Philippine coinage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, either one of these bills, if passed, will make in the Philippine Islands a storehouse for gold to furnish all the gold that will be needed in the Orient. We will have to send the gold there to meet balances of trade if we overvalue silver, which we do if this bill is passed. To adopt the American coinage will overvalue silver. We will make it impossible for the people over there to use it in settling their balances of trade, and they will have to pay them in gold instead of settling their balances in Mexican dollars; and if they have to settle in American gold the only way to get it is from the United States, and this will continually tend to deplete our gold reserve, for the balance of trade against the Philippine Islands is more than $7,000,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the section and all pending amendments be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that debate on the section and all pending amendments be now closed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I merely yielded to the gentleman from Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yielded the floor to the gentleman from Colorado, and the gentleman from Indiana was next recognized.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, let me correct my motion. I move that the debate upon the pending section and all pending amendments be limited to three minutes; and the gentleman can have that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be limited to three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the three minutes. All I want to say is that independent of all financial and coinage questions involved in this bill, I differ from my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]. The minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs brought in the substitute bill because they believed that was the right legislation. They did not bring it in merely for political purposes and to fight the majority bill only. They thought it was right for this reason, because the opposite principle is wrong.

It is absolutely wrong to have one coinage system in Colorado and another in Mississippi, to have one banking system in New Mexico and another in New York, and to have one coinage and banking system in continental America and another in insular America, as long as there is any insular America. The principle would be wrong outside of all question of expediency and mere policies. In finances, as in other purely Federal affairs, we can not afford to have different standards. We take the position that the Federal authority has to be uniform throughout the Federal territory.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would not that depend upon whether it was to the interest of the Filipino people?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not care whether it was to the interest of Colorado or Mississippi, for example, to have different coinage systems, I would not vote to give it to either whether it was or not. I am not going to vote to give Mississippi one coinage system and Colorado another.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that Great Britain has two or three systems, one in her own country absolutely, and another, without any full legal tender, in Hongkong and the Straits Settlements?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Because she is an Empire, with a home-governing community and a lot of outlying governed communities, and because the laws of Great Britain, according to English principles, do not carry themselves to all places where subjects of the King live. The American principle is that our laws ought to carry themselves to all the citizens of the Republic everywhere, and that we can not have subjects anywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; because England thinks it is to the best interests of their people in the Orient that they shall have a silver standard instead of a gold standard.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Now, I understand it is in order to move to strike out all the sections?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous consent that motion will be in order.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I move to strike out the remaining sections.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The committee amendment has not yet been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment by the committee was included in the unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. But the unanimous consent excluded section 6.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There are two amendments to section 6. I offered one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to section 6, which is not included in the unanimous consent.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to call attention to the fact that the committee amendments to section 1 have not been agreed to. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments to section 1 be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. There is no objection to that.

The committee amendments to section 1 were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Now I renew my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out all of the remaining sections, including section 6, as amended.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. That completes the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the bill completed? I move that the committee rise.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I do not understand the motion. Was the motion to report the bill as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. To report the bill to the House.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, as amended by this substitute, to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the committee rise, that motion will take precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the committee do now rise and report the bill with sundry amendments to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide a coinage system in the Philippine Islands, and had directed him to report it back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] not having demanded this, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the previous question is ordered, does that cut off opportunity to move to recommit the bill after the third reading?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The question is on ordering the previous question to the bill and amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any demand for a separate vote on any amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a desire for a separate vote on the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is a bill now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is no substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported no substitute to the bill. The Chair is advised that there is amendment in the nature of a substitute pending to one of the sections of the bill, but that is an amendment. If a separate vote is demanded on that, the gentleman will state which amendment it is.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice to the committee that I should ask a separate vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. That question is not now in the House. The House knows nothing about any notice in the committee. Any member of the House has an opportunity and the right to demand a separate vote on any amendment. Does the gentleman from Indiana demand a separate vote on any amendment? And if so, he will name the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the substitute is pending in the House I demand a separate vote on that.

The SPEAKER. There is no substitute pending reported by the committee.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] as a substitute to the first section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is a proper demand.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to say that I shall move to recommit, and therefore I did not make this motion.

The SPEAKER. That is not now before the House. The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a separate vote upon the first amendment, being the one offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, we are somewhat in a tangle as far as I can see it. It seems to me that if what is called the substitute to the first section is voted down, then the amendments to the other sections, striking them out, ought to be voted down, and would be; but it seems to me that if the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia prevails, then the others would fall as a matter of course. Now, I think by agreement, or some other way, we ought to be able to get at it. I will, unless there can be an agreement as I understand it, demand separate votes on all amendments striking out the various sections, until I can see the fate of the amendment I have just referred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has not stated the parliamentary situation correctly. The amendments to which he refers were amendments added to the original bill. The proposition now before the House is the substitute offered by the minority and which was carried in it for the entire perfected bill of the majority, and the question now before the House is the passage of the bill which is a substitute and without amendment. There were no amendments reported with the bill, and the question is on the passage of the substitute bill as reported to the House. There are no amendments to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no difficulty arising from any statement that has been made. There is only one question now, and that is the demand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. That is the first amendment; it is not a substitute. It is an amendment by way of substitute to the first section. The only question is on agreeing to the first amendment, and the Chair will ask the Clerk to report the amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the first amendment.

Mr. JONES of Virginia (before the reading was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I think the House is perfectly familiar with this substitute. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the further reading of the amendment will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin and Mr. TAWNEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 127, answered "present" 6, not voting 73; as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the other amendments, on which, if there be no objection, the question will be taken in gross.

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 21, 1903:

H. R. 16066. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory," approved June 6, 1900; and

H. R. 15345. An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes.

On January 22, 1903:

H. R. 15006. An act to establish Portal, N. Dak., a subport of entry and extend thereto the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880;

UNITED STATES DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution, which has been favorably reported, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to report to the House of Representatives the names of all the national banks which have held United States deposits, other than deposits of disbursing officers, on the 31st day of December, 1892, and on each succeeding 31st day of December until the present time, with the amount of said deposits held by each of said banks on the 31st day of December in each year, the average amount of deposits held by each during each of said years, and the amount of interest which would have been paid by each bank in each of said years had the bank been required to pay interest on such deposits at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 10, page 1, strike out all after the word "years," the whole of lines 11 and 12, and in line 1, page 2, strike out the words "of said years."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. BINGHAM, HEMENWAY, and LIVINGSTON.

ALASKAN DELEGATE.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9865) providing for the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives of the United States, defining citizenship and the qualifications of electors in the said Territory.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9865, the Alaskan Delegate bill, with Mr. SMITH of Iowa in the chair.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Committee on Territories, I now give notice that at the proper time we shall move to substitute in place of the pending bill this bill (H. R. 16653), providing for the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives, which I send to the desk, and which I ask unanimous consent to have read in lieu of the former bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill which the Clerk will now read be considered as pending, being the substitute of the Committee on Territories.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with, that the bill may be explained as the debate proceeds.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the substitute offered by the committee be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Washington to incorporate in his request that it be printed in the RECORD, so that we can read it to-morrow.

Mr. CUSHMAN. It will be.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I think we better have it read.

The Clerk then proceeded with the reading of the bill.

During the reading,

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the objection I made in respect to dispensing with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Washington, that this substitute be treated as pending, and that the first reading of it be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that the same be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I am willing to have that incorporated in the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington then asks unanimous consent that the substitute which has been partly read shall be treated as pending and printed in the RECORD, and that the first reading of the same be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The substitute bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16653) providing for the election of a delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives.

Be it enacted, etc., That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from the Territory of Alaska shall be chosen by the people thereof, who shall be a citizen of the United States, and who shall discharge like duties and be entitled to the same rights, privileges, and emoluments as are discharged, exercised, and enjoyed by Delegates from the several Territories of the United States in the House of Representatives: Provided, however, That such Delegate in lieu of all other allowances shall, in addition to his salary, receive the sum of $1,500 per annum, which shall cover all mileage and other expenses except the stationery allowance and compensation for clerk hire.

SEC. 2. That the first Delegate from the Territory of Alaska shall be chosen for that portion of the term of the Fifty-eighth Congress subsequent to the date of his certificate of election, and each succeeding Delegate shall be chosen for the full term of the Congress next succeeding his election; that the salary of the first Delegate so chosen shall begin with the date of his certificate of election.

SEC. 3. That the first election of such Delegate shall be held on the last Tuesday of September in the year 1903, and thereafter such elections shall be held on the last Tuesday of September in each year when the members of the House of Representatives are chosen. The term of office and the salary of all Delegates so chosen, after the first Delegate, shall begin on the 4th day of March next succeeding his election.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be a Delegate who shall not have attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be a resident of the Territory of Alaska.

SEC. 5. That in order to be qualified to vote for said Delegate to Congress a person shall—

First. Be a male citizen of the United States and have resided in Alaska not less than 90 days immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Second. Have attained the age of 21 years.

Third. Be able to read and write the English or some other European language.

SEC. 6. That Alaskan natives residing in Alaska, or their descendants, members of the uncivilized tribes, may become citizens of the United States by petition by any such member for that purpose to the judges of the district court for the district of Alaska for the division in which such petitioner resides and proving to the satisfaction of any judge of said court that he is lawfully residing within said district of Alaska and has been so residing there for not less than five years immediately preceding the presentation of said petition, and that he has abandoned his tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilized life. Upon making satisfactory proof of these facts, said applicant shall declare, upon his oath, allegiance to the Government of the United States and take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and shall thereupon be admitted by the court as a citizen of the United States. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said district court for Alaska to entertain petitions and do all things necessary in the premises, and the clerk of said court shall keep a full and correct record of all such proceedings. The fees and costs shall be the same as upon proceedings for naturalization in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 7. That no person acquiring citizenship under the provisions of this act shall be held to have thereby lost or waived any right he may have to tribal or other property.

SEC. 8. That each and every incorporated city or town within the Territory of Alaska, and every city or town that may hereafter be legally incorporated therein, shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute one voting precinct, and the boundaries of said incorporated city or town shall be the boundaries of said voting precinct.

The city council of each incorporated city or town, at least thirty days before each election day, shall select an election board for said precinct lying within said incorporated town; said election board to consist of two judges and two clerks of election. Not more than one of such judges and not more than one of such clerks shall belong to the same political party, as far as it shall be found practicable to obtain suitable persons of different political parties. Said city council shall at the same time decide where the polling place for said precinct shall be located. Said city council shall immediately thereafter issue a notice of said approaching election, which notice shall be given publicity by posting, publication, or otherwise as fully as may be throughout said city or town, which said notice, among other things, shall state the date of the election, the purpose thereof, the location of the polling place within said incorporated city or town, and the hours between which the polls will be open to voters.

SEC. 9. That every mining district in Alaska in which there is no incorporated city or town shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute one election district, and the boundaries of said mining district shall be the boundaries of said election district; and that in every such mining district of Alaska the commissioner of said district, who is ex officio recorder of said district, shall, in each year in which an election is to be held under the provisions of this act, at least sixty days before the next election day, give general public notice of said approaching election, which notice shall be given publicity by posting, publication, or otherwise as fully as may be throughout said district. In said notice, and as a part thereof, he shall call for a general miners' meeting for said district, at a time and place specified in said notice. The time of said meeting shall be at least thirty days before the next election day, and the place designated for said meeting shall be as near the center of the population of said district as may be, with reference to the conditions existing in said district. That all persons within said district who are or will be qualified to vote at the next election shall be entitled to participate in said meeting. Said meeting shall be organized by the selection by those present of a chairman and a secretary, after which those present at said meeting shall—

First. Divide all the territory lying within said mining district into such number of voting precincts as shall be necessary and convenient for the accommodation of those residing therein, and give to each voting precinct so established a name by which the same shall thereafter be known; also, decide upon and define the boundaries of each voting precinct by reference to natural objects and permanent landmarks or monuments in such manner that the boundaries of the same can be readily determined and generally known from such description.

Second. Decide where the polling place for each precinct shall be located.

Third. Select an election board for each of said precincts so established, each board to consist of two judges and two clerks, each of whom shall be qualified to vote at the next election. Not more than one of such judges, and not more than one of such clerks shall belong to the same political party, as far as it shall be found practicable to obtain suitable persons of different political parties.

That after said meeting has reached a decision upon the matters hereinbefore enumerated in this section, and before the adjournment of said meeting, public announcement shall be made by the chairman of said meeting of the number of voting precincts created by said meeting, the boundaries and name of each, the location of each polling place, and the names of the judges and clerks of election for each voting precinct.

That a written record of all the proceedings of said meeting shall be kept and signed by the chairman and secretary, and after the close of said meeting said record shall be by them delivered to the commissioner and ex officio recorder of said district, which said record shall be filed by him in his office and be subject to the inspection of all persons desiring to inspect or examine the same, and a certified copy of said record shall be by said commissioner transmitted to one of the judges of election in each of said precincts. After said election is held the commissioner of said district shall transmit by mail the original record of said meeting to the governor of said Territory.

That the judges and clerks of election for each precinct, so chosen, shall, immediately after their selection as said judges and clerks, give notice by posting, publication, or otherwise as fully as may be throughout their said precinct of said approaching election, the date and purpose thereof, the place where said precinct polling place will be located, and the hours between which the polls will be open to voters.

SEC. 10. That in every mining district in Alaska having therein one or more incorporated cities or towns, all of the territory within said mining district outside the limits of said incorporated cities or towns shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute one election district; and that in every such mining district of Alaska the commissioner of said district, who is ex officio recorder of said district, shall, in each year in which an election is to be held under the provisions of this act, at least sixty days before the next election day, give general public notice of said approaching election, which notice shall be given publicity by posting, publication, or otherwise as fully as may be throughout said district. In said notice, and as a part thereof, he shall call for a general miners' meeting of all the residents of said mining district who reside outside of any incorporated city or town at a time and place specified in said notice. The time of said meeting shall be at least thirty days before the next election day, and the place designated for said meeting shall be the place most convenient to the residents of said district living outside of incorporated cities or towns. That all persons residing within said district outside of any such incorporated city or town, and who are, or will be, qualified to vote at the next election, shall be entitled to participate in said meeting. Said meeting shall be organized by the selection by those present of a chairman and a secretary, after which the meeting shall be conducted as said meeting hereinbefore provided for in this act, excepting that in dividing the territory within said mining district into election precincts said meeting shall only divide into voting precincts that territory within said district lying outside of any incorporated cities or towns.

SEC. 11. That the election boards selected under and by virtue of the provisions of this act shall serve as the election boards in the different precincts to which they are assigned, and as such shall possess all the powers and perform all the duties usually possessed and performed by election boards. That the election precincts decided upon at said miners' meeting as herein provided shall be and remain legal voting precincts for the purposes of this act. Provided, however, That any miners' meeting, duly called as in this act provided, for any mining district in Alaska, shall have power to create new voting precincts or change or modify the boundaries of the said voting precincts.

SEC. 12. That the election officers hereinbefore named shall conduct the elections provided for in this act. They shall keep each polling place in every precinct open for the reception of votes from 8 o'clock a. m. to 6 o'clock p. m. on the day of election.

SEC. 13. In case the judges or clerks of election provided for in this act, or any of them, shall fail to appear and qualify at the time and place designated for the holding of the election for which they shall have been selected, the qualified voters present shall organize a meeting and choose a chairman and secretary of such meeting, and said meeting shall select a suitable person or persons to fill the vacancy or vacancies on such election board.

SEC. 14. That the judges and clerks of election shall, prior to entering upon the discharge of their duties, be sworn to honestly and faithfully perform the duties of their several positions; and said oath may be administered by any judge, clerk, commissioner, or notary public; but if no such officer be present or available, then any duly appointed or selected judge of election may administer the oath and all other oaths incident to the proper conduct of elections held under the authority of this act, and said judge shall afterwards in turn be sworn by one of the clerks of election, except that the judge of election shall administer any oath to the voter necessary or proper under this act.

SEC. 15. That all persons in Alaska who are qualified to vote at any election, but who reside in territory outside of any election precinct as defined in this act, shall be entitled to vote in the precinct nearest their residence.

SEC. 16. That at the election provided for in this act all voting shall be by written or printed ballot.

SEC. 17. That the election officers herein provided shall, at each polling place, as soon after the closing of the polls as may be, canvass the votes cast, make a certificate of the result thereof, duly signed by said election officers, and immediately transmit the same, together with the ballots cast at such election in said precinct, securely sealed, to the governor of said Territory of Alaska, and at the same time said election officers in each precinct shall transmit a certified copy of the result of said election in said precinct to the commissioner of their respective recording districts.

SEC. 18. That the governor of the Territory of Alaska shall, within ten days after the first day of November in each election year, canvass the returns and issue the certificate of election herein provided in accordance with the returns transmitted to and received by him to the person having received the greatest number of votes; and in case of a tie vote the person to whom the certificate shall be issued shall be determined by lot.

SEC. 19. That any person offering to vote may be challenged by any election officer, or any other person entitled to vote at the same polling place, and when so challenged, before being allowed to vote he shall make and subscribe to the following oath: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you are 21 years of age and a citizen of the United States, and that you have resided in the Territory of Alaska for ninety days immediately preceding said election day; that you are able to read and write the English or some other European language; that you have not voted at this election," and, further, naming the place from which the voter came immediately prior to his residence in the precinct or locality in which he offers to vote, and giving the length of time of his residence in the former place. And upon the voter swearing to such an affidavit he shall be allowed to vote; but if any person so challenged shall refuse or fail to take such oath, then his vote shall be rejected; and any person swearing falsely in any such affidavit shall be guilty of perjury, and shall on conviction thereof suffer punishment as prescribed by law for persons guilty of perjury.

SEC. 20. That any person who, by any means, shall hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any other person from qualifying himself to vote, or from lawfully voting at any election herein provided for, or who shall knowingly personate and vote, or attempt to vote, in the name of any other person, or who shall vote more than once at the same election, or shall vote at a place where or at a time when he may not lawfully be entitled to vote, or shall do any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote, for himself or for any other person, or who, by or through any force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward or offer thereof, unlawfully votes himself, or procures another to vote, or prevents or induces another to refrain from exercising his right of suffrage, or induces by any such means any officer of an election to do any unlawful act or omit to do his duty in any manner, or who, directly or indirectly, in any manner shall fraudulently change or cause to be changed the returns or the true and lawful results of any election hereunder, or shall attempt to do the same, or who shall delay, cause to be delayed, or connive at the delay of election returns in any manner, or attempt to do so, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon the conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $100, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both, and pay the costs of the prosecution; and it is further provided that every officer of any election held hereunder who neglects to perform or violates any duty imposed upon him as such officer, or knowingly does any unauthorized act with the intent to affect the election or the result thereof, or who shall permit, make, or connive at any false count or certificate of election, or who shall conceal, withhold, destroy, or willfully delay the returns of election, or connive at the same being done, or who shall aid, counsel, or procure any person to do or attempt to do any act made a crime hereinbefore, or shall attempt to do any of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or by both, and shall pay all costs of the prosecution; and jurisdiction of all such matters is hereby conferred upon the district courts of Alaska.

SEC. 21. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The following is the bill in place of which the substitute bill is offered:

A bill (H. R. 9865) providing for the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives of the United States, defining citizenship, and the qualifications of electors in said Territory.

Be it enacted, etc., That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from the Territory of Alaska shall be chosen by the people thereof, who shall be a citizen of the United States, and who shall discharge like duties and be entitled to the same rights, privileges, and emoluments as are discharged, exercised, and enjoyed by Delegates from the several Territories of the United States in the House of Representatives: Provided, however, That such Delegate shall only receive actual traveling expenses from his place of residence to Tacoma, in the State of Washington, and return; and that from there to the city of Washington he shall receive the usual mileage allowed Representatives in Congress.

SEC. 2. That the first Delegate from the Territory of Alaska shall be chosen for the remainder of the term of the Fifty-seventh Congress and for the full term of the Fifty-eighth Congress at the same election, and each succeeding Delegate shall be chosen for the full term of the Congress next succeding his election; that the salary of the first Delegate so chosen shall begin with the date of his certificate of election.

SEC. 3. That the first election of such Delegate shall be held on the second Tuesday of August in the year 1902, and thereafter such elections shall be held on the second Tuesday of August in each year when the members of the House of Representatives are chosen.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be a Delegate who shall not have attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be a resident of the Territory of Alaska.

SEC. 5. That all citizens of the United States who were bona fide residents of the district of Alaska on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1900, are hereby declared to be citizens of the district of Alaska, and all citizens of the United States who shall hereafter in good faith reside in the district of Alaska for one year shall be citizens of Alaska.

SEC. 6. That Alaskan natives residing in Alaska or their descendants, members of the uncivilized tribes, may become citizens of the United States by petition by any such member for that purpose to the judges of the district court for the district of Alaska for the division in which such petitioner resides and proving to the satisfaction of any judge of said court that he is lawfully residing within said district of Alaska and has been so residing there for not less than five years immediately preceding the presentation of said petition, and that he has abandoned his tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilized life. Upon making satisfactory proof of these facts said applicant shall declare, upon his oath, allegiance to the Government of the United States and take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and shall thereupon be admitted by the court as a citizen of the United States. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said district court for Alaska to entertain petitions and do all things necessary in the premises, and the clerk of said court shall keep a full and correct record of all such proceedings. The fees and costs shall be the same as upon proceedings for naturalization in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 7. That no person acquiring citizenship under the provisions of this act shall be held to have thereby lost or waived any right he may have to tribal or other property.

SEC. 8. That the judge of each judicial division of the Territory of Alaska shall, in each year in which a Delegate is to be elected, and by proper order to be entered of record in his respective division of the court, divide the district into such number of voting precincts as he may deem necessary, and also define the boundaries thereof by natural objects and permanent monuments or landmarks, as far as practicable, and in such manner that the boundaries of such election precincts can be readily determined and become generally known from such description; which order shall be given publicity by posting, publication, or otherwise, as said judge may direct, the necessary expense of the publication of such order to be allowed and paid as other court expenses. Said judge shall appoint one judge of election, one clerk, and three inspectors for each election precinct, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party, as far as it shall be found practicable to obtain suitable persons of different political parties. The judge shall also in the aforesaid orders establish a polling place for each election precinct, the location of which shall be described in such order. In case the judge, clerk, or inspectors, or any of them, shall fail to appear and qualify at the time and place designated for the holding of the election for which they shall be appointed, the qualified voters present may select a suitable person or persons to fill the vacancy or vacancies on such election board.

SEC. 9. That the judges of election, clerks, and inspectors shall be sworn to honestly and faithfully perform the duties of their several positions, and any judge, clerk, commissioner, or notary public, or, if no such officer be present or available, then any duly appointed or selected judge of election, may administer the oath and all other oaths incident to the proper conduct of elections held under the authority of this act, and said judge shall afterwards in turn be sworn by the inspector, except that the judge of election shall administer any oath to the voter necessary or proper under this act.

SEC. 10. That in order to be qualified to vote for said Delegate to Congress a person shall—

First. Be a male citizen of the United States and of Alaska, and have resided in Alaska not less than one year immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Second. Have resided in the election precinct in which he offers to vote not less than sixty days immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Third. Have attained the age of 21 years.

Fourth. Be able to speak, read, and write the English language.

SEC. 11. That any person offering to vote may be challenged by any election officer, or any other person entitled to vote at the same polling place, and when so challenged before being allowed to vote he shall make and subscribe to the following oath: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you are 21 years of age and a citizen of the United States and of the district of Alaska, and that you have resided in the election precinct in which you offer to vote not less than sixty days immediately preceding the day of election, and that you have resided in the district of Alaska for one year immediately preceding said election day; that you are able to speak, read, and write the English language; that you have not voted at this election," and further naming the place from which the voter came immediately prior to the living in the precinct in which he offers to vote, and giving the length of time of his residence in the former place. And upon the voter swearing to such an affidavit he shall be allowed to vote; but if any person so challenged shall refuse or fail to take such oath, then his vote shall be rejected; and any person swearing falsely in any such affidavit shall be guilty of perjury, and shall on conviction thereof suffer punishment as is prescribed by law for persons guilty of perjury.

SEC. 12. That the election officers hereinbefore named shall conduct the elections provided for in this act. They shall keep the several polling places open for the reception of votes from 8 o'clock a. m. to 6 o'clock p. m. on the day of election.

SEC. 13. That the election officers hereinbefore provided at each polling place shall, as soon after the closing of the polls as may be, canvass the votes cast, make a certificate of the result thereof, duly signed by said election officers, and transmit the same, together with the ballots cast at such election, securely sealed, to the clerk of the court for the division within which such precinct is situated.

SEC. 14. That the clerks of the several divisions of the district court shall compile the returns received from the various polling places, ascertain the result, transmit such compilation and result, duly authenticated, to the governor of the Territory. Said clerks shall retain the ballots received from the various polling precincts for a period of six months, and in case a notice shall be served upon them, or either of them, of a contest arising out of said election, said ballots shall be further retained by said clerk or clerks to await the order of the tribunal having the final determination of such contest; otherwise such ballots shall be destroyed at the expiration of six months from the reception thereof.

SEC. 15. That the governor shall, within ten days after the 1st day of October in each election year, issue the certificate hereinbefore provided in accordance with the returns so received from the clerks of the district court.

SEC. 16. That the judges of election, clerks, and inspectors hereinbefore provided shall be appointed, and the voting precincts defined and polling places designated, by the judge of the court not later than the second Tuesday of June in any year in which an election for Delegate is to be held.

SEC. 17. That the election officers hereinbefore provided shall receive as compensation $5 each for their services upon election day; and the necessary expense of the transmission of the returns and ballots to the clerks of court, as hereinbefore provided, together with the expense of providing suitable buildings for holding the election, police protection, stationery, and other incidental and necessary expenses herein authorized, shall be certified to the clerk of the court within which such election officers are located and shall be allowed and paid as other court expenses.

SEC. 18. That the respective clerks of the court shall transmit the election returns received by them, and the result thereof, as hereinbefore provided, to the governor, so that he shall receive them not later than the 1st of October next succeeding.

SEC. 19. That any person who, by any means, shall hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any other person from qualifying himself to vote, or from lawfully voting at any election herein provided for, or who shall knowingly personate and vote, or attempt to vote, in the name of any other person, or who shall vote more than once at the same election, or shall vote at a place where or at a time when he may not lawfully be entitled to vote, or shall do any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote, for himself or for any other person, or who, by or through any force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer thereof, unlawfully votes himself, or procures another to vote, or prevents or induces another to refrain from exercising his right of suffrage, or induces by any such means any officer of an election to do any unlawful act or omit to do his duty in any manner, or who, directly or indirectly, in any manner shall fraudulently change or cause to be changed the returns or the true and lawful results of any election hereunder, or shall attempt to do the same, or who shall delay, cause to be delayed, or connive at the delay of election returns in any manner, or attempt to do so, shall be guilty of a crime; and upon the conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, nor less than $100, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both, and pay the costs of the prosecution; and it is further provided that every officer of any election held hereunder who neglects to perform or violates any duty imposed upon him as such officer, or knowingly does any unauthorized act with the intent to affect the election or the result thereof, or who shall permit, make, or connive at any false count or certificate of election, or who shall conceal, withhold, destroy, or willfully delay the returns of election, or connive at the same being done, or who shall aid, counsel, or procure any person to do or attempt to do any act made a crime hereinbefore, or shall attempt to do any of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or by both, and shall pay all costs of the prosecution; and jurisdiction of all such matters is hereby conferred upon the district courts of Alaska.

SEC. 20. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

DELEGATE IN CONGRESS FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. The sole object of this bill now before us for consideration is to give to the people of the Territory of Alaska a Delegate in the House of Representatives of the American Congress, and incidentally to prescribe the manner of the election of such Delegate.

This is the first time that a bill to give the people of Alaska a Delegate in Congress has ever been considered on this floor. But let no man think that this measure is hasty and ill-considered legislation. The consideration of this bill to-day on this floor is the culmination of an effort that has extended over a period of the past ten years.

A bill of similar purpose was reported from the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives in the Fifty-third Congress near its close, too late for action; and another in the Fifty-fourth Congress, which, for some reason, failed to become a law. A third time, in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, a similar bill was introduced and unanimously reported by the Committee on Territories to the House, but this bill, on account of the press of business during the close of that session, failed of consideration in the House.

During the first session of this present Congress this bill, which we have now before us, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Territories of this House, and it has since that time been upon the Calendar of this House awaiting a time when it might be considered in this House.

I fully believe that the action taken by this House to-day on this bill will be favorable.

Before speaking in reference to the details of this bill, perhaps the first question to arise on the very threshold of this debate is, Are the people of Alaska entitled to representation on this floor in the person of a Delegate?

I believe there can be no difference of opinion on that point among reasonable men who are familiar with the situation in Alaska.

It occurs to me that there would be more propriety in my pausing a moment in the beginning of this debate and asking if any member on this floor can state any reason why the people of Alaska should not have representation in the form of a Delegate on this floor.

I am certain it would not take a tithe of the time to review the few small objections that might exist to the passage of this bill that it will take to marshal the facts and array the arguments in its favor.

Let me pause for a moment and call the roll of the States and Territories comprising the United States and the islands of the sea under the jurisdiction of the United States:

In the first place, there are the forty-five States of this Union. Each one of them has two Senators. In addition thereto, those States each have representation in this House according to the population of the State represented, said representation covering a range from the State of New York, having thirty-four Members on this floor, down to Nevada, Idaho, Utah, Montana, and Wyoming, each having one Member on this floor. Then come the three Territories on the mainland of the United States, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, and each one of those Territories is now represented on this floor by a most able Delegate, each one of which is sojourning among us for a brief period before donning the Senatorial toga at the other end of the Capitol!

Then there is the island Territory of Hawaii, represented on this floor by an able Delegate in the person of a native Hawaiian.

Then there is the little island of Porto Rico. Porto Rico is under the jurisdiction of the United States. The act of April 12, 1900, provides for a "resident commissioner" from Porto Rico to the United States, to be elected every two years by the qualified voters of Porto Rico. His salary is $5,000 per annum. By the terms of the act granting to Porto Rico the resident commissioner to the United States that official was not granted a seat upon this floor nor the right of debate or vote in this body. Afterwards, on June 28, 1902, the resident commissioner of Porto Rico was, by the passage of House resolution 328, first session of Fifty-seventh Congress, given admission to the floor of the House of Representatives. The powers of this official are the most limited of any representative or quasi representative from any territory under the jurisdiction of the United States. The present resident commissioner is Mr. Frederico Degetau, a native Porto Rican, of San Juan, who is a most creditable commissioner.

Then there are the Philippine Islands—territory under the jurisdiction of the United States.

A bill passed Congress and was approved July 1, 1902, relating to the civil status and civil rights of the residents of the Philippine Islands, known as the Philippine civil government bill, and establishing for that archipelago a framework of civil government. Among other things in relation to the representation which that territory should have at the capital of the United States, said bill provides:

That at the first meeting of the Philippine legislature, and every two years thereafter, there shall be chosen by said Philippine legislature two resident commissioners to the United States, who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the civil governor of said islands, and each of whom shall be entitled to a salary, payable monthly by the United States, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and $2,000 additional to cover all expenses: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a qualified elector of said islands, owing allegiance to the United States, and who is not 30 years of age.

I have reviewed briefly the provisions of the law relating to the representation accorded to the various civil divisions of the United States, in order to emphasize the fact that in the matter of according representation the Territory of Alaska has been absolutely overlooked.

I state on this floor, now, that Alaska is the only bit of territory over which the American flag floats, populated by the Anglo-Saxon race, and not recently in a state of insurrection against the United States Government, that has not some kind of a representative at the capital of the American Republic. Of course I make an exception of the District of Columbia, a small area originally 10 miles square, which was reserved for the location of the capital of the United States.

ALASKA.

Here is this great region of Alaska, a mighty empire in proportions, and a veritable storehouse of natural wealth of the most vast and varied description; Alaska that cost us $7,200,000 in 1867; Alaska that has been an American possession for thirty-six years; Alaska with 600,000 square miles of territory within her borders, equal almost to the entire United States east of the Mississippi River; Alaska that stretches through 20 degrees of latitude and 50 degrees of longitude; Alaska with 26,000 miles of coast line; Alaska that forms alike our western boundary and western gateway, looking out toward the Orient, that theater of the commercial transactions of the twentieth century; Alaska, the only fur-producing region held by the United States; Alaska, that produces nine-tenths of the salmon of the known world; Alaska, whose output of fish in each of the late years has amounted to the stupendous figure of $7,000,000, or, in other words, a region that yearly pays for itself out of a single industry; Alaska, that great storehouse of precious metals whose recent productions of gold and silver have startled the financial world; Alaska, with mighty and matchless agricultural possibilities; Alaska, with a single fertile valley within her borders as big as the State of Ohio; Alaska, with navigable rivers wider than the Missouri, longer than the Mississippi, and deeper than the St. Lawrence.

Alaska with 100,000 population, composed of the cream of the Anglo-Saxon race, has no Delegate on this floor, and the only legal link that binds them to the Stars and Stripes is a Federal tax collector in the midst of their domain! [Applause.]

STATISTICS ON ALASKA.

The Bureau of Statistics, which Bureau is under the Treasury Department of the United States, has for its purpose the gathering, compiling, and publishing of various commercial statistics.

The field of inquiry of this Bureau was only extended to Alaska July 1, 1902. Prior to that time all the commercial statistics we have relating to Alaska are unofficial, and are in the nature of estimates gathered from various sources of more or less reliability. These statistics cover the period from July 1, 1902, up to and including November 30, 1902.

I have thought it well to include within the limits of these remarks some of the statistics and tables relating to Alaska which I have found in the course of my investigation on this subject.

These tables are not only interesting from the standpoint of containing general information, but this information is directly in point with the bill which we are now considering, because they show the magnitude of the commerce of this Territory.

I shall not attempt within the limits of this speech to review or analyze the figures contained in these tables of statistics, and simply content myself with the statement of one or two facts gleaned from these figures.

The estimated value of merchandise shipped from Pacific coast ports to Alaska during the last three years has been over a million dollars in value per month.

That the value of merchandise shipped out of Alaska—I am not talking about gold and silver now—but that the value of merchandise shipped out of Alaska in the last five months covered by these statistics is almost $2,000,000 per month.

That the revenues which this Government has received from Alaska since the date of our purchase from Russia aggregate the grand total of $8,907,952.60. These figures do not represent the profit which individuals have made during this same period from various business enterprises in Alaska. These figures simply represent the Goverment revenue received during this period.
